DREDGE (2), to sprinkle flour on meat, &c. (F., -Prov., Ital., -Gk.) 'Burnt figs dreg'd [dredged] with meal and powdered Ital., -Gk.) Durin ngs 61-5 (minus) Sugar; Beaum. and Fletcher, Scornful Lady, Act ii. sc. 3. Dredge sugar; Beaum. and Rloody Brother, Act ii. sc. 2. To dredge is to sprinkle as in sowing dreg, or mixed corn; thus Holland says that 'choler is a miscellane seed, as it were, and a dredge, made of all the passions of the mind; 'Plutarch, p. 108. 'Dredge or Dreg, oats and barley mingled together; 'Kersey, ed. 1715. O. F. dragee, dragee aux chevaux, 'provender of divers sorts of pulse mingled together; also the course grain called bolymong, French-wheat, Block-wheat, or Buck-wheat; Cot. Cotgrave also gives the older sense of dragée as 'a kind of disgestive (sic) powder, usually prescribed unto weak stomacks after meat; 'this is the mod. F. dragée, a sugarβ. Introduced, through Prov. dragea, from Ital. treggea, a sugar-plum (Brachet). Diez quotes from Papias: 'collibia sunt apud Hebræos, quæ nos vocamus tragemata vel vilia munuscula, ut cicer frixum, &c. - Gk. τραγήματα, dried fruits, pl. of τράγημα, something nice to eat. - Gk. τρώγειν (2nd aor. ε-τράγ-ον), to gnaw; also to eat dried fruits; allied to τρώω, I injure, τρύω, I rub. - ΤΑΚ, to rub; see Curtius, i. 275, who discusses the variations of the root in form and sense.

DREGS, lees, sediment. (Scand.) A pl. form, from sing. dreg. 'Fra fen, ful of dreg' = out of a fen full of mire; Northern Met. version of Ps. xxxix. 3. 'Dregges and draf;' P. Plowman, B. xix. 397. DREGS, lees, sediment. (Scand.) - Icel. dregg, pl. dreggjar, dregs, lees. + Swed. dragg, dregs, lees. β. The theoretical European form is dragja (Fick), and the derivation is, apparently, from Icel. draga, to draw; cf. Icel. draga saman, to collect, draga út, to extract; see Draw, Drag. to G. dreck, dirt, for that is the Icel. prekkr; nor yet to Gk. τρύξ, dregs. Der. dregg-y, dregg-i ness.

DRENCH, to fill with drink or liquid. (E.) The causal of 'drink;' the old sense is 'to make to drink.' M. E. drenchen, Havelok, 583.—A. S. drencan, to drench, Grein. i. 202; causal of A. S. drincan, to drink. + Du. drenken, to water a horse. + Icel. drekkja, to drown, swamp, + Swed. dränka, to drown, to steep. + G. tränken, to water, to soak. See Drink. Der. drench, sb.

DRESS, to make ready, deck. (F., -L.) M. E. dressen; King Alisaunder, 1332 .- O. F. dresser, drescer, to erect, set up, arrange, dress. - Low Lat. drictiare *, not found; but formed from Low Lat. drictus, a contracted form of Lat. directus, direct, straight, hence just, right, upright. See Direct. Der. dress, sb.; dress-ing. dress-ingcase, dress-y; also dress-er, a table on which meat is dressed.

DRIBBLE, to let fall in small drops. (E.) The reading dribling in Shak. Meas. for Meas. i. 3. 2, may be an error for dribbing. Dribble is the frequentative of drib, which is a variant of drip. 'Like drunkardis that dribbis, i. e. drip. slaver; Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 641. See Drip. Der. dribbl er; also dribl et, formed with dimin. suffix -et. Kersey has 'dribblet (old word), a small portion, a little sum of money owing. Or Not the same word as drivel.

DRIFT, that which is driven. (E.) 'The dragoun drew him awaie [departed] with drift of his winges,' i. e. driving. violent movement; Alisaunder, frag. A., ed. Skeat, 998. Formed, with suffix -t, from M. E. drifen, to drive; cf. draught from draw, flight from fly, weight from weigh, &c. + Du. drift, a drove, flock, course, current, ardour. + Icel. drift, dript, a snow-drift. + Swed drift, impulse, instinct. + G. trift, a drove, herd, pasturage. See Drive. Der. drift,

DRILL (1), to pierce, to train soldiers. (Du.) Cotgrave explains F. trappan as a stone cutter's drill, wherewith he bores little holes in marble. Ben Jonson hints at the Dutch origin of the word in the sense of 'to train soldiers.' 'He that but saw thy curious captain's drill Would think no more of Flushing or the Brill; Underwoods, lxii, 1. 29. - O. Du. drillen, 'tremere, motitare, vacillare, ultro citroque cursitare, gyrosque agere, gyrare, rotare, volvere, tornare, terebrare,' Kilian; mod. Du. drillen, to drill, bore, to tund round, shake, brandish, to drill, form to arms, to run hither and thither, to go through the manual exercise. Sewel's Dutch Dict. gives drillen, to drill, shake, brandish; met den piek drillen, to shake a pike; to exercise in the management of arms. β. The orig. sense is 'to bore,' or 'to turn round and round,' whence (1) to turn men about or drill them, (2) to turn a pike about, or brandish it. It is the same word as thrill, which is the true E. form; it is characteristic of December 2. Drudger, one that fishes for oysters; Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. istic of Dutch to turn orig. Low G. th into d; as in drie=E. three.

√TAR, to rub, to bore; on which Curtius remarks that 'it is certain, at all events, that from the meaning "rub" springs that of a "twisting movement," most clearly to be seen in the Teutonic words;' i. 275. See Thrill, Trite. Der. drill, sb.

DRILL (2), to sow corn in rows. (E.) We find an old word drill used in the sense of rill. 'So does a thirsty land drink up all the dery of heaven that were its face and the meaning "rub" springs that of a mostly in an evil, but also in a good sense; 'Cleasby and Vigfusson. Origin of the Icel. word unknown. Der. droll-ish, droll-ery.

DROMEDARY, a kind of camel. (F., -L., -Gk.) In early use. M. E. dromedarie, King Alisaunder, 3407. -O. F. dromedaire, 'a dromedary;' Cot. - Low Lat. dromedarius, better spelt dromadarius.'

the dew of heaven that wets its face, and the greater shower makes no torrent, nor digs so much as a little furrow, that the drils of the water might pass into rivers, or refresh their neighbour's weariness; Bp. Taylor, vol. i. ser. 6 (R.) We also find the verb drill, to trickle. And water'd with cool rivulets, that drill'd Along the borders; Sandys, Ecclesiastes, c. ii.

B. This verb cannot be separated from Sandys, Ecclesiastes, c. ii. trill, used in precisely the same sense; as in 'Few drops... adowne it trild,' i. e. trickled; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 78. In Chaucer, C. T. 13604 (Group B, 1864), Tyrwhitt prints trilled where the Ellesmere MS. has trykled; and it is clear that trill is a mere corruption of trickle. We may conclude that drill is likewise corrupted from trickle, and means 'to let corn run out of a receptacle,' the said receptacle being moved along so as to sow the corn in rows. the same time, it is highly probable that the particular application to corn was due to confusion with W. rhillio, to put in a row, to drill, from the sb. rhill, a row, a trench, a shortened form of rhigol, a groove, trench; and rhigol is a dimin. form (with suffix -ol) from rhig, a notch, groove. See Trickle, Rill.

ruption of G. drillich, ticking, huckaback. And the G. word is a corruption from Lat. trilic-, stem of trilix, having or consisting of three threads. - Lat. tri-, from tres, three; and licium, a thrum, a thread.

DRINK, to suck in, swallow. (E.) M. E. drinken; Chaucer, C. T. 135. - A. S. drincan (common). + Du. drinken. + Icel. drekka (for drenka = drinka). + Swed. dricka. + Dan. drikke. + Goth. drigkan (for drinkan). + G. trinken. Der. drink-able, drink-er, drink-offering; and see drunken, drunkard, drench, drown.

| Drink appears to be a nasalised form from a root drik or drig, which is possibly allied to drag, to draw, from the notion of drawing in.

DRIP, to fall in drops. (E.) 'Dryppe or drope, gutta, stilla, cadula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 132. 'Dryppyn or droppyn, stillo, gutto;' id. 'Dryppynge or droppynge, stillacio;' id. - A. S. drypan, to let drop; 'bam gelicost, be mon nime anne eles dropan, and drype on an mycel fyr'= much as if one were to take a drop of oil, and drip it on a great fire; Orosius, b. iv. c. 7. sect. 5. [Here drýpan (= dreópan) stands for an older driupan, as appears by comparison with other languages, and it is a strong verb; hence drop is formed from drip, and not vice versa, as might at first seem to be the case.] + Icel. drjúpa, to drip, vice versa, as might at hist seem to be the case.] + 1ccl. drjupa, to drip, pt. t. draup. + Swed. drypa, to drip. + Dan. dryppe, to drip. + Du. druipen, to drip. + O. Sax. driopan, to drip; pt. drop. + O. H. G. triufan, G. triefen, to drip, trickle; pt. t. troff. B. The form of the European root is DRUP; Fick, iii. 155. See Drop.

DRIVE, to urge on, push forward. (E.) M. E. driuen (with u=v), Chaucer, C. T. 7122. - A. S. drifan, Grein, i. 206. + Du. drijven. + Icel. drifa. + Swed. drifva. + Dan. drive. + Goth. dreiban. + O. H. G. tripan, M. H. G. triben, G. treiben.

B. Root unknown; the form of the base is DRIB; Fick, iii. 154. Der drive sh. driver.

form of the base is DRIB; Fick, iii. 154. Der. drive, sb.; driv-er; also drif-1, q. v.; drove, q. v.

DRIVEL, to slaver, speak foolishly. (E.; from C. root.) M. E. drauelen (with u=v), later drivelen, to slaver. 'Drynken and dryuelen;' P. Plowman, B. x. 41. 'Thei don but dryuele peron;' id. x. II; where the earlier A text has drauele. Drauelen stands for drabbelen, a frequentative form from drabben, to dirty, formed from Irish drab, a spot, stain; see Drab (1). Cf. Platt-deutsch drabbeln, to slaver; Bremen Wörterbuch. to slaver; Bremen Wörterbuch. ¶ It is easy to see that the change of form, from dravel to drivel, was due to an assimilation of the word with dribble, a word of similar sense but different origin. Der. drivell-ing, drivell-er.

DRIZZLE, to rain slightly. (E.) 'These tears, that drizzle from mine eyes;' Marlowe, Edw. II, Act ii. sc. 4. 1. 18. The old spelling is drissel or drissl. 'Through sletie drisling day;' Drant's Horace, b. ii. Sat. 2. Dris-el means 'to fall often,' and is the frequentative of M. E. dreosen, to fall, from A.S. dreosan, to fall; see Dross.

or M. E. arcosen, to 1211, from A.S. dreisan, to fall; see Dross.

DROIL, strange, odd, causing mirth. (F., = Du., = Scand.) Shak. has drollery, Temp. iii. 3. 21; 2 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 156. The phr. 'to play the droll' is in Howell's Letters, b. i. s. I. let. 18. = F. drole, 'a boon companion, merry grig, pleasant wag;' Cot. Also ef. droler, 'to play the wag,' id.; drolerie, 'waggery, good roguery;' id. [The early use of drollery shews that we took the word from the French.] — Du. drollig, 'burlesk, odd;' Sewel. [The sb. drol, a droll fellow, is not noticed by Sewel.] Of Scand. origin.— Dan trold Swad ..." is not noticed by Sewel.] Of Scand. origin. — Dan. trold, Swed. troll, Icel. troll, a hobgoblin; a famous word in Scandinavian story, which makes continual mention of the odd pranks played by them. 'The heathen creed knew of no devil but the troll; in modern Danish, trold includes any ghosts, goblins, imps, and puny spirits, whereas the droug (with u=v); 'wi) [h]is droug of bestis;' Will. of Palerne, rius; Ducange. - Lat. dromad-, stem of dromas, a dromedary; with suffix -arius. - Gk. δρομαδ-, stem of δρομάs, fast running, speedy. -Gk. δραμείν, to run; used as infin. aor. of τρέχειν, to run, but from a different root. + Skt. dram, to run; akin to drá, to run, and dru, to run. - / DRA, DRAM, to run.

DRONE (1), to make a deep murmuring sound. (E.) M. E. droien, drounen; 'he drouned as a dragon, dredefull of noyes;' Alisaunder, frag. A., ed. Skeat, l. 985. Not found in A. S., but an E. word. + Du. dreunen, to make a trembling noise; dreun, a trembling noise (Sewel). + Icel. drynja, to roar; drynr, a roaring; drunur, a thundering. + Swed. dröna, to low, bellow, drone. + Dan. dröne, to peal, rumble; drön, a rumbling noise. + Goth. drunjus, a sound, voice; Rom. x. 18. + Gk. θρῆνοι, a dirge; cf. θρέομαι, I cry aloud. + Skt. dhran, to sound; cf. dhvan, to sound. - DHRAN, to make a continuous sound, an extension of DHAR, to bear, maintain, endure; cf. Skt. dhri, to bear, maintain, endure. See below.

DRONE (2), a non-working bee. (E.) M. E. dran, drane; pl. dranes, Piers Plowman's Crede, l. 726. — A. S. dran; A. S. Chron. an. 1127. + Dan. drone. + Swed. drönare, lit. one who makes a droning noise, from dröna, to drone. + Icel. drjóni. + M. H. G. treno, a drone; noise, from arona, to trone. 4 Feet arjoni. 4 M. 11. O. trono, a trone; cited by Fick and Curtius. 4 Gk. θρώναξ, a Laconian drone-bee (Hesychius). See Curtius, i. 319, 320. From the droning sound made by the insect; see Drone (1). Der. dron-ish.

DROOP, to sink, faint, fail. (Scand.) M. E. drupen, droupen; Chaucer, C. T. 107. The pres. part. drupand is in The Cursor Mundi, l. 4457.—Icel. drúpa, to drop; different from drjúpa, to drip or drop. In mod. Icel., drúpa and drjúpa are confounded. Doubtless they are from the same root. See Drop. and Drip.

Doubtless they are from the same root. See Drop, and Drip.
DROP, sb. a small particle of liquid; verb, to let fall small particles of liquid. (E.) M. E. drope, a drop; dropien, droppen, to let drop. The sb. is in Chaucer, C. T. 131; the verb in C. T. 16048 drop. Ine so. is in Chaucer, C. I. 131; the verb in C. I. 10048 (or 12508, ed. Wright).—A. S. dropa, a drop; Grein, i. 207; dropian, to drop, Psalter, ed. Thorpe, xliv. 10; cf. also dreopian, to drop, drip, Grein, i. 205. + Du. drop, a drop. + Icel. dropi, a drop; dreypa, to drop. + Swed. droppe, a drop. + Dan. draabe, sb. a drop; vb. to drop. + O. H. G. tropfo, G. tropfe, a drop.

β. Thus the vb. is formed from the sb.; and the latter is from the older verb to drop; and proper as C. Skt. drapes a drop. trops y. Cf. Skt. drapsa, a drop; from see Drip. And see droop. ✓ DRA, to run.

DROPSY, an unnatural collection of serous fluid in the body. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt dropsie in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, bk. iii. c. 21. Short for ydropsie, a spelling found in Wyclif, Luke, xiv. 2. — O. F. hydropisie, 'the dropsie;' Cot. — Lat. hydropisis, spelt hydropisia in late Lat. (Webster). — Late Gk. υδρώπισιο *, from Gk. υδρωή, dropsy; a word formed from Gk. εδωρ, water, without any compound with ψ (Liddell and Scott). The Gk. εδωρ is cognate with E. water, q.v. Der. drops-ic-al.

DROSKY, a kind of carriage. (Russian.) Mere Russian. - Russ. drojki, a low four-wheeled carriage. [The j sounded as in French.] Not mentioned in the Russ. Dict. of 1844; but given by Reiff.

The Russ. drojate means 'to tremble;' I do not know if there is any relation.

DROSS, dregs, scum. (E.) Properly 'what falls to the bottom;' not scum that floats on the top. M. E. dros, Ancren Riwle, p. 285.

—A. S. dros, in a copy of Ælfric's Gloss, cited by Lye; cf. A. S. drosn, answering to Lat. fax, Ps. xxxix. 2, ed. Spelman. - A. S. dredsan, to fall, Grein, i. 206. + Goth. driusan, to fall. The European root is DRUS, to fall; Fick, iii. 155. Cf. Du. droesem, dregs; G. drusen, lees, dregs; G. druse, ore decayed by the weather; Dan. drysse, to fall in drops; from the same root. Der. dross-y, dross-i-ness. DROUGHT, dryness. (E.) M. E. drogte, drougte; Chancer, C. T. 1. 2. But the proper spelling of drought should be droughth, and the M. E. droughte stands for an earlier droubthe; thus in P. Plowman, B. vi. 290, we have drought, but in the earlier text (A. vii. 275) we find droubpe. In the Ormulum, 1. 8626, it is spelt drubbpe.—A. S. drugade, drugode, dryness; in two copies of Ælfric's Glossary (Lye). A.S. drugian, to dry; dryge, dry; Grein, i. 207. So also Du. droogte, drought, from droogen, to dry, droog, dry. See Dry.

The true form drouth or drougth occurs as late as in Spenser's Daphnaida, l. 333; and in Bacon's Nat. Hist. § 660; and perhaps is still found in prov. English. The same change from final th to final t has occurred in height, spelt highth in Milton's Paradise Lost.

drenching in water. (E.) Orig. an intransitive or passive verb, as particularly denoted by the suffixed -n; cf. the Mœso-Goth. verbs in -nan, which are of a like character. 'Shall we give o'er and drown?' Tempest, i. 1. 42. 'Alle... drowned [perished] perinne;' Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 372. M. E. druncnien, later druncnen, Allit. Poems, ed. Mollis, it. 3/2. M. E. aranchen, later arunchen, drumknen, and finally drounen; the spelling druncnen is in the Ormulum, 15398; drumknen is in Wyclif, Isa. Ixiii. 6.—A. S. druncnian, Northumb. druncnia, to be drowned, to sink; 'ongann druncnia' — began to sink; Matt. xiv. 30 (Lindisfarne MS.). Formed, with suffix drun, from druncen, lit. drunken, pp. of drincan, to drink.

B. Similar, from druncen, lit. drunken, pp. of drincan, to drink.

B. Similar, from druncen, lit. -ian, from druncen, lit. drunken, pp. of drincan, to drink. B. Similarly, we find Swed. drunkna, to be drowned, from drucken, drunken, pp. of dricka, to drink; and Dan. drukne, to be drowned, from drukken, drunken, old pp. of drikke, to drink. See Drunken. ¶ It may be added that this will appear more plainly from the Lindisfame MS., Luke, xii. 42; where the Lat. inebriari is translated by 'drunegnia vel pætte se druncenig,' i. e. to drown or that he may be

DROWSE, DROWZE, to be sluggish. (E.) Formerly drouse; Milton, P. L. xi. 131; viii. 289; whence drousie, id. Il Penseroso, 83. Not found (as yet) in the Mid. Eng. period. — A. S. drúsian, drúsan, to be sluggish; 'lagu drúsade' = the lake lay sluggish; Beowulf, ed. Grein, 1630. Cf. dreósan, to mourn; Grein, t. 206, which is ultimately the same as A. S. dreősan, to fall; id. β. So, too, O. H. G. trúren, to cast down the eyes, to mourn (mod. G. trauern), is related to O. H. G. trurig, mournful, orig. dripping with blood, and to the E. dreary. See Dreary, and Dross. Der. drowz-y, drowz-i-ness. DRUB, to beat. (E.) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3. l. 1042. He also has the sb. drubs, id. pt. iii. c. 3. l. 209. Cf. prov. E. (Kent) drab, to drub, beat; Halliwell. Corrupted from M. E. drepen, to hit, slay, kill; Havelok, 1865, 2227.-A.S. drepan, to hit, slay; Grein, i. 203; drepe, drype, a blow; id. 203, 209. + Icel. drepa, to kill, slay. + Swed. drabba, to hit; drapa, to kill, slay. + Dan. drabe, to kill. + G. treffen, to hit. All from the European root DRAP, to to kill. + G. treffen, to hit. All from the European root DRAF, to strike; Fick, iii. 153. Der. drub, sb.; drubb-ing.

DRUDGE, to perform menial work. (C.) Shak. has the sb. drudge, Merch. of Ven. iii. 2. 103. M. E. druggen; Chaucer has 'to drugge and drawe;' C. T. 1416 (or 1418). From a Celtic source; preserved in Irish drugaire, a drudger, drudge, slave; and Irish drugaireachd, drudgery, slavery.

It is connected (in Chaucer) with drawe merely by alliteration; it is not to be referred to A.S. dragan, to drag; nor yet to A.S. dreogan, to endure, which is the Lowland Scotch dree. Der. drudge, sb.; drudger-y.

DRUG, a medical ingredient. (F.) M. E. drogge, drugge; the pl. drogges, drugges is in Chaucer, Six-text, A. 426; where the Harl. MS. has dragges, Prol. 1. 428. [But dragges and drogges cannot be the same word; the former is from O. F. dragge, discussed s. v. Dredge (2), q.v.; the latter is O.F. drogue.] - O.F. (and mod. F.) drogue, a drug; cf. Ital., Span., and Port. droga, a drug. B. Remoter origin uncertain; Diez derives it from Du. droog, dry; which seems right, because the pl. droogen, lit. dried vegetables and roots, was used in the special sense of 'drugs.' 'Droogen, gedroogde kruyden en wortels, druggs; 'Sewel's Du. Dict. See Dry. Der. drugg-ist;

also drugg-et. q.v.

DRUGGET, a coarse woollen cloth. (F.) 'And, coarsely clad in Norwich drugget, came; Dryden, Mac Flecknoe, l. 33. O. F. droguet, 'a kind of stuff that's half silk, half wooll; 'Cot. Cf. Span. droguete, Ital. droghetta, a drugget; the latter is given in Meadows, in the Eng.-Ital. section. A dimin., with suffix -et, from F. drogue, (1) a drug; (2) trash, rubbish, stuff; see Hamilton and Legros, French Dict. See Drug.

DRUID, a priest of the ancient Britons. (C.) Druyds; Howell, Foreign Travel, ed. 1642, sect. 10.—Lat. pl. Druides; Caesar, De Bello Gallico, vi. 13. Of Celtic origin.—Irish draoi, druidh, an augur, magician; Gael. draoi, draoidh, druidh, a magician, sorcerer. + W. derwydd, a druid. Origin undetermined; the attempt to compact it with Jaich and Cral draws. Marger W. derwydd. the attempt to connect it with Irish and Gael. darach, darag, W. derw, dár, an oak, is by no means convincing. magician, is from British. The A.S. dry, a magician, is from British.

DRUM, a cylindrical musical instrument. (E?) 'The drummes cry dub-a-dub;' Gascoigne, Flowers; ed. Hazlitt, vol. i. p. 83, l. 26. Perhaps not found earlier. [Chaucer uses the term naker, a kettle-drum; Kn. Ta. 1563.] It may be an English word, and of imitative origin; allied to Drone, q.v. Cf. Dan. drum, a booming sound; drumme, to boom; Icel. pruma, to rattle, thunder; cf. E. to thrum. \(\delta\) Du. trum. transmalen. to drum. \(\delta\) Dan. thrum. + Du. trom, trommel, a drum; trommelen, to drum. + Dan. tromme, a drum. + G. trommel, a drum. Der. drum, verb (unless this be taken as the original); drum-head, drum-major, drum-stick. See also Thrum, Trumpet.

181.—A.S. dráf; A.S. Chron. an. 1016.—A.S. drifan, to drive. See DRUNKARD, one addicted to drinking. (E.; with F. suffix.) Drive. Der. drov-or.

DROWN. to be killed by being drenched in water; to kill by the base drunk- of the pp. drunken, with the F. suffix-ard, of O.H. and origin, used with an intensive force. This suffix is of the same origin with E. hard; Brachet, Etym. French Dict. introd. § 196. Cf. the phrase 'a kard drinker.' The M. E. word is dronkelew.

drunken; Chaucer, C. T. 1264.—A.S. druncen, pp. of drincan, to drink, but often used as an adj., Grein, i. 207; see Drink. Der.

DRUPE, a fleshy fruit containing a stone. (F., -L., -Gk.) botanical term. Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. - F. drupe, a drupe, stone-fruit. - Lat. drupa, an over-ripe, wrinkled olive (Pliny). - (ik, δρύππα, an over-ripe olive; a contraction from, or allied to, Gk. δρυπεπήε, ripened on the tree; a word which is frequently varied to δρυπετής, i. e. falling from the tree. - Gk. δρῦς, a tree; and either (1) πέπτειν, to cook, ripen, allied to E. cook, q.v.; or (2) πίπτειν, to fall, for which see feather. The Gk. δρῦε is cognate with Tree, q.v.

tall, for which see fedher. The Gk. opus is cognate with Tree, q. v. Der. drup-ac-e-ous, with suffix = Lat. -aceus.

DRY, free from moisture. (E.) M. E. druze, O. Eng. Hom. i. 87, l. 12; druze, dryze, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 385 and 412; dreye, Chaucer, C. T. 8775. - A. S. dryge, drige, Grein, i. 207. + Du. droog, dry. + G. trocken, dry.

T. Goth. ga-thaursnan, to become dry, to wither away, which is connected with E. thirst; similarly the world dry may be with connected with E. thirst; similarly the world dry may be with connected with E. thirst; similarly the world dry may be with connected with E. thirst; similarly the world dry may be with a supervised by the connected with E. thirst. larly the word dry may be ultimately connected with drink; but it hardly seems possible to link dry with thirst directly. See Thirst. Der. dry, verb; dry-ly, dry-ness,; dry-goods, dry-nurse, dry-rot, dry-salter; see also drought, drug.

woods.—Gk. δρόκ, a tree; cognate with E. tree, q. v.

DUAL, consisting of two. (L.) 'This dualitie . . . is founden in euery creature;' Test. of Love, b. ii. s. 14; ed. 1561, fol. evi. back.— Lat. dualis, dual. — Lat. duo, two. Sce Two. Der. dual-ism, dual-i-ty, DUB, to confer knighthood by a stroke on the shoulder. (E.) M. E. dubben, Havelok, 2042. — A. S. dubban; 'dubbade his sunu... to ridere,' dubbed his son knight; A. S. Chron. an. 1086 + O. Swed. dubba, to strike (Ihre). + E. Friesic dubben, to beat, slap (Koolman). A disputed word; it is sometimes said to be from O. F. dober, to beat (Cotgrave); but then, conversely, the F. adouber is derived from A. S. dubban or from Icel. dubba, to strike; and yet again, the Icel. dubba is considered as a foreign word. It may be a mere variant of dab, formerly most often used in the sense 'to strike.' See Dab. DUBIOUS, doubtful. (L.) In Milton, P. L. i. 104; and in Hall, Edw. IV, an. 9.—Lat. dubius, doubtful, moving in two directions; formed from Lat. duo, two. See Two. Der. dubious-ly, dubious-ness.

DUCAL, belonging to a duke. F. ducal, Cot.; see Duke.
DUCAT, a coin. (F., - Ital.) 'As fine as duket in Venise;'
Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 258. - O. F. ducat, 'the coyne termed a ducket, worth vis, viii d; Cot.—Ital. ducato, a ducat; a duchy.—
Low Lat. ducatus, a duchy.

B. So called because, when first coined in the duchy of Apulia (about A. D. 1140), they bore the legend 'sit tibi, Christe, datus, quem tu regis, iste ducatus.' See Duchy.

DUCHESS, the wife of a duke. (F.) Chaucer wrote The Book of the Duchesse.—O. F. ducesse, later duchesse, fem. of duc, a duke; with suffix -esse = Lat. -issa = Gk. -100a. See Duke.

DUCHY, a dukedom. (F.) M. E. duche; P. Plowman, C. iv.

245. - F. duché. - Low Lat. ducatus; formed with suffix -atus from due-, stem of dux, a leader. See Duke.

DUCK (1), a bird. (E.) M. E. doke, duke; P. Plowman, B. v.
75; xvii. 62. The word duk-e means 'diver;' the final -e = A. S. -a, suffix denoting the agent, as in hunt-a, a hunter. From M. E. duken, to dive. + Dan. duk-and, a diver (bird); from duk-=dukke, to dive, and and (=G. ente), a duck. + Swed. dyk-fdgel, a diver (bird). See Duck (2). Der. duck-ling, with double dimin. suffix -l and -ing; cf. gos-ling

DUCK (2), to dive, bob the head down. (E.) M.E. duken, douken; the pres. pt. doukand, diving, occurs in Alexander, frag. C., ed. Stevenson, 4091. Not found earlier. + Du. duiken, to stoop, dive. + Dan. dukke, to duck, plunge. + Swed. dyka, to dive. + G.

tween, to dive. Der. duck (1).

DUCK (3), a pet, darling. (O. Low G. or Scand.) 'O dainty duck!' Mids. N. D. v. 286.—E. Friesic dok, dokke, a doll. + Dan. dukke, a doll, puppet. + Swed. docka, a doll, a baby. + O. H. G. tocka, a doll, a term of endearment to a girl. Of uncertain origin.

Probably introduced from the Netherlands; cf. note to P. Plowman, C. vii. 367. This would at once account for the form doxy; for the base dok-would, in Dutch, inevitable preceive the very common double dimin. suffix stells, giving dokest-in. receive the very common double dimin. suffix -et-je, giving dok-et-je, which would be pronounced as down by an English mouth. The Also as a verb; 'it dulleth me;' id. 16561. In the Ancren Riwle, word occurs in E. Friesic as dokke, a doll, doktje, a small bundle we have 'dulle neiles,' i. e. blunt nails, as a various reading of 'dulte (Koolman).

DUCK (4), light canvas. (Du.) Not in early use; a nautical word. – Du. doek, linen cloth, towel, canvas. + Dan. dug, cloth. +

Swed. duk. + Icel. dukr., cloth, table-cloth, towel. + G. tuch, cloth; O. H. G. tuch, M. H. G. tuch. Cf. Skt. dhvaja, a flag, banner.

DUCT, a conduit-pipe. (L) Still spelt ductus in 1715. 'Ductus, a leading, guiding; a conduit-pipe;' Kersey's Dict. - Lat. ductus, a leading. - Lat. ductus, pp. of ducere, to lead. See Duke; and Douche.

DUCTILE, malleable. (F.,-L.) 'Soft dispositions, which ductile be;' Donne, To the Countess of Huntingdon. F. ductile, 'Soft dispositions, which

'easie to be hammered;' Cot. - Lat. ductilis, easily led. - Lat. ductus, pp. of ducere, to lead. See Duke. Der. ductil-i-ty.

DUDGEON (1), resentment. (C.) 'When civil dudgeon first grew high;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1, 1, 1, -W. dychan, a jeer; dygen, malice, resentment; cf. dygas, hatred; dueg, melancholy, spleen. And cf. Corn. duchan, duwhan, grief, sorrow, lamentation.

DUDGEON (2), the haft of a dagger. (Unknown.) 'And on thy blade and dudgeon gouts of blood;' Macb. ii. 1. 46. See Clark and Wright, notes to Macbeth; Furness, notes to ditto. The evidence and Wright, notes to Macoeth; Furness, notes to ditto. In evidence goes to shew that some daggers were called dudgeon-hafted, which Gifford explains by saying that 'the wood was gouged out in crooked channels, like what is now, and perhaps was then, called snail-creeping;' note on Jonson's Works, v. 221. The root of the box-tree was also called dudgeon, apparently because it was curiously marked; 'the root [of box]. . is dudgin and full of work;' Holland's Pliny, b. vis.' c. 16; where the context shews the sense to be 'crisped damask-wise' or 'full of waving.' β . Since the sense clearly has reference to the markings on the handle of the dagger, we may confidently reject the proposal to connect dudgeon with G. degen, a sword, or with the E.

DUE, owed as a debt. (F., -L.) M. E. dewe. 'A maner dewe dette' = a kind of debt due; P. Plowman, C. iv. 307. - O. F. deu, masc. deue, fem., 'due;' Cot.; pp. from devoir (spelt debvoir in Cot.), to owe. - Lat. debere, to owe. See Dobt. Der. du-ly (M. E. duelich, duly, Gower, C. A. iii. 245, 354); also du-ty, q. v. DUEL, a combat between two. (Ital., -L.) Formerly duello, Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. 4, 337.—Ital. duello, whence also F. duel.—Lat. duellum, lit. a combat between two.—Lat. duo, two. See Two. ¶ The Lat. bellum = duellum; see Belligerent. Der. duell-er, duell-ist, duell-ing.

DUENNA, an old lady acting as guardian. (Span.,-L.) occurs in Julia's letter (in Slawkenbergius' Tale), in Sterne's Tristram Shandy. - Span. dueña, a married lady, duenna. - Lat. domina, a lady.

Thus duenna is the same as donna, q.v.; or dame, q.v.

DUET, a piece of music for two. (ltal.) A musical term.—Ital. duetto; in Meadows, Eng.-Ital. part. - Ital. due, two. - Lat. duo, two.

See Two. For the suffix, cf. quart-ette, quint-ette.

DUFFEL, a kind of coarse woollen cloth. (Du.) 'And let it be of duffil gray;' Wordsworth, Alice Fell.—Du. duffel, duffel. So named from Duffel, a town not far from Antwerp.

DUG, a teat. (Scand.) In Shak. Romeo, i. 3. 26. The exact original is not forthcoming, but it is clearly allied to Swed. digga, Dan. dagge, to suckle, fondle. β . Perhaps due to the \checkmark DHUGH, to milk; cf. Skt. duh (=dhugh), to milk; whence also daughter, Q. v. DUGONG, a swimming mammal, sea-cow. (Malay.) Malay duyong, a sea-cow; Marsden's Malay Dict. p. 138.

DUKE, a leader. (F., -L.) M. E. duc, duk; Layamon, l. 86. - O. F. duc. - Lat. ducem, accus. of dux, a leader (crude form duci). -Lat. ducere, to lead; cognate with E. tug, q. v. - V DUK, to pull, draw; Fick, i. 624. Der. duke-dom; and see duc-al, duch-ess, duck-y, duc-at, doge. From the same source we have ad-duce, con-duce, deduce, in-duce, &c.; also duct, con-duct, de-duct, in-duct, &c.

DULCET, sweet. (F.,-L.) In Shak. Mids. N. D. ii. 1. 151; and used by Cotgrave to translate O. F. doucet, of which an older spelling must have been dolcet, or dulcet; cf. O. Ital. dolcetto, somewhat sweet (Florio). Formed, with dimin. suffix -et (with force of E. -ish), from O.F. dulce, dolce, fem. of dols, sweet; see dols in Burguy. - Lat. dulcis, sweet. See Douceur; and see below.

DULCIMER, a musical instrument. (Span., -L.) In the Bible, A.V. Dan. iii. 5; and in Baret's Alvearie. [In the index to Cotgrave, the O. F. is given as doulciné; Roquefort has doulcemer, but without any hint of date. Whether the word came through the French or not, it must in either case be a corruption of the Span. form.] -Span. dulcemele, a dulcimer; so called from its sweet sound. - Lat. dulce melos, a sweet song; dulce is neut. of dulcis (see above); and melos = Gk. μέλοε, for which see Melody.

we have 'dulle neiles,' i. e. blunt nails, as a various reading of 'dulte neiles;' see Dolt. Dul stands for an older dol, and that for dwal.] -A. S. dol, foolish, stupid; Grein, i. 194; cf. A. S. ge-dwelan, to err, ge-dweola, ge-dwild, error, folly; id. 394, 395. + Du. dol, mad; cf. dwalen, to err. + Goth. dwals, foolish; whence dwalitha, folly, dwalmon, to be foolish or mad. + G. toll, mad; cf. O. H. G. twalm, stupefaction. [Cf. Gk. 80λερόε, turbid, disturbed by passion.] - *DHWAR, to fell; cf. Skt. dhvri, to bend, to fell; see Benfey, p. 452; Fick, i. 121. See also Dizzy. Der. dull, verb; dul-ly, dul-ness, dull-sighted, dull-witted; also dull-ard (with suffix as in drunk-ard, q. v.); also dol-t, q. v.

DUMB, silent, unable to speak. (E.) M. E. dombe, dumbe; Chaucer, C. T. 776 (A. 774).—A. S. dumb, mute; Grein, i. 212. + Du. dom, dull, stupid. + Icel. dumbr, dumb. + Swed. dumb. + Dan. dum, stupid. + Goth. dumbs, dumb. + O. H. G. tump, G. dumm, mute, stupid.

B. The form dumb is a nasalised form of dub, which approximately approximatel pears in Goth. daubs, deaf. See further under Deaf. Der. dumb-ly. dumb-ness; dumb-bell, dumb-show; also dumm-y (= dumb-y).

DUMP, an ill-shapen piece. (E.?) 'Dump, a clumsy medal of metal cast in moist sand: East; Halliwell. Cf. the phr. 'I don't care a dump,' i. e. a piece, bit. Cf. 'Dubby, dumpy, short and thick: West; 'Halliwell. The dimin. of dump is dump-ling, q. v. \(\beta\). We also find dump, to beat, strike with the feet; to dump about, to move with short steps; Jamieson. Also cf. Du. dompneus, a great nose. Perhaps connected with Icel. dumpa, to thump; Swed. dial. dumpa, to make a noise, dance awkwardly; dompa, to fall down plump, to thump. Der. dump-y.

DUMPLING, a kind of pudding. (E.?) 'A Norfolk dumpling;'
Massinger, A New Way to Pay, A. iii. sc. 2. A dumpling is properly a small solid ball of pudding; a dimin. of dump, with double dimin.

suffix -ling (=-l + -ling). See Dump.

DUMPS, melancholy, sadness. (Scand.) 'As one in doleful dumps;' Chevy Chase, later version, l. 198. The sing is dump, somewhat rare. 'He's in a deep dump now;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Humourous Lieut. A. iv. sc. 6. The most closely allied word is Swed. dial. dumpin, melancholy (Rietz); which is formed as a pp. β. Further allied to G. dumpf, damp, Du. dompig, damp, hazy, misty, Du. dompen, to quench, extinguish, and to E. damp. Cf. the phr. 'to damp one's spirits.' See Damp. Der. dump-ish, dump-ishly, dump-ish-ness.

DUN (1), of a dull brown colour. (C.) Dunne of hewe; Rom. of Rose, 1213. - A. S. dunn, dark; whence dunnian, to be darkened; Alfred's Boeth lib. i. met. 5.—Irish and Gael. donn, brown. + W. dwn, dun, dusky, swarthy. ¶ Hence, I suppose, the river-name Don. Perhaps further related also to G. dunkel, Du. donker, dark, DUN (2), to urge for payment. (Scand.) 'I shall be dunning thee every day;' Lord Bacon, Apophthegms, no. 288. Cf. M.E. dunning, a loud noise, Prompt. Parv. p. 135.—Icel. duna, to thunder, make a hollow noise; dynja, to rattle, make a din; koma einum dyn fyrir dyrr, to make a din before one's door, take one by surprise. + Swed. ddna, to make a noise, to ring. B. These words are cognate. with A. S. dynnan, to make a din; and dun is thus a doublet of din.

See Din. Der. dun, sb.

DUNCE, a stupid person. (Geographical.) A proper name; originally in the phrase 'a Duns man.' 'A Duns man;' Tyndall, Works, p. 88; 'a great Duns man, so great a preacher;' Barnes, Works, p. 232; cf. p. 272. The word was introduced by the Thomists, or disciples of Thomas Aquinas, in ridicule of the Scotists, or disciples of John Duns Scotus, schoolman, died A.D. 1308. The Scotch claim him as a native of Dunse, in Berwickshire; others derive his name from Dunston, not far from Alnwick, Northumberland. Either way, Duns is the name of a place, and the word is English.

Not to be confused with John Scotus Erigena, died A. D. 875.

DUNE, a low sand-hill. (C.) M. E. dune, A. S. dún; an older form of down, a hill, and a doublet of it. See Down (2).

DUNG, excrement. (E.) M. E. dung, dong; Chaucer, C. T. 15024.—A.S. dung (dat. dunge), Luke, xiii. 8 (Hatton MS.); the older MSS. have meone. + O. Fries. dung. + Swed. dynga, muck. + Dan. dynga, a heap, hoard, mass; cf. dynga, to heap, to amass. + G. dung, dunger. B. Remoter origin unknown; perhaps related to Ding, to cast, throw down, q. v. Der. dung, vb., dung-cart, dungheap. dung. kill; also ding-y, q. v.

DUNGEION, a keep-tower, prison. (F.,-L.) The same word as donjon, a keep-tower of a castle. 'Which of the castle was the chef dongeon;' Chaucer, C. T. 1059; cf. P. Plowman, B. prol. 15.—O. F. donjon, the keep-tower or chief tower of a castle; Prov. dompnhon (Brachet). - Low Lat. domnionem, acc. of domnio, a donjon-dominionem, acc. of dominio, the same as dominium, a principal possession, domain, dominion; so called because the chief tower. See further under Dominion, Domain.

DUODECIMO, a name applied to a book in sheets of 12 leaves. Duodecimo; a book is said to be in duodecimo, or in twelves, when it consists of 12 leaves in a sheet; 'Kersey, ed. 1715.-Lat. duodecimo, abl. case of duodecimus, twelfth. - Lat. duodecim, twelve. -Lat. duo, two; and decem, ten. See Two and Ten. From same source, duodecim-al; duodec-ennial (see decennial); and see below.

DUODENUM, the first of the small intestines. (L.) denum, the first of the thin guts, about 12 fingers-breadth long; Kersey, ed. 1715. A late Lat. anatomical word, formed from Lat. duodeni, twelve apiece, a distributive form of duodecim, twelve. So named from its length. See above.

DUP, to undo a door. (E.) In Hamlet, iv. 5. 53. Lit. to do up, i. e. lift up the latch; and contracted from do up. See Don, Doff. DUPE, a person easily deceived. (F.) A late word. In Pope, Dunciad, iv. 502.—F. dupe, a dupe. Origin uncertain. Webster and Littré say that it is the same as the O. F. name for a hoopoe, because the bird is easily caught. Cotgrave has: 'Dupe, f. a whoop, or hooper; a bird that hath on her head a green crest, or tust of feathers, and loves ordure so well, that she nestles in it.' This word dupe is probably (like hoopoe) onomatopoetic, and imitative of the bird's cry.

Cf. Bret. houperik, (1) a hoopoe, (2) a dupe. We have similar ideas in gull, goose, and booby.

DUPLICATE, double, two-fold. (L.)

Though the number

DUPLICATE, double, two-fold. (L.) 'Though the number were duplicate;' Hall, Hen. VII, an. 5.—Lat. duplicatus, pp. of duplicare, to double.—Lat. duplic-, stem of duplex, twofold.—Lat. du=duo, two; and plicare, to fold. See Complex.

DUPLICITY, falsehood. (F.,—L.) Lit. doubleness. 'No false duplicite;' Craft of Louers, st. 22; in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 341, back. = O. F. duplicite (not recorded, but a correct form). - Lat. acc. duplicitatem, from nom. duplicitas, doubleness. = Lat. duplici-, crude form of duplex, twofold. See above.

DURANCE, captivity. (F., -L.) Fabyan has duraunce in the sense of 'endurance,' vol. i. c. 105. The sense 'imprisonment,' common in Shak. (Meas. iii. 1. 67, &c.), comes from that of long sufferance or long endurance of hardship. Cotgrave explains durer by 'to dure, last, continue, indure, abide, remaine, persist; also to sustaine, brook, suffer.' An O. F. durance does not appear; the suffix -ance is added by analogy with words like defiance, from O. F. desfiance. Sec Dure, Duress.

DURATION, length of time. (L.) A coined word; in Kersey, ed. 1715.—Lat. duratus, pp. of durare, to last. See Dure.

DURBAR, a hall of audience. (Pers.) In Sir T. In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 103. A Hindustani word, but borrowed from Persian. - Pers. dar-bar, a prince's court, levee; Palmer's Dict. col. 255. Lit. 'door of admittance.' - Pers. dar, a door (= E. door), and bár, admittance; id. col. 63. The word bar alone is also sometimes used in the sense of court, congress, or tribunal; Rich.

Pers. Dict. p. 230.

DURE, to last, endure. (F.,-L.) Once in common use, now nearly obsolete. M. E. duren, King Alisaunder, 3276.—O. F. (and mod. F.) durer, 'to dure, last;' Cot.-Lat. durare, to last.-Lat. durus, hard, lasting. + Irish dur, dull, hard, stupid, obstinate, firm, strong; Gael. dur, the same. + W. dir, certain, sure, of force. Cf. Gk. δύναμι, force. Der. dur-ing (orig. pres. pt. of dur-), dur-able, dur-abl-y, dur-able-ness, dur-abl-ity; and see duration, duress, dur-once; and cf dynamic.

DURESS, hardship, constraint. (F., -L.) M. E. duresse; Rom. of the Rose, 35,47; Will. of Palerne, 1114, -O. F. duresce, hardship. - Lat. duritia, hardness, harshness, severity. - Lat. durus, hard. See dusk, sb., dusk-y, dusk-i-ness, dusk-i-ly.

DUSK, dull, dark, dim. (E.) 'Duskede his yen two;' Chaucer, C. T. 2808. M. E. dosc, dark, dim; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 259, l. 16. Also deose; 'This word is deosk' = this is a dark saying; Ancren Riwle, p. 148. Not found in A. S., yet deose is, strictly, an older form than A. S. deore, whence the mod. E. dark; see Dark. Cf. Swed. dial. duska, to drizzle; dusk, a slight shower; duskug, misty (Rietz). Der.

DUST, fine powder. (E.) M. E. dust, Ancren Riwle, p. 122. A. S. dust, Grein, i. 212. + Du. duist, meal-dust. + Icel. dust, dust. + Dan. dyst, fine flour, meal. Closely allied words are also Swed. and Dan. dunst, steam, vapour, Goth. dauns, odour, O. H. G. tunst, G. dunst, vapour, fine dust, Lat. fumus, Skt. dhuma, smoke, Skt. dhuli, dust; shewing that dust and fume are co-radicate. — DHU, to shake, blow; cf. Skt. dhu, to shake, remove, blow, shake off. See sense; All's Well, iv. i. 78. — G. Deutsch, lit, belonging to the people; M. H. G. diut-isk. Here the suffix -isk = E. -isk, and the base diut is cognate with Goth. thiuda, A.S. beud, a people, nation. From the same base, written tiut, was formed the Latinised word Teutones, whence E. Teutonic. - \(\sqrt{TU}, \tau \) to be strong; cf. Skt. tu, to be strong; whence E. Teulonic. — 4 1U, to be strong; cf. Skt. tu, to be strong; see Curtius, i. 278; Benfey, p. 366.

DUTY, obligatory service. (F., -L.) Chaucer has duetee in the sense of 'due debt;' C. T. 6934; cf. Gower, C. A. iii. 124, 177. The word appears to be a mere coinage, there being no corresponding form in French; formed by analogy with words in -/y from the O. F. deu, due. See Due.

The F. word for duty is devoir (Span deber, 124) decays in the infin more used as a ship honce M. F. device. tal. dovere), i. e. the infin. mood used as a sb.; hence M. E. deuoir, deuer (with u=v), Chaucer, C. T. 2600. Der. dute-ous, -ly, -ness; duti-ful, -ly, -ness.

DWALE, deadly nightshade. (E.) So called because it causes stupefaction or dulness. M. E. dwale, P. Plowman C. xxiii. 379; on which see my note. - A. S. dwala, an error; hence, stupefaction; cf. Dan. dvale, a trance, torpor, stupor, dvale-drik, a soporific, dwale-drink. See further under Dull, and see Dwell.

DWARF, a small deformed man. (E.) The final f is a substitution for a final guttural sound, written g or gh; in Will. of Palerne, l. 362, we have the form dwerp. The pl. dwerghes is in Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 205. — A.S. dweorg, dwerg, dweorh, a dwarf; all authorised by Lye. + Du. dwerg. + Icel. dwergr. + Swed. and Dan. dwerg. + M. H. G. twerc (also querch), G. zwerg. Cf. Skt. (Vedic) dhvaras, a (female) evil spirit or fairy, cited by Fick (i. 121) from Roth. A DHWAR, to rush, fell, bend; Skt. dhvri; whence also dull, dwell, dwale. The evidence tends to shew that the original sense of dwarf is not 'bent,' but 'one who rushes forth,' furious; cf. Zend. dvar, to rush forward, said of evil spirits; cf. Gk. θοῦρος, raging, θρώσκευ, to spring, rage, Lat. furers. to rage; see Curtius. i. 317, 318. The A. S. dwellan, to hinder, is also suggestive. Der. dwarf-ish, dwarf-ish-ness.

DWELL, to delay, linger, abide. (E.) M. E. dwellen, to delay, linger; Chaucer, C. T. 2356; to which are allied M. E. dwelen, to be torpid, and dwelien, to err; see Stratmann. - A. S. dwellan (only used in the active sense), to retard, cause to delay, also, to seduce, lead astray, Grein, i. 213, 394; to which are allied gedwelen, to err, gedwelan, to lead astray. The peculiar modern use is Scandinavian. gedwelan, to lead astray. The peculiar modern use is Scandinavian. [The orig. sense is to mislead, cause to err, whence the intransitive sense of to err, to wander aimlessly, linger, dwell.] - A. S. dwal, only found in the contracted form dol, dull, stupid, torpid; but certified by the derivative duala, error, in the Northumb. version of S. Matt, xxiv. 24, and by the Goth. dwals, foolish. See Dull. + Du. dwalen, to err; cf. dwaaltuin (lit. dwale-town), a labyrinth, dwaallicht (dwalelight), a will-of-the-wisp. + Icel. dvelja, to dwell, delay, tarry, abide; orig. to hinder; cf. dvöl, a short stay. + Swed. dväljas, to dwell, lit. to delay oneself. + Dan. dvæle, to linger; cf. dvale, a trance. + O. H. G. twaljan, M. H. G. twellen, to hinder, delay. See Dwale. - ✓ DHWAR, to fell, bend, mislead; cf. Skt. dhvri, to fell, bend. Dor. dwell-er, dwell-ing.

DWINDLE, to waste away. (E.) In Shak. Macb. i. 3. 23. The suffix -le is a somewhat late addition, and has rather a diminutive than the usual frequentative force. The d is excrescent, as common after n; cf. sound from M. E. soun. M. E. dwinen; Rom. of the Rose, 360; Gower, C. A. ii. 117. - A. ELOPE, to run away. (Du.) Spelt ellope, Spenser, F. Q. v. 4. 9. Corrupted from Du. ontloopen, to evade, escape, run away, by substitution that the familiar policy.

tuting the familiar prefix e- (=Lat. e, out) for the unfamiliar Du. prefix ont. 1. The Du. prefix ont. = G. prefix ent. = A. S. and.; see Answer. 2. The verb loopen, to run, is cognate with E. leap; see LESD. Der. elope-ment.

ELOQUENT, gifted with good utterance. (F., -L.) M. E. eloquent, Chaucer, C. T. 10990. — O. F. eloquent; Cot. — Lat. eloquent, stem of pres. pt. of eloqui, to speak out. — Lat. e, out; and loqui, to speak. See Elocution. Der. eloquent-ly, eloquence.

ELSE, otherwise. (E.) M. E. elles, always an adverb; Chaucer,

-lika in Lithuanian vėnolika, eleven, Fick, ii. 292. And it is probable that lika = Lat. decem, ten. The change from d to l occurs in Lat. lineua, lacruma = dingua, dacruma. Der. eleven-th.

ELSE, otherwise. (E.) M. E. elles, always an adverb; Chaucer, C. T. 13867. — A. S. elles, otherwise, Matt. vi. 1; an adverbial form, orig. gen. sing. from an adj. el (base all), signifying other; cf. A. S. ellem, a little sprite. (E.) M. E. ell, Chaucer, C. T. 6455. — A. S. ellemd, a foreign land, Grein, i. 223. + O. Swed. äljes, otherwise (Ihre); whence mod. Swed. eljest, with excrescent t. + Goth. aljis, EMBATTLE (2), to range in order of battle. (F.) In Shak. alis, adj. other, another; gen. aljis, + M. H. G. alles, elles, elles, elles, elles, elles, otherwise, an adverb of genitival form. Cf. Lat. alias, from alius, in); and E. battle, of F. origin. Probably due to a misappreother. See Alien. Der. else-where,

ELUCIDATE, to make clear. (Low Lat.) 'Elucidate, to make bright, to manifest;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Low Lat. elucidatus, pp. of elucidare; compounded from Lat. e, out, very, and lucidus, bright. See Lucid. Der. elucidat-ion, elucidat-or, elucidat-ive.

ELUDE, to avoid slily. (L.) In Bp. Taylor, vol. i. ser. 5 (R.)

- Lat. eludere, pp. elusus, to mock, deceive. - Lat. e, out; and ludere, to play. See Ludicrous. Der. elus-ive, elus-ive-ly, elus-ion, elus-or-y; from pp. elusus.

ELYSIUM, a heaven. (L., -Gk.) In Shak. Two Gent. ii. 7. 38. - Lat. elysium. - Gk. 'Ηλύσιον', short for 'Ηλύσιον πεδίον', the Elysian field; Homer, Od. 4. 563. Der. Elysian.

EMACIATE, to make thin. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. vii. c. 13, § 6.—Lat. emaciatus, pp. of emaciare, to make thin.—Lat. e, out, very; and maci-, base of maci-es, leanness; cf. macer, lean. See Meagre. Der. emaciat-ion.

EMANATE, to flow from. (L.) 'In all bodily emanations Bp. Hall, Contemplations, b. iv. cont. 7. § 19. - Lat. emanatus, pp. of emanare, to flow out. - Lat. e, out; and manare, to flow. Manare = madnare, from the base mad- in Lat. madidus, wet, madere, to be moist.— MAD, to well, flow; cf. Skt. mad, to be wet, to get drunk. Der. emanat-ion, emanat-ive.

EMANCIPATE, to set free. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. emancipatus, pp. of emancipare, to set free. - Lat. e, out; and mancipare, to transfer property. - Lat. mancip-, stem of manceps, one who acquires property; lit. one who takes it in hand. - Lat. manbase of manus, the hand; and capere, to take. See Manual and Capable. Der. emancipat-or, emancipat-ion.

EMASCULATE, to deprive of virility. (L.) emasculated [become emasculate] or turned women; Sir T. Browne. Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 17, § 2.—Lat. emascularus, pp. of emasculare, to castrate.—Lat. e, out of, away; and masculus, male. See Male. Der. emasculat-ion.

EMBALM, to anoint with balm. (F.) In Shak. Timon, iv. 3. 30. Spelt imbalm in Cotgrave. M. E. baumen (without the prefix), whence bawmyt, bawlmyt, embalmed, in Barbour's Bruce, xx. 286. -O. F. embaumer, 'to imbalm;' Cot. - O. F. em-=en-=Lat. in; and baume, balm. See Balm.

EMBANK, to cast up a mound. (Hybrid; F. and E.) Spelt imbank in Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. Coined from F. em- (Lat. im-=in), and E. bank. See Bank. Der. embank-ment.

EMBARGO, a stoppage of ships. (Span.) 'By laying an embargo upon all shipping in time of war;' Blackstone, Comment. b. i. c. 7. - Span. embargo, an embargo, seizure, arrest; cf. Span. embargare, to lay on an embargo, arrest. - Span. em- (-Lat. im-=in-); and barra, a bar. Hence embargo = a putting of a bar in the way. See Bar, Barricade, Embarrass. Der. embargo, verb. EMBARK, to put or go on board ship. (F.) In Hamlet, i. 3. 1.

-O. F. embarquer, 'to imbark;' Cot. -F. em-=Lat. im-=in; and F. barque, a bark. See Bark. Der. embark-at-ion.

EMBARRASS, to perplex. (F.) 'I saw my friend a little embarrassed;' Spectator, no. 109.—F. embarrasser, 'to intricate, pester, intangle, perplex;' Cot. [Cf. Span. embarazar, to embarrass.]—F. em- (= Lat. im-=in); and a stem barras-, formed from barre, a bar. See Bar, Embargo. Der. embarrass-ment. ¶ 1. The form barras is fairly accounted for by the Prov. barras, a bar (Raynouard); it is a sing. noun, but probably was formed from barras, pl. of Prov. barra, a bar.

2. Similarly the Span. barras, properly the pl. of barra, a bar, is used in the sense of prison. The word was evidently formed in the South of France.

EMBASSY, the function of an ambassador. (Low Lat.) 1. Shak. has embassy, L. L. L. i. 1. 135; also embassage, Much Ado, i. 1. 282; and embassade (= O. F. embassade, Cotgrave), 3 Hen. VI, iv. 3. 32. 2. Latimer has ambassages, Sermon on the Ploughers, l. 180 (in Skeat's Specimens). Chaucer has embassadrye, Six-text, B. 233.

3. Embassy is a French modification of Low Lat. ambascia, a message, made on the model of O. F. embassade from Low Lat. ambasciata. See further under Ambassador.

EMBATTLE (1), to furnish with battlements. (F.) M. E. embattelen, enbattelen; Chaucer, C. T. 14866.—O. F. em- or en- (= Lat. im-=in), prefix; and O. F. bastiller, to embattle. See Battlement. ¶ 1. The simple verb battailen or battalen occurs early; the pp. battailyt or battalit, i. e. embattled, occurs in Barbour's Bruce, ii. 221, iv. 134; and the sb. battalyng, an embattlement, in the same, iv. 136.

2. Obviously, these words were accommodated to the spelling of M. E. battale (better bataille), a battle; and from the first a confusion with battle has been common.

3. Cf. Low Lat. imbattalare, to fortify, which Migne rightly equates to an O. F. embastiller.

EMBAY, to enclose in a bay. (F.) In Shak. Oth. ii. 1. 18. A coined word; from F. em-(=Lat. im-=in); and E. bay, of F. origin.

See Bay (3).

EMBELLISH, to adom. (F.,-L.) M. E. embelissen, Chaucer, Good Women, 1735. O. F. embeliss, stem of pres. pt. &c. of O. F. embellir, 'to imbellish, beautifie;' Cot. O. F. em (Lat. im-in); and bel, fair, beautiful. - Lat. bellus, well-mannered, fine, handsome. See Beauty. ¶ For the suffix -ish, see Abash. Der. embel-

EMBER-DAYS, fast days at four seasons of the year. (E.) corruption of M. E. ymber. 'The Wednesdai Gospel in ymber weke in Septembre monethe;' Wyclif's Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 203; cf. pp. 205, 207. 'Umbridawes' (another MS. ymbri wikes), i. e. emberdays (or ember-weeks); Ancren Riwle, p. 70. A.S. ymbren, ymbryne. 1. On bare pentecostenes wucan to bam ymbrene = in Pentecost week according to the ymber, i. e. in due course; rubric to Luke, viii. 40. 'On ælcum ymbren-fæstene,' = at every ember-fast; Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 608. 2. The full form of the word is ymb-ryne or ymbe-ryne, and the orig. sense 'a running round,' 'circuit,' or 'course;' compounded of A.S. ymbe, around, cognate with G. um., Lat. ambi-; and ryne, a running, from rinnan, to run. See Ambi-, prefix, and Run.

This is the only right explanation; for numerous examples and references, see ymbren in Lye's A. S. Dictionary. Ihre rightly distinguishes between O. Swed. ymberdagar, borrowed from A. S. and obsolete, and the Swed. tamper-dagar, corrupted (like G. quatember) from Lat. quatuor tempora, the four seasons.

EMBERS, ashes. (E.) The b is excrescent. The M. E. form is emmeres or emeres, equivalent to Lowland Scotch ammeris or ameris. used by G. Douglas to translate Lat. fauillam in Æneid, vi. 227. [Probably an E. word, though rare; else, it is Scandinavian.] - A. S. æmyrian, embers (Benson); an unauthorised word, but apparently of correct form. + Icel. eimyrja, embers. + Dan. emmer, embers. + M. H. G. eimurja, embers; Bavarian aimern, emmern, pl., Schmeller, Possibly connected with Icel. eimr, eimi, steam, vapour; i. 76. but this is by no means certain.

EMBEZZLE, to steal slily, filch. (F.?) Formerly embesyll or embesell. 'I concele, I embesyll a thynge, I kepe a thynge secret; I embesell, I hyde, Je cele; I embesyll a thynge, or put it out of the way. Je substrays; He that embesylleth a thying intendeth to steale it if he can convoye it clenly; Palsgrave's F. Dict. Spelt embesile in The Lament of Mary Magdalen, st. 39; pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1621, foh 319. Apparently French; but its origin remains unexplained. See, however, under Imbecile. Der. embezzle-ment.

EMBLAZON, to adorn with heraldic designs. (F.) emblaze, 2 Hen. VI, iv. 10. 76. Spenser has emblazon, F. Q. iv. 10. 55. Formed from blazon, q. v., with F. prefix em-= Lat. im-=in. Cf. O. F. blasonner, 'to blaze arms;' Cot. Der. emblazon-ment, emblazon-ry. EMBLEM, a device. (F., = L., = Gk.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 1. 44. = O. F. embleme, 'an embleme;' Cot. = Lat. emblema, a kind of ornament. - Gk. ξμβλημα, a kind of moveable ornament, a thing put on. – Gk. $\epsilon \mu \beta \dot{a} \lambda \lambda \epsilon \iota \nu$, to put in, lay on. – Gk. $\epsilon \mu$ - = $\epsilon \nu$, in; and $\beta \dot{a} \lambda \lambda \epsilon \iota \nu$, to cast, throw, put. See Belemnite. Der. emblemat-ic, from Gk. stem ἐμβληματ-; emblemat-ic-al.

EMBODY, to invest with a body. (Hybrid; F. and E.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 3. 22. Formed from E. body with F. prefix em-Lat. im-=in. Der. embodi-ment.

EMBOLDEN, to make bold. (Hybrid; F. and E.) In Shak. Timon, iii. 5. 3. Formed from E. bold with F. prefix em = Lat. im=in; and with E. suffix -en.

EMBOLISM, an insertion of days, &c. to make a period regular. (F., -Gk.) 'Embolism, the adding a day or more to a year;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -O. F. embolisme, 'an addition, as of a day or more, unto a year;' Cot.-Gk. ἐμβολισμός, an intercalation.-Gk. έμ=έν, in; and βάλλειν, to cast. See Emblem. Der. em-

EMBOSOM, to shelter closely. (Hybrid; F. and E.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 4. 25. From F. prefix em-= en= Lat. in; and E.

EMBOSS (1), to adorn with bosses or raised work. (F.) Chaucer has enbossed; Good Women, 1198. Cf. King Lear, ii. 4. 227.—

emboucher, to put to the mouth, from Lat. bucca. See Debouch.

EMBOWELL, to enclose deeply. (F.) 'Deepe emboweled in the earth;' Spenser, F. Q. vi. 8. 15. [Often wrongly put for disembowel; Shak. Rich. III, v. 2. 10.] From F. em-=Lat. im-=in; and bowel, of F. origin, q. v. Der. embowel-ment.

EMBOWER, to place in a bower. (Hybrid; F. and E.) Spenser has embowering, i. e. sheltering themselves; tr. of Virgil's Gnat, 225.

Coined from F. em-=Lat. im-=in; and E. bower.

EMBRACE, to take in the arms. (F.) In early use. M. E. enbracen, to brace on to the arm (said of a shield), King Alisaunder, 6651; cf. Chaucer, C. T. 8288. - O. F. embracer, to embrace, seize (Burguy). - O. F. em-, for en, = Lat. in; and bras, an arm, from Lat.

brachium. See Brace. Der. embrace, sb.

EMBRASURE, an aperture with slant sides. (F.) 'Embrasure, an inlargement made on the inside of a gate, door, &c. to give more light; a gap or loophole, &c.; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715.—F. embrasure, orig. The prefix is F. em-= en = Lat. in. 2. The rest is O. F. braser, 'to skue, or chamfret;' Cot.; of unknown origin.

EMBROCATION, a fomenting. (F., -Low Lat., -Gk.) Spelt embrochation in Holland's Pliny, b. xx. c. 14, § 1.—O. F. embrocation, an embrochation, fomenting; Cot.—Low Lat. embrocaus, pp. of embrocare, to pour into a vessel, &c.; cf. Ital. embroceare, to foment.— Gk. ἐμβροχή, a fomentation. - Gk. ἐμβρέχειν, to soak in, to foment. - Gk. ἐμ = ἐν, in; and βρέχειν, to wet, allied to E. rain; Curtius,

i. 234. See Rain. EMBROIDER, to ornament with needlework. (F.) M. E. embrouden, embroyden, Chaucer, C. T. 89. [This M. E. form produced a later form embroid; the -er is a needless addition, due to the sb. embroid-er-y.] Cotgrave gives 'to imbroyder' as a translation of O. F. broder. = O. F. prefix em-=en-=Lat. in; and O. F. broder, to embroider, or broider. See Broider. Der. embroider-er, embroider-y (rightly embroid-ery, from M. E. embroid; spelt embroud-erie, Gower, C. A. ii. 41); Merry Wives, v. 5. 75.

in, upon, and sequi, to follow. See Sue.

ENSURE, to make sure. (F., -L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 12077.

Compounded from F. en (= Lat. in), and O. F. seur, sure. See Assure, and Sure.

Generally spelt insure, which is a confusion of languages; whence insur-ance.

ENTABLATURE, part of a building surmounting the columns. (F.,-L.) Spelt intablature in Cotgrave. - O. F. entablature, 'an intablature;' Cot.; an equivalent term to entablement, the mod. F. form. The O.F. entablement meant, more commonly, 'a pedestal' or 'base' of a column rather than the entablature above. Both sbs. are formed from Low Lat. intabulare, to construct an intabulatum or basis. - Lat. in, upon; and Low Lat. tabulare, due to Lat. tabulatum, board-work, a flooring. - Lat. tabula, a board, plank. See Table. ¶ Since entablature simply meant something laid flat or boardwise upon something else in the course of building, it could be applied to the part either below or above the columns.

ENTAIL, to bestow as a heritage. (F.) In Shak. 3 Hen. VI, i. 1. 194, 235; as sb., All's Well, iv. 3. 313. [1. The legal sense is peculiar; it was originally 'to abridge, limit;' lit. 'to cut into.' 'To entayle land, addicere, adoptare hæredes;' Levins. 2. The M. E. entailen signifies 'to cut or carve,' in an ornamental way; see Rom. of the Rose, 140; P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, 11. 167, 200.] = O. F. entailler, 'to intaile, grave, carve, cut in;' Cot.

F. en = Lat. in; and tailler, to cut. See Tally. Der. entail-ment.

ENTANGLE, to ensnare, complicate. (Hybrid.) In Spenser, Muiopotmos, 387; also in Levins.—F. en—Lat. in; and Tangle, q. v. Der. entangle-ment, Spectator, No. 352.

ENTER, to go into. (F.,—L.) M. E. entren, Rob. of Glouc. p. 47; King Alisaunder, 5782.—O. F. entrer, 'to enter;' Cot.—Lat. intrare, to enter, go into.—Lat. in; and & TAR, to overstep, go beyond; cf. Skt. tri, to cross, pass over; Lat. trans, across. See Curtius, i. 274; and see Term. Der. entr-ance, Macb. i. 5. 40; entr-y, M. E. entree, Chaucer, C. T. 1985, from O. F. entree, orig. the fem. of the pp. of F. entrer. ENTERFRISE, an undertaking. (F., -L.) In Sir John Cheke, Hurt of Sedition (R.) Skelton even has it as a verb; 'Chauce, that nobly enterprysyd;' Garland of Laurell, l. 388. — O. F. entreprise (Burguy), more commonly entreprinse, 'an enterprise;' Cot. — O. F. entrepris, pp. of entreprendre, to undertake. - Low Lat. interprendere. to undertake. - Lat. inter, among; and prendere, short for prehendere, to take in hand, which is from Lat. pre, before, and (obsolete) hendere, to get, cognate with Gk. xavbavev, and E. get. See Get.

ENTERTAIN, to admit, receive. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. - ENUMERATE, to number. (L.)

Plowman, C. xiv. 85, and derived from O. F. enqueste, 'an inquest; '& i. 10. 32. - O. F. entretenir, 'to intertaine;' Cot. - Low Lat. inter-Cot. See Inquest.

| to entertain. - Lat. inter, among; and tenere, to hold. See Tonable. Der. entertain-er, entertain-ing; entertain-ment, Spenser,

F. Q. i. 10. 37.
ENTHRAL, to enslave. (Hybrid.) In Mids. Nt. Dream, i. r. 136. From F. en = Lat. in; and E. Thrall, q. v. Der. enthral-ment, Milton, P. L. xii. 171.

ENTHRONE, to set on a throne. (F.) Shak. Mer. Ven. iv. 1. 194. - O. F. enthroner, 'to inthronise;' Cot. From F. en, in; and throne, 'a throne;' id. B. Imitated from Low Lat. inthronisare, to enthrone, which is from Gk. ἐνθρονίζειν, to set on a throne; from Gk. έν, and θρόνος, a throne. See Throne. Der. enthrone-ment. ENTHUSIASM, inspiration, zeal. (Gk.) In Holland's Plutarch, pp. 933, 1092 (R.) [Cf. O.F. enthusiasme; Cot.] = Gk. ἐνθουσιασμόε, inspiration. = Gk. ἐνθουσιαζω, I am inspired. = Gk. ἐνθουσι, contracted form of ἐνθους, full of the god, inspired. = Gk. ἐν, within; and θεόε, god. See Theism. Der. enthusiast (Gk. ένθουσιαστή»); enthusiast-ic, Dryden, Abs. and Achit. 530; enthusiast-ic-al, enthusiast-ic-al-ly.

ENTICE, to tempt, allure. (F.) M. E. enticen, entisen; Rob. of Glouc, p. 235; P. Plowman, C. viii. 91.—O. F. enticer, enticer, to excite, entice (Burguy). Origin unknown. Der. enticer. entice entice (Burguy). We cannot well connect enticher with O. F. atiser (mod. F. attiser), to stir the fire; and the suggestion of deriving -ticher from G. steehen, to stick, pierce, is out of the question. Rather from M. H. G. zicken, to push, zecken, to drive, tease; cf. Du. tikken, to pat, touch slightly (Sewel), and E. tick-le; see Touch.

ENTIRE, whole, complete. (F., -L.) M. E. entyre; the adv. entyreliche, entirely, is in P. Plowman, C. xi. 188. - O. F. entier, 'intire;' Cot.; cf. Prov. enteir, Ital. intero. - Lat. integrum, acc. of integer, whole. See Integer. Der. entire-ly, entire-ness; also entire-ty, spelt entierty by Bacon (R.), from O. F. entireté (Cot.), from Lat. acc. integritatem; whence entirety and integrity are doublets. ENTITLE, to give a title to. (F., -L.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 822. From F. en = Lat. in; and title. See Title.

ENTITY, existence, real substance. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. A coined word, with suffix -ty, from Lat. enti-, crude form of ens, being, pres. pt. of esse, to be. — AS, to be. See Sooth.

ENTOMB, to put in a tomb. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii.

10. 46. – O. F. entomber, 'to intombe;' Cot. – Low Lat. intumulare, to entomb; from Lat. tumulus. See Tomb. Der. entomb-ment.

ENTOMOLOGY, the science treating of insects. (Gk.) Modern; not in Johnson — Gk. kyezuga, could form of insects.

not in Johnson. - Gk. ἐντομο-, crude form of ἐντομον, an insect; properly neut. of evropos, cut into; so called from their being nearly cut in two; see Insect. The ending -logy is from Gk. λέγειν, to discourse. - Gk. εν, in; and τομ-, base of τομός, cutting, from τέμνειν, to cut. See Tome. Der. entomolog-ist, entomolog-ic-al.

ENTRAILS, the inward parts of an animal. (F.,-L.) sing. entrail is rare; but answers to M. E. entraile, King Alisaunder, 1. 3628. - O. F. entrailles, pl. 'the intrals, intestines;' Cot. - Low Lat. intralia, also spelt (more correctly) intranea, entrails. [For the change from n to l, cf. Boulogne, Bologna, from Lat. Bononia.] B. Intranea is contracted from Lat. interanea, entrails, neut. pl. of inter-aneus, inward, an adj. formed from inter, within. See Internal. ENTRANCE (1), ingress; see Enter. ENTRANCE (2), to put into a trance. (F., -L.) In Shak. Per. iii. 2. 94. From F. en = Lat. in; and E. trance = F. transe. See Trance. Der. entrance-ment.

ENTRAP, to ensnare. (F.)

ENTRAP, to ensnare. (F.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 4. – O. F. entraper, 'to pester; . . . also, to intrap; 'Cot. – F. en = Lat. in; and O. F. trape, a trap. See Trap.

ENTREAT, to treat; to beg, (F., – L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 7. The pp. entreated occurs in the Lament. of Mary Magdalen, st. 17. [The Chaucer passage, qu. in R., is doubtful.] – O. F. entraiter, to treat of; Burguy. – F. en = Lat. in; and O. F. traiter, to treat, from Lat. tractare. See Treat. Der. entreat-y, K. John, v.

2. 125; entreatment, Hamlet, i. 3. 122.

ENTRENCH, to cut into, fortify with a trench. (F.) 'Entrenched deepe with knife;' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 20; 'In stronge entrenchments;' id. ii. 11. 6. A coined word; from F. en = Lat. in; and E. trench, of F. origin. See Trench.

ENTRUST, to trust with (Hybrid.) By analogy with enlist, enrol, enrapture, entrance, enthrone, we should have entrust. But intrust seems to have been more usual, and is the form in Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715; see Intrust.

ENTWINE, ENTWIST, to twine or twist with. (Hybrid.) Milton has entwined, P. L. iv. 174; Shak. has entwist, Mids. Nt. Dr. iv. 1. 48. Both are formed alike; from F. en (=Lat. in), and the E. words twine and twist. See Twine, Twist.

Enumerative occurs in Bp.

Taylor, Holy Dying, c. 5. s. 3, 10. - Lat. enumeratus, pp. of enumerare, to reckon up. - Lat. e, out, fully; and numerare, to number. See Number. Der. enumerat-ion, enumerat-ive.

ENUNCIATE, to utter. (L.) Enunciatyue occurs in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 24.-Lat. enunciatus, pp. of enunciare, better enuntiare, to utter. - Lat. e, out, fully; and nuntiare, to announce, from nuntius, a messenger. See Announce. Der.

enunciat-ion, enunciat-ive, enunciat-or-y.

ENVELOP, to wrap in, enfold. (F.) Spelt envelop in Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 34. M. E. envoluper, Chaucer, C. T. 12876. – O. F. envoluper, later enveloper, to wrap round, enfold. – F. en = Lat. in; and a base volup-, of uncertain origin, but probably Old Low German. B. This base is, in fact, perfectly represented by the M. E. wlappen, to wrap up, which occurs at least twelve times in Wyclif's Bible, and is another form of wrapen, to wrap. See Wyclif, Numb. iv. 5, 7; Matt. xxvii. 59; Luke, ii. 7, 12; John, xx. 7, &c. See Wrap. Der. envelope, envelope-ment. Der. envelope, envelope-ment. of initial w, gave the more familiar form lap; 'lapped in proof,' Macbeth, i. 2. 54; see Lap. The word appears also in Italian; cf. Ital. inviluppare, to wrap. The insertion of e or i before I was merely due to the difficulty of pronouncing vl (=wl). See Develop. ENVENOM, to put posson into. (F., -L.) M.E. enuenimen (with in; and venim, or venim, poison, from Lat. uenenum. See Venom. ENVIRON, to surround. (F.) Spelt enuyroune in Wyclif, 1 Tim. v. 13; pt. t. environneed, Matt. iv. 23; cf. Gower, C. A. iii. 97.—O. F. environner, 'to inviron, encompasse;' Cot.—O. F. (and F.) environ, round about. - O. F. en = Lat. in; and virer, to turn, veer.

See Veer. Der. environ.ment; also environs, from F. environ.

ENVOY, a messenger. (F., -L.) 1. An improper use of the word; it meant 'a message;' and the F. for 'messenger' was envoyé.

2. The envoy of a ballad is the 'sending' of it forth, and the word is then correctly used; the last stanza of Chaucer's Ballad to K. Richard is headed L'envoye. - O. F. envoy, 'a message, a sending; also the envoy or conclusion of a ballet [ballad] or sonnet;' Cot. Also 'envoyé, a special messenger;' id. O. F. envoyer, to send; formerly enveier, and entveier; see Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, 52, 17. O. F. ent (10th cent.), int (A.D. 872), forms derived from Lat. inde, thence, away; and O. F. voyer, older veier, from Lat. uiare, to travel, which from Lat. uia, a way. See Voyage. ¶ Or from Lat. inuiare (Littré); but this means 'to enter upon.' Der. envoyship.

Action (2) to the proof of the following the first separate the proof of the proof έπ-, for ἐπί, to; and ἄγειν, to lead. - √AG, to drive. See Act. EPAULET, a shoulder-knot. (F., -L., -Gk.) Used by Burke (R.) - F. épaulette, dimin. from épaule, O. F. espaule, and still earlier espalle, a shoulder. - Lat. spatula, a blade; in late Lat. the shoulder; see the account of the letter-changes in Brachet. β . Spatula is a dimin. of spatha, a blade; borrowed from Gk. $\sigma\pi \delta\theta\eta$, a broad blade. See Spatula.

Oth. ii. 3, 129. Chaucer has the adj. equinoctial, C. T. 14862. -F.
equinoxe, spelt equinocee in Cotgrave. - Lat. aquinoctium, the equinox, of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the time of equal day and night. Lat. æqui-, for æquus, equal; and nocti-, crude form of nox, night. See Equal and Night. Der. equinocti-al, from Lat. aquinocti-um. Note that the suffix -now is not the Lat. nom. now, but comes from -noctium.

EQUIP, to fit out, furnish. (F., -Scand.) In Cotgrave; and used by Dryden, tr. of Ovid, Ceyx, 1. 67. [The sb. equipage is earlier, in Spenser, Sheph. Kal., Oct. 114; whence equipage as a verb, F. Q. ii. 9, 17,1 = O. F. equiper, 'to equip, arm;' also spelt esquiper; Cot.—Icel. skipa, to arrange, set in order; closely related to Icel. skapa, to shape, form, mould. See Shape. Der. equipage (O. F. equipage); equipment. • We need not lay stress on the statement in Brachet, that equip meant 'to rig a ship.' Ship and equip are from the same root; and Icel. shipa sufficiently explains the word.

EQUIPOLLENT, equally powerful. (F., -L.) 'Thou wil to kinges be equipolent;' Lidgate, Ballad of Good Counsel, st. 3; in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 337.—O. F. equipolent; Cot.—Lat. equipollent, stem of equipollens, of equal value.—Lat. equi-, for equipolent; and pollens, pres. part. of pollere, to be strong, a verb of uncertain origin.

EQUITY, justice. (F.,-L.) In Shak. K. John, ii. 241; M. E. equitè, Gower, C.A. i. 273.—O. F. equité, 'equity;' Cot.—Lat. equitatem, acc. of aquitas, equity; from aquits, equal. See Equal. Der. equit-able, O. F. equitable (Cot.); equit-abl-y, equit-able-ness.

BEQUIVALENT, of equal worth. (F., -L.) In Shak. Per. v. 1.

92.—O. F. equivalent, 'equivalent;' Cot.—Lat. aquivalent-, stem of pres. part. of aquivalere, to be equivalent.—Lat. aqui-, for aquis, equal; and valere, to be worth. See Equal and Value. Der. equivalent-ly, equivalence.

217. Formed, with suffix al, from Lat. æquivocus, of doubtful sense.

Lat. æqui-, for æquus, equal (i.e. alternative); and uoc-, base of uox, voice, sense. See Equi- and Voice. Der. equivocal-ly, equivocal-ness; hence also equivoc-ate (used by Cotgrave to translate O.F. equivoquer), equivoc-at-ion.

ERA, an epoch, fixed date. (L.) Spelt æra in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674.—Lat. æra, an era; derived from a particular use of æra, in the sense of 'counters,' or 'items of an account,' which is properly the pl. of es, brass, money (White and Riddle). See Ore. ERADICATE, to root up. (L.) Sir T. Browne has eradication, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6, s. 1. - Lat. eradicatus, pp. of eradicare, to root up. - Lat. e, out; and radic-, stem of radix, a root. See Radical. Der. eradical-ion.

ERASE, to scrape out, efface. (L.) Eras'd is in Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 3. l. 214. - Lat. erasus, pp. of eradere, to scratch out. - Lat. e, out; and radere, to scrape. See Rase. Der. eras-er, eras-ion, erase-ment, eras-ure.

ERE, before, sooner than. (E.) M. E. er, Chaucer, C. T. 1042.—
A. S. &r, soon, before; prep., conj., and adv.; Grein, i. 69. [Hence
A. S. &r-lic, mod. E. early.] + Du. eer, adv. sooner. + Icel. &r, adv., soon, early. + O. H. G. &r, G. &her, sooner. + Goth. &ar, adv. early, soon. The oldest form is the Goth. &ar, and the word was orig. not a comparative, but a positive form, meaning 'soon;'
whence ear-ly=soon-like, er-st=soon-est. Fick (iii. 30) connects it with the root I, to go.

ERECT, upright. (L.) M. E. erect, Chaucer, C. T. 4429. Lat. erectus, set up, upright; pp. of erigere, to set up. - Lat. e, out, up; and regere, to rule, set. See Regal. Der. erect, vb., erect-ion. ERMINE, an animal of the weasel tribe. (F., - O. H.G.) M. E. ermyne, Rob. of Glouc., p. 191; ermin, Old Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, 1st Ser. p. 181, l. 361.—O. F. ermine (F. hermine), 'the hate-spot ermelin;' Cot. [Cf. Span. armiño, Ital. ermellino, ermine; Low Lat. armelinus, ermine-fur.]—O. H. G. harmin, M. H. G. hermin, ermine-fur; cf. mod. G. ermelin.

B. The forms hermin, hermelin, are extended from O. H. G. harmo, M. H. G. harme, an ermine, corresponding to Lithuanian szarmű, szarmonys, a weasel (Diez); cf. A.S. hearma, Wright's Vocab. i. 22, col. 2, l. 13. ¶ The derivation, suggested by Ducange, that ermine is for mus Armenius, Armenian mouse, an equivalent term to mus Ponticus, a Pontic mouse = an ermine, is adopted by Littré.

ERODE, to eat away. (F., -L.) In Bacon, Nat. Hist. s. 983. - O. F. eroder, 'to gnaw off, cat into;' Cot. - Lat. erodere, pp. erosus, to gnaw off; from e, off, and rodere. See Rodent. Der. eros-ion, eros-ive; from Lat. erosus.

EROTIC, amorous. (Gk.) 'This eroticall love;' Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, p. 442 (R.) - Gk. ξρωτικος, relating to love. - Gk. έρωτι-, crude form of έρως, love; on which see Curtius, i. 150.

ERR, to stray. (F., -L.) M. E. erren, Chaucer, Troilus, b. iv. l. 302. - O. F. errer, 'to erre;' Cot. - Lat. errare, to wander; which stands for an older form ers-are. + Goth. airz-jan, to make to err; a causal form. + O.H. G. irran (for irrjan), to make to err; O.H. G. irreón, irrón, M. H. G. and G. irren, to wander, go astray; O. H. G. irri, G. irre, astray. — AR, to go, attain; cf. Skt. ri, to go, attain; whence, by means of a determinative, and as we may conjecture, a desiderative s, [the base] er-s was formed, with the fundamental meaning 'to go, to endeavour to arrive at, hence to err, Lat. errare, meaning 'to go, to endeavour to arrive at, hence to err, Lat, errare, Goth. airz-jan, mod. G. irren; 'Curtius, ii. 179. Cf. Skt. rish, to go. Der. err-or, q. v.; errant, q. v.; erratum, q. v.

ERRAND, a message. (E.) M. E. erende, erande, sometimes arende (always with one r); Layamon, 10057.—A.S. & erende, a message, business; Grein, i. 70. + Icel. eyrendi, örendi. + Swed. & erende; Dan. & erende. + O. H. G. & frunti, & frandi, a message.

B. The cerence; Dan. arende. + O. H. G. aruni, arandi, a message. β. The form is like that of a pres. participle; cf. tid-ings. The orig. sense was perhaps 'going;' from A AR, to go, move; cf. Skt. ri, to go, move. Fick (iii. 21, 30) separates this word from Goth. airus, Icel. airu, a messenger, and connects it with A. S. saru, Icel. örr, swift, ready, Skt. arvant, a horse.

γ. The form of the root is plainly AR; but the sense remains uncertain. See Max Müller, Lect. i. 295, who takes it to be from ar to plough on the assumption that the who takes it to be from ar, to plough, on the assumption that the sense of 'work' or 'business' was older than that of 'message.

BRRANT, wandering. (F., -L.) 'Of errant knights;' Spenser, F. Q. v. 6. 6. - O. F. errant, 'errant, wandering;' Cot. Pres. pt. of O. F. errer, to wander. See Err. Der. errant-ry. ¶ Not connected with arrant.

ERRATUM, an error in writing or printing. (L.) Most common

i. 21, iii. 159.—O. F. error, errur (Burguy).—Lat. errorem, acc. of error, a mistake, wandering.—Lat. errore. See Err. ¶ The spelling errour was altered to error to be more like the Latin.

ERST, soonest, first. (E.) M. E. erst, Chaucer, C. T. 778.—A.S.

drest, adv. soonest, adj. first, Grein, i. 71; the superl. form of A. S.

ERUBESCENT, blushing. (L.) Rare; in Johnson's Dict. -Lat. erubescent-, stem of pres. pt. of erubescere, to grow red. - Lat. e, out, very much; and rubescere, to grow red, inceptive form of rubere, to be red. See Ruby. Der. erubescence, from F. erubescence (Cotgrave); from Lat. erubescentia, a blushing.

ERUCTATE, to belch out, reject wind. (L.) 'Etna in times past hath eructated such huge gobbets of fire;' Howell's Letters, b. i. s. 1. let. 27.—Lat. eructatus, pp. of eructare, to belch out; from e, out, and ructare, to belch. Ructare is the frequentative of rugere*, seen in erugere (Festus), allied to rugire, to bellow, and to Gk. epebγειν, to spit out, ήρυγον, I bellowed; from base RUG, to bellow.

i. 744. Der. eructat-ion.
ERUDITE, learned. (L.) 'A most erudite prince; 'Sir T. More, Works, p. 645 b. - Lat. eruditus, pp. of erudire, to free from rudeness, to cultivate, teach. - Lat. e, out, from; and rudis, rude. See Rude.

Der. erudite-ly, erudit-ion.

ERUPTION, a bursting out. (L.) In Shak. Haml. i. 1. 69. -Lat. acc. eruptionem, from nom. eruptio, a breaking out. - Lat. e, out; and ruptio, a breaking, from ruptus, broken. See Rupture. Der.

ERYSIPELAS, a redness on the skin. (L., -Gk.) Spelt erysipely (from O. F. erysipele) in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. erysipelas. - Gk. έρυσίπελαs (stem έρυσιπελατ-), a redness on the skin. -Gk. έρυσι-, equivalent to έρυθρός, red; and πέλλα, skin. See Red and Fell. Der. erysipelat-ous (from the stem).

ESCALADE, a scaling of walls, (F.,-Span.,-L.) The Span.
form scalado (which occurs in Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 165) was displaced later by the F. escalade. -O. F. escalade, 'a scalado, a scaling;' Cot. - Span. escalado, properly escalada, an escalade; these are the masc. and fem. forms of the pp. of the verb escalar, to scale, climb. - Span. escala, a ladder. - Lat. scala, a ladder.

See Scale (2). ESCAPE, to flee away, evade. (F., -L.) M. E. escapen, Chaucer, C. T. 14650. - O. F. escaper, eschaper (F. échapper), to escape; cf. Low Lat. escapium, flight. - Lat. ex cappa, out of one's cape or cloak; to escape is to ex-cape oneself, to slip out of one's cape, and get away. See Cape. ¶ In Italian, we not only have scappare, to escape, but also incappare, to 'in-cape,' to fall into a snare, to invest with a cape or cope; also incappucciare, to wrap up in a hood, to mask. Der. escape-ment; escap-ade, from O. F. escapade, orig. an escape, from Ital. scappata, an escape, fem. of pp. of scappara, to escape. Hence, later, the sense of 'escape from restraint.'

ESCARPMENT, a smooth and steep decline. (F.) A military term; the verb is generally scarp rather than escarp; see Scarp.

ESCHEAT, a forfeiture of property to the lord of the fee. (F., -L.) M. E. eschete, escheyte; 'I lese menye escheytes' = I (the king) lose many escheats; P. Plowman, C. v. 169. - O. F. eschet, that which falls to one, rent; a pp. form from the verb escheoir, to fall to one's share (F. échoir). - Low Lat. excadere, to fall upon, meet (any one), used A.D. 1229 (Ducange); from Lat. ex, out, and cadere, to fall. See Chance. Der. escheat, verb; and see Cheat.

ESCHEW, to shun, avoid. (F., = O. H. G.) M. E. eschewen, eschiwen; P. Plowman, C. ix. 51. = O. F. eschewer, 'to shun, eschew, avoid, bend from;' Cot. and Roquefort. = O. H. G. sciuhan, M. H. G.

wood, Send from; cot. and Roquelort. Co. 11. G. seraman, M. H. G. sekiuhen, to frighten; also, intr. to fear, shy at. = O. H. G. and M. H. G. sekiech, sekich, mod. G. sekeu, shy; cognate with E. shy. Thus eschew and shy (verb) are doublets. See Shy.

ESCORT, a guide, guard. (F., = Ital., = L.) 'Escort, a convoy;' Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. = O. F. escorte, 'a guide, convoy;' Cot. = Ital. secorte, an escort, guide, convoy; fem. of pp. of secortes a core, an escorte guide. Extraped as if from Lat escortigate & Core, to see, perceive, guide. Formed as if from Lat. excorrigere, a compound of en and corrigers, to set right, correct; see Correct.

Der. escort, verb. ¶ Similarly Ital. accorgers, to find out, answers to a Lat. ad-corrigers; see Diez.

ESCULENT, eatable. (L.) 'Or any seculent, as the learned that the descinest New Worth Pay Act in so. 2. Let excelente.

talk; Massinger, New Way to Pay, Act iv. sc. 2. - Lat. esculentus, in the pl. errata; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—Lat. erratum, pl. errata, fift for eating.—Lat. esc-are, to eat; with suffix -u-lentus (cf. nin-o-an error; neut. of erratus, pp. of errare. See Err. Der. errat-ic, from pp. erratus; whence errat-ic-al, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 6, § 7; errat-ic-al-ly.

Lat. errare. See Err. Der. erroneous-ly, erroneous-ness.

ERROR, a fault, mistake. (F.,—L.) M.E. erroneous neces. but depends upon Lat. section. The form seutio does not appear, but depends upon Lat. section. She shield, just as F. escusson does upon Lat. section. She shield. Sae Managain. but depends upon Lat. scutum, a shield, just as F. escusson does upon O. F. escu, a shield. See Esquire. Cf. Ital. scudone, a great shield, from scudo, a shield; but note that the F. suffix -on has a dimin. force, while the Ital. -one is augmentative.

ESOPHAGUS, the food-passage, gullet. (L., Gk.) Also αsophagus. 'Oesophagus, the gullet;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Oesophagus is a Latinised form of Gk. οΙσοφάγος, the gullet. – Gk. οῖσο– οἶσω, I shall carry, used as a future from a base οἰ, to carry, which is allied. to Skt. vi, to go, to drive; and φαγ-, base of φαγείν, to eat. Hence æsophagus = food-conveyer.

ESOTERIC, inner, secret. (Gk.) 'Exoteric and esoteric;' Warburton, Divine Legation, b. ii. note Bb (R.) = Gk. ἐσωτερικός, inner; a term expanded from Gk. έσώτερος, inner, a comparative form from tow, within, an adv. from to els, into, prep. A term used of those disciples of Pythagoras, Aristotle, &c. who were scientifically taught, as opposed to those who had more popular views, the exoteric. See Exoteric.

'I will never set politics against ethies;' Bacon (in Todd's Johnson). - Lat. ethicus, moral, ethic. - Gk. ήθικόε, ethic, moral. - Gk. ήθοε, custom, moral nature; cf. έθοε, manner, custom. St. cognate with Goth. sidus, custom, manner. +G. sitte, custom. +Skt. svadká, self-will, strength. And cf. Lat. svetus, accustomed. y. The Skt. form is easily resolved into sva, one's own self (-Lat. se=Gk, 1), and dhá, to set, place (=Gk. $\theta \epsilon$); so that Skt. svadhá (=Gk. 1-00) is 'a placing of one's self,' hence, self-assertion, self-origin. Der. ethnic-al; ethno-logy, ethno-graphy (modern words).

ETIQUETTE, ceremony. (F., -G.) Modern; and mere French.

-F. étiquette, a label, ticket; explained by Cotgrave as 'a token, billet, cognate with A.S. sob, true. See Sooth. Der. etymology, spelt ethimologie in The Remedie of Love, st. 60, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 323, back (derived from F. etymologie, in Cotgrave, Lat. etymologia, Gk. ετυμολογία); etymo-log-ise, spelt ethimologise, id. st. 62; etymo-log-ist; also etymo-logi-c-al, etymo-logi-c-al-ly.

EU-, prefix, well. (Gk.) From Gk. et, well; properly neut. of ἐψε, good, put for an older form ἐσ-νε, real, literally 'living' or 'being;' from √AS, to be.

¶ From the same root are essence

'being;' from AS, to be. ¶ From the same root are essence and sooth; see Curtius, i. 469.

EUCHARIST, the Lord's supper. (L., = Gk.) Shortened from eucharistia, explained as 'thanks-geuyng' in Tyndale's Works, p. 467, col. 2. Cotgrave has: 'Eucharistie, the Eucharist.' = Lat. eucharistia. - Gk. εὐχαριστία, a giving of thanks, the Eucharist. - Gk. eð, well; and χαρίζομαι, I shew favour, from χάριε, favour, closely related to χαρά, joy, and χαίρειν, to rejoice. — GHAR, to desire; whence also E. yearn. See Eu- and Yearn. Der. eucharist-ic, EULOGY, praise. (L.,—Gk.) In Spenser, Tears of the Muses, l. 372. Shortened from late Lat. eulogium, which was itself used at a later date, in the Tatler, no. 138. [Cf. O. F. euloge.]—Gk. εὐλογίον, in classical Gk. εὐλογία, praise, lit. good speaking.—Gk. εὐ, well; and λέγειν, to speak. See Eu- and Logic. Der. eulog-ise, eulog-ist, eulog-ist-ic-al, eulog-ist-ic-al-ly,

a couch, bed; and έχειν, to have in charge, hold, keep.

EUPHEMISM, a softened expression. (Gk.) Euphemismus, a figure in rhetorick, whereby a foul harsh word is chang'd into another that may give no offence; 'Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. But spelt euphemism in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. – Gk. εὐφημισμόε, a later word for εὐφημία, the use of words of good omen. - Gk. εὖ, well; and φημί, I speak, from & BHA, to speak. See Eu- and Fame. Der. euphem-ist-ic.

EUPHONY, a pleasing sound. (Gk.) Euphony in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Euphonia, a graceful sound;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. - Gk. εὐφωνία, euphony. - Gk. εὕφωνοι, sweet-voiced. - Gk. εὖ, well; and φωνή, voice, from & BHA, to speak. See Eu. and Fame. Der. euphon-ic, euphon-ic-al, euphoni-ous, euphoni-ous-ly.

EUPHRASY, the plant eye-bright. (Gk.) In Milton, P. L.
xi. 414. [Cf. F. euphraise, eye bright; Cot] The eye-bright was called Euphrasia, and was supposed to be beneficial to the eyes. -CR. εὐφρασία, delight. – Gk. εὐφραίνευ, to delight, cheer. – Gk. εὖ, well; and φρεν. base of φρήν, the mind, orig. the midriff, heart. EUPHUISM, affectation in speaking. (Gk.) So named from a book called Euphues, by John Lyly, first printed in 1579. - Gk. εὐφνής, well-grown, goodly, excellent.—Gk. εὖ, well; and φνή, growth, from φύομαι, I grow, from ✔ BHU, to be. See Eu- and Be. Der. euphu-ist, euphu-ist-ic.

EUROCLYDON, a tempestuous wind. (Gk.) In Acts, xxvii. 14.—Gk. εὐροκλύδων, apparently 'a storm from the East,' but there are various readings. As it stands, the word is from ευρο-ε, the S. E. wind (Lat. Eurus), and κλύδων, surge, from κλύξειν, to surge, dash as ¶ Another reading is εὐρακύλων = Lat. Euro-Aquilo in the WAVES

EUTHANASIA, easy death. (Gk.) 'Euthanasie, a happy death;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. – Gk. εὐθονασία, an easy death; cf. εὐθάνατοε, dying well. – Gk. εὖ, well; and θανεῖν, to die, on which see Curtius, ii. 163.

EVACUATE, to discharge. (L.) In Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 7.—Lat. euacuatus, pp. of euacuare, to discharge, empty out.—Lat. e, out; and uacuus, empty. See Vacate. Der. evacuat-ion, evacuat-or.

EVADE, to shun, escape from. (F., -L.) In Shak. Oth. i. 1. 13. -F. evader, 'to evade;' Cot. - Lat. evadere, pp. evasus, to escape, get away from. - Lat. e, off; and uadere, to go. See Wade. Der. evas-ion, q. v., from pp. euasus; also evas-ive, evas-ive-ly, evas-ive-ness.

EVANESCENT, fading away. (L.) In Bailey's Dict., vol. ii, ed. 1731.—Lat. evanescent., stem of pres. pt. of evanescere, to vanish away.—Lat. e, away; and vanescere, to vanish. See Vanish. Der. evanescence.

EVANGELIST, a writer of a gospel. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) In EVANGELIST, a writer of a gospel. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) In a strongelist explained by Cotgrave as 'a token, billet, or ticket, delivered for the benefit or advantage of him that receives it; i.e. a form of introduction.—O. F. etiquet, 'a little note, . . . esp. such as is stuck up on the gate of a court,' &c.; Cot.—G. sticken, to stick, put, set, fix. See Stick, verb. Doublet, ticket.

ETYMON, the true source of a word. (L.,—Gk.) In Sir T. Erydnon, and Angel. Der. (from Gk. etapyéliste, evangeliste, evangeliste, evangeliste, wangeliste, wangeliste, consequence of a word. (L.,—Gk.) In Sir T. Erydnon, of Scotland (R.)—Lat. etymon.—Gk. trupov, an etymon; neut. of trupos, true, real, an extended form from tréos, true, real; in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii (R.). The verb is in Cotgrave.

to translate F. evaporer. - Lat. evaporatus, pp. of evaporare, to dis- Melanch. p. 125 (R.) - Lat. evisceratus, pp. of eviscerare, to disemperse in vapour. - Lat. e, away; and wapor, vapour. See Vapour. Der. evaporat-ion, evapora-ble.

EVASION, an excuse. (L.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 693 c.— Lat. suasionem, acc. of euasio (Judith, xii. 20), an escape.—Lat.

euasus, pp. of euadere; see Evade.

EVE, EVEN, the latter part of the day. (E.)

Eve is short for even, by loss of final n; evening is from the same source, but is dis cussed below separately. M. E. eue, euen, both in Chaucer, C. T. cussed below separately. M. E. eue, evem, both in Chaucer, C. I. 4993, 9890; the form eue occurs even earlier, Owl and Nightingale, 1. 41; the full form appears as efen, Ormulum, 1105; æfen, Layamon, 26696.—A. S. æfen, éfen, Grein, i. 64. + O. Sax. ávand; O. Fries, ávend. + Icel. aptan, aftan. + Swed. afton; Dan. aften. + O. H. G. ábant, M. H. G. ábent, G. abend.

B. Origin doubtful; yet these forms point to an early Germanic AFAN (Scand. aftan), clearly an extension from Goth. af, off (cf. O. H. G. abe, G. ab, E. of, off, Skt. apa). The Goth. afar, after, and E. after, are comparative forms from the same base. Thus even and after are related in form, and probably in meaning; even probably meant 'decline' or 'end;' cf. Skt. apara, posterior, apara sandhya, evening twilight. The allusion is thus to the latter end of the day. See After. ¶ Not connected with even, adj. Der. even-song, Chaucer, C. T. 832; even-tide, Ancren Riwle, p. 404, = A. S. afen-iid, Grein; also even-ing, q. v. EVEN, equal, level. (E.) M. E. even, evene; P. Plowman, C.

xxiii. 270. – A. S. efen, efn, sometimes contracted to emn, Grein, i. 218. + Du. even. + Icel. jafn. + Dan. jævn. + Swed. jämn. + Goth. ibns. + O. H. G. epan; G. eben.

B. The form of the base is EBNA; Fick, iii. 37. Root unknown; perhaps related to E. ebb.

Der. even, adv., even-handed, &c., even-ly, even-ness.

EVENT, circumstance, result. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. 1. 245.— Lat. euentus, or euentum, an event.—Lat. euentus, pp. of euenire, to happen. - Lat. e, out; and uenire, to come. See Come.

EVER, continually. (E.) M. E. euer, euere (where u = v), Chaucer, C. T. 834; æfre, Ormulum, 206.—A. S. æfre, Grein, i. 64. The ending -re answers to the common A. S. ending of the dat. fem. sing. of adjectives, and has an adverbial force. The base def- is clearly related to A.S. awa, ever, Goth. aiw, ever; which are based upon the sb. which appears as Goth. aiws, Lat. auum, Gk. aiwv, life. See Age, Aye. Der. ever-green, ever-lasting (Wyclif, Rom. vi. 22, 23), ever-lasting-ly, ever-lasting-ness; ever-more (Rob. of Glouc. p. 47);

also ever-y, q, v; ever-y-where, q, v, ; n-ever, q, v.

EVERY, each one. (E.) Lit. 'ever-each.' M. E. eueri (with u=v) short for everich, Chaucer, C. T. 1853; other forms are evereile, Havelok, 1330; ever-eil, id. 218; ever-ule, Layamon, 2378; œuer-ælc, euer-ech, id. 4599. — A. S. æfre, ever; and ælc, each (Scotch ilk). See Ever and Each.

EVERYWHERE, in every place. (E.) Spelt euerihwar, Ancren Riwle, p. 200; eauer ihwer, Legend of St. Katharine, 681. Compounded of ever (A.S. &fre), and M.E. ihwar (A.S. gehwar, everywhere, Grein, i. 415).

B. Thus the word is not compounded of every and where, but of ever and ywhere, where ywhere = A.S. gehwar, a word formed by prefixing A. S. ge to hwær, where. Similarly we find aywhere = everywhere (lit. aye-where) in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 228.

¶ Of course it has long been regarded as = every-where, though its real force is ever-where.

EVICT, to evince, to dispossess. (L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. 'That this deliverance might be the better evicted,' i.e. evinced; Bp. Hall, Contemplations, b. iv. c. xix. sect. 25. - Lat. euictus, pp. of euincere. See Evince. Der. evict-ion.

EVIDENT, manifest. (F., -L.) Chaucer has enidently (with u = v), Treat. on the Astrolabe, pt. ii. sect. 23, rubric; and euidences, pl. sb., id. prol. l. 2, = O. F. evident, 'evident;' Cot. = Lat. euident., stem of evidens, visible, pres. pt. of evidere, to see clearly. - Lat. e, out, clearly; and uidere, to see; see Vision. Der. evident-ly, evidence (O. F. evidence).

EVIL, wicked, bad. (E.) M. E. euel (with u=v), euil; also iuel, Havelok, 114; ifel, Ormulum, 1742; vuel (for wvel), Ancren Riwle, p. 52. - A. S. yfel, Grein, ii. 768; whence also yfel, sb. an evil. + Du. suvel. + O. H. G. upil, M. H. G. ubel, G. übel. + Goth. ubils. Root unknown.

¶ Related to Gk. υβρις, insult (from ὑπέρ?).

Der. evil, sb.; evil-ly; evil-doer, &c. Doublet, ill, which is Scandinavian;

see III.

EVINCE, to prove beyond doubt. (L.) In Dryden, Hind and Panther, ii. 190, 233.—Lat. euincere, to overcome.—Lat. e, fully; and wincere, to conquer. See Victor. Older word, evict, q. v.

EVISCERATE, to disembowel. (L.) In Burton, Anat. of Asparity. Der. enasperation, from O. F. enasperation, Cot.

bowel. - Lat. e, out; and wiscera, bowels; see Viscera. Der. eviscerat-ion EVOKE, to call out. (L.) It occurs in Cockeram's Dict (1st ed. 1623), according to Todd, but was not in common use till much later. [The sb. evocation is in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, pref. sect. I; also in Cotgrave, to translate O. F. evocation.] - Lat. euocare, to call forth .- Lat. e, out; and wocare, to call, from woe-, base of

EVOLVE, to disclose, develop. (L.) In Hale's Origin of Mankind (ed. 1677?), pp. 33, 63 (R.)—Lat. evolute, to unroll.—Lat. e, out; and volure, to roll. See Voluble. Der. evolution, in Hale (as

EWE, a female sheep. (E.) M. E. ewe; see Wyclif, Gen. xxi. 28.

A. S. eowu, Gen. xxxii. 14. + Du. ooi. + Icel. er. + O. H. G. awi, M. H. G. ouwe. + Goth. awi*, a sheep, in comp. awethi, a flock of sheep, awistr, a sheepfold; John, x. 16. + Lithuanian avis, a sheep. + Russ. ovisa, a sheep. + Lat. ouis. + Gk. 678. + Skt. avi, a sheep, ewe. +Russ. ovisa, a sneep. +Lat. ovis. +GK. ovis. +SKt. avi, a sneep, ewe. β. 'The Skt. avis, as an adjective, means "devoted, attached;" and is prob. derived from the ✓AV (AW), to please, satisfy; according to this, the sheep was called "pet," or "favourite," from its gentleness; 'Curtius, i. 488. See Audience.

M. E. ewer, Rob. Manning's Hist. of England, ed. Furnivall, 11425

(Stratmann). - O. F. ewer*, ewaire* or eweire*, not found, but see O. F. ewe = water (also spelt aigue), in Bartsch, Chrestomathie Franç. col. 35, 1. 7; another form of the word was aiguiere, which Cotgrave explains by 'an ewer, or laver.' - Lat. aquaria, fem. of aquarius, used as equivalent to aquarium (neut. of aquarius) a vessel for water:

used as equivalent to aquarium (neut. of aquarius) a vessel for water; formed with suffix -arius from aqu-a, water. See Aquatio.

EX., prefix, signifying 'out' or 'thoroughly.' (L.) Lat. ex, out; cognate with Gk. if or in, out, and Russ. iz', out; see Curtius, i. 479. It becomes ef before f, as in ef-fuse. It is shortened to ebefore b, d, g, l, m, n, r, and v; as in e-bullient, e-dit, e-gress, e-late, e-manate, e-normous, e-rode, e-vade. The Gk. form appears in ec-centric, ec-clesiastic, ec-lectic, ec-logue, ec-lipse, ec-stasy. It takes the form es- in O. F. and Spanish; cf. es-cape, es-cheat, es-cort, es-planade. In some words it becomes s-, as in Italian; see s-cald, s-camper.

EXACERBATE, to embitter. (L.) The sb. exacerbation is in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 61 (R.) - Lat. exacerbatus, pp. of exacerbare, to irritate; from ex, out, thoroughly, and acerbus, bitter. See Acerbity. Der. exacerbat-ion.

EXACT (1), precise, measured. (L.) In Hamlet, v. 2. 19. - Lat. exactus, pp. of exigere, to drive out, also to weigh out, measure. -Lat. ex, out; and agere, to drive. See Agent. Der. exact-ly, exactness; and see below.

EXACT (2), to demand, require. (F., -L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 99. - O. F. exacter, 'to exact, extort;' Cot. - Low Lat. exactare, intensive of Lat. exigere (pp. exactus), to exact, lit. to drive out; see above. Der. exaction, from O. F. exaction, 'exaction;' Cot. EXAGGERATE, to heap up, magnify. (L.) In Cotgrave, to translate O. F. exaggerer. - Lat. exaggeratus, pp. of exaggerare, to heap up, amplify. - Lat. ex; and aggerare, to heap, from agger, a heap. - Lat. aggerere, to bring together; from ag- (for ad be ore g) and gerere, to carry. See Jest. Der. exaggeration (O. F. exaggeration, Cot.); exaggerat-ive, exaggerat-or-y.

EXALT, to raise on high. (F., - L.) In Shak. K. Lear, v. 3, 67; and perhaps earlier. [The sb. exaltation is in Chaucer, C. T. 6284, and exaltat (pp.), id. 6286.]—O. F. exalter, 'to exalt;' Cot.—Lat. exaltare, to exalt.—Lat. ex; and altus, high. See Altitude. Der.

EXAMINE, to test try. (F., -L.) M. E. examinen, Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus (Group B, 2311); Gower, C. A. ii. 11. -O. F. examinen, Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus (Group B, 2311); Gower, C. A. ii. 11. -O. EXCISE (1), a duty or tax. (Du., -F., -L.) 'The townes of the Lowe-Country st doe cutt upon themselves an excise of all thinges, &c.; Spenser, State of Ireland, Globe ed. p. 669. 'Excise, from the Belg. acciise, tribute; so called, perhaps, because it is assessed according to the verdict of the assise, or a number of men deputed to that office by the king; Gazophylacium Anglicanum, 1689. tribute is paid in Spain, . . and in Portugal, where it is called sisa. I suppose it is the same with the excise in England and the Low Countries; Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 2. R. 9 (R.) 6. A misspelling of O. Du. aksiis or aksys, spelt aksys in Sewel's Du. Dict., where it is explained to mean 'excise.' Cf. G. acciss, excise. The more correct spelling accise occurs in Howell's Familiar Letters. "Twere cheap living here [in Amsterdam], were it not for the monstrous access which are imposed upon all sorts of commodities;" vol. i, let. vii., dated May 1, 1619. Again, the Du. aksiis (like G. accise) is a corruption of O. F. assis, 'assessments, impositions,' Cot.; cf. Port. and Span. eisa, excise, tax. - O. F. assise, an assize, sessions (at which things were assessed). See Assess, Assize. ¶ The mod. F. accise, excise, given in Hamilton, and used by Montesquieu (Littré), was merely borrowed back from the Teutonic form at a later period; there is no such word in Cotgrave. Der. excise-man.

EXCISE (2), to cut out. (L.) Very rare; spelt excize in a quotation (in R.) from Wood's Athense Oxonienses. [The sb. excision occurs in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 22.]—Lat. excisus, pp. of exciders, to cut out. - Lat. ex, out; and caders, to cut; see Concise. Der. excision, from O. F. excision; Cot.

M. E. feip, feith, feyth; carlier form fey. The earliest example of the spelling feyth is perhaps in Havelok, 1. 2853; fey occurs in the same poem, Il. 255, 1666. – O. F. fei, feid; also foi, foit. – Lat. fidem, aco f fides, faith. + Gk. πίστε, faith; πείθειν, to persuade; πέποιθα, I trust. – ✓ BIIIDH, to unite; weakened from ✓ BHADH, fuller form ✓ BHANDH, to bind. See Bind. See Curtius, i. 235. Der. faith-ful, faith-ful-ly, faith-ful-ness; faith-less, faith-less-ly, faith-less-ness. From the same root are fid-el-i-ty, af-fi-ance, con-fide, de-fy, dif-fid-ent, per-fid-y.

FALCHION, a bent sword. (Ital.,—Low Lat.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 618. [M. E. fauchon, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 169; directly from F. fauchon, a faulchion; Cot.]—Ital. falcione, a scimetar. - Low Lat. falcionem, acc. of falcio, a sickle-shaped sword. -Lat. falci-, crude form of falk, a sickle. + Gk. φάλκη, the rib of a ship; φολκός, bow-legged; εμφαλκόω, I clasp round; Curtius, i. 207. The word may have been really taken from the F. fauchon, and afterwards altered to falchion by the influence of the Ital. or Low Lat. form. Der. from Lat. falz are also falc on, de-falc-ate.

FALCON, a bird of prey. (F., -L.) M. E. faukon, King Alisaunder, 567; faucon, Chaucer, C. T. 10725. -O. F. faulcon, a faulkon; Cot. - Late Lat. falconem, acc. of falco, a falcon; so called from the hooked shape of the claws. 'Falcones dicuntur, quorum digiti pollices in pedibus intro sunt curuati;' Festus, p. 88; qu. in White and Riddle. That is, falco is derived from falc-, stem of falm, a sickle; see above. Der. falcon-er; falcon-ry, from O. F. faulconnerie, 'a faulconry;' Cot.

FALDSTOOL, a folding-stool. (Low Lat., = O. H. G.) applied to a low desk at which the litany is said; but formerly to a folding-stool or portable seat. 'Faldstool, a stool placed at the S. side of the altar, at which the kings of England kneel at their coroy. Diez further nation; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. He also has: 'Faldistory, the λειν, to cause to fall, trip up; σφάλμα, a slip. + Skt. sphal, sphul, to tremble. - SPAL, older form SPAR, to fall. See Fick, i. 253. The aspirate in Greek and Skt., the spirant in Lat. are developed from a p; hence spal is to be assumed as the primitive form, so that thus the f in German, after the loss of the s, is explained; Curtius, i. 466. Der. fall, sb.; and see fell, fail.

FALLACY, a deceptive appearance, error in argument. (F., -L.) In Shak. Errors, ii. 2. 188. A manipulated word, due to the addition of -y to M. E. fallace or fallas, in order to bring it near to the Lat. form. M. E. fallace, fallas; once common; see P. Plowman, C. vii 22, and the note: also Govern C. A. ii. 8. - F. fallace to fallas. C. xii. 22, and the note; also Gower, C. A. ii. 85. - F. fallace, 'a fallacy; 'Cot.-Lat. fallacia, deceit.-Lat. fallaci-, crude form of fallax, deceptive.—Lat. fallere, to deceive; see Fail. Der. fallacious, Milton, P. L. ii. 568; fallaci-ous-ly, fallaci-ous-ness; see below.

FALLIBLE, liable to error. (L.) In Shak. Meas. iii. 1. 170. Low Lat. fallibilis. - Lat. fallere, to deceive, falli, to err; see Fail.

Der. fallibl-y; fallibili-ty.

FALLOW, pale yellow; untilled. (E.) Sometimes applied to a reddish colour. The meaning 'untilled' is a mere E. development, and refers to the reddish colour of ploughed land. In Layamon, l. 27468, we have 'ueldes falewe wurden' = the fields became red-with-27405, we have 'ueldes falswe wurden' = the helds became red-withblood; in the description of a battle.—A. S. fealu, fealu, yellowish; Grein, i. 286. + Du. vaal, fallow, faded. + Icel. folr, pale. + O. H. G. valo, M. H. G. val, G. fahl, pale, faded; also G. falb, id. + Lat. pallidus, pale. +Gk. noλιόs, gray. + Skt. palita, gray.

3. The G. falbase compared with fall (fahl), shews that fall-ow is an extension of fallere pal- in pale. See Pale. Der. fallow, sb. and verb; fallow-deer.

FALSE, untrue, deceptive. (F., -L.) M. E. fals, Chancer, C. T. 1580; earlier, in O. Eng. Homilies, 1st Ser. p. 185, l. 16.—O. F. fals, F. falsys. false; pp. of fallere to deceive; see Fail. (F. faux). - Lat. falsus, false; pp. of fallere, to deceive; see Fail. Der. false-ly, false-ness, false-hood (spelt falshede in Chaucer, C. T.

16519); fals-i-fy, I Hen IV, i. 2. 335; fals-i-fic-at-ion, fals-i-fi-er, fals-i-ty; also falsetto, from Ital. falsetto, troble; also faucet, q. v. FALTER, to totter, stammer. (F.,-L.) M. E. falteren, faltren. 'Thy limmes faltren ay' - thy limbs ever tremble with weakness;' Chaucer, C. T. 5192. 'And nawher faltered ne fel' - and he neither gave way nor fell; Gawayne and the Grene Knight, 430. Formed from a base falt-, with frequentative suffix -er. = O. F. falter *, to fail, be deficient, not recorded. Yet it occurs in Port, and Span. faltar, to be deficient, Ital. faltare, to be deficient; and is well represented in F. by the verbal sb. falte, a fault, answering to Port., Span., and Ital. falta, want, lack, defect, fault; so that to falter is merely to be at fault.' See Fault.

Observe that O. F. falter would only give a M. E. form falten; the -er in M. E. falt-er-en is an E. addition, to give the word a frequentative force; cf. the -le in stumb-le, and the -er in stamm-er, stutt-er. The old sense of to 'stumble,' to 'miss er in stammer, stutter. The old sense of to 'stumble,' to 'miss one's footing,' occurs late; 'his legges hath foltred' = the horse's legs have given way; Sir T. Elyot, 'The Gouernour, b. i. c. 17 (in Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat, p. 197, l. 78).

FAMILY, a household. (F., -L.) In Shak. Oth. i. 1. 84.

Modified from F. so as to bring it pearer the Latin | - F. famille, 'a [Modified from F. so as to bring it nearer the Latin.] = F. famille, 'a family, household;' Cot.—Lat. familia,' a household.—Lat. famulus, a servant; Oscan famel, a servant (White); supposed to be from Oscan faama, a house; Curtius, i. 315. Cf. Skt. dháman, an abode, house; from dhá, to place, set.— DHA, to place. Der. familiagr (from Lat. familiagris), also found in M. E. in the form famuler, familier (from O.F. familier), Chaucer, C.T. prol. 215;

FAMINE, severe hunger. (F., -L.) M. E. famine, famyn; Chaucer, C. T. 12385. - F. famine. - Low Lat. famina*, unrecorded, but evidently a barbarous derivative from Lat. fames, hunger. β. The connection is probably with Skt. háni, privation, want, from há, to leave, abandon, and with Gk. χήρος, bereft, empty; from 4/ GHA, to gape, yawn. See Curtius, i. 247. Der. fam-isk, Merch. of Ven. ii. 2. 113; formed with suffix ish by analogy with languish, demolish, and the like, from the base fam- in O. F. a-fam-er, later affamer, to famish. This base fam- is from Lat. fam-es, hunger (F. faim).

Lat. uannus, a fan; put for uai-nus, just as penna=pet-na; cf. Skt. wita, wind, vaiya, a gale, from va, to blow.— WA, to blow. See Wind. Der. fan, verb; fann-er, fan-light, fan-palm.

FANATIC, religiously insane. (F.,—L.) 'Fanatick Egypt;' Milton, P. L. i. 480.— F. fanatique, 'mad, frantick;' Cot.—Lat. fanaticus, (1) belonging to a temple, (2) inspired by a divinity, filled with enthusiasm.— Lat. fanum, a temple; see Fane. Der. fanatic-al, fanaticus/, fanatic-ism. ¶ On this word see a passage in Fuller, Mixt Contemplations on these Times, § 50 (Trench).

FANCY, imagination, whim. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) In Shak, Temp. iv. 122; v. 59. A corruption of the fuller form fantasy, Merry Wives, v. 5. 55. M. E. fantasie, Chaucer, C. T. 6098; P. Plowman, A. prol. 36.—O. F. fantasie, 'the fancy, or fantasie; 'Cot.—Low Lat. fantasia, or phantasia.—Gk. φαντασία, a making visible, imagination.—Gk. φαντάζειν, to make visible; extended from φαίνειν, to bring to light, shine; cf. φάοε, light, φάε, he appeared. + Skt. bhά, to shine.

— WBHA, to shine. Der. fancy, verb; fanci-ful. Doublet, fantasic obsolete); whence fantastic (Gk. φανταστικόε), fantastic-al, fantastic-al, From same root, epi-phany, q. v.

al-ly. From same root, epi-phany, q. v. FANE, a temple. (L.) In Shak. Cor. i. 10. 20. - Lat. fanum, a temple; supposed to be derived from fari, to speak, in the sense 'to dedicate.' See Fame. Der. fara-trie, q.v.

FANFARE, a flourish of trumpets. (F., - Span., - Arab.) In Todd's Johnson. - F. fanfare, 'a sounding of trumpets;' Cot. - Span. fanfarria, bluster, loud vaunting.—Arab. farfar, loquacious; a word of onomatopoetic origin; Rich. Dict., p. 1083. Der. fanfarr-on-ade, from F. fanfarronade, which from Span. fanfarronada, bluster, boasting; from Span. fanfarron, blustering, fanfarrear, to hector, bluster, FANG, a tusk, claw, talon. (E.) In Shak. K. John, ii. 353. The M. E. feng is only used in the sense of 'a thing caught, prey;' see Stratmann. So also A. S. fang = a taking; A.S. Chron. an. 1016. However the sb. is derived from the verb. = A. S. fangan*, to seize, only in use in the contracted form fon, of which the pt. t. is feng, and the pp. gefangen or gefongen. + Du. vangen, to catch. + Icel. fá, to the pp. gefangen or gefongen. + Du. vangen, to catch. + Icel. fd, to get, seize, pp. fenginn; fang, a catch of fish, &c. + Dan. faae, to get. + Swed. fd, to get, catch; fdng, a catch. + Goth. fahan, to catch. + G. fahen, fangen, to catch; fang, a catch, also, a fang, talon. β. All from a base fah, fag; which from PAK, to bind. See Fadge. FANTASY, FANTASTIC; see Fancy.

FAR, remote. (E.) M. E. fer, Chaucer, C. T. 496; feor, Layamon, 543.—A. S. feor; Grein, i. 289. + Du. ver. + Icel. fjarri. + Swed. fjerran, adv. afar. + Dan. fjern, adj, and adv. + O. H. G. ver, adj., verro, adv.; G. fern. + Goth. fairra, adv. β. All related to Gk. πέραν, beyond; Skt. paras, beyond; para, far, distant. — PAR, to pass through, travel; see Fare. Der. far-th-er, far-th-est; see Farther.

Farther.

FARCE, a kind of comedy. (F., -L.) The orig. sense is 'stuffing;' hence, a jest inserted into comedies. 'These counterfeiting plaiers of farces and mummeries;' Golden Book, c. 14 (R.) Hence plaiers of farces and mummeries; Golden Book, c. 14 (R.) Hence Ben Jonson speaks of 'other men's jests, . . . to farce their scenes withal;' Induction to Cynthia's Revels. – F. farce, 'a fond and dissolute play; . . . any stuffing in meats;' Cot. – F. farcer, to stuff. – Lat. farcire, to stuff. + Gk. φράσσεν, to shut in. + Lith. bruku, to press hard. – γ BHARK, BRAKH, to cram; Curtius, i. 376. See Force (2). Der. farceic-al; and see frequent.

FARDEIL, a pack, bundle; obsolete. (F.) In Shak. Hamlet, iii. 1. 76. M. E. fardel, Rom. of the Rose, 5686. – O. F. fardel, the true old form of fardeau, 'a fardle, burthen, trus, pack; 'Cot. Cf. Low Lat. fardelly. a burden, pack, bundle. Fardel is a dimin. of F.

Lat. fardellus, a burden, pack, bundle. Fardel is a dimin. of F. farde, a burden, still in use in the sense of 'bale of coffee;' cf. Span. but prob. of Arabic origin, as suggested by Diez, though I am unable to trace the Arab. original to which he refers.

to trace the Arab. original to which he refers.

(though not in Burguy) is a true word, and occurs in Littré, and in a quotation in Raynouard, who also gives the Prov. form as fardel. Devic (Supp. to Littré) cites Arab. fardah, a package.

FARE, to travel, speed. (E.) M. E. faren, Chaucer, C. T. 10802.

A. S. faran, Grein, 1. 264. + Du. varen. + Icel. and Swed. fara. + Dan. fare. + O. H. G. faran, G. fahren. + Goth. faran, to go; farjan, to convey. + Gk. πορείω, I convey; πορείνομαι, I travel, go; πόρος, a way through; περάω, I pass through. + Lat. ex-per-ior, I pass through, experience. + Skt. pri, to bring over.

PAR, to cross, pass over or through. Der. fare-well = may you speed well, M. E. fare wel, Chaucer, C. T. 2762; and see far, fer-ry. From the same root are ex-per-ience, ex-per-iment, port, verb (q. v.), per-il.

FARINA, ground corn. (L.) The adj. farinaceous is in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 15. § 2. The sb. is modern and scientific. - Lat. farina, meal. - Lat. far, a kind of grain, spelt; cog. Cleita fast optir, to urge, press hard after. The development is through nate with E. Barley, q. v. Der. farin-ac-s-ous (Lat. farinaceus). FARM, ground let for cultivation. (L.) M. E. ferms, Chaucer, C. T. 253.—A. S. feorm, a feast, entertainment; Luke, xiv. 12, 16; also food, hospitality, property, use; see Grein, i. 293. Spelt farma in the Northumbrian version of Luke, xiv. 16. And spelt ferme in O. F. - Low Lat. firma, a feast, a farm, a tribute; also, a lasting oath. Lat. firmus, firm, durable. See Firm. ¶ For the curious use of the word, see firma in Ducange. Der. farm, verb; farm-er, farm-ing. FARRAGO, a confused mass. (L.) 'That collection, or farrago of prophecies;' Howell's Letters, b. iii. let. 22. - Lat. farrago, mixed fodder for cattle, a medley.—Lat. far, spelt. See Farina.

FARRIER, a shoer of horses. (F.,—L.) Lit. 'a worker in iron.'

Spelt ferrer in Holland's Pliny, b. xxxiii. c. 11; ferrour in Fabyan's Chron., an. 1497-8. Cotgrave has: 'mareschal ferrant, a farrier.'

Coined (with reference to Low Lat. ferrarius) from O. F. ferrer, to shoe a horse. - F. fer, iron. - Lat. ferrum, iron. See Ferreous.

Der. farrier-y.

FARROW, to produce a litter of pigs. (E.) 'That thair sow ferryit was thar '- that their sow had farrowed, lit. was farrowed; Barbour's Bruce, xvii. 701. Cf. Dan. fare, to farrow. Formed, as a verb, from M. E. farh, which means (not a litter, but) a single pig. The word is scarce, but the pl. faren occurs in King Alisaunder, 2441.

—A. S. fearh, a pig; the pl. fearas occurs in Ælf. Gloss., ed. Somner, Nomina Ferarum, explained by 'suilli, vel porcelli, vel nefrendes.' + Du. varken (dimin.), a pig. + O. H. G. farah, M. H. G. varch, a pig; whence G. dimin. ferk-el, a pig. + Lat. porcus, a pig. See Pork. FARTHER, FARTHEST, more far, most far. (E.)

Shak. Ant. and Cleop. ii. 1. 31; iii. 2. 26. These forms are due to a mistake, and to confusion with further, furthest; see Further. Not found at all early; the M. E. forms are fer, ferre, ferrer, and ferrest. 'Than walkede I ferrer;' P. Plowman's Crede, 207; 'The ferrest in his parisch;' Chaucer, C. T. 496. The th crept into the word in course of time.

FARTHING, the fourth part of a penny. (E.) M. E. ferthing, ferthynge; P. Plowman, B. iv. 54. – A. S. feording, ferbyng, Matt. v. 26 (Royal and Hatton MSS.); older form feordling (Camb. MS.). – A. S. feoro, fourth; with dimin. suffix -ing or -ling (=-l-ing).

FARTHINGALE, FARDINGALE, a hooped petticoat. (F., -Span., -L.) In Shak. Two Gent. ii. 7. 51; a corrupt form. -O. F. verdugalle, 'a vardingall;' Cot. Also vertugalle, 'a vardingale;' vertugadin, 'a little vardingale;' id. - Span. verdugado, a fardingale; so called from its hoops, the literal sense being 'provided with hoops. Span. verdugo, a young shoot of a tree, a rod. Span. verde, green. Lat. uiridis, green. See Verdant. verde, green. - Lat. viridis, green. See Verdant. The derivation from 'virtue-guard' is a very clumsy invention or else a joke. The word was well understood; hence the term 'his verdugo-ship' in Ben Jonson, The Alchemist, iii. 2.

FASCINATE, to enchant. (L.) 'Fascination is ever by the eye;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 944. 'To fascinate or bewitch;' id. Essay 9, Of Envy.—Lat. fascinatus, pp. of fascinare, to enchant. Curtius doubts the connection with Gk. βασκαίνειν, to bewitch, enchant; yet the resemblance is remarkable. Der. fascinat-ion.

FASCINE, a bundle of rods. (F.,-L.) A new term in 1711; see Spectator, no. 165. 'Fascines, faggots or bavins;' Kersey, ed. 1715.—O. F. fascine, fassine, 'a faggot;' Cot.—Lat. fascina, a bundle of sticks.—Lat. fasci-s, a bundle. + Gk. φάκελου. Root uncertain; cf. Skt. pap, spap, to bind. Der. From the same source, fasces, pl. of Lat. fascis; fasci-c-ul-ate.

FASHION, the make or cut of a thing. (F.,-L.) M. E. father Root father factors. Thirtle and Rose st.

FASHION, the make or cut of a thing. (F.,-L.) M. E. fathion, Rom. of the Rose, 551; fassoun, Dunbar, Thisle and Rose, st. 12.-O. F. faceon, fazon, fachon, form, shape.-Lat. factionem, acc. of factio. See Faction. Der. fashion. verb, fashion-able, fashion-able. FAST (1), firm, fixed. (E.) M. E. fast, Ormulum, 1602; as adv. faste, Chaucer, C. T. 721.-A. S. fæst, Grein, i. 271. + Du. vast. + Dan. and Swed. fast. + Icel. fastr. + O. H. G. vast; G. fest. Cfk. fp. red-os, fast, steadfast. The Lat. op-pid-um, a fastness, fort, town, has the same root. Connected with Fetter and Foot, q. v. See Curtius, i. 303, 304. Der. fast, verb (below); fast-en, q. v.; fast-ness, q. v. The phrase 'fast asleep' is Scandinavian; Icel. sofa fast, to be fast asleep; see Fast (3).
FAST (2), to abstain from food. (E.) M. E. fasten, Wyclif, Matt.

FAST (2), to abstain from food. (E.) M. E. fasten, Wyclif, Matt. vi. 16.—A. S. fasten, Matt. vi. 16. + Du. vasten. + Dan. faste. + Swed. and Icel. fasta. + Goth. fastan. + G. fasten. β. A very early derivative from Teutonic fast, firm, in the sense to make firm, observe, be strict. See Fast (1). Der. fast, sb., fast-er, fast-ing, fast-day.

FAST (3), quick, speedy. (Scand.) Merely a peculiar use of fast, firm. Chaucer has faste = quickly; C. T. 16150. The peculiar usage is Scandinavian. Cf. Icel. drekka fast, to drink hard; sofa fast, to be is Scandinavian. Cf. Icel. drekka fast, to drink hard; sofa fast, to be Falter, Fail. Der. fault-y, fault-i-ness; fault-less, the senses 'close,' 'urgent.' See Fast (1).

FASTEN, to secure. (E.) M. E. fastnen, festnen; Chaucer has festne, prol. 195.—A. S. fæstnian, to make firm or fast; Grein, i. 273.

—A. S. fæst, fast, firm. See Fast (1). Der fastening.

Observe that fasten stands for fastn- in A. S. fæstn-ian, so that the -en is truly formative, not a sign of the infin. mood.

FASTIDIOUS, over-nice. (L.) Orig. in the sense of 'causing disgust,' or 'loathsome;' Sir T. Elyot, The Gouernour, b. i. c. 9 (R.); see Trench (Select Glossary). - Lat. fastidiosus, disdainful, disgusting. -Lat. fastidium, loathing; put for fastu-tidium. -Lat. fastus, arrogance; and tadium, disgust. See Dare and Tedious. ¶ 'Bréal gance; and teatium, disgust. See Dare and Todious. \(\begin{align*} \) Dreat conjectures (Zeitschrift, xx. 79), I think rightly, that Lat. fastus (for farstus) and fastidium (for fasti-tidium) belong to this root, viz. DHARSH, to dare; Curtius, i. 318. Der. fastidious-ly, -ness.

FASTNESS, a stronghold. (E.) M. E. festnes, Metrical Psalter, xvii. 2. (Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris, p. 25.) The same as M. E. fastnesse, certainty, strength; Wyclif, Gen. xli. 32 (early version). — A. St. forms and the forms ment. Gen. 16.—A. St. forms of the forms ment. Gen. 16.—A. St. f fastnes, fastnis, the firmament; Gen. i. 6. - A. S. fast, firm; with suffix -nes or -nis. See Fast (1). ¶ Not from A. S. fæstennes, a non-existent word, probably invented by Somner.

FAT (1), stout, gross. (E.) M. E. fat, Chaucer, prol. 200, 200.

—A.S. fat, Grein, i. 273. + Du. vet. + Dan. fed. + Swed. fet. + Icel. feitr. β. Perhaps related to Gk. πίων, πιαρόε, fat; Skt. pivan, pivara, fat. — VPI, to swell; Curtius, i. 342. Der. fat, sb., fatt-y, fatt-iness; fatness, Rom. of the Rose, 2686; fatt-en, where the -en is a late addition, by analogy with fasten, &c., the true verb being to fat, as in Luke, xv. 23, Chaucer, C. T. 7462; fatt-en-er, fatt-en-ing; fat-ling

FAT (2), a vat. (North E.) Joel, ii. 24, iii. 13. See Vat.

FATE, destiny. (F., -L.; or L.) M. E. fate, Chaucer, Troil. v.
1564. - O. F. fat, fate; not common (Roquefort). - Lat. fatum, what is spoken, fate.—Lat. fatus, pp. of fari, to speak. See Fame.

Perhaps fate was simply made from the common O. F. fatal (whence M. E. fatal, Chaucer, C. T. 4681) in order to render Lat. (whence M. E. Jaid., Chaucer, C. I. 4081) in order to render Lat. fatum. Der. fat-al, fatal-i-ty, fatal-ism, fat-ed; also fay, q. v.; fairy, q. v.

FATHER, a male parent. (E.) M. E. fader, Chaucer, C. T.

8098. [The spelling fader is almost universal in M. E.; father occurs in the Bible of 1551.] - A. S. fader, Matt. vi. 9. + Du. vader. + Dan. and Swed. fader. + Icel. fabir. + Goth. fadar. + G. vater. + Lat. pater. + Gk. vatrip. + Pers. pidar. + Skt. pitti. - PA, to protect, nourish; with suffix -tar of the agent; Schleicher, Comp. § 225.

The change from M. E. fader, moder, to modern father, mother, is remarkable and perhaps due to the influence of the kin here is: remarkable, and perhaps due to the influence of the th in brother (A.S. brosor) or to Icel. fabir. Der. father, verb; father-hood, father-less, father-ly; also father-land, imitated from the Dutch

See Fare. Der. ferry, sb., (Iccl. ferja, sb.) ferry-boat, ferry-man.

FERTILE, fruitful. (F.,-L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 338.—

O. F. fertile, 'fertile;' Cot.-Lat. fertilis, fruitful.-Lat. ferre, to bear; cognate with E. bear. See Bear. Der. fertil-i-ty, fertil-i-ise.

FERTILE FERULE, a rod (or bat) for punishing children. (L.) Formerly spelt ferula; misprinted ferular in the old ed. of Milton's Areopagitica; see ed. by Hales, p. 30, l. 19, and note. – Lat. ferula, a rod, whip. – Lat. ferire, to strike. + Icel. berja, to strike. Perhaps from BHAR, to strike (Fick).

FERVENT, heated, ardent, zealous. (F., -L.) M. E. feruent (with u=v). Chaucer has feruently, Troilus, iv. 1384. - O. F. fervent, 'fervent, hot;' Cot. = Lat. feruent-, stem of pres. pt. of feruere, to boil. = Lat. base fru- (found in de-fru-tum, must boiled down), cognate with E. brew. See Brew. Der. fervent-ly, fervenc-y; also ferv-id, Milton, P.L. v. 301, from Lat. feruidus, which from feruere; ferv-id-ly, ferv-id-ness; ferv-our, Wyclif, Deut. xxix. 20, from O. F. fervor, ferveur = Lat. feruorem, acc. of feruor, heat; also fer-ment, q. v., ef-fervesce, q. v. FESTAL, belonging to a feast. (L.) A late word. In Johnson's Dict. Apparently a mere coinage, by adding -al to stem of Lat, fest-um, a feast. Generally derived from O. F. festal, only given by Roquefort; but the word is much too late for such a borrowing. See Feast.

See Feast. ¶ Or possibly a mere shortening of festival, q.v. FESTER, to rankle. (E.?) M. E. festeren. 'So festered aren hus wondes' = so festered are his wounds; P. Plowman, C. xx. 83. Etym. doubtful. In Lye's A.S. Dict. we find: 'Festrud, fostered, nutritus; festrud been, nutriti; Scint. 81.' The reference does not seem to be right; but it is quite possible that festered is nothing but a peculiar form and use of fostered. The spelling fester for fister in A. S. is not uncommon. See Foster.

FESTIVAL, a feast-day. (F., -Low L.) Properly an adj. With drapets festival; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 9. 27. O. F. festival, festive; also, as sb. a festival; Roquefort.—Low Lat. festivalis; formed, with suffix -alis, from Lat. festiuus; see below.

FESTIVE, festal. (L.) Modern; see Todd's Johnson.—Lat. festious, festive.—Lat. festions. See Feast. Der. festive-ly, festiv-l-y, festivo-ly, friezes, and the astragels; Dryden, Art of Poetry, 56.—F. festion, a friezes, and the astragels; Dryden, Art of Poetry, 56.—F. festion, a ferocious-ness.

FERREOUS, made of iron. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg.

Errors, b. ii. c. 3. § 4.—Lat. ferreus (by change of -us to -ous, as in but a connection with Low Lat. festine, C. F. fest, faist, faiste=F falls, a top, ridge (from the base of the Lat. fastigrum), is almost as likely. Der. festoon, verb.

FETCH, to bring. (E.) M. E. fecchen, pt. t. fette, pp. fet; Chaucer, C. T. 7646, 821.—A. S. fettan, gefetian, to fetch, Grein, i. 283, 398; pp. fetod.—A. S. fett, a pace, step, journey; Grein, i. 273. Cf. Icel. feta, to find one's way; Icel. fet, a step, pace. Connected with Foot, q. v. — PAD, to seize, go; see Fick, i. 135, iii. 171.

Cf. also Dan. fatte, Du. vatten, to catch, take; G. fassen, to seize; from the same Teutonic base FAT; see Fit (1). The notions of 'estiving' and 'advancing' seem to be mixed up in this root. of 'seizing' and 'advancing' seem to be mixed up in this root. The orig. notion seems to be 'to go to find,' or 'go for.' Der. felch, used by Shak. to mean 'a stratagem;' Hamlet, ii. I. 38.

FETE, a festival. (F., -L.) Modern. -F. fêle = O. F. feste, a feast. See Feast.

FETICH, FETISH, an object of superstitious worship. (F., – Port., – L.) Modern; not in Johnson. – F. fitiche. – Port. feitigo, sorcery; also a name given by the Portuguese to the roughly made idols of W. Africa. – Port. feitigo, artificial. – Lat. factitius. See Factitious. Der. fetich-ism.

FETID, stinking. (F., -L.) In Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 481. - O. F. fetide, 'stinking;' Cot. - Lat. fetidus, fætidus, stinking. - Lat.

From the same root as Fume, q. v. Der. fetid-ness.

FETLOCK, the part of the leg (in a horse) where the tuft of hair grows behind the pastern-joint. (Scand.) Orig. the tuft itself. ' Fetlock, or fetterlock, the hair that grows behind on a horse's feet; The pl. is spelt feetlakkes in Rich. Coer de Lion, 5816; and fitlokes in Arthur and Merlin, 5902. Of Scand. origin; the difficulty is to determine the precise sense of the former syllable; the latter is the same as our 'lock' of hair, viz. Icel. lokkr, A. S. locc. connection with fet- we find Icel. fet, a pace, step, feti, a pacer, stepper (used of horses), feta, to step, as if the fetlock were the lock displayed in stepping; cf. Swed. fjüt, Dan. fied, a foot-print, footstep, track. But there is also Icel. feti, a strand in the thread of a warp, Dan. fed, fid, a skein; as if there were an allusion to the tangled end of a skein, as suggested by Mr. Wedgwood. Again, there is also Icel. fit, the webbed foot of waterbirds, the web or skin of the feet of animals, the edge or hem of a sock.

γ. But all these words seem to be ultimately related, and to be further connected with both foot and fetter, the root being PAD, to seize, go: see Fetter, Fetch, Foot.

feter, Chaucer, C. T. 1281.—A. S. fetor, feter, Grein, i. 283. + Du. weter, lace; orig. a fetter. + Icel. fjüturr. + Swed. fjütrar, pl. fetters. +G. fessel. +Lat. pedica; also com-pes (gen. com-ped-is), a fetter. +Gk. πέδη, a fetter. +Skt. páduká, a shoe. All from the base PAD, a foot. See Foot.

FETUS, offspring, the young in the womb. (L.) Modern; in Johnson's Dict. - Lat. fetus, a bringing forth, offspring. - Lat. fetus, fruitful, that has brought forth. - Lat. feuere*, an obsolete verb, to generate, produce; related to fu- in fui, I was, and in fu-turus, future. + Gk. φύειν, to beget; φύεσθαι, to grow; whence φυτόε, grown. + Skt. bhú, to become, be. + A. S. beón, to be. - ✓ BHU, to exist. See Be. Der. (from the same root) fe-cundity, q. v.; fe-line, q. v.; fe-

Der. (from the same root) fe-cunaty, q. V.; fe-tine, q. V.; felicity, q. v.; also ef-fete, faum (2).

FEUD (1), revenge, hatred. (E.) In Shak. Troil. iv. 5. 132. Modified in spelling, by confusion with the word below. M. E. fede (a Northern form), Wallace, i. 354.—A. S. feh'δ, enmity, hatred (very common); Grein, i. 275.—A. S. fik, hostile; whence mod. E. Foe, q. v. + G. fehde, hatred. + Goth. fijathwa, hatred. Curtius compares (but wrongly?) the Gk. πικρόε, bitter, Lithuanian pyhti, to be anomal Curtius.

FEUD (2), a fief; FEUDAL, pertaining to a fief. (Low L., - Scand.?)

In Blackstone's Commentaries, b. ii. c. 4; and see Fee in Scand.?) In Blackstone's Commentaries, b. ii. c. 4; and see Fee in Blount's Law Dict. — Low Lat. feudum, a fief; very common, but perhaps shortened from the adj., and due to a mistake, viz. the regarding of the -d in the Icel. words as being equivalent to the Lat. adj. suffix -alis. = Low Lat. feudalis, 'a vassal,' wrongly made into an adjective, with the sense of 'feudal.' = Icel. fê-ôval (?), an ôval held as a fee or fief from the king; not a true Icel. compound, bat both parts are significant. - Icel. ft, a fee or fief; and &al, patrimony, property held in allodial tenure. See further under Fief, and Allodial.

neid in allodial tenure. See further under Fief, and Allodial.

Der. feudal (really the parent of feud); feudal-ism, feud-at-or-y.

FEVEIR, a kind of disease. (F.,-L.) M. E. feud-at-or-y.

P. Plowman, C. iv. 96; fefre, Ancren Riwle, p. 112.-O. F. fevre, later fieure (F. fièvre).-Lat. febrem, acc. of febris, a fever, lit. 'a trembling.'-y BHABH, an extension of YBHA, to tremble; cf. Gk. φόβοs, fear; A. S. biftan, G. beben, to tremble; Skt. bhi, to fear. Fick, i. 690. Der. fever-ous, fever-ish, fever-ish-ly, fever-ish-ness; also fever-few, a plant, corrupted from A. S. fefer-fuge, borrowed from Lat. febrifuga = fever-dispelling; from Lat. fugare, to put to flight; see Wright's Vocab. i. 30, col. 2.

as likely. Der. festoon, verb.

Chancer. C. T. 7646. 821.—A. S. fettan, gefetian, to fetch, Grein, i.

FEY, doomed to die. (E.) 'Till fey men died awa', man; Burns, Battle of Sheriffmuir, l. 19.—A. S. fáge, doomed to die. + Burns, Battle of Sheriumur, i. 19.—A. S. fage, doomed to die. — Icel. feigr, destined to die. + Du. veeg, about to die. + O. H. G. feigi, doomed to die; whence G. feig, a coward.

FIAT, a decree. (L.) In Young's Night Thoughts, vi. 465.—
Lat. fiat, let it be done.—Lat. fio, I become; = fa-i-0, used as pass. of fa-c-ere, to make; from base fa. See Fact.

FIB, a fable. (F.,—L.) In Pope, Ep. to Lady Shirley, l. 24. A weakened and abbreviated form of fable. Cf. Prov. E. fible-fable, nonsense; Halliwell. See Fable. Der. fib, vb.

Cotgrave. - F. fibre; pl. fibres, 'the fibers, threads, or strings of muscles;' Cot. - L. fibra, a fibre. Root uncertain. Der. fibr-ous, fibrine; also fringe, q. v.

ine; also fringe, q. v.

FICKLE, deceitful, inconstant. (E.) M. E. fikel, P. Plowman, C. iii. 25.—A.S. ficol, found in a gloss (Bosworth); formed with a common adj. suffix -ol.—A.S. fic, gefic, fraud, Grein, i. 400; cf. A. S. ficen, deceit; allied to Icel. feikn, an evil, a portent, O. Sax. fikn, deceit.

B. Perhaps the root of the word appears in Fidget, q.v. Der. fickle-ness.

fetion. Cot. - Lat. fictionem, acc. of fiction. Clout, l. 114. = F. fiction, 'a fiction;' Cot. = Lat. fictionem, acc. of fictio, a feigning. = Lat. fictus, pp. of fingere, to feign. See Feign, Figure. Der. (from Lat. fictus) fict-it-i-ous, fict-ile; and see Figment, Figure. FIDDLE, a stringed instrument, violin. (L.?) M.E. fittel, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 457; fidel, Chaucer, C. T. 298.—A.S. fivele, only in the deriv. fivelere, a fiddler, in a copy of Ælfric's Glossary (Bosworth); cf. Icel. fibla, a fiddle, fiblari, a fiddler; Dan. fiddel; Du. vedel; G. fiedel (O. H. G. fidula).

B. Of uncertain origin, but probably the same word as Low Lat. vidula, vitula, a viol, fiddle; a vivel average by the first circle.

word presumably of Lat. origin. See Viol.

FIDELITY, faithfulness. (F., -L.) In Shak. Mer. Wives, iv.

2. 160. -F. fidelité, 'fidelity;' Cot. - Lat. fidelitatem, acc. of fidelitas.

- Lat. fidelis, faithful. - Lat. fides, faith. See Falth.

FIDGET, to be restless, move uneasily. (Scand.) In Boswell's Life of Johnson (Todd's Johnson). A dimin. form of fidge. 'Fidge about, to be continually moving up and down; Kersey, ed. 1715, Fidge is a weakened form of the North E. fick or fike. 'Fike, fyke, feik, to be in a restless state;' Jamieson. M. E. fiken, Prompt. Parv. p. 160; whence the secondary form fisken, id. 162; see my note to P. Plowman, C. x. 153. 'The Sarezynes fledde, away gunne fyke' = the Saracins fled, and away did hasten; used in contempt; Rich. Coer de Lion, 4749.—Icel. fika, to climb up nimbly, as a spider. + Swed. fika, fikas, to hunt after; and see fika in Rietz. + Norw. fika, to take Lion, 4749.—Icel. fika, to climb up nimbly, as a spider. + Swed, fika, fikas, to hant after; and see fika in Rietz. + Norw. fika, to take trouble; fika etter, to pursue, hasten after; Aasen. ¶ Perhaps fick-le is from this base fik-. Der. fidget, sb., fidget-y, fidget-i-ness.

FIDUCIAL, showing trust. (L.) Rare; see Rich. Dict. 'Fiduciary, a feoffee in trust;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Both words are from Lat. fiducia, trust.— Lat. fidere, to trust. See Faith.

FIE, an interjection of disgust. (Scand.) M. E. fy, Chaucer, C. T. 4500; 'fy for shame;' id. 14807; Will. of Palerne, 481.— Icel. fy, fei; Dan. fy, also fy skam dig, fie for shame; Swed. fy, also fy skam, fie for shame. Hence perhaps O. F. fi, fy, fye; Cot. We find similar forms in the G. pfui, Lat. phui, phy, Skt. phut, natural expressions of disgust, due to the sound of blowing away.

FIEF, land held of a superior. (F.,—Low L.—Scand.?) In Dryden, On Mrs. Killigrew, l. 98. The M. E. vb. feffen, to enfeoff, is common; see Chaucer, C. T. 9572; P. Plowman, B. ii. 78, 146.— O. F. fife, spelt fied in the 11th century (Brachet).—Low Lat. feudum, property held in fee. See Feud. ¶ Feudum is generally derived from O. H. G. fiku, the same word as our fee; see Fee. Thus Littré cites O. H. G. fiku, feko, possessions, goods, cattle, without explaining the final d. Burguy looks on feu-d-um as having an intercalated d. Possibly the final f in fief and the d in feu-d-um are alike due to the \(\theta\) in Icel. \(\theta\) of the final f in fief and the d in feu-d-um are alike due to the \(\theta\) in Icel. \(\theta\) of the final fills for the series of the fend and fief. The Scandinavian influence upon F. (and even upon O. H. G.) has been somewhat overlooked. Thus fief is not merely fee, but 'paternal fee.' See Allodial.

feld. Cf. Russ. polé, a field. Root uncertain; but we may consider

E. fell, a hill, as being a mere variety of the same word; see Fell (4).

Der. field-day, field-marshal, &c.

FTEILDFARE, a kind of bird. (E.) M. E. feldefare, Chaucer, Troil. iii. 861; feldfare, Will. of Palerne, 183.—A. S. feldefare, Wright's Vocab. i. 63, l. 27. There is also an A. S. feala-for, turdus helds. See Field, Fallow, and Fare.

accordingly, express much the same thing.

FIEND, an enemy. (E.) M. E. fend, Chaucer, C. T. 7256; earlier feond, Layamon, l. 237.—A. S. feond, fiond, an enemy, hater; properly the pres. pt. of feon, contr. form of feogan, to hate; Grein, i. 294, 295. + Du. vijand, an enemy. + Dan. and Swed. fiende. + Icel. findid, pres. pt. of fija, to hate. + Goth. fijands, pres. pt. of fijan, to hate. + G. feind. — YI, to hate; Fick, i. 145; whence also foe, q. v.

Similarly, friend is a pres. pt. from Teut. base fri, to love; see Friend Der findish femiliarness.

to hate. + G. feind. - + PI, to hate; Fick, i. 145; whence also for q. v. ¶ Similarly, friend is a pres. pt. from Teut. base fri, to love; see Friend. Der. fiend-ish, fiend-ish-ness.

FIFE, a shrill pipe. (F., -O. H. G.) In Shak. Oth. iii. 3. 352. -F. fifre, 'a fife; 'Cot. -O. H. G. fffa, ffa; G. feife, a pipe. -O. H. G. ffien, to blow, puff, blow a fife; cf. G. fiff, a whistle, hissing. Allied to Pipe, q. v. Cf. Lat. fipare, pipiare, to chirp.

FIG, the name of a fruit. (F., -L.) The pl. figes occurs in the Ancren Riwle, p. 150, where also the fig-tree is called figer. [The A. S. fie (Matt. vii. 16) is a somewhat dillerent form, being taken di-FIGHT, to contend in war. (E.) M. E. fikten, fehten, Layamon, ll. 1359, 1580. = A. S. feohtan, Grein, i. 289; whence the sb. feohte, a fight. + Du. wechten. + Dan. fegte. + Swed. fükta. + O. H. G. fehtan; G. fechten.

β. Possibly connected with Lat. pectere, to comb, to card, hence, to beat. Der. fight, sh., fight-er, fight-ing.

FIGMENT, a fiction. (L.) 'You heard no figment, sir;'
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iv. 4. - Lat. figmentum, a fiction; formed (with suffix -mentum) from the base FIG of fi(n)gere,

FILAMENT, a slender thread. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave, to translate F. filamen. - O. F. filamens, 'filaments;' Cot. [The t was added by analogy with other words in -ment.] Formed as if from Lat. filamentum (with suffix -mentum) from Low Lat. filare, to wind thread. - Lat. filum, a thread; see File (1).

FILBERT, the fruit of the hazel. (F., - O. H. G.) Formerly spelt philibert or philiberd. 'The Philibert that loves the vale; Peacham's Emblems, ed. 1612 (R.) Gower has: 'That Phillis in the same throwe Was shape into a nutte-tre . . . And, after Phillis, philliberd This tre was cleped in the yerd; 'C. A. ii. 30. [This is an allusion to the story of Phyllis and Demophon in Ovid, and of course does not account for the word, as it takes no notice of the last β. Philliberd is clearly put for 'philiberd nut,' and syllable. the word is a proper name. We have no sufficient evidence to shew from whom the nut was named. A common story is that it was so named after Philibert, king of France, but there was no such king. Cotgrave has: 'Philibert, a proper name for a man; and particularly the name of a certain Bourgonian [Burgundian] saint; whereof chaine de S. Philibert, a kind of counterfeit chain. Perhaps the nut too was named after St. Philibert, whose name also passed into a proverb in another connection. St. Philibert's day is Aug. 22 (Old Style), just the nutting season. The name is Frankish. - O. H. G. fili-bert, i. e. very bright; from fili (G. viel), much, very; and bert = berkt, bright, cognate with E. bright. See Hist. of Christian Names, by Miss Yonge, ii. 231; where, however, fili- is equated to wille (will) by a mistake. ¶ Similarly, a filbert is called in German Lambertsnuss = Lambert's nut; St. Lambert's day is Sept. 17.

FILCH, to steal, piller. (Scand.) Rob. of Brunne has filehid = stolen; tr. of Langtoft, p. 282. Filch stands for fil-k (cf. tal-k from tell, stal-k from steal), where k is a formative addition. Fil-represents M. E. felen, to hide; not very uncommon, and still in use provincially; see Feal in Halliwell. 'For to fele me for ferde' = to hide myself for fear; Morte Arthure, ed. Brook, 3237.—Icel. fela, to hide, conceal, bury. + Goth. filkan, to hide, bury. + O. H. G. filkan, to put together; whence G. be-fehlen, to order. Der. filch-er. finnede = furnished with fins, occurs in Rom. of Alexander, fragment pilaris (in a gloss); Bosworth.—A.S. feld, a field; and faran, to fare, travel over. The A.S. fealo-for is, similarly, from fealo, fealu, reddish, yellowish, also fallow-land; and faran, to fare, travel. The sense is, in the latter case, 'fallow-wanderer,' i. e. traverser of the fallow-fields. See Field, Fallow, and Fare. The two names, according express much the same thing.

FIEND, an enemy. (E.) M. E. fend, Chaucer, C. T. 7256; earlier feond, Layamon, 1. 237.—A.S. fednd, fidnd, an enemy, hater; properly the pres. pt. of feon, contr. form of feogan, to hate; Grein, i. 294, 295. + Du. vijand, an enemy. + Dan. and Swed. fiende. + Col. filands, pres. pt. of feon, contr. form of feogan, to hate; Grein, i. 294, 295. + Du. vijand, an enemy. + Dan. and Swed. fiende. + Col. filands, pres. pt. of feind, pres. pt. of feind, pres. pt. of filands, pres. pt.

Der. file, verb; fileings.

FILIAL, relating to a child. (L.) 'All filial reverence;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 63 f. Formed as if from Low Lat. filialis; cf. Low Lat. filialiter, in a mode resembling that of a son.—Lat. filials, son; a mode resembling that of a son.—Lat. filials.

filia, daughter; orig. an infant; cf. Lat. felare, to suck. — V DHA, to suck; cf. Skt. dha, to suck. Der. filial-ly, fili-at-ion, af-fili-ate.

FILIBUSTER, a pirate, freebooter. (Span.,—E.) Modern; mere Spanish.—Span. filibuster, a buccaneer, pirate; so called from the vessel in which they sailed. — Span. filibote, fibote, a fast-sailing vessel. — E. flyboat; cf. 'What news o' th' Flyboat?' Beaum. and Fletcher, Beggars' Bush, iv. 3. 20. 'Flyboat, a swift and light vessel built for sailing;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Hence also the Du. wlieboot, explained as 'fly-boat' in Sewel's Du. Dict., ed. 1754.

Thus the word was originally due to English. See Fly.

FILIGREE, fine ornamental work. (Span.) A corruption of filigrain or filigrane, the older form. 'A curious filigrane handkerchief... out of Spain;' Dr. Browne's Travels, ed. 1685 (Todd). 'Several filigrain curiosities;' Tatler, no. 245.—Span. filigrana, filigree-work, fine wrought work. - Span. fila, a file, row of things, filar, to spin; and grano, the grain or principal fibre of the material; so called because the chief texture of the material was wrought in

FILL, to make full. (E.) M. E. fillen, P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, 763; older form fullen, Ancren Riwle, p. 40.—A.S. fyllan, fullian, Grein, i. 356, 360; from A. S. full, full. + Du. nulien. + Icel. fylla. + Dan. fylde. + Swed. fylle. + Goth. fulljan. + G. füllen. See Full. Der. fill, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 2561; fill-er. FILLET, a little band. (F., - L.) M. FILLIBEG, PHILIBEG, a kilt. (Gaelic.) Used by Dr. Johnson, in his Tour to the Western Islands (Todd).—Gael. feileadh-beag, the kilt in its modern shape; Macleod.—Gael. filleadh, a fold, plait, from the verb fill, to fold; and beag, little, small; so that the sense is 'little fold.'

FILLIP, to strike with the finger-nail, when jerked from under the thumb. (E.) In Shak. 2 Hen. IV, i. 2. 255. Another form of Flip. Halliwell has: 'Flip, a slight sudden blow; also, to fillip, to jerk; Somerset. Lillie (Mother Bombie, ed. 1632, sig. Dd. ii) seems to use the word flip in the sense to fillip.' Fillip is an easier form of flip, which arose from flip, by the shifting of l. Der. fillip, sb. See FLAGEOLEF, a sort of flute. (F.,-L.) Spelt flagellate in Hudibras, c. ii. pt. ii. l. 610.—O. F. flageolet, 'a pipe, whistle, flute;' Cot. Dimin. (with suffix -et) of O. F. flageol, with the same water peron' = she dashes or casts water on it; Ancren Riwie, p. 314; but this is not the same word; cf. Swed. dial. flasa, to burn violently, blaze. And cf. Icel. flasa, to rush; flas, a headlong rushing. Allied to Flare, and Flush. Der. flash, sb.; flash-y, flask-i-ly, flash-i-ness. The flase of the same word; and flush is not the same word; cf. Swed. flasa, to flutter,

FLASK, a kind of bottle. (Low L.?) In Shak. Romeo, iii. 3. 6 16966.—A. S. flea (the form usually given in Dictt.); spelt fleo, as a gloss to pulse, in Somner's ed. of Ælf. Gloss., Nomina Insectorum. In this change of se to es or ze is common in A. S.; as in ascian = aesian = aesian; mod. E. to ask and prov. E. to az.] 'Twa fatu, on folcisc flazan gehatene' = two vessels, vulgarly called flasks; Gregory's pulse (stem pulse) seems to be the same word; this Fick ingeniously applied a changed form from allered are Fick iii. FLASK, a kind of bottle. (Low L.?) In Shak. Romeo, iii. 3. 132.—A. S. fase, whence by metathesis, the form facs, written facs. This change of se to es or x is common in A. S.; as in ascian—acsian—axian; mod. E. to ask and prov. E. to ax.] 'Twa fatu, on folcisc faxan gehâtene'=two vessels, vulgarly called flasks; Gregory's Dialogues, i. 9 (Bosworth). We find also Icel. faska (an old word); Dan. fasks; Swed. flaska; G. flasche; O. H. G. flasca. B. But it is uncertain whether the word is really Teutonic; it seems to be either from Low Lat. flasca. a flask. of uncertain origin: possibly it is uncertain whether the word is really Teutonic; it seems to be rather from Low Lat. flasca, a flask, of uncertain origin; possibly from the Gk. base φλα-, seen in kαφλαίνειν, to spout forth. We also find W. fflasg, Gael. flasg. Der. flagon, q. v.

FLAT, level, smooth. (Scand.) M. E. flat; 'sche fel . flat to the grounde;' Will. of Palerne, 4414.—Icel. flatr, flat. + Swed. flat. + Dan. flad.

The connection with Gk. πλαΐνε, broad, has not been made out; Curtius, i. 346; it is more likely connected with Du. vlak, G. flach, flat, Gk. πλαΐς, a flat surface, for which see Plain.

Der. flat, sb.; flat-ly, flat-ness; flatt-en (coined by analogy with length-en, &c.); flatt-ish, flat-wise.

FILATTER, to coax, soothe. (F., - Scand.) M. E. flateren (with one t); P. Plowman, B. xx. 109. O. F. flater (later flatter), 'to flatter, sooth, smooth; . . also to claw, stroke, clap gently; 'Cot. Ratter, south, smooth; . . and to claw, stoke, chap gently; Col.

B. Here, as in many cases (e. g. mate from A. S. maca) the t stands for an older k, and the base is flak. This base occurs in O. Swed.

fleckra, to flatter (Ihre); Swed. dial. fleka, to caress (Rietz). Cf.

G. fleken, to beseech; O. H. G. flekón.

γ. The base is probably the Teutonic FLAK, to beat; hence to pat, stroke. This base answers the feutonic FLAK, to beat; whence Lat. plaga, a stroke. See Fick, i. 681; and see Flag (1) and Plague. ¶ Diez derives O.F. flater, from Icel. flatr, flat; with the notion 'to smoothe;' but this appears to me unsatisfactory, and is rejected by Brachet. FLATULENT, full of wind, windy. (F.,-L.) In Minsheu; also in Holland's Plutarch, p. 577 (R.) - F. flatulent, 'flatulent, windy;' Cot.-Low Lat. flatulentus; not in Ducange, but regularly formed from the base flatus by analogy with templeatus drunker.

formed from the base flatu-, by analogy with temulentus, drunken. -Lat. flatus, a blowing, a breath. - Lat. flatus, pp. of flare, to blow; cognate with E. blow. See Blow (1). Der. flatulent-ly, flatulence, flatulenc-y

FLAUNT, to display ostentatiously. (Scand.) Shak. has flaunts, s. pl. fine clothes, Winter's Ta. iv. 4. 23. 'Yield me thy flanting [showy] hood;' Turburville, To his Friend that refused him, st. 10. 'With . . . fethers flaunt-a-flaunt,' i.e. showily displayed; Gascoliet, Steel Clean 116. It seems to have been expecially used with Steel Glass, 1163. It seems to have been especially used with reference to the fluttering of feathers to attract notice.

B. Probably Scandinavian; Rietz gives Swed. dial. flanka, to be unsteady, waver, hang and wave about, ramble; whence the adj. and adv. flankt, loosely, flutteringly (which = Gascoigne's flaunt-a-flaunt). Flanka is a nasalised form of Swed. dial. flakka, to waver, which answers to M. E. flakken, to palpitate; see Flag (1).

From the same source come Dan. flink, smart, brisk, active; Bavarian flandern, to flutter, flaunt, Schmeller, i. 792; Du. flikkeren, flonkeren, to sparkle.

FLAVOUR, the taste, scent. (Low L., -L.) Milton, Sams. Agon., 544, says of wine 'the flavor or the smell, Or taste that cheers the hearts of Gods or men,' &c. He here distinguishes flavour from both smell and taste; and possibly intended it to mean hue. β. At any rate, the word is plainly the Low Lat. flavor, golden coin, taken to mean 'yellow hue' or 'bright hue.' = Lat. flauus, yellow, gold-coloured; of uncertain origin. B. It is certain that the Lowland Scotch fleure, fleware, used by Gawain Douglas to mean a 'stench' (as shewn by Wedgwood), could not have produced the form flavour; but it is outer possible that the sense of flavour was the form flavour; but it is quite possible that the sense of flavour was modified by the O. F. flairer, to exhale an odour (now used in the sense of to scent, to smell), with which Douglas's word is connected.

sense of to scent, to smell), with which Douglas's word is connected. This O.F. fairer = Lat. fragrare, by the usual change of r to l (Diez); see Fragrant. Der. favour-less.

FLAW, a crack, break. (Scand.) M. E. fawe, used in the sense of 'flake;' 'flawes of fyre' = flakes of fire; Allit. Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 2556.—Swed. flaga, a flaw, crack, breach; also, a flake; see Flake, and Flag (4).

The A.S. form was floh (Bosworth); but the form flaw is Scand. Der. flaw-less.

FLAK, the name of a plant. (E.) M. E. flax, Chaucer, C. T. 678.—A.S. fleax; Ælfric's Gloss., ed. Somner, Vestium Nomina, l. 10. + Du. wlas. + G. flachs; O. H. G. vlahs, flahs.

$\beta$. (F. Goth. flahata, a plaiting of the hair; it is probable that flax is from the same root; see Curtius, i. 203. If so, the root is PLAK, to weave; whence also Gk. where, to weave, plait. Der. flax-en, where -en is whence also Gk. wherev, to weave, plait. Der. flan-en, where -en is explains as being a changed form from pluec-; see Fick, iii. 193. On the other hand, cf. Skt. pulaka, 'an insect of any class affecting animals whether externally or internally; ' Benfey.

animals whether externally or internally; Benfey.

FLEAM, a kind of lancet. (F., -Low L., -Gk.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. -F. flamme, 'a fleam;' Hamilton and Legros. [Cotgrave gives only the dimin. flammette, 'a kind of launcet.'] - Low Lat. flevolomum, phlebotomum, a lancet. -Gk. φλεβοτόμου, a lancet. -Gk. φλεβοτ, crude form of φλέψ, a vein; and τομ- for ταμ-, base of τέμνευν, to cut. See Phlebotomy. This pardonable abbreviation of too long a word is countenanced by Du. vlijm, G. fliete, and M. H. G. flieteme (cited in Mahn's Webster), all various corruptions of the same surgical word. The second syllable was corruptions of the same surgical word. The second syllable was soon lost; after which the change from fletomum to F. flamme is not soon lost; after which the change from Lat. platanum.

FLECK, a spot. (Scand.) M. E. flek; whence the verb flekken, to spot; Chaucer, C. T. 16033.—Icel. flekkr, a spot; flekka, to stain, spot. + Swed. flück, a spot; flücka, to spot. + Du. vlek, sb.; vlekken, vb. + G. fleck, sb.; flecken, vb., to spot, stain, put on a patch. β. From the Teutonic base FLAK, to strike; from the ✓ PLAG, to strike; see Fick, iii. 193. The connection is admirably shewn by the prop. E. flick, a slight blow also to give a lark (Hallimelly to strike; see Fick, iii. 193. The connection is admirably shewn by the prov. E. flick, a slight blow, also to give a jerk (Halliwell); flecks are spots such as would be caused by jerking a dirty brush.

FLECTION, a bending; see Flexible. FLEDGE, to furnish with feathers. (Scand.) Shak. has fledged, Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 32. This pp. fledged is a substitution for an older adj. fledge, meaning 'ready to fly.' M. E. flegge, 'ready to fly' (Stratmann); spelt fligge in the Prompt. Parv. p. 167 (and note).— Iccl. fleygr, able to fly.—Iccl. fleygia, to make to fly; causal of flikga, to fly. See Fly. Der. fledge-ling.

flüga, to fly. See Fly. Der. fledge-ling.

FLEE, to escape, run away. (Scand.) Not the same word as fly. The M.E. verb only appears in the pt. t. fledde, and pp. fled; Chaucer, C. T. 2932; Havelok, 1431.—Icel. flýja, flæja, to flee; pt. t. flýði, pp. flýiðr. + Swed. fly, to flee, shun. + Dan. flye, pt. t. flygte, to flee. Cf. Du. vlieden, to flee. β. Flee is a weak verb, corresponding to the strong verb fly, much as set corresponds to sit, except that flee is not used as a causal verb. See Fly.

FLEECE, a sheep's coat of wool. (E.) Here -ce stands for s, as usual. M.E. flees, Prompt, Parv. p. 166; Wyclif, Gen. xxx. 35.—A. S. flys, Ps. lxxi. 6 (ed. Spelman). + Du. vlies. + G. fliess, vliess, Perhaps related to Flesh. g. v.

A. S. fys, Ps. lxxi. 6 (ed. Spennar).

Perhaps related to Flesh, q. v.

FLEER, to mock, to grin. (Scand.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 109;

Jul. Cæs. i. 3. 117. M. E. flerien, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1088, 2778. Of Scand. origin; cf. Norweg. flira, to titter, giggle, laugh at nothing; Aasen. Also Norweg. flisa, to titter, which is an older form. id.: Swed. flissa, to titter.

B. Another variation of this verb see Frown.

FLEET (1), a number of ships. (E.) M. E. flete, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1189; Reole, Layamon, 2155.—A. S. flect, a ship, Grein, i. 304; fliet, a ship (in a gloss), Lye. [It seems afterwards to have been used collectively.]—A. S. flectan, to 'flect,' a variant of to float. B. The more usual A. S. form is flota, a ship, Grein, i. 305 (= M. E. flote, Havelok, 738); which is cognate with Icel. floti. (1) a ship, (2) a fleet; Dan. flaade, a fleet; Swed. flotta, a fleet; Du. vloot, G.

flotte. See Fleet (4).

FLEET (2), a creek, bay. (E.) In the place-names North-fleet, Fleet Street, &c. Fleet Street was so named from the Fleet ditch; and fleet was a name given to any shallow creek, or stream or channel of water; see Halliwell.—M. E. fleet, Prompt. Parv. p. 166.—A. S. fleot, a bay of the sea, as in sets fleot = bay of the sea; Ælfred's tr. of Beda, i. 34. Afterwards applied to any channel or stream, esp. if shallow. The orig. sense was 'a place where vessels float;' and the deriv. is from the old verb fleet, to float; see Fleet (4). Cf. Icel. fljót, a stream; Du. vliet, a rill, a brook.

flot, a stream; Du. viet, a rill, a brook.

FLEET (3), swift. (E.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 261. It does not seem to appear in M. E., but the A. S. form is fleditg (=fleet-y), Grein, i. 304. It is a derivative from the old verb to fleet, and = fleeting; see Fleet (4). Cf. Icel. fljótr, fleet, swift; from the verb fljóta, below. Der. fleet-ly, fleet-ness.

FLEET (4), to move swiftly. (E.) 'As seasons fleet;' 2 Hen. VI, ii. 4. 4. M. E. fleten, to swim, orig. to float; Chaucer, C. T. 1960; Havelok. $22. -A. S. fleetan. to float, to swim; Grein, i. 304. + Rel.

Havelok, 522.—A.S. flectan, to swim, org. to noat; Chauter, C. 1. 1905; Havelok, 522.—A.S. flectan, to float, to swim; Grein, i. 304. + Icel. fljóta, to float, swim; see further under Float. Der. fleet-ing, fleet-ing-ty; also fleet (3), fleet-ing, fleet-ing-ty; also fleet (3), fleet-ing, fleet-ing-ty; also fleet (2).

Not the same word as flit, though allied to it; see Flit.

flesch, fleisch; Chaucer, C. T. 147,—A. S. flesc, Grein, i. 302. + Du. vleesch. + Icel. flesk, in the special sense of 'pork,' or 'bacon.' + Dan. flesk, pork, bacon. + Swed. flesk, pork, bacon. + G. fleisch. Der. flesk, verb, K. John, v. 1. 71; flesk-ed; flesk-less, flesk-ly, flesk-y, flesk-i-ly, flesk-i-ness. Perhaps related to flake and flitch.

127. Here lis = Lat. lilius, a corrupt form of lilium, a lily. See Flower and Lily. The Du. lisch, a water-flag, iris, appears to be corrupted (like E. luce) from the F. lis, in which the final s was once sounded.

FLEXIBLE, easily bent. (F., -L.) In Shak. Troil. i. 3. 50. -F. flexible, 'flexible;' Cot.—Lat. flexibilis, easily bent.—Lat. flexus, pp. of flectere, to bend. β. Flectere appears to be for felc-tere, from the same source as Lat. falx, a sickle; see Falchion. Der. flexible-ness, flexibl-y, flexibil-i-ty; from Lat. flexus are also flex-ion (wrongly flect-ion), flex-or, flex-ile, flex-ure; from the same source, circum-fien, de-fiect, in-fiex-ion (wrongly in-fiect-ion), re-fiect.

Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1221. – A. S. flicerian, Deut. xxxii. 11.

B. Here flicerian is a frequentative form from the base flic-, an attenuated form of the base FLAK, to beat; the sense is 'to beat slightly and often.' Y. This is made clear by the occurrence of the stronger form flaker in the M. E. flakeren, Ancren Riwle, p. 222; of which the later form flacker occurs in Coverdale's Bible, Ezek. x. 19: 'And the cherubins flackered with their wings.' See Flag (1). The Icel. flökra, to flutter = E. flacker; Du. flikkeren, to sparkle = E. flicker

FLICHT, the act of flying. (E.) M. E. flight, Chaucer, C. T. 190, 990.—A. S. flyht, Grein, i. 306; formed, with suffix -t (= Aryan -ta), from A. S. flyg-e, flight; from A. S. flegan, to fly. Afterwards used as the verbal sb. of to flee also.

B. Corresponding in use to flight (from fly) we have Icel flug (= A. S. flyge), G. flug, Swed. flygt; corresponding to flight (from flee), we have Swed. flykt, G. flucht. The use of Dan. flugt, Du. vlugt, is less marked. Der. flight-y, flight-i-ness. See Fly, Flee.

FLIMSY, weak, slight. (W.?) 'Flim'y, limber, slight;' Kersey, ed. 1715. In Pope, Prol. to Satires, I. 94. Perhaps Welsh; cf. W. llwnsi, sluggish. spiritless, flimsy (Spurrell).

B. According to

W. Ilymsi, sluggish, spiritless, flimsy (Spurrell). B. According to Webster, the word is limsy or limpsy in the colloquial dialect of the United States of America. This seems to connect it with Limp, adj., q.v. Der. flimsi-ness. ¶ For fl = W. U, see Flummery. FLINCH, to shrink back. (F., - L.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 1. 190. A nasalised form of M. E. flecchen, to flinch, waver. Thus we find: 'For hadde the clergie harde holden togidere, And noht fleeched aboute nother hider ne thidere, i.e. had they all kept together, and not wavered; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 344. In Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 137, l. 170, fleecheth occurs in the exact sense of 'flinches;' see also Ayenb. of Inwyt, p. 253.—O. F. flechir, 'to bend, bow, plie; to go awry, or on one side;' Cot.—Lat. fleetere, to bend; see Flexible.

¶ It is probable that the form of the word was influenced by that of blench, used in the same sense

FLING, to throw, dart, scatter about. (Scand.) flong = flung, occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 17255. - Swed. flänga, to use violent action, to romp; flänga med hästarna, to ride horses too hard; flang, sb., violent exercise, i flang, at full speed (cf. E. to take one's fling); Swed. dial. flanga, to strip bark from trees, to hack, strike (Rietz); O. Swed. flenga, to strike, beat with rods (Ihre). + Dan. flenge, to slash; i fleng, indiscriminately.

B. The orig. sense is to strike (Ihre); hence fling is a nasalised form of flick, an attenuated from the Tayloric hear. form of flack, from the Teutonic base FLAK, to beat. See Flicker, FLINT, a hard stone. (E.) M. E. flint, Havelok, 2667. A.S. flint, a rock; Numb. xx. 10. + Dan. flint, + Swed. flinta. + Gk. πλίνθος, a brick; Curtius, i. 46; Fick, i. 682. Der. flint-y, flint-i-ness. FLIPPANT, pert, saucy. (Scand.) 'A most flippant tongue she had;' Chapman, All Fools, Act v. sc. 1, prose speech by Gostanto. The suffix and (so shown s. y. Armant) is due to the she had; 'Chapman, All Fools, Act v. sc. I, prose speech by Gostanzo. The suffix ant (as shewn s. v. Arrant) is due to the Northern E. pres. pt. in and; hence flippant = flippand, i. e. prattling, babbling.—Icel. fsipa, to babble, prattle; Swed. dial. fspa, to talk nonsense (Rietz); from the base FLIP, which appears in Swed. dial. fsip, the lip; an attenuated form of Flap, q. v. Cf. Swed. dial. flip, the lip; an attenuated form of Flap, q. v. Cf. Swed. dial. flip, the lip; an attenuated form of Flap, q. v. Cf. Swed. dial. flip, the lip; an attenuated form of Flap, q. v. Cf. Swed. dial. flip, the lip; an attenuated form of Flap, q. v. Cf. Swed. dial. flip, the lip; an attenuated form of Flap, q. v. Cf. Swed. dial. flip, the lip; an attenuated form of Flap, q. v. Cf. Swed. dial. flip, the lip; and the named of Skeat, i. 2. 18 (and the note). An older form flird appears in Low-land Sc. flird, to flirt, flirdis, giddy, flirdoch, a flirt, flird, a thin piece of dress.—A.S. fleard, a foolish thing, a piece of folly, Law of the Northumbrian Priests, § 54 (in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, ii. 299); Flower.

whence the verb fleardian, to trifle (Bosworth, Lye). Der. flirt, sb. (as now used); firi-ai-ion. No connection with O.F. fleureter, to skip as a bee from flower to flower (Cotgrave).

FLIT, to remove from place to place. (Scand.) M. E. flitten; P. Plowman, B. xi. 62; also flutten, Layamon, 30503.—Swed. flytta, M. E. flitten; to flit, remove; Dan. flytte. Cf. Icel. flyta, to hasten; flytja, to carry, cause to flit; flytjask (reflexive), to flit, remove. Closely allied to fleet, verb; see Fleet (4), Flutter. Der. flitt-ing, Ps. lvi. 8 (P.-Bk. version).

FLITCH, a side of bacon. (E.) M. E. flicche, P. Plowman, B. ix. 169.—A. S. flicce, to translate Lat. succidia; Bosworth. The pl. fliccu occurs in Diplom. Angl., ed. Thorpe, p. 158; spelt flicca. id.

site occurs in Diplom. Angl., ed. Inorpe, p. 158; speir fitted, id. p. 460. + Icel. flikki, a flitch; flik, a flap, tatter.

B. The Swed. flik is a lappet, a lobe; Dan. flik is a patch; these are attenuated forms of flak, the original of Flake, q. v. Thus a flitch or flick is 'a thin slice;' or, generally, 'a slice.'

FLOAT, to swim on a liquid surface. (E.) M. E. floten or flotten; very rare, the proper form being fleten (A. S. flotan); see Fleet (4). 'A whal... by that bot flotte' = a whale floated by the boat; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 248. B. This form of the verb is really a causal rather than the orig, form, and due to the sb. float = is really a causal rather than the orig. form, and due to the sb. float = A. S. flota, a ship (Grein); allied words to which are Icel. floti, a float, rast, whence flotna, to float to the top; Swed. flotta, a fleet, a raft, flotta, to cause to float; Du. vlot, a raft, whence vlotten, to cause to float; G. floss, a raft, whence violen, to cause to float; G. floss, a raft, whence flossen, to float; see also Fleet (1). \(\gamma\). Corresponding to A.S. fledian, to 'fleet,' we have Icel. flida, to float, to flow; Dan. flyde, to flow; Swed. flyta, to flow, float; G. fliessen (O. H. G. fliozan), to flow. \(\begin{array}{c}

\]. The Teut. base is FLUT, an extended form of FLU, to flow. See Flow. Der. float, sb. (though this is rather the orig. of the verb); float-er, float-age, float-ing, float-at-ion; also flotsam, q.v. ¶ Observe that the F. flotter, to float, is from Lat. fluctuare; see Fluctuate. The E. float and F. flotter were completely confused at last, though at first distinct; see Flotilla.

FLOCK (1), a company of birds or sheep. (E.) M. E. flok; 'a flok of briddis' = birds; King Alisaunder, 566.—A. S. floce, Gen. xxxii. 8. + Icel. flokkr. + Dan. flok. + Swed. flock.

Der. flock, verb.

TEOCK (2), a lock of wool. (F., -L.) In Shak, I Hen. IV, ii. 1, 7, -O. F. floc, floc de laine, 'a lock or flock of wool;' Cot. - Lat. floccus, a lock of wool. Cf. Lithuan. plankas, hair (Schleicher). Prob. from I PLU, to flow, swim, float about. Der. flock-y; and flow of the state of the state of flock-bed. &c. Not (from Lat. floccus), flocc-ose, flocc-ul-ent; also flock-bed, &c. Not to be confused with flake, with which it is unconnected.

FLOE, a flake of ice. (Dan.) Modern; common in accounts of Arctic Voyages. - Dan. flage, in the comp. iis-flage, an ice-floe. +

Swed. flaga, a flake; the same word as E. Flake, q. v. FLOG, to beat, whip. (L.?) A late word. It occurs in Cowper's Tirocinium (R.) and in Swift (Todd); also in Coles' Dict. ed. 1684. Perhaps a schoolboy's abbreviation from the Lat. flagellare, to whip, once a familiar word. See Flagellate. Cf. W. llachio, to slap.

FLOOD, a great flow of water. (E.) M. E. flod, P. Plowman, B. vi. 326.—A.S. flod, Grein, i. 305. + Du. vloed. + Icel. flod. + Swed. and Dan. flod. + Goth. flodus, a river. + G. fluth. Cf. Skt. pluta, bathed, wet; pp. of plu, to swim, cognate with E. flow.

FLOOR, a flat surface, platform. (E.) M. E. flor, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 133.—A. S. flor, Grein, i. 306. + Du. vloer. + G. flur. + W. llawr. + Bret. leur. + Irish and Gael. lar (= plar).

FLORAL, pertaining to flowers. (L.) Late. In Johnson's Dict.
— Lat. floralis, belonging to Flora.—Lat. Flora, goddess of flowers; mentioned in Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 2.—Lat. flor-, stem of flos, a flower; cf. flor-ere, to flourish. See Flower. Der. flor-esc-ence (from Lat. florescene, to blossom), flor-et, flori-culture, flori-fer-ous; flori-form, flor-ist; also flor-id, q. v., florin, q. v.

FLORID, abounding in flowers, red. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 278. [Directly from Latin; the O. F. floride merely means 'lively.'] — Lat. floridus, abounding with flowers.— Lat. florid, crude form of flos, a flower. See Flower. Der. florid-ly, florid-ness.

FLORIN, a coin of Florence. (F.,—Ital.,—L.) M. E. florin, Chaucer, C. T. 12704. Florins were coined by Edw. III in 1337, and named after the coins of Florence, which were much esteemed. O. F. florin, 'a florin: 'Cot — Ital. floring (-floring) a florin : O. F. florin, 'a florin;' Cot. – Ital. florino (– florino), a florin; so named because it bore a lily. – Ital. flore, a flower; with a probable allusion to Lat. Florentia (Florence), derived from the same source, viz. Lat. flor-em, a flower, flor-ere, to flourish. See Flower. FLOSCULE, a floret of an aggregate flower. (L.) Botanical and scientific.—Lat. flosculus, a little flower; dimin. of flos. See FLOSS, a downy substance, untwisted silken filaments. (Ital., - Curtius, i. 347. Der. flow, sb., flowing; also flood, q.v.: float, q.v. What is now called floss-silk was formerly called sleave-silk; see Nares. The term floss-silk is modern. Cot. gives 'soye flosche, sleave silk;' but the word flosche is not now used, and the E. word is probably directly from the Italian original, whence O. F. flosche as propably directly from the tannal original, whence U. F. Mosche was also borrowed.—Ital. flossio, flaccid, soft, weak; whence flossio seta, 'raveling or sleave silke;' Florio. [The Venetian form, according to Wedgwood, is flosso, which exactly agrees with the E.

FLOTILLA, a little fleet. (Span., = L.)
Bailey gives only the form fluta.—Span. flotilla, a little fleet; dimin. of flota, a fleet, cognate with O. F. flote, a fleet of ships, but also a crowd of people, a group (O. F. flote de gens); see Burguy. This O. F. flote, a fem. form, is closely connected with F. flot, masc., a wave, and therefore derived, as to form, from Lat. fluctus, a wave; see Fluctuate.

see Fluctuate. B. At the same time, the sense of F. flotte (later form of O. F. flote) and of the Span. flota has clearly been influenced by Du. vloot, a fleet, allied to (or borrowed from) Icel. floti, (1) a raft. (2) a fleet; see Fleet (1). The See Burguy and Diez. FLOTSAM, goods lost in shipwreck, and left floating on the waves. (Law F.,—Scand.) In Blackstone's Comment. b. i. c. 8; spelt flotson in Blount's Law Dict., ed. 1691. Cotgrave has: 'a flo, floating; choses a flo, flotsens or flotzams.' This is an Old Law F. term, barbarously compounded, like the allied Jetsam, q.v. B. The origin can hardly be other than Scandinavian; the former B. The origin can hardly be other than Scandinavian; the former syllable is to be referred to the Icel. prefix flot (as in flot-fundinn = found afloat), connected with floti, a float, raft, flotna, to come afloat; see Float. The latter syllable is most likely the Icel. suffix -samr (=E. -some), as in gaman-samr = E. game-some. The radical sense of -samr is 'together' or 'like;' hence floatsam = floating together or float-like, i. e. in a floating manner. See Same.

FLOUNCE (1), to plunge about, (Swed.) 'After his horse had flounced and floundered with his heeles;' Holland, tr. of Ammianus, p. 77 (R.) - Swed. dial. flunsa, to dip, plunge, to fall into water with

p. 77 (K.) = Swed. dial. pinka*, to dip, piunge, to fail into water with a plunge (Rietz); O. Swed. funsa*, to plunge, particularly used of the dipping of a piece of bread into gravy (Ihre). See Flounder (1).

FLOUNCE* (2), a plaited border on a dress. (F., -L.?) 'To change a founce*; 'Pope, Rape of the Lock, ii. 100. 'Farthingales and founce*, 'Beaum. and Fletcher, Mons. Thomas, iii. 2.3. Made, by change of r to $l$, from M. E. frounce*, a plait, wrinkle; P. Plowman, B. xiii, 318; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 2, l. 147. We also have frounced a frizzled and curled in Milton. II Pers. 123. also have frounced = frizzled and curled, in Milton, Il Pens. 123; cf. Spenser, F. Q. i. I. 14.—O. F. froncer, fronser, 'to gather, plait, fold, wrinkle; fronser le front, to frown or knit the brows;' Cot. B. Perhaps from Low Lat. frontiare*, to wrinkle the forchead; not found, but regularly formed from fronti-, crude form of frons, the forehead. See Front, and Frounce.

FLOUNDER (1), to flounce about. (O. Low G.) See quotation under Flounce (1); also in Beaum, and Fletcher, Woman's Prize, ii. 6. 30. A nasalised form of Du. flodderen, to dangle, flap, splash through the mire; as suggested by Wedgwood. Cf. Swed. fladdra, to flutter. Formed from a base FLAD, with much the same sense as FLAK, to flutter; see Flag (1).

FLOUNDER (2), the name of a fish. (Swed.) Flounder-like occurs in Massinger, Renegado, Act iii. sc. 1 (Mustapha's 5th speech). Flounder is in Beaum. and Fletcher, Mons. Thomas, ii. 3; and in John Dennis, Secrets of Angling (ab. A.D. 1613), in Arber's Eng. Garner, p. 171.—Swed. flundra, a flounder. + Dan. flynder. + Icel. flyðra. Prob. named from flapping about, and formed similarly to Flounder (1). Cf. Swed. dial. flunnka, to float about, swim (Rietz, p. 151 b).

FLOUR, the finer part of meal. (F.,-L.) 'Fyne flowre of whete;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 11; also spelt flower, with which it is identical. - F. fleur de farine, 'flower, or the finest FLOW, to stream, glide. (E.) M. E. flowen (not very common), Chaucer, Troil. iii. 1758.—A. S. flówan, Grein, i. 306. + Du. vloeijen. + Icel. flda, to boil milk, to flood. + O. H. G. flawen, M. H. G. flæen, flowen, to rinse, wash. + Lat. pluit, it rains; plunia, rain. + Russ. pluite, to sail, float. + Gk. πλέειν, πλώειν, to swim, float; πλύνειν, to wash. + Skt. plu, to swim, navigate:— PLU, to swim; Distinct from Lat. fluere.

FLOWER, a bloom, blossom. (F., -L.) M. E. flour, Chaucer, C. T. 4; Havelok, 2917.—O. F. flour, flor (F. fleur).—1.at. florem, acc. of flow, a flower; cf. florere, to bloom, cognate with E. blow, to bloom. See Blow (2). Der. flower-y, flower-et; also flor-id, flor-al, flor-in, flose-cule, flourish, q.v. Doublet, flour, q.v.

FLUCTUATE, to waver. (L.) In Milton, P. L. ix. 668.—Lat. fluctuatus, pp. of fluctuare, to float about.—Lat. fluctus, a wave.—

Lat. fluctus, old pp. of fluere, to flow: see Fluent. Der. fluctus.

Lat. fluctus, old pp. of fluere, to flow; see Fluent. Der. fluctuat-ion; and see flotilla.

FLUE (1), an air-passage, chimney-pipe. (F.,-L.) Phaer (tr. of Virgil, x. 209) translates concha, the sea-shell trumpet of the Tritons, by 'wrinckly wreathed flue' (R.) It is a mere corruption of flute.-O.F. fleute, a flute, a pipe; 'le fleute d'un alambic, the beak or nose of a limbeck' = the flue or pipe of a retort; Cot. See Flute. ¶ Cf. the various uses of pipe.

FLUE (2), light floating down. (F.,—L.?) In Johnson's Dict., explained as 'soft down or fur.' Also called fluff; cf. also: 'Flocks, refuse, sediment, down, inferior wool;' and again: 'Fluke, waste cotton, a lock of hair;' Halliwell. Origin uncertain; I suspect these all to be various forms of flock.—O. F. floc de laine, a lock or deals of wool.—It floated for the second of the se these all to be various forms of flock. = O. F. floc de laine, a lock or flock of wool. = Lat. floceus. See Flock (2). ¶ We also find Dan. fnug, flue; W. llwch, dust.

FLUENT, flowing, eloquent. (L.) Used in the sense of 'copious' in Shak. Hen. V, iii. 7. 36. = Lat. fluentem, acc. of pres. pt. of fluere, to flow. Cf. Gk. φλύειν, to swell, overflow, dναφλύειν, to spout up; see Curtius, i. 375. Der. fluent-ly, fluene-y; from same source, flu-id, q. v., flu-or, q. v., flux, q. v., fluctuate, q. v.; also af-fluence, con-flux, de-flux-ion, ef-flux, in-flux, re-flux, &c.

FLUID, liquid. (F., = L.) In Milton, P. L. vi. 349; Bacon, Nat. Hist. sect. 68 (R.) = O. F. fluide; Cot. = Lat. fluidus, flowing, liquid. = Lat. fluere, to flow; see Fluent. Der. fluid-i-ty, fluid-ness.

FLUKE (1), a flounder, kind of fish. (E.) M. E. fluke, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1088. = A. S. floe, gloss to Lat. platissa, a plaice; Arthure, ed. Brock, 1088. – A. S. Abe, gloss to Lat. platissa, a plaice; Ælfric's Colloquy. + Icel. Abki, a kind of halibut; Lat. solea. Cf.

Elfric's Colloquy. + Icel. fliki, a kind of halibut; Lat. solea. Cf. Swed. dial. flunnka, to swim (Rietz).

FLUKE (2), part of an anchor. (Low G.?) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Also spelt flook. 'Low G. flunk, flunka, a wing, the palm of an anchor; from flegen, to fly, cognate with E. fly; 'Webster. (I only find flunk, a wing; Bremen Wörterb. i, 429). Cf. Icel. akkerisflein, Dan. ankerflig, Swed. ankarfly, the fluke of an anchor.

FLUMMERY, a light kind of food. (W.) 'Flummery, a wholesome jelly made of oatmeal; 'Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. —W. llymru, llymruwd, flummery, sour oatmeal boiled and jellied. (So named from its sourness.) — W. llymrig, crude, raw, harsh; llymwus, of a sharp quality. —W. llymu, to sharpen, whet; llym, sharp, severe.

FLUNKEY, a footman. (F.,—L.) Modern. Its origin is clearly due to F. flanquer, to flank; it seems to be put for flanker, 'Flanquer, due to F. flanquer, to flank; it seems to be put for flanker, 'Flanquer, to flanke, run along by the side of; to support, defend, or fence; to be at ones elbow for a help at need; Cot. See Flank. FLUOR, FLUOR-SPAR, a mineral. (L.) The reason of the name is not clear. The Lat. fluor (lit. a flowing) was formerly in use as a term in alchemy and chemistry. 'Fluor, a flux, course, or stream;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. — Lat. fluere, to flow; see Fluent.

FLURRY, agitation, hurry. (Scand.?) 'The boat was overset by a sudden flurry [gust of wind] from the North;' Swift, Voyer to Lilling.

age to Lilliput. And see Rich. Dict. Prob. of Scand. origin; cf. Norweg. dial. flurutt, rough, shaggy, disordered (Aasen); Swed. dial. flur, face, head, disordered hair, whim, caprice; flurig, disordered, dissolute, overloaded.

¶ Swift's use of the word may ordered, dissolute, overloaded.

Swift's use of the word may be incorrect; the proper word for a gust of wind is flaw.

FLUSH (1), to flow swiftly. (F.,-L.) 'The swift recourse of flushing blood;' Spenser, F. Q. iv. 6. 20. G. Douglas uses flusch to signify 'a run of water;' Jamieson. F. flux, 'a flowing, running, streaming, or rushing out; a current or tide of water; also a flux; also a flux at cardes;' Cot. -Lat. fluxus, a flowing; from the pp. of fluere, to flow; see Fluent. Der. flush (at cards); also flush, adj. in the phr. 'flush of money,' with which cf. 'cela est encore en flux, that is as yet in action, or upon the increase;' Cot. Doublet, flux. See Flush (2).

flux, that is as yet in action, or upon the increase; Cot. Bothses, flux. See Flush (3).

FLUSH (2), to blush, to redden. (Scand.) [Not, I think, the same word as the above, though easily confused with it.] Shak. has flushing = redness; Hamlet, i. 2. 155. M. E. flushen, to redden, as in 'flush for anger;' Rich. the Redeless, ed. Skeat, ii. 166. = Swed. dial. flossa, to burn furiously, to blaze (Rietz); Norw. dial. flossa, passion, vehemence, eagerness; Aasen. Closely allied to Flare, q. v. Der. flush, sb., flush-ing.

FLUSH (3), level, even. (Unknown.) In some senses, esp. in this one, the word flush is not fully accounted for. Perhaps from Flush (1); since flooded lands look level.

FLUSTER, to heat with drinking, confuse. (Scand.) See Shak. Oth. ii. 3. 60.—Icel. flaustra, to be flustered; flaustr, sb. fluster, hurry; of obscure origin; cf. Icel. flasa, to rush. Der. fluster, sb. FLUTE, a musical pipe. (F.,—L.) M. E. floiten, flouten, to play the flute; Chaucer, C. T. 91. The sb. flute is in North's Plutarch, p. 763 (R.)—O. F. flaute (Burguy); fleute (Cot.), a flute; flauter, to play the flute.—Low Lat. flatuare* (not found), to blow a flute (cf. Low Lat. flauta, a flute); formed from Lat. flatus, a blowing.—Lat. flare, to blow, cognate with E. blow: see Blow (1). Der. flaveolet. flare, to blow, cognate with E. blow; see Blow (1). Der. flageolet,

q. v.; and see flue (1), and flout.

FLUTTER, to flap the wings. (E.) M. E. floteren, to fluctuate, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, 1, 2817; Wyclif, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, 1, 2817; Wyclif, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, 1, 2817; Wyclif, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, 1, 2817; Wyclif, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, 1, 2817; Wyclif, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, 1, 2817; Wyclif, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, 1, 2817; Wyclif, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, 1, 2817; Wyclif, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, 1, 2817; Wyclif, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, 1, 2817; Wyclif, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, 1, 2817; Wyclif, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, 1, 2817; Wyclif, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, 1, 2817; Wyclif, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, 1, 2817; Wyclif, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, 1, 2817; Wyclif, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, 1, 2817; Wyclif, float about; Wycliff, float about; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 11, 1, 2817; Wycliff, float about; Wycl Iss. xxix. 9.—A. S. flotorian, to float about (fluctibus ferri); Gloss. to Prudentius, 687; Leo.—A. S. flot, the sea; flota, a ship; flectan, to 'fleet,' to float. $\beta$. Thus the orig. sense was to fluctuate, hover on the waves; and the form of the word is due to Float. The word was afterwards applied to other vibratory motions, esp. to the flapping of wings; cf. Low G. fluttern, flutter, flit about, Bremen Wörterbuch, i. 431, which is closely allied to flit; cf. prov. E. flitter-mouse, a bat. See Flit, which is likewise a derivative of Float. y. But the sense has clearly been further influenced by Icel. flikra, also (from Lat. folium) foli-ate, foli-at-ed, foli-at-ion, foli-fer-ous; also folio, from the phr. in folio, where folio is the ablative case.

Right, to flutter about, and other words connected with Flicker and Flag (1), q.v.

FLUX, a flowing, a disease. (F., -L.) M. E. flux, P. Plowman, C. vii. 161; xxii. 46. - O. F. flux, 'a flowing, flux;' Cot. - Lat. fluxus, a flowing; orig. a pp. of fluere, to flow; see Fluent. Der.

FOLK, a crowd of people. (E.) M. E. folk; Chaucer, C. T. 2830.

A. S. fole; Grein. + Icel. filk. + Dan. and Swed. folk. + Du. volk. + G. volk. + Lithuan. pulkas, a crowd. + Russ. polk', an army. Cf. Lat. plebs, people.

B. Particularly used orig. of a crowd of people, so that flock is probably the same word; both may be related to Full. Der. folk-lore.

FOLLICILE, a gland, seed-vessel. (F., -L.) 'Follicle, a little bag, purse, or bladder;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - O. F. follicule, 'a little bag, powch, husk;' Cot. - Lat. folliculus, dimin. of follis, a bag; prob. connected with E. bag; see Curtius, ii. 102. See Bag.

FOLLOW, to go after. (E.) M. E. folwen, folowen, Chaucer, C. T. 3260; P. Plowman, B. vi. 2. [The w is due to the A. S. g.] - A. S. fylegan, fylgian, fyligan; Grein, i. 360. + Du. volgen. + Icel. fylgja. + Dan. filge. + Swed. följa. + G. folgen; O. H. G. folken.

B. The A. S. fylegan is perhaps a derivative from A. S. fole, a folk, orig. a crowd of people; thus to 'follow' is to 'accompany in a troop,' Similarly we may compare Icel. fylgja with Icel. pany in a troop.' Similarly we may compare Icel. fylgia with Icel.

folk: and so of the rest. See Folk. Der. follow-ing, follow-er.

FOLLY, foolishness. (F., -L.) M. E. folye (with one l); Layamon, later text, 3024. -O. F. folie, folly. -O. F. fol, a fool; see Fool. FOMENT, to bathe with warm water, heat, encourage. (F., - L.) 'Which bruit [rumour] was cunningly fomented;' Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 22, l. 28.—O. F. fomenter, 'to foment;' Cot.—Lat. fomentare.—Lat. fomentum, contr. from fourmentum, a warm application, lotion.—Lat. fourer, to warm; of unknown origin.

Der. foment-er, foment-at-ion.

FOND, foolish. (Scand.) M. E. fond, but more commonly fonned, Wyclif, Exod. xviii. 18. Fonned is the pp. of the verb fonnen, to act foolishly; thus thou fonnist = thou art foolish; Coventry Myst. p. 36. Fonnen is formed from the sb. fon, a fool; of which the fuller form fonne is formed from the sb. fon, a 1001; of which the fuller form fonne is in Chaucer, C. T. 4807.—Swed. fdne, a fool; fdnig, foolish.

+ Icel. fáini, a standard; 'metaphorically, a buoyant, highminded person is now called fáini, whence fáinaligr, buoyant, fáinaskapr, buoyancy in mind or temper;' Cl. and Vigf. + Goth. fana, a bit of cloth. + G. fakne, a standard. + Lat. pannus, a bit of cloth. Thus fond—flag-like. See Pane. Der. fond-ly, fond-ness; also fond-lies. forquentative verb, to caress, used by Swift and Gay; also fond-ling (with dimin. suffix -ling = -l + -ing), Shak. Venus and Adonis, 223.

A. S. fant, Ælfric's Hom. i. 422. - Lat. fontem, acc, of fons, a fount:

FOOD, provisions, what one eats. (E.) M. E. fode, P. Plowman, but a farce; Kersey's Dict. ed. B. vi. 271.—A. S. fóda, Ælf. Hom. ii. 396. Cf. Icel. fabi. faba, food; Dan. fóde; Swed. föda. In English, the verb fódan, to feed, is derived from the sb. fóda, food; not vice versa. B. The sb. is an extension from 4 PA, to guard, to nourish; cf. Skt. pá, to guard, Lat. pascere, to feed. See Pasture, Pastor. Der. feed, q. v.; fodder, q. v.

FOOL, a silly person, jester. (F.,—L.) M. E. fol; Layamon (later text), 1442.—O. F. fol (F. fou), a fool.—Lat. follis, a pair of bellows, wind-bag; pl. folles. puffed cheeks; whence the term was easily transferred to a jester. Related to flare, to blow. See Flatulent. Der. fool-er-y; fool-kardy = M. E. folkerdi, Ancren Riwle, p. 62 (see hardy); fool-bardi-ness; fools-cap, paper so called from the water-mark fools on and bells used by old paper-makers: also folly, q. v. from the sb. fida, food; not vice versa.

B. The sb. is an extension from ϕ PA, to guard, to nourish; cf. Skt. pá, to guard, Lat. pascere, to feed. See Pasture, Pastor. Der. feed, q. v.; fodder, q. v.

FOOL, a silly person, jester. (F.,-L.) M. E. fol; Layamon (later text), 1442.—O. From the same source, ped-al, ped-estal, ped-estrian, ped-icle, bi-ped, quadru-ped, exped-ite, im-pede, centi-pede, &c.

FOP, a coxcomb, dandy. (Du.) Shak has fops, K. Lear, i. 2. 14; fopped (or fobbed) = befooled, Oth. iv. 2. 197; foppisk, K. Lear, i. 4.

182; foppery, id. i. 2. 128. - Du. foppen, to cheat, mock, prate; fopper, a wag; fopperij, cheating (= E. foppery). Der. fopp-ish, foppish-ness, fopp-er-y, fop-ling.

FOR (1), in the place of. (E.) The use of for as a conj. is due to such phrases as A. S. for-pam-pe, for-py = on account of; the orig. use is prepositional. - A.S. for, for; also, before that; the same word as A. S. fore, before that, for. + Du. wor, for, before, from. + Icel. fyrir, before, for. + Dan. for, for; för, adv. before. + Swed. för, before, for. + G. vor, before; für, for. + Goth. faura, before, for. + Lat. pro, before; not the same as (but related to) præ. + Gk. πρό; related to παρά. + Skt. pra, before, away.

The orig. sense is 'beyond,' then 'before,' lastly 'in place of;' from the same root as far, fore, and fare. See Far, Fare, Fore; and see below. Der. for-as-much, for-ever.

FOR- (2), only in composition. (E.) For-, as a prefix to verbs, has usually an intensive force, or preserves the sense of from, to which nas usually an intensive lorce, or preserves the sense of from, to which it is nearly related. The forms are: A. S. for-, Icel. for- (sometimes fyrir-), Dan. for-, Swed. för-, Du. and G. ver-, Goth. fra- (rarely fair-), Skt. pará. The Skt. pará is an old instrumental sing. of para, far; see Far, From; and see above. B. The derived verbs are for-bear, for-bid, for-fend, for-go (spelt forego), for-get, for-give, for-lrrn, for-sake, for-swear.

To Receive (1) only in correction (F. I.) FOR-(3), only in composition. (F.,-L.) In forclose (misspelt foreclose) and forfeit, the prefix is French. See those words.

FORAGE, fodder, chiefly as obtained by pillage. (F., -Low Lat., -Scand.) M.E. forage, Chaucer, C. T. 9296. -O.F. fourage, forage, pillage. -O. F. forrer, to forage. -O. F. forre, fuerre (F. feurre), fodder, straw. -Low Lat. fodrum, a Latinised form of O. Dan. foder, the same as E. fodder; see Fodder. Der. forage, verb; forag-er; also foray, sometimes spelt forray, a Lowland Scotch form of forage, occurring in Barbour's Bruce both as sb. and verb; see bk. ii. l. 281, and scientific.—Lat. foramin., stem of foramen, a note bored.—Lat. forare, cognate with E. Bore, q. v.

FORAY, FORRAY, a raid for foraging; see Forage.

FORBEAR, to hold away from, abstain from. (E.) M. E. forberen, Chaucer, C. T. 887.—A. S. forberan, Grein, i. 316.—A. S. forprefix; and beran, to bear. See For-(2) and Bear. Der. forbearing; forbear-ance, a hybrid word, with F. suffix, K. Lear, i. 2. 182.

FORBID, to bid away from prohibit. (E.) M. E. forbeden, Chaucer, C. T. 12577.—A. S. forbeddan; Grein, i. 316.—A. S. forprefix; and beodan, to bid, command. See For-(2) and Bid. Cf.

prenx; and beodan, to old, command. See FOF-(2) and Did. Ci. Du. verbieden; Icel. forboda, fyrirbjóða; Dan. forbyde; Swed. förbjyda; G. verbieten. Der. forbidd-en, pp.; forbidd-ing.

FORCE (1), strength, power. (P.,-L.) M. E. force, fors, Chaucer, C. T. 7094; Will. of Palerne. 1217.—O. F. force.—Low Lat fortia, strength.—Lat. forti-s, strong; older form forctis. 'It comes probably from the expanded root dhar-gh, which occurs in the Skt. darh, to make firm (mid. be firm), in the Zend darez, of like meaning, and in derezza, form, and in the Church Slavonic druzdti. meaning, and in derezza, firm, and in the Church Slavenic druzzii, hold, rule; Curtius, i. 310. Thus it is related to firm, from the DHAR, to hold; see Firm. Der. force, verb; force-ful, forcefully, forc-ible, forc-ible, forc-ible-ness, force-less, forc-ing, force-pump.
Also fort, fort-i-tude, fort-ress, &c.

FORD, a passage, esp. through a river. (E.) M. E. ford, more usually forth; see P. Plowman, B. v. 576, and footnote.—A. S. ford; Grein, i. 317. + G. furt, furth.

B. Extended from A. S. faran, to fare, go; see Fare. Der. ford, vb.; ford-able.

is uncommon; but we find fore fet = fore feet, in Will. of Palerne. 3284. The word is properly a prep. or adv., and in the former case is only another form of for.—A. S. fore, for, before, prep.; fore, foran, adv. See For (1). Der. for-m-er, q. v.; fore-m-ost, q. v.; and used as a prefix in numerous compounds, for which see below. Also in for-ward (=fore-ward), q. v.

FORE-ARM (1), the fore part of the arm. (E.) A comparatively modern expression; I find no good example of it. Merely made up from fore and arm. See Arm. (1).

FORE-ARM (2), to arm beforehand. (Hybrid; E. and F.) In Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Æneid, vi. 1233. Compounded of fore and the verb to arm; see Arms.

FORE-BODE, to bode beforehand. (E.) In Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Æneid, iii. 470. Compounded of fore and bode; see Bode. Cf. Icel. fyrirboda; Swed. fürebåda. Der. fore-bod-er, fore-bod-ing. fore-bode-ment.

FORECAST, to contrive beforehand. (E. and Scand.) Chaucer, C. T. 15223. Compounded of fore and cast; see Cast.

Der. forecast, sb., forecast-er.

FORECASTLE, the fore part of a ship. (Hybrid; E. and L.) 'Forecastle of a ship, that part where the foremast stands;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Also in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. A short deck placed in front of a ship, above the upper deck, is so called, because it used in former times to be much elevated, for the accommodation of archers and crossbowmen. From fore and castle; see Castle.

[Commonly corrupted to foe'tle or fortle.]

FORECLOSE, to preclude, exclude. (F., -L.) 'Foreclosed, barred, shut out, or excluded for ever;' Blount's Law Dict., ed. 1691; with a reference to 33 Hen. VIII. c. 39. It should rather be spelt forclosed. — O. F. forclos, pp. of forelorre, to exclude (Roquefort). -O. F. for-, from Lat. foris, outside; and clorre = Lat. claudere, to shut. See Forfeit and Close. Der. forclos-ure.
FOREDATE, to date beforehand. (Hybrid; E. and F.) Merely Reason of Church Government, b. ii. See Date.

FOREFATHER, an ancestor. (E.) The pl. forfadres is in P. Plowman, C. viii. 134, where two MSS. have forme faderes, the fuller form. The M. E. forme is the superlative of fore; see P. Plowman, C. vini. 134, where two states and fore; see fuller form. The M.E. forme is the superlative of fore; see Former. Cf. Du. voorvader; G. vorvater; Icel. forfabir. FOREFEND, to avert; see Forfend.

FORE-FINGER, the first of the four fingers. (E.) In Shak.

All's Well, ii. 2. 24. It is not improbable that the orig. expression was forme finger (-first finger) rather than fore-finger. See Forefather.

FOREFOOT, a front foot of a quadruped. (E.) From fore and foot; see reference under Fore.

FOREFRONT, the front part. (Hybrid; E. and F.) Bible (A. V.), 2 Sam. xi. 15. And in Hall's Chron., Rich. III (description of preparations for the battle of Bosworth); see Eastwood and Wright, Bible Word-book. See Fore and Front.

FOREGO (1), to relinquish; see Forgo.

foregoing and the pp. foregone = gone before, previous; Othello, iii, 3. 428. Cf. A. S. foregangan, to go before; Grein, i. 321. Der, forego-er; see P. Plowman, B. ii. 187.

FORCE (2), to stuff fowls, &c. (F.,-L.) A corruption of difficult word; but the etymology is clearly from fore and kand.

Der. forehand-ed; in the phr. 'a pretty forehanded fellow;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Scornful Lady, ii. 3 (last speech but 6).

FOREHEAD, the front part of the head above the eyes. (E.) M. E. forheed; Chaucer, C. T. 154. Older form forheued (with u=v); spelt vorheaued, Ancren Riwle, p. 18. From fore and head. Cf. Du. voorhoofd; G. vorhaupt.

FOREIGN, out of doors, strange. (F.,-L.) The insertion of the g is unmeaning. M. E. foreine, foreyne, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 2, l. 851.—O. F. foreine, 'forraine, strange, alien;' Cot.—Low Lat. foraneus, applied to a canon who is not in residence, or to a travelling pedlar.—Lat. foras, out of doors; adv. with an acc. pl. form, from Lat. pl. fores, doors, related to Lat. forum, a market place, and cognate with E. door. See Door. Der. foreign-er, place, and cognate with E. avor. See 2001.

Shak. K. John, iv. 2. 172.

FOREJUDGE, to judge beforehand. (Hybrid; E. and F.)

In Levins. [The pp. foringed, cited from Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1400
(R.), has the prefix for-, not fore-.] Spenser has forejudgement;
Mulopotmos, 1. 320. From fore and judge. Der. forejudgement.

FOREKNOW, to know beforehand. (E.) Shak. has foreknowing, Hamlet, i. 1. 134; also foreknowledge, Tw. Night, i. 5. 151.

Chaucer has forknowyng; tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 6, 1. 5187. From

514. From fore and land. Cf. Dan. forland; Du. voorland; G.

vorland; Icel. forlendi, the land between the sea and hills. FORELOCK, the lock of hair on the forehead. (E.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 302; P. R. iii. 173; Spenser, son. 70. From fore and

FOREMAN, a chief man, an overseer. (E.) The expression foreman of the petty jury occurs in The Spectator, No. 122. From fore and man. Cf. Du. voorman, G. vorman, the leader of a file of men; lcel. fyrirmaör, formaör. FOREMOST, most in front. (E.) A double superlative, due to the fact that the old form was misunderstood. a. From the base fore was formed the A. S. superlative adj. forma, in the sense of first; a word in common use; see Grein, i. 329. Hence the M. E. forme, also meaning 'first;' see Stratmann. β. A double superlative formest was hence formed, usually modified to fyrmest; as in 'pat fyrmeste bebod' = the first commandment; Matt. xxii. 38. This became the M. E. formest, both adj. and adv.; as in Will. of Palerne, 339. See examples in Stratmann. γ. Lastly, this was corrupted to foremost, by misdividing the word as for-mest instead of form-est. Spenser has formost, F. Q. v. 7. 35. See Former. ¶ The Mœso-Gothic also has frumists, a double superlative; the single superlative being fruma, cognate with Skt. parama, Lat. primus. Thus foremost is a mere doublet of prime; see Prime.

FORENOON, the part of the day before noon. (Hybrid; E. and L.) In Shak. Cor. ii. 1. 78. From fore and noon; see Noon. FORENSIC, legal, belonging to law-courts. (L.) 'Forensal, pertaining to the common-place used in pleading or in the judgment-hall: Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. Forens-ic and forens-al are coined words, formed (with suffixes -ic and -al) from Lat. forens-is, of or belonging to the forum or market-place or place of public meeting. Lat. forum, a market-place, orig. a vestibule; connected with Lat. fores, doors. See Foreign.

See 1 Pct. 1. 20 (A. V.). From fore and ordain.

41; and in Levis. From fore and part.

Hen. V. v. 2. 97. From fore and rank.

FORERUN, to run before. (E.) In Shak. L. L. L. iv. 3. 380.

From fore and run. Cf. Goth. faurrinnan, G. vorrennen. Der. forerunner, Heb. vi. 20 (A. V.); cf. Icel. fyrir-rennari, forrennari.

A. S. foreseón; Grein, i. 322.—A. S. fore, before; and seón, to see.

+ Du. vorzien. + Swed. förese. + G. vorsehen. See See. Der. fore-sight, q. v. FORESHIP, the front part of a ship. (E.) In Acts, xxvii. 30

FORESHORTEN, to shorten parts that stand forward in a picture. (E.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. From fore and shorten.

Der. foreshorten-ing.
FORESHOW, FORESHEW, to shew beforehand. (E.) In Shak. Cymb. v. 5. 473. From fore and shew.

FORESIGHT, prescience. (E.) M. E. foresikt, forsyghte;

Prompt. Parv. p. 171. From fore and sight. See Foresee.

FOREST, a wood, a wooded tract of land. (F., L.) M. E. forest, King Alisaunder, 3581. — O. F. forest, 'a forrest;' Cot. — Low Lat. foresta, a wood: forestis an open space of ground constitution. Lat. foresta, a wood; forestis, an open space of ground over which See For- (2) and Go.

rights of the chase were reserved. Medieval writers oppose the forestis or open wood to the walled-in wood or pareus (park). 'Forestis est ubi sunt feræ non inclusæ; parcus, locus ubi sunt feræ inclusæ; 'document quoted in Brachet, q.v.-Lat. foris, out of doors, abroad; whence forestis, lying open. Lat. fores, doors; see Foreign. Der. forest-er, contracted to forster, Chaucer, C. T. 117;

and to foster, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 1. 17.

FORESTALL, to anticipate in a transaction. (E.) M. E. fore-stallen, forstallen; P. Plowman, B. iv. 56, where we find: forstallen my feires' = anticipates my sales in the fair. Thus to forestall, orig. used as a marketing term, was to buy up goods before they had been displayed at a stall in the market; see Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 172. The object was, to sell again in the market at a higher price; see Kersey's Dict. From fore and stall. See Stall. The A. S. steallian means 'to come to pass,' said of a prediction, like our modern phrase 'to take place.' I find no A. S. foresteallan, as is pretended.

FORETASTE, to taste beforehand. (Hybrid; E. and F.)

Milton, P. L. ix. 929. From fore and taste. Der. foretaste, sb. FORETELL, to prophesy. (E.) M. E. foretellen; P. Plowman, A. xi. 165. From fore and tell. Der. foretell-er. FORETHOUGHT, a thinking beforehand, care. (E.) In Johnson's Dict. Shak. has the verb to forethink; Cymb. iii. 4. 171. From fore and thought.

FORETOKEN, a token beforehand. (E.) M.E. foretoken; see Gower, C. A. i. 137, where a foretoken is misprinted afore token; spelt fortaken, Ormulum, 16157.—A.S. fortaken; Grein, i. 322. + Du. voorteeken, a presage. + G. vorzeichen. From fore and token; fortop, Treatises on Popular Science, ed. Wright, p. 137, l. 230. The simple form top or toppe is in P. Plowman, B. iii. 139. See Top.

Der. foretop-mast.

4. 215. From fore and warn; see Warn.

FORFEIT, a thing forfeited or lost by misdeed. (F.,-L.) Properly a pp. as in 'So that your life be not ferfete;' Gower, C. A. 1. 194. Hence M. E. verb forfeten, P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 25; and the M. E. sb. forfeture, forfeiture, Gower, C. A. ii. 153.—O. F. forfait, a crime punishable by fine, a fine; also pp. of forfaire, orig. forsfaire, to trespass, transgress. - Low Lat. forisfactum, a trespass, a fine; also pp. of forisfacere, to transgress, do amiss, lit. 'to act beyond.'-Lat. foris facere, lit. to do or act abroad or beyond. - Lat. foris, out of doors; and facere, to do. See Foreign; and see Fact. Der. forfeit, vb., forfeit-ure, forfeit-able; and cf. counter-feit.
FORFEND, FOREFEND, to avert, forbid. (Hybrid; F. and E.) In Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 541. M. E. forfenden, Wyclif, Job, xxxiv. 31. An extraordinary compound, due to E. for- (as in for-bid), and fend, a familiar abbreviation of defend, just as fence (still in use) is a familiar abbreviation of defence. See For-(2) and Fence.

The spelling forefend is bad.

FORGE, a smith's workshop. (F., -L.) In Gower, C. A. i. 78; hence M. E. forgen, to forge, Chaucer, C. T. 11951.-O. F. forge, a forge; whence forgier, to forge. - Lat. fabrica, a workshop, also a forge; whence forgier, to forge.—Lat. fabrica, a workshop, also a fabric; whence, by usual letter-changes, we have fabrea, faurea, faurea, forga, and finally forge; see Brachet. Cf. Span. forja, a forge, forjar, to forge. Thus forge is a doublet of fabric. Der. forge, vb., forg-er, forg-er-y. See further under Fabric.

FORGET, to lose remembrance of, neglect. (E.) M. E. forgeten, forseten; Chaucer, C. T. 1916.—A. S. forgitan; Grein, i. 324.

—A. S. for-, prefix; and gitan, to get. See For- (2) and Get. Cf. Du. vergeten; Dan. forgiette; Swed. förgüta; G. vergessen. Der. forget-ful (which has supplanted A. S. forgitol); forget-ful-ly, forget-ful-west. forget-me-nut.

Der. forget-ful (which has supplanted A. S. forguot); forget-fut-ty, forget-ful-ness, forget-me-not.

FORGIVE, to give away, remit. (E.) M. E. forgiuen (with u = v), forziuen, forzeuen; Chaucer, C. T. 8402.—A. S. forgifan; Grein, i. 323.—A. S. for-, prefix; and gifan, to give. See For- (2) and Give. Cf. Du. vergeven; Icel. fyrirgefa; Swed. förgifva, to give away, forgive; G. vergeben; Goth. fragiban, to give, grant; Dan. tilgive, to forgive, pardon (with prefix til in place of for). Der. forgiveness.

FORGO, FOREGO, to give up. (E.) The spelling forego is as absurd as it is general; it is due to confusion with foregone, in the sense of 'gone before,' from a verb forego of which the infinitive is not in use. M. E. forgon, Chaucer, C. T. 8047.—A. S. forgón, to pass over; 'he forgæ's þæs húses duru'—he will pass over the door of the house; Exod. xii. 23.-A. S. for-, prefix; and gán, to go.

FORK, a pronged instrument. (L.) M. E. forke; the pl. forkis is in King Alisaunder, 1191. Chaucer has 'a forked berd' = beard, is in King Allsaunder, 1911.

C. T. 272. — A. S. fore; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 430.—Lat. furca, a fork; of uncertain origin. Der. fork, vb., forked, forked.ness; forke forkiness; also car-fax, q.v. ¶ The Du. vork, Icel.

forky, fork-iness; also car-fax, q.v.
The Du. work, Icel.

forkr, F. fourche, are all from Lat. furca.

FORLORN, quite lost, desolate, wretched. (E.) M. E. forlorn, used by Chancer in an active sense = quite lost; C. T. 11861. It is the pp. of M. E. forlessen, to lose entirely. - A. S. forloren, pp. of the pp. of M. E. forleosen, to lose entirely.—A. S. forloren, pp. of forleosan, to destroy, lose utterly; Grein, i. 328.—A. S. for., prefix, and loren. pp. of leosan, to lose, whence M. E. lorn, Chaucer, C. T. 3536. Cf. Dan. forloren, lost, used as an adj.; Swed. förlorad, pp. of förlora, to lose wholly; Du. verloren, pp. of verliezen, to lose; G. verloren, pp. of verliezen, to lose; G. verloren, (2) and Loss. Der. forlorn hope, in North's Plutarch, p. 309 (R.), or p. 372, ed. 1631, a vanguard; a military phrase borrowed from Du. de verloren hoop van een leger—the forlorn hope of an army. Cotgrave has: 'Perdu, lost, forlorn, past hope of recovery. Emians perdus. perdus, or the forlorne hope of a camp, are com-Enfans perdus, perdus, or the forlorne hope of a camp, are commonly gentlemen of companies.' 'Forlorn hope, a body of soldiers selected for some service of uncommon danger, the hope of whose safety is a forlorn one; 'Chambers' Dict.

Alisaunder, 388; whence formen, fourmen, to form, id. 5687. - O. F. forme. - Lat. forma, shape. - DHAR, to hold, maintain; cf. Skt. dhri, to bear, maintain, support; dharma, virtue, right, law, duty, character, resemblance. Der. form, vb.; form-al, Sir T. More, Works, p. 125 f; form-al-ly, form-al-ism, form-al-ist, form-al-i-ty; format-ion, form-at-ive, from Lat. formatus, pp. of formare, to form; form-er, sb.; form-ul-a, from Lat. formula, dimin. of forma; form-ular-y. Also con-form, de-form, in-form, per-form, re-form, trans-form, uni-form, &c. ¶ Form, a bench, is the same word. See F.

forme in Cotgrave.

FORMER, more in front, past. (E.) Not in very early use. In Shak. Jul. Cæs. v. 1. 80. Spenser has formerly, F. Q. ii. 12. 67. a. The word is really of false formation, and due to the mistake of supposing the M. E. formest (now foremost) to be a single superlative instead of a double one; see this explained under Foremost. β. Just as M. E. form-est was formed from A. S. forma by adding est to the base form-, so form-er was made by adding -er to the same base; hence form-er is a comparative made from the old superlative forma, which is cognate with the Lat. primus. y. We may therefore resolve for-m-er into for- (=fore), -m-, superlative suffix, and -er, comparative suffix. Der. former-ly.

FORMIC, pertaining to ants. (L.) Modern; chiefly used of formic acid. Lat. formica, an ant. Prob. related to Gk. μυρμηξ, an ant, and to the latter syllable of E. pis-mire; see Curtius, i. 421.

Der. chloro-form

FORMIDABLE, causing fear. (F., -L.) In Milton, P. L. ii. 649. - F. formidable, 'fearfull';' Cot. - Lat. formidabilis, terrible. -Lat. formidare, to dread; Lat. formido, fear; of uncertain origin. formidabl-y, formidable-ness.

FORMULA, a prescribed form. (L.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. - Lat. formula, dimin. of forma, a form; see Form. Der. formul-

FORNICATE, to commit lewdness. (L.) The E. verb fornicate is of late use, appearing in the Works of Bp. Hall (R.) It was certainly developed from the sbs. fornication and fornicator, both in early use. Chaucer has fornication, C. T. 6886; and fornicatour is in P. Plowman, C. iii. 191 (footnote). These are, respectively, O. F. fornication and fornicateur; Cot.—Lat. fornicatus, pp. of fornicari.—Lat. fornic-, base of fornix, (1) a vault, an arch, (2) a brothel. Perhaps so named from the firmness of an arch, from DHAR, to hold, maintain, whence also firm and form. Der. fornicat-ion, fornicat-or, explained above.

FORSAKE, to give up, neglect. (E.) M. E. forsaken, Chaucer, C. T. 14247. - A. S. forsacan, Ælfred's tr. of Orosius, i. 12. sect. 3. The orig. sense seems to be 'to contend strongly against,' to 'oppose. A. S. for-, intensive prefix; and sacan, to contend, Exod. ii. 13. β. This verb sacan is a strong verb, cognate with Goth. sakan, to strive, dispute; and is represented in E. by the derived sb. sake. Cf. Dan.

'a fort, hold;' Cot. A peculiar use of O. F. fort, strong.—Lat. fortis, strong. See Force. Der. fort-al-ice, q.v.; fort-i-fy, q.v.; fort-i-tude, q.v.; fort-r-ess, q.v. From Lat. fortis we have also Ital. forte, loud (in music), with its superl. fortissimo.

FORTIEY, to make strong. (F., -L.) In Shak. K. John, iii. 4.

10. - O. F. fortifier, 'to fortifie, strengthen;' Cot. - Low Lat. fortificare. - Lat. forti-, crude form of fortis, strong; and fic-, from facere, to make. See Fort, Force. Der. fortifier; fortific-at-ion, from to make. See Fort. FORGS. Der. fortificer; fortificeat-ion, from Low Lat. pp. fortificatus.

FORTITUDE, strength. (L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 154. Borrowed from Lat. fortisudo, strength; see 'spiritus fortitudinis' in P. Plowman, B. xix. 284.—Lat. fortis, strong. See Fort. Force.

FORTH, forward, in advance. (E.) M. E. forth, Chaucer, C. T. 858.—A. S. forth, adv. (common); extended from fore, before. + Du. voort, forward; from voor, before. + G. fort, M. H. G. vort; from vor, before. See Force. Der. forth-coming, Shak. Tam. Shrew, v. L. of. Also forth-with in a new of the 1st the century called Chaucer. 1.96. Also forth-with, in a poem of the 15th century called Chaucer's Dream, l. 1109; a strange formation, and prob. corrupted from M. E. forthwithall, Gower, C. A. iii. 262; see Withal.

FORTNIGHT, a period of two weeks. (E.) M. E. fourtenight, (trisyllable), Chaucer, C. T. 931. Written fourten nist, Rob. of Glouc. p. 533, l. 17. From M. E. fourten = fourteen; and nist, old pl. = nights. The A. S. form would be fedureryne nist. [B. Similarly, when he consider the property of the we have sennight = seven night; the phr. seofon niht (= a week) occurs in Cædmon, ed. Grein, l. 1349. It was usual to reckon by nights and winters, not by days and years; see Tacitus, Germania, c. xi.

Der. fortnight-ly.

FORTRESS, a small fort. (F., -I.) M. E. fortresse, King Alisaunder, 2668. - O. F. forteresce, a variant of fortelesce, a small fort (Burguy). - Low Lat. fortalitia, a small fort. - Low Lat. fortis, a

Lat. fortis, strong; see Fort, Fortalice.

FORTUTOUS, depending on chance. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. [The M. E. fortuit, borrowed from O. F. fortuit, occurs in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 1. 1. 4355, in the Camb. MS.; see the footnote.] Englished, by change of us to ous (as in arduous, strenuous, &c.) from Lat. fortuitus, casual.—Lat. fortu-, related to forti-, crude form of fors, chance; see Fortune. Der. fortuitous-ly, FORTUNE, chance, hap. (F., -L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 1254.-F. fortune.—Lat. fortuna.—Lat. fortu-, allied to forti-, crude form of fors, chance, orig. 'that which is produced;' allied to Lat. ferre, and to E. bear.— BHAR, to bear; see Bear. See Curtius, i. 373.

Der. fortun-ate, M. E. fortunat, Chaucer, C. T. 14782, from Lat. pp. fortunatus; fortun-ate-ly, fortun-ate-ness; fortun-less, fortune-hunter, commentally, for the care of the fortune fortune for the care of the fortune for the care of the fortune for the care of the fortune fortune for the care of the fortune for the fort fortune-teller; from the same source, fortu-it-ous, q. v.

FORTY, four times ten. (E.) M. E. fourty, Chaucer, C. T. 16829. — A. S. feówertig; Grein, i. 296. — A. S. feówer, four; and -tig, a suffix formed from the base TEHAN, ten; see Four and Ten. + Du. veerlig. + Icel. fjörutíu. + Dan. fyretyve. + Swed. firatie. + G. vierlig. + Goth. fidwortigjus. Der. forti-eth, from A. S. feówertigoða. FORUM, the Roman market-place. (L.) In Pope's Homer's Odyssey, vi. 318. - Lat. forum; allied to fares, doors; see Door.

Der. for-ensic, q. v. FORWARD, adj. towards the front. (E.) M. E. forward, adj. and adv.; but rare, as the form forthward was preferred. Forward, and adv.; but fare, as the form forthward was preferred. Forward, adv. occurs in Chaucer, C. T. Six-text, Group B, 263, in the Camb. MS., where the other 5 MSS. have forthward.— A. S. foreweard, adj.; Grein, i. 322.— A. S. fore, before; and -weard, suffix; see Toward. Der. forwards, M. E. forwardes, Maundeville, p. 61, where -es is an adv. suffix, orig. the sign of the gen. case (cf. Du. woorwaarts, G. worwarts); forward, verb, Shak. I Hen. IV, i. 1. 33; forward-ly; forward-large. forward-ness, Cymb. iv. 2442.

FOSSE, a ditch. (F., -L.) In Holland, tr. of Suetonius, p. 185 (R.); Pope, Homer's Iliad, xv. 410. - O. F. fosse, any pit or hole; Cot. - Lat. fossa, a ditch. - Lat. fossa, fem. of fossus, pp. of fodere, to dig. Allied to Gk. βόθρος, a ditch, but (perhaps) not to βαθύς, deep. See Curtius, ii. 75. Der. fossil, q. v.

FOSSIL, petrified remains of an animal, obtained by digging.

dispute; and is represented in E. by the derived sb. sake. Cf. Dan. forsage, to forsake; Swed. försaka; Du. verzagen, to deny, revoke, forsake; G. verzagen, to deny, renounce. See For-(2) and Sake.

FORSOOTH, in truth, verily. (E.) M. E. for sothe=for the truth, verily; P. Plowman, B. iv. 2.—A. S. for, for; and sove, dat. of sov. truth. See Sooth.

FORSWEAR, to deny on oath, esp. falsely. (E.) M. E. for-sweren, Prompt. Parv. p. 173; earlier forswerien, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 13, l. 11.—A. S. forswerian; Grein, i. 332.—A. S. for-, prefix; and sweran, to swear. See For-(2) and Swear.

FORT, a stronghold. (F.,—L.) In Hamlet, i. 4. 28.—O. F. fort, offstre, offstre, to rear, bring up. + Swed. foster, embryo; fostre, to

Sometimes derived from F. fouine, the beechmarten, but the O.F. form was foine or faine, so that the slight resemblance thus vanishes.

Langtoft, p. 109; found-r-ess; found-a-ion.

FOUND (2), to cast metals. (F.,-L.) The verb is rare. In Holland, tr. of Pliny, we find 'famous for mettal-founding,' b. xxxiv. c. 2; 'the excellent founders and imageurs of old time,' id. c. 8 (of Dædalus); 'the art of founderie or casting mettals for images;' id. c. 7 .- O. F. fondre, 'to melt, or cast, as metals;' Cot. - Lat. fundere, to pour, cast metals; see Fuse. Der. found-er, found-r-y (=founder-y), found-ing, font (2) or fount.

FOUNDER, to go to the bottom. (F., -L.) M. E. foundren, said of a horse falling; and foundred as he leep; Chaucer, C. T. 2689. - O. F. fondrer, only recorded in the comp. afondrer (obsolete) and effondrer, to fall in (still in use), as well as in the sb. fondriere, a place to founder in, a slough, bog; see fond in Burguy, and fondrière in Brachet. The sense seems to have been 'to sink in,' and the deriv, is from F. fond, the bottom of anything. - Lat. fundus, the bottom; see Found (1).

The form of the O. F. verb should rather have been fonder; the r is intercalated, as in chanvre = chanve, hemp, from Lat. cannabis. We have instances in E. partr-idge, t-r-easure, cart-r-idge, &c.

FOUNDLING, a deserted child. (E.) M. E. fundeling, Will.

of Palerne, 481; fundling, King Horn, 226.—M. E. fund-, base of funden, pp. of finden, to find; and -ling =-l-ing, double dimin.

suffix. + Du. vondeling; similarly formed.

FOUNT (1), a spring, fountain. (F.,—L.) In Shak. iv. 3. 102; and probably earlier.—O. F. funt, font, a fountain.—Lat. fontem, acc.

of fons, a spring; cf. Gk. χέοντα, acc. of χέων, pres. pt. of χέων, to pour.— GHU, to pour; see Found (2), and Fuse. Der. fountain, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 60, from O. F. funtaine (F. fontaine), which from Low Lat. fontang. fountain-head: and see font (1) which from Low Lat. fontana; fountain-head; and see font (1).

25, 194, 1902, 2092, 25395. Chaucer adds a final e, and treats it as a pl. adj. 'With foure white boles in the trays;' C. T. 2141.—A. S. Fedwer, Grein, i. 296. + O. Fries. flower, fluwer, for. + Icel. florir. + Dan. fire. + Swed. fyra. + Du. vier. + Goth. flowor. + O. H. G. flor; G. vier. + W. pedwar. + Gael. ceithir. + Lat. quatuor. + Gk. τίτταρεε, τέσσαρεε; dial. πίσυρεε. + Russ. chetvero. + Skt. chatvar, chatur. From an orig. form KWATWAR. Der. four-fold, fourfoot-ed, four-square; also four-th (A.S. feorpa); four-teen (A.S. feo-foot-sa, four-square; also four-in (A.S. feorya); four-ieen (A.S. feorwertyne); four-teen-th; also for-ty, q. v.

M. E. foul, Chaucer, C. T. 190; earlier, fuzel, fowel, Layamon, 2832.

A.S. fugol; Grein, i. 355. + Du. vogel. + Icel. fugl, fogl. + Dan. fugl. + Swed. fagel. + Goth. fugls. + O. H. G. fugal; G. vogel. All from a Teut. base FUGLA, of unknown origin.

There is not any evidence to connect it with the Teut. base FLUG, to fly, by invertined loss of l. Der. fowl-er = M. E. foulere. Wyclif. Prov. vi. 5: imagined loss of l. Der. fowl-er = M. E. foulere, Wyclif, Prov. vi. 5;

β. Hence we obtain Teut. base FUHAN (whence Icel. foa, Coth. fauko, O. H. G. foka), which was afterwards extended to FUHSI (whence M. H. G. unks, G. fucks, E. fox). Similarly, we have LUHAN, a lynx (whence Swed. lo), extended to LUHSI (whence G. lucks); see Fick, iii. 187. Root unknown. Der. fox-hound, fox-y; also fox-glove, a flower = A. S. foxes glofa, Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 327 (cf. Norwegian renkandship = foxglove, from ren, a fox. Chambers; also prov. E. fox-fingers, a fox-glove). And see vix-en. FRACAS, an uproar. (F., = Ital., = L.) Not in Johnson; borrowed from Ital. in roth cent. (Brachet). = Ital. fracassar, to borrowed from Ital. in 16th cent. (Brachet). - Ital. fracassare, to foster. Der. foster-er; also (from A. S. fóster) foster-brother, foster-E break in pieces; whence fracasso, a crash.—Ital. fra-, prefix, from child, foster-parent; and cf. fester.

FOSTEB (2), a forester; see Forest.

FOUL, dirty, unclean. (E.) M. E. foul, P. Plowman, C. xix. 54.

A. S. fúl. Grein, i. 358. + Du. vuil. + Icel. fúll. + Dan. fuul. + Swed. ful. + Goth. full. + G. faul. — 4 PU, to stink; see Putrid. Der. foul-ly, foul-ness, foul-mouth-ed; also foul, vb.; de-file, q.v.

FOUMART, a polecat. (Hybrid; E. and F.) Lowland Sc. foumart; Jamieson. M. E. folmart, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 534; also fulmart, fulmard, as in Stratmann, s.v. ful = foul. A hybrid compound.—M. E. ful = A. S. fúl, foul, stinking; and O. F. marte, marter, a marten. Thus it means 'foul marten;' see Foul and Marten.

FRACTIOUS, a portion, fractione;' Cot.—Lat. acc. fractionem, from nom. fractio, a breaking.—Lat, fractus, pp. of frangere, to break (base frag-), cognate with E. break; see Break. Der. fraction-al; also (from pp. fractus) fract-ure; also (from base frag-), frag-ile, q.v., marter, a marten. Thus it means 'foul marten;' see Foul and Marten.

FRACTIOUS, peevish. (E.) Not found in early literature; it frag-ment, q. v.; and (from frangers) frang-ible, q. v.

FRACTIOUS, peevish. (E.) Not found in early literature; it is given in Todd's Johnson, without a quotation. A prov. E. word, from the North. E. fratch, to squabble, quarrel, chide with another; see Atkinson's Cleveland Glossary. Cf. M. E. fracchen, to creak as a cart; 'Fracchyn, as newe cartys;' Prompt. Parv. p. 175. This seems better than to connect it with North. E. frack, forward, bold, impudent. It is certainly unconnected with Lat. frangers. FRACTURE, a breakage. (F., -L.) In Minsheu; and G. HERACTULE, a breakage. (F., -L.) In Minshen; and G. Herbert's Poems, Repentance, last line. -O. F. fracture, 'a fracture, breach;' Cot. - Lat. fractura, a breach; orig. fem. of fractures, fut. part. of frangere, to break; see Fraction. Der. fracture, vb. FRAGILE, frail. (F., -L.) In Shak. Timon, v. 1. 204. - F. fragile, 'fraile;' Cot. - Lat. fragilis, easily broken; from the base frag., to break; see Fraction. Der. fragil-i-ty. Doublet, frail. q. v.

FRAGMENT, a piece broken off. (F., -L.) In Shak. Much Ado, i. 1. 288. - F. fragment, 'a fragment;' Cot. - Lat. fragmentum, a piece; formed with suffix -mentum from the base frag-, to break;

see Fraction. Der. fragment-ar-y, fragment-al.
FRAGRANT, sweet-smelling. (F.,-L.) 'The fragrant odor;'
Sir T. More, Works, p. 1366 c. - F. fragrant, 'fragrant;' Cot. - Lat.
fragrantem, acc. of fragrans, pres. pt. of fragrare, to emit an odour;
cf. fragum, a strawberry, named from its smell. Root uncertain.

Der. fragrant-ly, fragrance.

FRAIL, easily broken. (F., -L.) M. E. freel, frele, Wyclif, Rom. viii. 3. Chaucer has freeltee, frailty; C. T. 12012. -O. F. fraile, 'fraile, brittle;' Cot. -Lat. fragilis; see Fragile. Der. frail-'y, FRATRICIDE (1), a murderer of a brother. (F.,-L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. This is the true sense; see below. - O. F. fratricide, 'a murtherer of his own brother; 'Cot. - Lat. fratricida, a fratricide. - Lat. fratri-, crude form of frater, a brother; and -cida, a slayer, from codere (pt. t. ce-cidi), to slay. See Fraternal and Cossura.

FRATRICIDE (2), murder of a brother. (L.) 'Fratricide, brother-slaughter;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—Lat. fratricidium, a brother's murder.—Lat. fratri-; and -cidium, a slaying; see above.

FRAUD, deceit. (F., = L.) M. E. fraude; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4, l. 340.—O. F. fraude, 'fraud, guile;' Cot.—Lat. fraudem, acc. of fraus (old form frus), guile. Cf. Skt. dhúrta, fraudulent, knavish.—\DHWAR, DHRU, to bend; cf. Skt. dhúrta, to bend; whence also E. dull, dwell, q.v. Der. fraud-ful, fraud-ful-ly, fraudless; fraud-u-lent, from O. F. fraudulent, 'fraudulent,' Cot.—Lat.

FRAUGHT, to lade a ship. (Scand.) 'If after this command thou fraught the court;' Cymb. i. 1. 126; 'The fraughting souls within her;' Temp. i. 2. 13. M. E. frahten, fragten, only used in the pp. fraught, Will. of Palerne, 2732, Chaucer, C. T. Group B, l. 171 (see my note on the line). B. At a later period, fraught 1. 171 (see my note on the line).
B. At a later period, fraught though used most often as a pp., was also accepted as an infin. mood, as shewn by the quotations above. The form freight was also used; see Freight. Neither form is quite close to the original; fraght would have done better. Cf. Mätzner, Eng. Gram. i. 344.—Swed. frakta, to fraught, freight; Dan. fragte; from Swed. frakt. Dan. fragt, a cargo. + Du. bevrachten, to freight; from vracht, a cargo. + G. frachten, to freight, load, carry goods; from fracht, a cargo, load, carriage of goods.

B. The change of vowel from au to ei was due to the influence of O. F. (and F.) fret, which controlled the state of the ships as the fraught or freight of a ship. also the hips Cotgrave explains as 'the fraught, or freight of a ship; also the hire that's paid for a ship, or for the freight thereof.' [We actually find fret for fraught in old edd. of Chaucer, pr. in 1532 and 1561.] This F. fret is from O. H. G. freht, of which the proper meaning is 'service; whence the senses of 'use, hire' would easily result; and, in fact, it is thought to be the same word as G. fracht, though the sense has changed. Of unknown origin.

The connection with prov. G. ferchen, fergen, to despatch, cannot be clearly made out.

FRAY (1), an affray. (F.,-L.) 'There began a great fraye be-

HAAY (1), an affray. (F.,—L.) 'There began a great fraye between some of the gromes and pages;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, v. i. c. 16 (R). Short for affray (also effray), of which an older sense was 'terror.' See this proved by comparing fray, terror, in Barbour's Bruce, xv. 255, with effray, id. xi. 250; and again compare effrait, id. xiii. 173, with mod. E. afraid. Thus fray is a doublet of M. E. affray, terror; see Affray. And see below.

FRAY (2), to terrify. (F.,—L.) In the Bible, Deut. xxviii. 26, Jer. vii. 33, Zech. i. 21. Short for affray, to terrify, whence the mod. E. afraid. See above; and see Affray.

FRAY (3), to wear away by rubbing. (F.,—L.) Ben Jonson, Sad Shepherd, i. 2. 13, has frayings, in the sense of peel rubbed off a Sad Shepherd, i. 2. 13, has frayings, in the sense of peel rubbed off a stag's horn. 'A deer was said to fray her head, when she rubbed it against a tree to renew it; Halliwell.—Q. F. frayer, 'to grate upon, rub,' Cot. An older form was froier; also frier (Burguy).—Lat. friears, to rub. See Friction. ¶ Wholly unconnected with the words above, with which Richardson confuses it.

FREAK (1), a whim, caprice. (E.) 'The fickle freaks... Of fortune false;' Spenser, F.Q. i. 4, 50. This use as a sb., though now common, is unknown in M. E. in the same sense. Yet the word can hardly be other than the once common adj. frek or frik, in the sense of 'vigorous.' 'Fryke, or craske, or yn grete helthe, crassus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 179. Thus the lit. sense is 'a vigorous or quick thing, hence 'a sudden movement.' 'Frek, quick, eager, hasty;' Halliwell. And see free in Stratmann.—A.S. free, bold, rash; whence fréeen, danger; Grein, i. 338, 340. + Icel. frekr, voracious, greedy. + Swed. frück, impudent, audacious. + Dan. fræk, audacious. + G. freck, saucy; O. H. G. frek, greedy. Cf. Goth. faikufriks, lit. fee-greedy, avaricious. Der freak-isk, Pope, Wife of Bath, 91.

FREAK (2), to streak, variegate. (E.) 'The pansy freak'd with iet:' Milton. Lycidas, 144. Freak as sb. is the word of which jet; Milton, Lycidas, 144. Freak, as sb., is the word of which freekle is the diminutive; see Freckle.

FRECKLE, a small spot. (Scand.) Spelt frekell in Sir T. More, Works, p. 7. From a base frek-, whence frek-el and frek-en are diminutives. The latter is used by Chaucer, who has the pl. freknes, fraknes, C. T. 2171.—Icel. frekner, pl. freckles; Swed. fraknes, pl. freknes, freknes, pl. freknes, freckles; Dan. fregne, pl. fregner, freckles. Cf. Gael. breac, spotted, speckled; Gk. meparos, sprinkled with dark spots; Skt.

spotted, speckled; Gk. ephrob, sprinkled with dark spots; Skt. prigni, variegated; see Curtius, i. 340, 341. Perhaps related to fleck, q.v. Der. freskle, vb., freskled, freskley.

FREE, at liberty. (E.) M. E. fre, Chaucer, C. T. 5631.—A. S. freó; Grein, i. 344. + Du. vrij. + Iccl. fri. + Swed. and Dan. fri. + Goth. freis (base frija-). + G. frei.

B. The orig. sense is having free choice, acting at pleasure, rejoicing, and the word is closely connected with Skt. priva beloved dear surgesphere. nected with Skt. priya, beloved, dear, agreeable. — PRI, to love, rejoice. See Friend. Der. free, vb., free-by, free-ness; free-dom = A. S. free-dom; free-booter (see Booty); free-hold, free-hold-er; free-man = A. S. freeman; free-mason, free-mason-ry; free-stone (a stone that can be freely cut); free-think-er, free-will.

FREEZE, to harden with cold, to be very cold. (E.) M. E. freesen, fresen; P. Plowman, C. xiii. 192.—A. S. freesan, Grein, i. 347. + Icel, friosa. + Swed. frysa. + Dan. fryss. + Du. vriezen. + G. frieren; O. H. G. freesan. + Lat. prurire, to itch, orig. to burn; cf. pruina, hoar-frost, pruna, a burning coal. + Skt. flush, to burn. - PRUS, to burn; whence the Teutonic base FRUS, appearing in Goth, frius, frost, as well as in the words above. Der. fros-t, q. v.,

FREIGHT, a cargo. (F., -O.H.G.) A later form of fraught, and better spelt fret, being borrowed from the O. F. fret. Freighted occurs in North's Plutarch; see Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 10, 1.3. See further under Fraught. Der. freight, vb., freight-age.

FRENZY, madness, fury. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. frenesye [not frenesye as in Tyrwhitt], Chaucer, Troil. i. 728; P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 85.-O. F. frenaisie [better frenesie], 'frenzie;' Cot. - Lat. phrenesis. - Late Gk. φρένησιε, equivalent to Gk. φρέντε, inflammation of the brain. - Gk. φρέντ, base of φρήν, the midriff, heart, senses; of uncertain critics.

of uncertain origin. Der. frantic, q. v. FREQUENT, occurring often, familiar. (F., -L.) 'How frequent and famyliar a thynge; Sir T. Elyot, Governour, b. iii. c. 7 (R.) 'Frequently in his mouthe; 'id. b. i. c. 23 (R.) - O. F. frequent, omitted by Cotgrave, but given in Sherwood's Index.—Lat. frequentem, acc. of frequens, crowded, crammed, frequent; pres. part. of a lost verb frequene, to cram, closely allied to farcire, to cram, and from the same root. See Farce. Der. frequent-ly, frequent-ness, frequenc-y; also frequent, vb. = O. F. frequenter, 'to frequent,' Cot. =

FRESCO, a painting executed on plaster while fresh. (Ital., — O. H. G.) See Fresco in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.—Ital. fresco, cool, fresh.—O. H. G. frisg, frisc (G. frisch), fresh. See Fresh. See Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 298 (8th ed.)

FRESH, new, recent, vigorous. (E.) M. E. fresh, fresch. 'Ful freshe and newe;' Chaucer, C. T. 367. Also spelt fersch, fersh, by the shifting of the r so common in English; cf. bride, bird, brimstone. Spelt fersse (=fershe), Rob. of Glouc. p. 397; also uerse (=ferse), O. Eng. Homilies, i. 175, l. 248.—A. S. ferse; 'ne ferse ne merse' = neither fresh water nor marsh; Ancient Laws, ed. Thorpe, i. 184, l. 8. + Icel. ferskr, fresh; friskr, frisky, brisk, vigorous. + Swed, frisk. + Dan, fersk, frisk. + Du. versch. +G. frisch; M.H.G. vrisch, virsch; O.H.G. frisg.

B. The base of A.S. ferse (for far-ise) is FAR, to travel; the same vowel-change appears in E. ferry, from the same & PAR; see Fare. Thus the orig. sense would be 'moving,' esp. used of water.

Der. fresh-ly, fresh-ness, fresh-en, fresh-man; also fresh-et, a small stream of flowing water, Milton, P. R. ii. 345. See Frisk, Fresco.

FRET (1), to eat away. (E.) M. E. freten, a strong verb; Chaucer, C. T. 2070.—A. S. fretan, pt. t. fræt, Grein, i. 340. Contracted from for-etan, as is clearly shewn by the Gothic form; from for-, intensive prefix, and etan, to eat. + Swed. frata, to corrode = för-åta, to eat entirely. + Du. vreten = ver-eten. + G. fressen = ver-essen. + Goth. fraitan; from fra-, internet prefix, and item, to eat. FRET (2), to ornament, variegate. (E.) M. E. fretien; Alle hit adomed with rings; P. Plowman, A. ii. 11.—A. S. frætuwan, frætwan, to adom; Grein, i. 338. Cf. A. S. frætuwe, frætuw, ornament; id. 337. + O. Sax. fratakon, to adom; frataki, ornament. It seems to have been particularly used of carved work. Of unknown origin. Der. fret-work (unless it belong to the word below).

FRET (3), a kind of grating. (F.,-L.) A term in heraldry, meaning 'a bearing composed of bars crossed and interlaced.' See explanation in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Kersey, ed. 1715, has: 'in heraldry, a bearing wherein several lines run crossing one another.' - O. F. frete, 'a verrill [ferrule], the iron band or hoop that keeps a woodden tool from riving; Cot. a. The mod. F. fretter means to hoop, or to put a ferrule on a tool. Cotgrave also gives 'frette, fretty, a term of blazon' [heraldry]. According to Diez, frettes, pl., means an iron grating. Roquefort gives: 'freter, to cross, interlace.' All these words seem to be related; and may be resolved into a verb fretter, freter, to hoop, bar, interlace, and a sb. frette, frete, a hoop, bar. B. We may, I suppose, connect these with O. F. ferret, 'a tag of a special transfer of the second to the point,' and the verb ferrer, to shoe, hoop with iron; making the sb. frette = ferrette, a dimin. of ferret. In the same way, fretter would mean 'to provide with a small hoop or ferrule,' while ferrer means, generally, 'to bind with iron;' Cot. \(\gamma\). Cf. Span. frets, 'frets, narrow bands of a shield, a term in heraldry' (Meadows); from a sing. frete. Also Ital. ferriata, 'a grate of iron for any window, a port-cullise;' Florio. Also ferretta, 'little irons, as tags for points;' id.— Low Lat. ferrata, an iron grating.—Low Lat. ferrare, to bind with iron.—Lat. ferram, iron. Ferrum—fersum; from the same root as E. bristle; see Bristle. Fick, i. 698. Der. fret-work, frett-ed, frett-y. It is sometimes difficult to separate this word from the preceding, owing to the use of fret in architecture to signify 'an ornament consisting of small fillets intersecting each other at right angles; Webster. Littré accounts for our word disserently.

FRET (4), a stop on a musical instrument. (F., -L.) Tam. Shrew, ii. 150. A fret was a stop such as is seen on a guitar, to regulate the fingering; formed by thin pieces of metal or wires running like bars across the neck of the instrument; see Levins. I take it to be a particular use of O. F. frete, a ferrule; and therefore the same word as the above.

FRIABLE, easily crumbled. (F., -L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 23. § 5. -O. F. friable, 'bruizeable, easie to be broken;' Cot. - Lat. friabilis, easily crumbled. - Lat. friare, to rub, crumble. Cf. Skt. ghrish, to grind; Curtius, i. 251. Der. friable-

FRIAR, a member of a religious order. (F., -L.) M. E. frere, Chaucer, C. T. 208; Rob. of Glouc, p. 530. -O. F. frere, freire. Lat. fratrem, acc. of frater, cognate with E. brother; see Brother.

Der. friary. FRIBBLE, to trifle. (F.?) 'Than those who with the stars do receive the stars of the stars fribble, Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 36; and see Spectator, no. 288. Of unknown origin. To be explained from Central Fr. friboler, to flutter, flit to and fro without fixed purpose like a butterfly; barivoler, to flutter in the wind; Jaubert: Wedgwood. It is more likely to stand for fripple, from O. F. fripper; see Frippery.

FRICASSEE, a dish made of fowls. (F., -L.?) 'A dish made by cutting chickens or other small things in pieces, and dressing them with strong sauce; 'Todd's Johnson. 'Soups, and olios, fricasses, and ragouts;' Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 7; id.—F. fricassée, fricasses, and ragouts; Swift, I ale of a Tub, § 7; id.—F. fricassee, a fricassee; fem. pp. of fricasser, to fricassee, also, to squander money. Of unknown origin (Brachet). ¶ The orig. sense seems to have been to 'mince,' rather than to 'fry' (see fricassee in Cot.); I should refer it to Lat. fricare, to rub, not to frigere, to fry; and I suppose it to have been prepared from pounded meat; cf. Chaucer, C. T. 12472. We once had fricasy in the sense of rubbing; as in 'fricasyes or whiting a 'Si' T. Flync Cortal of Halth b.

124.72. We once had fricasy in the sense of rubbing; as in 'fricasyss or rubbings;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 32.

FRIOTION, rubbing, attrition. (F., -L.) 'Hard and vehement friction;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxviii. c. 4. - F. friction, 'a friction, or frication;' Cot. - Lat. frictionem, acc. of frictio, a rubbing. - Lat. frictus, contr. pp. of fricare, to rub; an extended form of friare, to crumble. Cf. Skt. ghrish, to grind; Curtius, i. 251. Der. friction-wheel; cf. friable.

FRIDAY the sixth day of the week (E) M. F. Friday Changes.

FRIDAY, the sixth day of the week. (E.) M. E. Friday, Chaucer, C. T. 1536. A. S. frige-dag, rubric to S. Mark, xi. 11. A. S. frige, gen. case of frigu, love, also the goddess of love (the word frigu being feminine); and dag, a day; see Grein, i. 349.— PRI, to love; see Friend. Cf. Icel. fridagr, Friday, O. H. G. Fridag, Frigetag; words not quite exactly equivalent in form, but from the same root.

FRIEND, an intimate acquaintance. (E.) M. E. frend, freend; Ormulum, 443, 1609, 17960.—A. S. freend; Grein, i. 346. Orig. pres. pt. of freen, freegam, to love; so that the sense is 'loving;' id. 345. + Du. vriend, a friend; of writen, to court, woo. + Icel. frandi, fyue fyngres were fretted with rynges' = all her five fingers were $\phi$ a kinsman; from frid, to love. $\diamond$ Dan frande, Swed frande, a kinsman. + Goth. frijonds, a friend; pres. pt. of frijon, to love. + G. freund, a friend; O. H. G. friunt. - 4 PRI, to love; cf. Skt. pri, to love. Der. friend-ly (A.S. adv. freondlice), friend-liness, friend-less love. Der. friend-ly (A. S. adv. freondlice), friend-i-ness, friend-less (A. S. freondleds), friend-less-ness, friend-less-ness, friend-less-ness, friend-less-ness, friend-less-ness, friend-less-ness, friend-less-ness, friend-ship (A. S. freondscipe).

FRIEZE (1), a coarse woollen cloth. (F.,—Du.?) 'Woven after the manner of deep, frieze rugges;' Holland's tr. of Pliny, b. viii. c. 48.—F. fries, frize, 'frise;' Cot. He also gives drap de fries as an equivalent expression; lit. cloth of Friesland.—Du. Vriesland, Friesland; Vries, a Frieslander.

¶ The M. E. Frise, meaning 'Friesland, 'occurs in the Romaunt of the Rose, 1093. Similarly, the term 'cheval de Frise' means 'horse of Friesland,' because there first used in defensive warfare. But the etymology of the word is much disputed. much disputed.

FRIEZE (2), part of the entablature of a column. (F.) In Shak. Macb. i. 6. 6. O. F. frize, 'the cloth called frise; also (in architecture) the broad and flat band, or member, that's next below the cornish [comice], or between it and the architrave; called also by our workman the frize; Cot. Cf. F. frese, fraise, a ruff (Cot.), Span. frise, a frieze, Ital. fregio, 'a fringe, lace, border, ornament; also, a wreath, crowne, or chaplet; Florio.

B. Brachet derives F. frise (O. F. frize) from the Ital. fregio; but see Diez. The source of the word is much disputed; perhaps there is a reference to the 'curling' nature of the ornamentation (?); see Friz.

FRIGATE, a large ship. (F., - Ital.) In Cotgrave. - O. F. fregate, 'a frigate, a swift pinnace; 'Cot. - Ital. fregata, 'a frigate, a spiall ship;' Florio.

¶ Of uncertain origin; Diez supposes it to stand for fargata, a supposed contracted form of fabricata, i. e. constructed, from Lat. fabricatus, pp. of fabricare, to build; see Fabrica. Cf. Span. fragata, a frigate, with Span. fragata (a frigate, with Span. fragata), to forge; see Forge. We know that F. bâtiment, a building, also means a ship. Der. frigat-oon (Ital. fregatone), frigate-bird.

FRIGHT, terror. (E.) M. E. fry3t; Seven Sages, ed. Wright,

984. It stands for fyrst, by the shifting of r so common in English, 984. It stands for jyrzt, by the shifting of r so common in English, as in bride, bird, brimstone, &c. - A. S. fyrhto, fyrhtu, fright; Grein, i. 362. Cf. fyrht, timid; áfyrhtan, to terrify. + O. Sax. foroht, foraht, forht, fright. + Dan. frygt, fright; frygte, to fear. + Swed. fruktan, fright; frukta, to fear. + Goth. faurhtei, fright; faurhtjan, to fear; faurhts, fearful. + G. furcht, O. H. G. forhta, forohta, forahta, fright; G. fürchten, to fear. The root is not known. I should suppose the Goth. faurhts to be possibly due to the prefix faur- and the Goth. base agan, seen in ogan, to fear; see Awe. The O. H. G. for-ohta points in the same direction. Der. fright, verb (later form fright-en); Shak. uses the form fright only; fright-ful, Rich. III, iv. 4. 169; fright-ful-ly, fright-ful-ness. been due to Scand. influence; observe the Swed. and Dan. forms.

FRIGID, cold, chilly. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.

Frigidity is in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 1. § 4.—Lat. frigidus, cold. - Lat. frigëre, to be cold. - Lat. frigus, sb. cold. + frigidus, cold. = Lat. frigers, to be cold. = Lat. frigus, so. cold. + Gk. βίγος, cold; βιγόειν, to freeze; see Curtius, i. 438. Der. frigid-ly, frigid-ness, frigid-l-y; and see frill.

FRILL, a ruffle on a shirt. (F.,=L.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. It orig. was a term in hawking; 'Frill, to quake as with cold;' the hawk frills;' id. And see frill in Halliwell. It seems to have been used of the ruffling of a hawk's feathers, due to its feeling chilly; and thence to have been transferred to the frill or ruffle of a shirt. -O. F. friller, 'to shiver, chatter, or didder for colde;' Cot. - O. F. frilleux, 'to silver, chalter, of induct for conte; Co. F. frilleux, 'to hill, cold of nature;' id.—Low Lat. frigidulosus*, a word coined from Lat. frigidulus, chilly, which is formed, as a dimin., from Lat. frigidus, cold. See above. Der. frill, to furnish with a frill.

FRINGE, a border of loose threads. (F.,—L.) In Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 228. - O. F. fringe*, supposed older form of F. frange (see Brachet, and frange in Burguy). Cot. has: 'Frange, fringe.' The Wallachian form (according to Diez) is frimble, which stands for fimbrie, by a transposition of r, for greater ease of pronunciation; cf. F. brebis from Lat. ueruicem. - Lat. fimbria, fringe; chiefly in the pl. fimbria, curled ends of threads, fibres. Fimbria is a strengthened form of fibra, a fibre, filament. See Fibre. Der.

fringe, verb, fringed, Tempest, i. 2, 408; fringey.

FRIPPERY, worn out clothes, trifles. (F.) 'Some frippery to hide nakedness;' Ford, Fancies Chaste and Noble, A. i. sc. 1 (R.) Shak. has it in the sense of an old-clothes' shop; Temp. iv. 225.-O. F. friperie, 'a friperie, broker's shop, street of brokers, or of fripiers; 'Cot. = O. F. fripier, 'a fripier, or broker: a mender or fripiers; Cot. = O. F. fripier, 'a fripier, or broker; a mender or trimmer up of old garments, and a seller of them so mended; 'id. = O. F. fripper, 'to rub up and downe, to weare unto rags;' id. Of unknown origin.

FRISK, to skip about. (F.,—Scand.) In Shak. Wint. Ta. i. 2.

67. A verb formed from the adj. frisk, which occurs in Cotgrave.—

O. F. frisque, 'friske, lively, jolly, blithe, brisk, fine, spruce, gay;'

Cot.—Içel. friskr. frisky, brisk, vigorous; Swed. frisk, fresh, but also

FRITTER, a kind of pancake. (F., -L.) Spelt frytowre in Prompt. Parv. Cotgrave has: 'Friteau, a fritter.' But the E. word rather answers to O. F. friture, a frying, a dish of fried fish; and, because esp. used of thin slices ready to be fried, it came to mean a fragment, shred; as in 'one that makes fritters of English;' Merry Wives, v. 5. 151. Both friteau and friture are related to O. F. frit, fried. — Lat. frictus, fried, pp. of frigëre, to fry. See Fry. Der. fritter, vb., to reduce to slices, waste.

FRIVOLOUS, trifling. (L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, v. 1. 28.
Cotgrave translates F. frivole by 'frivolous, vain.' - Lat. frivolus, silly, trifling; by direct change of Lat. -us to E. ous, as in abstemious, arduous, &c. The orig. sense of friuolus seems to have been 'rubbed also applied to refuse, broken sherds, &c. 'Friuola sunt proprie uasa fictilia quassa; ' Festus. - Lat. friare, fricare, to rub; see Friction. Der. frivous-ly, frivolous-ness; also frivol-i-ty, from FRIZ, FRIZZ, to curl, render rough. (F., -Du.?) Rarely used except in the frequentative form frizzle. 'Mæcenas, if I meete with thee without my friszle top;' Drant, tr. of Horace, Epist. i. 1. 94 (Lat. text). -O. F. frizer, 'to frizle, crise, curle;' Cot.

B. The orig. sense perhaps was to roughen the nap of a cloth, to make it look like frieze. This is rendered probable by Span frisar, to frizzle, to raise the nap on frieze; from Span. frisa, frieze.—O. F. frize, 'the cloth called frise;' Cot. See Frieze (1). Der. frizz-le.

FRO, adv. from. (Scand.) M. E. fra, fro, also used as a prep. Ormulum, 1265, 4820; Havelok, 318.—Icel. frá, from; also adv. as in the phrase til ok frá = to and fro, whence our phrase 'to and fro' is ¶ Fro is the copied. + Dan. fra. + A. S. from; see From. doublet of from; but from a Scand. source. FROCK, a monk's cowl, loose gown. (F., -Low L.) Hamlet, iii. 4. 164. M. E. frok, of which the dat. frokke occurs in P. Plowman, B. v. 81.—O. F. froc; whence 'froc de moine, a monk's cowle or hood;' Cot.—Low Lat. frocus, a monk's frock; also spelt floccus, by the common change of l to r; see floccus in Ducange. Prob. so called because woollen (Diez). See Flock (2). Therewise in Brachet; viz. from O.H.G. hroch (G. rock), a coat.

in Brachet; viz. from O.H.G. hroch (G. rock), a coat.

FROG (1), a small amphibious animal. (E.) M. E. frogge, Rob. of Glouc. p. 69; pl. froggen, O. E. Homilies, i. 51, l. 30.—A. S. froga, pl. froggn, Ps. civ. 28. We also find the forms frocga (pl. froggn), and frox (pl. froxas); Ps. lxxvii. 50. Of these, frox=frocs=frose, cognate with Icel. froskr (also frankr), Du. vorsch, G. frosch. Cf. also Swed. and Dan. fro. β. The M. E. forms are various; we find froke, frosche, frosk, froske, and frogge, all in Prompt. Parv. p. 180. ¶ Root uncertain; perhaps it meant 'jumper;' from PRU, to spring up; see Frolic.

FROG (2), a substance in a horse's foot. (E.?) a. The frog of a horse's foot is shaped like a fork, and I suspect it to be a corruption of fork, q.v. β. On the other hand, it was certainly corruption of fork, q.v. β. On the other hand, it was certainly understood as being named after a frog (though it is hard to see why), because it was also called a frush, which is a variant of frosh, a M. FULL (2), to whiten cloth, bleach. (L.) Only used now in this sense in the sb. full-er, a bleacher; this is M. E. fuller, Wyclif, Mark, in a selecth-bleacher. Mark is 2 - A. S. fullian to

ix. 3. - A. S. fullere, a cloth-bleacher; Mark, ix. 3. - A. S. fullian, to whiten, purify, baptise; Mark, iii. 11. - Low Lat. fullare (1) to cleanse clothes, (2) to full cloth. - Lat. fullo, a fuller, one who cleanses clothes. Of uncertain origin; but prob. from the sense of bleaching. Cf. Lat. infula, a white fillet, Gk. φάλοι, white; see Fick, ii. 170. ¶ This word is to be carefully distinguished from the word below, which has a different history, though drawn from the very same source.

FULL (3), to full cloth, to felt. (F., -L.) To full cloth is to felt the wool together; this is done by severe beating and pounding. The word occurs in Cotgrave. -O. F. fouller, 'to full, or thicken cloath in a mill;' Cot. Also spelt fouler, 'to trample on, press; id.—Low Lat. fullare (1) to cleanse clothes, (2) to full cloth.

This word is to be distinguished from the word above, as having a different history. Yet the source is the same; see my note on full in Notes to P. Plowman, B. xv. 445. The orig. sense of Lat. fullo was probably a cleanser, or bleacher; then, as clothes were often washed by being trampled on or beaten, the sense of 'stamping' arose; and the verb to full is now only used in this sense of stamping, pounding, or felting wool together.

Der. full-ing-mill, mentioned by Strype, Annals, Edw. VI, an. 1553.

FULMINATE, to thunder, hurl lightning. (L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. Sir T. Browne has fulminating, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5.

FULSOME, cloying, satiating, superabundant. (E.) M. E. fulsum, abundant, Genesis and Exodus, 748, 2153; cf. Will. of Palerne, 4325. Chaucer has the sb. fulsomnes, C. T. 10719. Made up from M. E. ful = A. S. ful, full; and the suffix -som = A. S. -sum (mod. E. -some). See Full. Der. ful-some-ness.

FULVOUS, FULVID, tawny. (L.) Rare. Fulvid is in Todd's Johnson. Borrowed, respectively, from Lat. fuluus, tawny, and fuluidus, somewhat tawny; both prob. related to Lat. flauus, reddish yellow; of uncertain origin.

FUMBLE, to grope about. (Du.) In old authors 'to bungle.' False fumbling heretikes;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 279; Shak. Antony, iv. 4. 14. The b is excrescent, and fumble stands for fummle.

— Du. fommelen, 'to fumble, grable;' Sewel. + Swed. famle, to grope. + Dan famle. + Icel. filma, to grope about. B. The Icel. form is the oldest, and is derived from the sb. which appears in A.S. as folm, the palm of the hand (Grein, i. 311), cognate with Lat. palma. See Palm (of the hand).

Hence Du. fommelen = folm-el-en, and the verb is a frequentative, with suffix -le, and the orig. sense is 'to keep moving the palm of the hand.' Der. fumbl-er

[An ecclesiastical word; and taken directly from Low Lat.] - Low Lat. funeralis, belonging to a burial. - Lat. funer-, base of funus, a β. Perhaps so called with reference burial; with suffix -alis. to the burning of bodies, and connected with Lat. fumus; see Fume. Der. funeral, sb.; funer-e-al, Pope, Dunciad, iii. 152, coined from Lat. funere-us, funereal, with suffix -al.

FUNGUS, a spongy plant. (L., -Gk.) 'Mushromes, which be named fungi;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, bk. xxii. c. 23. - Lat. fungus, a fungus; put for sfungus. - Gk. σφόγγοs, Attic form of σπόγγοs, a sponge. Thus fungus is a doublet of sponge. See Sponge. Der. fung-ous, fung-o-id.

funi-c-ulus, double dimin, of funis, a rope. See Funambulist. Der. funicul-ar.

FUNNEL, an instrument for pouring in liquids into vessels; an air-tube. (W.?) In Ben Jonson, Discoveries, sect. headed Præcipiendi modi. And in Levins' Dict., ed. 1570. Perhaps borrowed from W. ffynel, an air-hole, vent, allied to W. ffynel, respiration, breathing; fun, breath. We find also Breton found, a funnel for pouring in liquids.

The etymology is uncertain; the Lat. word for the liquids. ¶ The etymology is uncertain; the Lat. word for the same thing is infundibulum, but it is a long way from this form to E. funnel. Infundibulum is derived from Lat. in, in; and fundere, to pour. FUR, short hair of animals. (F., -O. Low G.) The orig. sense is 'protection.' M. E. fore; whence forred (or furred) hodes = furred hoods; P. Plowman, B. vi. 271. Spelt for in King Alisaunder, 3295.

—O. F. forre, fuerre, a sheath, case; cf. Span, forro, lining of clothes; Ital. fodero, lining, für, scabbard.

β. From an O. Low G. source, preserved in Goth. foder, a scabbard, sheath (John, xviii. 11); and in Icel. fiber, lining. The cognate High German word is futer.

γ. Both G. futter and Icel. fobr also have the sense of fodder, and are cognate with E. fodder: so that for and fedder are doublets. are cognate with E. fodder; so that fur and fodder are doublets. The connecting sense is seen in the PA, to cherish, protect, feed;

Skt. på, to guard, preserve. Der. fur, verb, furr-ed, furr-y, furr-i-er (Goldsmith, Animated Nature, b. iv. c. 3), furri-er-y, FURBELOW, a flounce. (Dialectal F.) In the Spectator, no.

15.—F. farbala, a flounce; which, according to Diez (who follows Hécart), is a Hainault word; the usual form is F., Span., Ital., and fore, with suffix -dar.

Port. falbala, a word traced back to the 17th century (Brachet).

Fort. Javous, a word traced back to the 17th century (Brachet). Origin unknown.

FURBISH, to polish, trim. (F.) In Shak. Rich. II, i. 3, 76; Macb. i. 2, 32.—O. F. fourbiss-, stem of pres. pt. of fourbir, 'to furbish, polish;' Cot.—O. H. G. furpjan, M. H. G. vürben, to purify, clean, rub bright.

β. Prob. from the Teut. base FU, to purify—

PU, to purify. See Purge, Pure.

FURCATE, forked. (L.) The sb. furcation occurs in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 9, § 4.—Lat. furcatus, forked.—Lat. furcat, a fork. See Fork. Der. furcation furca, a fork. See Fork. Der. furcat-ion.

FURFURACEOUS, scurfy. (L.) Scarce. Merely Lat. furfuraceus, like bran. - Lat. furfur, bran; a reduplicated form, of uncertain

FURIOUS, full of fury. (F.,-L.) Was in thyself fekel and furious; Henrysoun, Compt. of Crescide, l. 136.-O. F. furious, 'furious;' Cot. (older form furieus). - O. F. furie; see Fury. Der. furious-ly, furious-ness.

FURL, to roll up a sail. (F.) a. A contracted form of an older furdle. 'Nor to urge the thwart enclosure and furdling of flowers;' Sir T. Browne, Cyrus' Garden, c. iii. § 15; spelt fardling in Wilkin's edition. 'The colours furuled [furled] up, the drum is mute;' John Taylor's Works, ed. 1630; cited in Nares, ed. Halliwell. Furtle no furl'; Kersey, ed. 1715. B. Furdle and farthel are corruptions of fardle, to pack up (see Nares); from the sb. fardel, a package, burden. See further under Fardel.

FURLONG, one-eighth of a mile. (E.) M. E. furlong, fourlong; P. Plowman, B. v. 5; Chaucer, C. T. 11484.—A.S. furlang, Luke, xxiv. 13. The lit. sense is 'furrow-long,' or the length of a furrow. It thus came to mean the length of a field, and to be used as a measure of length. Cf. And wolde nat neyhle him by nyne as a measure of length. Cl. 'And wolde nat neyfile him by nyne londes lengthe' = and would not approach him by the length of nine lands (i.e. fields); P. Plowman, B. xx. 58.—A. S. furh, a furrow; and lang, long. See Furrow and Long.

FURLOUGH, leave of absence. (Du.,—Scand.) 'Capt. Irwing goes by the next packet-boat to Holland, he has got a furloe from his father for a year;' Chesterfield's Misc. Works, vol. iv. let. 42. Spelt furlough in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. The gh was probably once sounded as f. [More likely to be Dutch than Danish; we borrowed some military terms from Holland at one time: see Gascoigne's some military terms from Holland at one time; see Gascoigne's Fruites of Warre.] = Du. verlof, leave, furlough; cf. Dan. forlor, leave, furlough; Swed. fürlof; G. verlaub. B. But the Du. word seems to have been borrowed from Scandinavian; moreover, the Dan. has not only forlow, but orlow, and the latter appears to be the older form.

Y. These forms differ in the prefix; Du. ver. = Dan. for. = E. for.; see For. But Dan. orlow is the Icel. orlof, where the prefix or. = Goth. us, out.

8. The syllable lof is the Icel. lof. signifying (1) praise, (2) leave; cognate with G. lob (=-lanb), praise. The Teutonic base is LUB (= \(\subseteq \text{LUBH} \), which appears again in Lat.

In the feution base is E. DOB (= V. DOBT), which appears again in Lat. lub-et, it pleases. From the same base is E. lief, dear. See Lief. FURMENTY, FURMETY; see Frumenty.

FURNACE, an oven. M. E. forneis; Chaucer, C. T. 14169. —

O. F. fornaise, later fournaise, 'a furnace;' Cot. — Lat. fornacem, acc. of fornas, an oven. — Lat. fornus, furnus, an oven; with suffix -ac; allied to Lat. formus, warm; as also to Russ. goriete, to burn, glow, and Skt. gharma, glow, warmth; see Curtius, ii. 99. See Glow.

Il doubt the connection with E surgery. ¶ I doubt the connection with E. warm.

FURNISH, to fit up, equip. (F.,=O.H.G.) Common in Shak; see Merch. of Ven. ii. 4.9.=O.F. fournise, stem of pres. part. of fournir, 'to furnish;' Cot. Formerly spelt fornir, furnir (Burguy); which are corruptions of formir, furmir. The form formir occurs in Prov., and is also spelt fromir, which is the older spelling.=O.H.G. frumian, to perform, provide, procure, furnish.=O.H.G. fruma (M.H.G. urum, uruma), utility, profit, gain: cf. mod. G. fromm. (M. H. G. vrum, vrume), utility, profit, gain; cf. mod. G. fromm, good. From the same root as E. former; see Former. Der. furnish-er, furnish-ing; also furni-ture (Spenser, F.Q. v. 3. 4), from F. fourniture, furniture Cot.
FURROW, a slight trench, wrinkle. (E.)

M. E. forwe, P. Plowman, B. vi. 106; older form forgha, Chaucer, tr. of Boethus, b. v. met. 5. l. 4959.—A. S. fura, a furrow; Ælfric's Gloss., l. 17. The dat. pl. furum is in Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, v. 2; lib. i. met. 6. + Icel. for, a drain. +O. H. G. furh, M. H. G. vurch, G. furche, a furrow.

Cf. Lat. porea, a ridge between two furrows. Root uncertain. Dex. furrow, verb. The change from final -k to -gk, -we, and -ow is quite regular; so with borrow, sorrow.

FURTHER, comparative of fore. (E.) M. E. furber, Ancren Riwle, p. 228; forper, ferber; Chaucer, C. T. 36, 4119.—A. S. furbur, furbor, further; Grein, i. 358.—A. S. fore, adv. before; with comparative Goth char in contact, other. Dr. saffix -bor, but and it is a solution of the saffix -bor, other, and the saffix -bor, with suffix -der (--dar). + O. H. G. furdir, furdar, furdar; from O. H. G. furdir, before, with suffix -dar.

¶ Generally said to be a comparative from forth; but this explanation breaks down in Dutch and German. And cf. Gk. npo-repós, a comparative form from npó. The suffix is Goth.

The true superl. form of fore is first: see First. Far is a different word.

FURTIVE, thief-like, stealthy. (F., -L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715.

O. F. furtif, m. furtive, f. 'filching, theevish;' Cot. - Lat. furtiuus, stolen, secret. - Lat. furtum, theft. - Lat. furari, to steal. - Lat. fur. a thief. + Gk. φώρ, a thief; connected with φέρειν, to bear, carry off. — BHAR, to bear. See Bear. Der. furtive-ly.

FURY, rage, passion. (F., -L.) M. E. furie, Chaucer, C. T.

11262.—O. F. furie, 'fury;' Cot. — Lat. furia, madness. — Lat. furere, to rage; cf. Skt. bhuranya, to be active. — A BHUR, to move about quickly. Der. furi-ous, q. v., furi-ous-ly, furi-ous-ness.

FURZE, the whin or gorse. (E.) M. E. firse, also friise, Wyclif, Isaiah, lv. 13, Mic. vii. 4.—A. S. fyrs, Ælfred's tr. of Boethius, lib. iii. met. 1; c. xxiii. + Gael. preas, a briar, bush, shrub.

¶ As the E. f answers to Celtic p, I have little hesitation in linking the above words. It follows that furze and briar are doublets; see Briar.

FUSCOUS, brown, dingy. (L.) 'Sad and fuscous colours;' Burke, On the Sublime, s. 16.—Lat. fuscus, dark, dusky; by change of 'us into 'ous, as in arduous, strenuous. β. Most likely fuscus of -us into -ous, as in arduous, strenuous. stands for fur-scus, and is allied to furuus, brown, and to E. brown.

See Brown. See Curtius, i. 378.

In Johnson; but the verb is FUSE (1), to melt by heat. (L.) quite modern, and really due to the far older words (in E.), viz. fus-ible Chaucer, C. T. 16325), fusil, i.e. capable of being melted (Milton, P. L. xi. 573), fus-ion (Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 1. § 11); all founded upon Lat. fusus. — Lat. fusus, pp. of fundere, to pour, melt; from the base FUD. + Gk. χέειν, for χέγειν (base χν), to pour. + Goth. giutan, to pour (base GUT). All from & GHU, to pour; of which the extended form GHUD (= Goth. GUT) appears in Latin. Der. fus-ible, from O. F. fusible, 'fusible' (Cot.), from Late Lat. fusibilis*, not recorded in Ducange; fus-i-bili-ty; fus-ion, from F. form of Lat. fusionem. sec. of fusio, a melting: fus-il (Milton, as form of Lat. fusionem. acc. of fusio, a melting; fus-io, (Milton, as above), from Lat. fusilis, molten, fluid.

¶ From the same root are found (2), con-found, con-fuse, dif-fuse, ef-fus-ion, in-fuse, pro-fus-ion, re-fund. suf-fuse, trans-fuse; ful-ile; also chyme, chyle, gush gut.
FUSE (2), a tube with combustible materials for discharging shells, &c. (F.,-L.) Also spelt fusee, and even fusel. Fuse is short for fusee, and fusee is a corruption of fusel, or (more correctly) fusil, which is the oldest form of the word. In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715, we find: Fuse, Fusee, or Fusel, a pipe filled with wild fire, and put into the touch-hole of a bomb. Also: Fusee or Fusel, a kind of short musket.' See further under Fusil (1).

FUSEE (1), a fuse or match. (F., -L.) A corruption of Fusil (1),

q. v. See the quotation under Fuse (2).

FUSEE (2), a spindle in a watch. (F., -L.)

'Fusee or Fuzy of a watch, that part about which the chain or string is wound;' a watch, that part about which the chain or string is wound; Kersey, ed. 1715.—O. F. fusée, 'a spoole-ful or spindle-full of thread, yarn, &c.;' Cot.—Low Lat. fusca, a spindle-ful of thread; orig. fem. pp. of Low Lat. fuscae, to use a spindle.—Lat. fusca, a spindle. B. Prob. allied to Lat. funda, Gk. σφενδύνη, a sling; and, further, to Skt. spandana, a quivering, throbbing (whence the sense of jerking), and to Skt. spand, to throb.— SPAD, to tremble, vibrate, swing. See Curtius, i. 306; Fick, i. 831.

¶ Observe the change in meaning, which has reverted from the 'spindle-ful' to the spindle itself. Der. fusil (2), q. v.

FUSIL (1), a light musket. (F.,-L.) The name has been transferred from the steel or fire-lock to the gun itself. In Kersey's Dict.; see Fuse (2).—O. F. fusil, 'a fire-steele for a tinder-box;'
Cot.; the same word as Ital. focile, a steel for striking fire.—Low Lat. focile, a steel for kindling fire.—Lat. focus, a hearth. See Focus.

Der. fusil-ier, fusil-eer.

FUSIL (2), a spindle, in heraldry. (L.) Explained in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674.—Lat. fusillus *, not found, but formed as a dimin. from fusus, a spindle; spelt fusellus in Ducange. See Fusee (2).

FUSIL (3), easily molten. (L.) See Fuse (1).
FUSS, haste, flury. (E.) The sb. corresponding to M. E. fus, anxious, willing, ready, eager. 'And fus to follshenn heore wille' = and ready to follow their wish; Ormulum, 9005. — A. S. fus [for fins], prompt, quick; Caedmon, ed. Thorpe, p. 10, 1. 10, 4 Icel. fits, eager for, willing. 4 O. H. G. fins, ready, willing.

6. Hence the true form is fins; and this again is for fund-s, from A. S. fundian, to strive after, Grein, i. 357. And again, fundian is a derivative of fust, 'any staffe, stake, stocke, stump, trunke, or log; . . . also fustiness;' id. [The cask was so named from its resemblance to the trunk of a tree.] - Lat. fustem, acc. of fustis, a thick knobbed stick, cudgel; connected with Lat. fendere, to strike, used in the compounds defendere, offendere; cf. infensus, infestus. - DHAN, to strike; whence also Gk. θείνειν, to strike. ¶ From the same root we have de-fend, of-fend, in-fest; also dint, dent. Der. fus-ty, fust-iness; and see below.

FUST (2), the shaft of a column. (F., -L.) 'Fust, the shaft, or body of a pillar; 'Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715.—O. F. fust, a stump, trunk; Cot.—Lat. fustem; as in the case of the word above. Der.

FUSTY, mouldy. In Shak. Cor. i. 9. 7. See Fust (1).
FUTILE, trifling, vain. (F., -L.) Orig. signifying 'pouring forth,' esp. pouring forth vain talk, talkative. 'As for talkers and forth, esp. pouring forth vain talk, talkative. 'As for talkers and futile persons, they are commonly vain;' Bacon, Essay VI.—O. F. futile, 'light, vain;' Cot.—Lat. futilis, that which easily pours forth; also, vain, empty, futile. The u is long, because futilis stands for fud-tilis, formed with suffix-tilis from the base fud-; cf. fudi, pt. t. of fundere, to pour. The base fud is an extension of the base fu-, to pour.— GHU, to pour; see Fuse. Der. futile-ly, futil-i-ty.

FUTTOCKS, certain timbers in a ship. (E.) 'Futlocks, the compassing timbers in a ship, that made the breadth of it.' Verse's compassing timbers in a ship, that make the breadth of it; 'Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Origin uncertain; it is thought to be a corruption of foot-hooks. The first syllable is, no doubt, the prov. E. fut, a foot. T Called foot-stocks in Florio's Ital. Dict., s. v. stamine. If hence corrupted, the corruption is considerable.

GABARDINE, GABERDINE, a coarse frock for men. (Span, = C.) In Shak. Merch. i. 3. 113. - Span. gabardina, a coarse frock. Cf. Ital. gavardina (Florio); and O. F. galvardine, 'a gaberdine;' Cot. An extended form from Span. gaban, a great coat with hood and close sleeves; cf. Ital. gabanio, 'a shepheards cloake' (Florio), Ital. gabanella, 'a gaberdine, or shepheards cloake' (id.); O. F. gaban, 'a cloake of felt for rainy weather, a gaberdine;' Cot. Connected with Span. cabaza, a large cloak with hood and sleeves, and Span. cabaña, a cabin, hut; and of Celtic origin. See Cabin, and Cape (1).

In Shak. Temp. i. 2, 356. Formed, as a frequentative, with suffix -le, from M. E. gabben, to talk idly, once in common use; see Chaucer, C. T. 15072; P. Plowman, B. iii. 179. The M. E. gabben is esp. used in the sense 'to lie,' or 'to delude.' Of Scand. origin; the A. S. gabban, due to Somner, being unauthorised.—Icel. gabba, to mock; gabb, mocking, mockery. Cf. Swed. gabb, mockery.

B. Of imitative origin; and probably allied to Irish cab, gob, the mouth; cf. Irish cabaca.

Gael geback, garrulous. See Gape, Gobble; and compare Babble. Totherwise in Fick, iii. 101. Der. gabbl-er, gabbl-ing.

GAG, to stop the mouth forcibly, to silence. (C.?) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 94; v. 384. M. E. gaggen, to suffocate; Prompt. Parv.—W. cegio, to mouth, to choke; ceg, the mouth, throat, an opening. Possibly related to Irish gaggach, stammering; but this is not clear.

Possibly related to Irish gaggaen, stammering, out the Der. gag, sh.

GAGE (1), a pledge. (F., L.) M. E. gage, King Alisaunder, 904.

—F. gage, 'a gage, pawne, pledge;' Cot. A verbal sh.—F. gager, 'to gage, ingage;' id.—Low Lat. wadiare, for wadiare, to pledge.—
Low Lat. wadiam, a pledge.—Lat. uadi-, crude form of was, gen. wadia, a pledge; cognate with A. S. wad, a pledge. See Wed, Wager, Wage. Der. gage, vh.; en-gage, dis-en-gage.

GAGE (2), to gauge; see Gauge.

GAIDTY, mirth. (F.,—G.) 'Those gayities how doth she slight;' Habington, Castara, pt. iii (K.); the 1st ed. (in 3 parts) appeared in functions, is from gala, to sing, enchant; there may be an allusion to See Gay.

GAIN (1), profit, advantage. (Scand.) M. E. gain, gein; spelt gain, Chaucer, C. T. 536, ed. Tyrwhitt (but the reading is bad, not agreeing with the best MSS.); gein, St. Marherete, ed. Cockayne, p. 18, 1. 3; gaykin, Ormulum, 13923. — Icel. gagn, gain, advantage, use. + Swed. gagn, benefit, profit. + Dan. gam, gain.

B. Not found in German; but the root-verb ga-geigan, to gain, occurs in Moeso-Gothic, Mk. viii. 36, Lu. ix. 25, 1 Cor. ix. 19; suggesting a base GAG, not found elsewhere.

Y. Hence was formed the (obsolete) M. E. verb gainen, to profit, be of use, avail, gen. used impersonally; see Chaucer. C. T. 1178. &c. This answers to Icel, and Swed. gagna. see Chaucer, C. T. 1178, &c. This answers to Icel. and Swed. gagna, to help, avail, Dan. gauns, to benefit. See further below. Der. gain-ful. gain-ful-ly, gam-ful-ness, gain-less, gain-less-ness, GAIN (2), to acquire, get, win. (Scand.) Really a derivative of the sb. above, and independent of the F. gagner, with which it was easily confused, owing to the striking similarity in form and sense. [Thus Cotgrave gives gaigner, to gain.'] Not in early use. 'Yea, though he gains and cram his purse with crounes; Gascoigne, Fruites of Warre, st. 69. That Gascoigne took the verb from the sb. is evident; for he has just above, in st. 66: 'To get a gains by any trade or kinde.' See Gain (1).

B. Still, the F. word probably influenced the use of the pre-existing E. one; and superseded the old use of the M. E. gains, to profit.

The etymology of F. gagner, O. F. gaigner (Cotgrave), gaagnier, gaaignier (Burguy) = Ital. guadagnare, is from the O. H. G. weidanjan*, not found, but equivalent to O. H. G. weidenon, to pasture, which was the orig. sense, ond is still preserved in the F. sb. gagnage, pasturage, pasture-land.

O. H. G. weida (G. weide), pasturage, pasture-ground; cf. M. H. G. weiden; to pasture, hunt. + Icel. veidr, hunting, fishing, the chase; veida, to catch, to hunt. + A. S. weiden, a wandering, journey, a hunt; Grein, ii. 636. Cf. Lat. uenari (=uetnari), to hunt. Perhaps from WI, to go, drive; cf. Skt. wi, to go, approach, sometimes used as a substitute for aj, to drive. See Fick, iii. 302; i. 430.

GAINLY, suitable, gracious. (Scand.) Obsolete, except in ungainly, now meaning awkward. In Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 83; gainly, now meaning a street of the word is E. say, now meaning a street of the most see ungainly.

GAINSAY, to speak against. (E.) In the A. V. Luke, xxi. 15.

M. E. geinseien, a rare word. 'That thei not sein-seye my sonde' = that they may not gainsay my message; Cursor Mundi, 5769 (Trinity MS.). The Cotton MS. reads: 'bat bai noght sai agains mi sand.' $\beta$. The latter part of the word is E. say, q. v. The prefix is the A. S. gegn, against, as occurring in the sb. gegnewide, a speech against anything; better known in the comp. ongegn, ongean, signifying again or against. See Again. Der. gainsay-er, A. V. Titus, i. 9; gainsay-ing, A. V. Acts, x. 29.

GAIRISH, GARISH, gaudy; see Garish.

GAIT, manner of walking. (Scand.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 102.

A particular use of M. E. gate, a way. 'And goth him forth, and

A particular use of M. E. gate, a way. And goth him forth, and in his gate' = and goes forth, and in his way; Gower, C. A. iii. 196.—Icel. gata, a way, path, road; Swed. gata, a street; Dan. gade, a street. + Goth. gatwo, a street. + G. gasse, a street. See Gate.

¶ It is clear that the word was thus used, because popularly connected with the verb to go; at the same time, the word is not really derived from that verb, but from the verb to get.

GAITER, a covering for the ancle. (F.,—M. H. G.) Modern. Not in Johnson's Dict.—F. guêtre, a gaiter; formerly spelt guestre. Guestres, startups, high shooes, or gamashes for countrey folkes; Cot. Marked by Brachet as 'of unknown origin.'

B. However, the form of the word shews it to be of Teutonic origin; and prob. from the same source as M. H. G. wester, a child's chrisom-cloth (G. westerhend) and the Goth. wasti, clothing; from WAS, to clothe; see Vesture, Vest.

sec Vesture, Vest.

GALA, pomp, festivity, (F.,—Ital.) Perhaps only in the phrase 'a gala-day.' Modern: 'mot in Johnson.—F. gala, borrowed from Ital. gala, ornament, finery, festive attire. Cf. Ital. di gala, merrily; closely connected with Ital. galante, gay, lively. See Gallant. Der. gala-day: = F. jour de gala, Span. and Port. dia de gala.

galla, an oak-apple, gall nut.

GALLANT, gay, splendid, brave, courteous. (F.,-M. H. G.)

Good and gallant ship; 'Shak. Temp. v. 237. 'Like young lusty galantes;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 105 (R).—O. F. gallant; Cotgrave gives 'gallant homme, a gallant, goodly fellow;' properly spelt galant (with one l), as in mod. F.

part. of O. F. galer, to rejoice; Cotgrave has: 'galler le bon temps, to make merry, to pass the time pleasantly.'—O. F. gale, show, mirth, festivity: the same word as Ital. Span., and Port. gala, ornament, festivity; the same word as Ital., Span., and Port. gala, ornament, festive attire. y. Of Teutonic origin; from a base GAL, which appears in Goth. gailjan, to make to rejoice, 2 Cor. ii. 2; A.S. gál, Du. geil, lascivious, luxurious; O. Sax. gel, mirthful; Icel. gall, a fit of gaiety; M. H. G. geil, mirthful, mirth; M. H. G. geilen, to make merry. It is a little difficult to tell the exact source of the F. word; it is gen. referred to the M. H. G. 8. The Icel. galinn, enchanted, mad, voluptuous, is pp. of gala, to crow, sing; and leads us to the Teutonic base GAL, to sing, as in the E. nightingale, q.v. See Gale. Der. gallant, sb., (Spectator, no. 4) from O. F. gallanterie, 'gallant-ness; also gallant-ry (Spectator, no. 4) from O. F. gallanterie, 'gallant-ness,' Cot. Also see gala, gall-oon, gall-ery.

gallion as 'a gallion, an armada, a great ship of warre;' but the word is Spanish. - Span. galeon, a galleon, Spanish armed ship of burden; formed, with augmentative suffix -on, from Low Lat. galea, Burden; formed, with augmentative sumx -on, from Low Lat. gatea, a galley. See Galley.

GAILERY, a balcony, long covered passage. (F., -Ital.) 'The long galleries;' Surrey, tr. of Virgil's Æneid, b. ii. l. 691.-O. F. gallerie, galerie, 'a gallerie, or long roome to walke in; also mirth, glee, good sport;' Cot.-Ital. galleria, a gallery (Brachet).-Low Lat. galeria, a long portico, gallery; Ducange.

β. Uncertain; surrhave from Low Lat. galery to regime a pure consent to the coir. perhaps from Low Lat. galare, to rejoice, amuse oneself; the originance of Low Lat. galaria being, probably, a place of amusement, according to Cotgrave's definition. See Gallant, and Gala.

GALLEY, a long, low-built ship. (F.) In early use. M. E.

Diez. Der. galley-slave; see galley-on, galli-as, galli-ot.

GALLIARD, a lively dance. (Span.—C.?) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i.
3. 127, 137.—Span. gallarda [in which It is pronounced as by], a kind of lively Spanish dance.—Span. gallardo, pleasant, gay, lively.

B. Of uncertain origin; Diez rejects a connection with gala and gallant (Span. galante) on account of the double I and the F form gallant (Span, galante) on account of the double l and the F. form gaillant. The O. F. gailland meant 'valiant' or 'bold;' perhaps of Celtic origin. Cf. Bret. galloud, power, galloudek, strong; Corn. gal-midoc, able; Irish and Gael. galack, valiant, brave; W. gallad, able, gall, energy. Cf. Lith. galà, I am able.

GAILLIAS, a sort of galley. (F.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, ii. 380.—O. F. galeace, 'a galleass;' Cot.—Ital. galeazza, a heavy, low-built galley.—Ital. and Low Lat. galea, a galley. See Galley.

low-built galley.—Ital. and Low Lat. galea, a galley. See Galley.

On the termination -ace, see Cutlass.

GALLIGASKINS, large hose or trousers. (F., —Ital.) a. Cotgrave has: 'Garguesques, a fashion of strait Venitians without codpecces.' Also: 'Greguesques, alops, gregs, gallogascoins, Venitians.' Also: 'Gregues, wide slops, gregs, gallogascoins, Venitians, great Gascon or Spanish hose.' Also: 'Greguesque, the same as Gregeois, Grecian, Greekish.' B. Here it is clear that Garguesques is a corguerous of Greguesques: that Greguesques originally meant Greekish.' Also: Gregues, wide slops, gregs, gallogascoins, Veintians, great Gascon or Spanish hose. Also: Greguesque, the same as Gregous, Grecian, Greekish. B. Here it is clear that Garguesques is a cortuption of Greguesques; that Greguesque originally meant Greekish; Prov. E. (Somersets.) gally.—A. S. galwian, in the comp. dgalwian, witches. Cf. galdrahrib, a storm raised by spells (Wedgwood). and that Gregues (whence obs. E. gregs) is a mere confraction of Greguesque.

GALEATED, helmeted. (L.) Botanical.—Lat. galeatus, hel meted—Lat. galea c. helmet. Greguesque. Y. And further, Greguesque is borrowed from Ital. Grechesco, Greekish, a form given by Florio; which is derived (with suffix 4500 = E. -ish) from Ital. Greco, Greek.

8. Finally, it seems probable that gallogascoin is nothing but a derivative of Ital. Grechesco, a name given (as shewn by the evidence) to a particular kind of hose or breeches originally worn at Venice. The corruption seems to have been due to a mistaken notion on the part of some of the wearers of galligaskins, that they came, not from Venice, but from Gascony. ¶ This suggestion is due to Wedgwood; it would seem that galligaskins = garlsgascans = garguesquans; where the suffix -an is the same as in Greci-an, &c.

GALLINACEOUS, pertaining to a certain order of birds. (L.) Modern. Englished from Lat. gallinaceus, belonging to poultry. Formed, with suffix -ac-, from Lat. gallina, a hen.—Lat. gallus, a cock. Root uncertain; possibly from & GAR, to cry aloud; Curtius, GALLIOT, a small galley. (F.) M. E. galiote, Minot's Poems, Expedition of Edw. III to Brabant, I. 81 (Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 129).—O. F. galiote, 'a galliot;' Cot.—Low Lat. galeota, a small galley; dimin. of Low Lat. galea, a galley. Cf. Ital. galeotta, a galliot. See Galley.

GALLIPOT, a small glazed earthen pot. (Du.) In Beaum. and Eletcher. Nice Valour iii. 1. 42 A corruption of O. Du. glavetet.

Fletcher, Nice Valour, iii. I. 43. A corruption of O. Du. gleypot.

Gleywerk, glazed work; een gleypot, a gallipot; Sewel's Du. Dict.

Similarly earthen tiles were called galley-tiles. Wedgwood quotes from Stow: 'About the year 1570, I. Andries and I. Janson, potters, came from Antwerp and settled in Norwich, where they followed their trade, making galley-tiles and apothecaries vessels' [gallipots]. \(\beta\). Again, Du. gley (O. Du. gleye, shining potter's clay, Hexham) appears to be N. Friesic gl\(\beta\), shining (Outzen), cognate with G. glatt, polished, smooth, and with E. glad. See Glad and Pot.

GALLON, a measure holding 4 quarts. (F.) M. E. galon, galun, galoun; P. Plowman, B. v. 224, 343; Chaucer, C. T. 16973. Spelt galun in King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1123. - O. F. gallon, jallon, jalon, a gallon; Roquefort:=Low Lat. galona (also galo), an English measure for liquids; Ducange. β. The suffix -on is augmentative; and a shorter form appears in mod. F. jale, a bowl, which evidently stands for an older form gale, just as jalon is for galon. Thus the sense is 'a large bowl.' γ. Of unknown origin; the Lat, gaulus (itself from Gk. γαῦλος, a milk-pail, a bucket) has been suggested; but the diphthong is against it.

GALLOON, a kind of lace or narrow ribbon. (Span.?) The compound galloon-laces occurs in Beaum. and Fletcher, Philaster, v.

4.46. Cotgrave has: 'Galon, galloon-lace.' But the peculiar accent of the E. word answers better to Span. galon, galloon, lace; orig. any kind of finery for festive occasions.—Span. gala, parade, finery, court-dress; the suffix -on being augmentative, as in balloon. See Gala. ¶ We find also Ital. gallone, galloon; but it does not seem to be an old word, being omitted in Florio's Dict.

GALLOP, to ride very fast. (F., -O. Flemish.) M. E. galopen (with one l); King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 461. 'Styll he galoped forth right;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 140. We also find the form walopen, in the Romance of Partenay, ed. Skeat, 4827 (and note on p. 250); and the pres. pt. walopande, Morte Arthur, ed. Brock, 2827.—O. F. galoper, to gallop; of which an older form must have been waloper, as shewn by the derivative walopin in Roquefort, spelt galopin in mod. F. Of Flemish origin.—O. Flemish walop, a gallop. Delfortrie, in his Analogie des Langues Flamande, Allemande, et Anglaise, p. 379, cites the line: 'Ende loopen enen hoghen walop' = and run at a fast gallop, from the Roman van Walewein, l. 1817. β. Mr. Wedgwood is certainly right in saying that the original signification of wallop is the boiling of a pot; it is retained in the familiar E. potwalloper, a pot-boiler, for which see Webster's Dict. 'The name is taken from the sound made by s horse galloping compared to the walloping or boiling of a pot;' Wedgwood. y. The explanation of the suffix is not quite clear, but perhaps it may be the Flem. and Du. op, E. up. 8. However, the word is a mere extension from the O. Low G. wallen, to boil, amply vouched for by the A. S. weallan, O. Friesic walla, O. Sax. wallan, to boil; cf. Du. wellen, E. well, to spout up, spring up (as water). From the Teut. base WAL, to turn; and the Aryan WAR, to wind, turn; whence also Lat. uol-uere, to roll, Skt. vára, a turn; E. wal-k (q.v.); and esp. note Skt. valg, to gallop, to go by leaps, to bounce, to move in different ways, to fluctuate; and Skt. val, to move to and fro.

The existence of Skt. valg, to gallop, suggests that the final op may be a mere corruption of a final guttural added to the base, just GALLOWAY, a nag, pony. (Scotland.) So called from Galloway in Scotland; the word occurs in Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 3.

See the quotation in Richardson establishing the etymology.

GALLOW-GLASS, a heavy-armed foot-soldier. (Irish.) Macbeth, i. 2. 13. - Irish galloglach, a servant, a heavy-armed soldier. -Irish giolla, a man-servant, lacquey; and gleac-aim, I wrestle, GALLOWS, an instrument for hanging criminals. (E.) galwes, Chancer, C. T. 6240.—A. S. galga, gealga, a cross, gibbet, gallows; Grein, i. 492. Hence was formed M. E. galwe, by the usual change from -ga to -we (and later still to -ow); and it beusual change from -ga to -we (and later still to -ow); and it became usual to employ the word in the plural galwes, so that the mod. E. gallows is also, strictly speaking, a plural form. + Icel. gdlgi, the gallows, a gibbet. + Dan. and Swed. galge, a gibbet. + Du. galg. + Goth. galga, a cross. + G. galgen. Root unknown. GALOCHE, a kind of shoe or slipper. (F.,-Low L.,-Gk.) M. E. galocke, Chaucer, C. T. 10869; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 14. - F.

GALVANISM, a kind of electricity. (Ital.) Named from Galvani, of Bologna in Italy, inventor of the galvanic battery in A.D. 1791. Der. Hence also galvani-e, galvani-es.

GAMBADO, a kind of legging. (Span.?—L.) 'Gambadoes, much wome in the west, whereby, while one rides on horseback, his leggs are in a coach, clean and warme; 'Fuller's Worthies, Cornwall (R.)—Span. (Span.) a coach, clean and warme; 'Fuller's Worthies, Cornwall (R.)—Span. (or Ital.) gamba, the leg; see Gambol, of which it is nearly a doublet.

The form of the suffix is rather Span. than Italian.

GAMBLE, to play for money. (E.) Comparatively a modern word. It occurs in Cowper, Tirocinium, 246. Formed, by suffix -le word. It occurs in Cowper, Tirocinium, 246. Formed, by suffix -le (which has a frequentative force), from the verb to game, the being merely excrescent; so that gamble=gamm-le. This form, gamm-le or gamele, has taken the place of the M. E. gamenien or gamenen, to play at games, to gamble, which occurs in King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 5461.—A.S. gamenian, to play at a game, in the Liber Scintillarum (unprinted); Bosworth.—A. S. gamen, a game. See Game. Der. gambl-er.

GAMBOGE, a gum-resin, of a bright yellow colour. (Asiatic.) In Johnson's Dict. 'Brought from India by the Dutch, about A.D. 1600; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. The word is a corruption of Cambodia, the name of the district where it is found. Cambodia is in the Anamese territory, not far from the gulf of Siam.

GAMBOL, a frisk, caper. (F., -Ital., -L.) In Shak. Hamlet, V. I. 209. Older spellings are gambold, Phaer, tr. of Virgil, Æn. vi. (l. 643 of Lat. text); gamboud, or gamboud, Skelton, Ware the Hawk, 65; gambould, Udal, Flowers of Lat. Speaking, fol. 72 (R.) = 0. F. gambode, 'a gamboll;' Cot.—Ital. gambata, a kick (Brachet).—Ital. gamba, the leg; the same word as F. jambe, O. F. gambe. B. Referred in Brachet to late Lat. gamba, a hoof, or perhaps a joint of the leg (Vegetius), which is no doubt the same word; but the true Lat. form of the base is rather camp- (as suggested in Diez), corresponding to Gk. καμπή, a bending; with reference to the flexure of the leg. Cf. Gael. cam, crooked; W. cam, crooked, also a step, stride, pace.—

KAMP, to move to and fro, to bend; cf. Skt. kamp, to move to and fro. See Fick, i. 519; Curtius, ii. 70. ¶ The spelling with I seems to have been due to the confusion of the F. suffix ade with F. suffix -aude, the latter of which stands for an older -alde. Hence gambade was first corrupted to gambaude (Skelton); then written gambauld (Udal) or gambold (Phaer); and lastly gambol (Shakespeare), with loss of final d. Der. gambol, vb., Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 168. 65 Brachet translates gamba in Vegetius by 'thigh,' and quotes the passage; it rather means 'a joint,' either of the thigh or of the pastern of a horse.

GANG, sport, amusement. (E.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 240. M. E. game, Chaucer, C. T. 1808; older form gamen, spelt gammyn M. E. game, Chaucer, C. T. 1808; older form gamen, spelt gammyn and gamyn in Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, iii. 405, ix. 406, &c. — A. S. gamen, gomen, a game, sport; Grein, i. 366. + O. 'A gammon of bacon;' I Hen. IV, ii. 1. 26.—O. F. gambon, the old form of F. jambon, corresponding to O. F. gambo for jambo. Cotgrave explains jambon by 'a gammon;' and Florio explains Ital. gambone by 'a hanch [haunch], a gammon, a thigh.' Formed, with suffix on, from O. F. gambo, a leg. See Gambol.

GAMMON (2), nonsense, orig. a jest. (E.) A slang word; but really the M. E. gamen preserved; see Backgammon and Game.

GAMUT, the musical scale. (Hybrid; F.,—Gk., and L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iii. 1. 67, 71. A compound word, made up from O. F. game or gamme, and ut. 1. Gower has gamme in the sense of 'a musical scale;' C. A. iii. 90.—O. F. game, gamme, 'gamut, in musick;' Cot.—Gk. γάμμα, the name of the third letter of the alphabet. — Heb. gime!, the third letter of the alphabet. so named alphabet.—Heb. gimel, the third letter of the alphabet, so named from its supposed resemblance to a camel, called in Hebrew gimal (Farrar, Chapters on Language, 136). Brachet says: 'Guy of Arezzo (Farrar, Chapters on Language, 130). Brachet says: 'Guy of Arezzo [born about A. D. 990] used to end the series of seven notes of the musical scale by this mark, γ [gamma]. He named the notes a, b, c, d, e, f, g, and the last of the series has given its name to the whole scale.' 2. The word ut is Latin, and is the old name for the first note in singing, now called do. The same Guy of Arezzo is said to have named the notes after certain syllables of a monkish hymn to S. John, in d stanza written in sapphic metre. The line d is the same d in d is the same d in d is d in are: 'Ut queant laxis resonare fibris Mira gestorum famuli tuorum Solue pollutis labiis reatum Sante Iohannes;' the last term si being made from the initials of the final words.

GANDER, the male of the goose. (E.) M. E. gandre, Mandeville's Travels, p. 216.—A.S. gandra; Ælfric's Gram. De Tertia Declinatione, sect. xviii; where it translates Lat. anser. Also spelt ganra, Wright's Vocab. i. 77, col. 1. + G. gänser-ich, with an additional suffix.

B. The d is excrescent, as in thunder, and as usual tional suffix. atter n; gandra stands for the older gan-ra. γ . And the suffix -ra is the Aryan -ra, as in the Goth. ak-ra = Lat. ag-ro = Gk, $d\gamma$ - $p\dot{c}$ -the crude forms corresponding to k-ra = (the crude forms corresponding to E. acre); Schleicher, Compend.

pp. 404, 405. See further under Goose; and see Gannet.
GANG (1), a crew of persons. (Scand.) The word gang occurs in M. E. in the sense of 'a going,' or 'a course.' The peculiar use of gang in the sense of a 'crew' is late, and is rather Scand. than E. In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Gang, a company, a crew;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. He adds that 'in sea-affairs, gangs are the several companies of mariners belonging to a ship;' so that the term arose amongst our sailors.-Icel. gangr, a going; also, collectively, a gang, as musagangr, a gang of mice, biofagangr, a gang of thieves + Swed. gang, a going, a time. + Dan. gang, walk, gaft. + Du. gang, course, pace, gait, tack, way, alley, passage. + Goth. gaggs (= gangs), a way, street.

B. The M. E. gang, a course, way, is from A. S. gang, a journey (Bosworth); which is from A. S. gangan, to go; Grein, i. 367, 368. So also Icel. gangr, is from Icel. ganga. See Go. Der. gang-way, from M. E. gang, a way, with the word way unnecessarily added, after the sense of the word became obscured; gang-board, a Duich term, from Du. gangboord, a gangway.

GANGLION, a tumour on a tendou. (L., -Gk.) Medical.

In Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. - Lat. ganglion (Vegetius.) - Gk. γάγγλιον, a tumour near a tendon. Perhaps allied to Gk. γογγύλος, round.

Der. ganglion-ic.
GANGRENE, a mortification of the flesh, in its first stage. (F.,-L., = Gk.) Shak. has the pp. gangrened, Cor. iii. 1. 307. The sb. is in Cotgrave. = O. F. gangrene, 'a gangreen, the rotting or mortifying of a member;' Cot. = Lat. gangræna. = Gk. γάγγρωνα, an eating sore. A reduplicated form. = Gk. γραίνειν, γράειν, to gnaw. = √GAR, to devour; cf. Skt. grí, to devour; gras, to devour. Der. gangrene, tracted from ganet); Prompt. Parv. p. 186; see Way's note.—A. S. ganot; 'ofer ganotes beed,'—over the sea-fowl's bath, i. e. over the sea; A. S. Chron. an. 975. Du. gent, a gander. + O. H. G. ganazo, M. H. G. ganze, a gander. B. Formed with dimin. suffix -ot (—-at, -et), from the base gan-; for which see Gander, Goose. GANTLET (1), a spelling of Gauntlet, q. v. GANTLET (2), also GANTLOPE, a military punishment. (Swed.) In Skinner, ed. 1671. Formerly written gantlope, but corrupted to gantlet or gauntlet by confusion with gauntlet, a glove. 'To run the gantlope, an usual punishment among soldiers;' Kersey's, Dict., ed. 1715. Again, the n is inserted, being no part of the orig, word, which should be gatlope.—Swed. gatlopp, lit. 'a running down a lane,' because the offender has to run between two files of soldiers, who strike him as he passes.—Swed. gata, a street, lane (see Gate); who strike him as he passes. - Swed. gata, a street, lane (see Gate); and lopp, a course, career, running, from lopa, to run, cognate with E. Leap. T Prob. due to the wars of Gustavus Adolphus (died 163a).

GAOL, JAIL, a cage, prison. (F., -L.) Spelt gavels in Fabyan's Chron. an. 1293; gayhol in An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed.

Morris, p. 153, l. 219. The peculiar spelling gaol is due to the Chaucer has gailer, C. T. 1476; whence jailer and jail. = O. F. gaile, gale, mod. F. gaile, a gaol, prison, cage for birds. 'In the 13th cent. people spoke of the gells d'un oisean as well as of the gard, a vard, enclosure. (F., = O. H. G.) M. E. gardin, Chaucer, C. T. 1053; King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1048. GARDEN, a yard, haps better spelt geápian, as it seems to be a derivative of A. S geáp, wide, which see in Grein, i. 496. + Du. gaten, to gape, yawn. + Icel. gapa. + Swed. gapa. + Dan. gabe. + G. gaffen. Cf. Skt. jabh, acel. gapa. + Swed. gapa. + Dan. gabe. + G. gaffen. Cf. Skt. jabk, jambh, to gape, yawn. Der. gap-er; and gaby, (v. Also gap, sb., M. E. gappe (dat.) in Chaucer, C. T. 1639; a word which is rather Scand. than E.; cf. Icel. and Swed. gap, a gap, breach, abyss, Dan. gab, mouth, throat, gap, chasm. See Gabble.

GAR (1), GARFISH, a kind of pike. (E.) A fish with a long slender body and pointed head. Prob. named from A. S. gair, a spear, from its shape; see Garlic. Cp. Icel. geirsil, a kind of herring, Icel. geirr, a spear; and observe the names pike and ged.

GAR (2), to cause. (Scand.) Common in Lowland Scotch; and see P. Plowman, B. i. 121; v. 130; vi. 303.—Icel. göra; Dan. gjöre; Swed. göra, to cause, make, do. A causal ve.b, lit. 'to make ready.'—Icel. görr, ready; cognate with E. yare. See Yare and Gear. See Fick, iii. 102.

GARB (1), dress, manner, fashion. (F., -O. H.G.) Used by Shak, to mean form, manner, mode of doing a thing (Schmidt); Hamlet, ii. 2. 390; K. Lear, ii. 2. 103. - O. F. garbe, 'a garbe, comelinesse, handsomenesse, gracefulnesse, good fashion;' Cot. Cf. Ital. garbo, 'grace, handsomeness, garbe;' Florio. -O. H. G. garawi, preparation, getting ready, dress, gear; M. H. G. gerwe, garwe. - O. H. G. garawen, M. H. G. gerwen, to get ready. - O. H. G.

garw. = O. H. G. garawen, M. H. G. gerwen, to get ready. = O. H. G. garo, M. H. G. gar, gare, ready; cognate with E. yare. See Gear. GARB (2), a sheaf. (F., = O. H. G.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. An heraldic term. = F. garbe, a sheaf. = O. H. G. garba, a sheaf. GARBAGE, offal, refuse. (F.?) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 5. 57. 'The garbage, aluus, intestina;' Levins, 11. 13. Florio translates the Ital, tara by 'the tarc, waste, or garbish of any ware or merchandises.' and doubtless the orig sense was morely trafuse.' We may dise; and doubtless, the orig. sense was merely 'refuse.'

therefore, readily suppose it to have been a coincd word from the base garb- of the verb to garble; the sense being 'garble-age.' See Garble. Cf. F. grabeau, refuse of drugs (Littré).

GARBLE, to select for a purpose, to mutilate or corrupt an account. (F.,—Span.,—Arab.) The old sense was 'to pick out,' or 'sort,' so as to get the best of a collection of things. The statute I Rich. III, c. 11, was made 'for the remedie of the excessive price and badnesse of bowstaues, which partly is growen because the merchants will not suffer any garbeling or sorting of them to be made.' There was an officer called the Garbler of spices, whose business was to visit the shops, examine the spices, and garble, or make clean the same; mentioned an. 21 Jacob. c. 1. See Blount's Nomolexicon, where it is further explained that 'garbling of spice, drugs, &c. (1 Jacob. cap. 19) is nothing but to purific it from the dross and dirt that is mixed with it.' = O. F. garbeler *, not recorded, but a mere variant of the O. F. grabeller, 'to garbell spices, also to examine precisely, sift nearly;' Cot. The same word as Span. garbillar, to sift, garble; Ital. garbellare, 'to garbell wares' (Florio); and Low Lat. garbeldare, to sift, a word which occurs A.D. 1269 (Ducange). - Span. garbillo, a coarse sieve, sifter. - Pers. gharbil, a sieve; Arab. ghirbal, a large sieve. The word seems to be Arab. rather than Pers.; cf. Arab. gharbalat, sifting, searching; Rich. Dict. 1046. can hardly identify Span. garbillo with Span. cribillo, a small sieve, which is a corruption of Lat. cribellum, a small sieve; cf. Lat. cribellare, to sift. Cribellum is a dimin. of cribrum, a sieve. - Lat. base eri-, a variant of ere-, as seen in ere-tum, supine of erenere, base eri-, a variant of ere-, as seen in ere-tum, supine of erenere, to separate; see Disorest, Disoern. — SKAR to separate; Fick, i. 811. Der. garbler.

GARBOIL, a disturbance, commotion. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Antony, i. 3. 61; ii. 2.67.—O.F. garbouil, 'a garboile, hurliburly, great stirre;' Cot. Cf. Span. garbullo, a crowd, multitude; Ital. garbuglio, 'a trouble, a garboil, a disorder;' Florio.

β. Of uncertain origin. Referred by Diez to Lat. garr-ire, to prattle, chatter; in conjunction with bullire, to boil, bubble, boil with rage.

γ. The latter part of the word is thus well accounted for; see Boil. The former part is less sure, and seems to be more directly from the Ital. gara, strife,

Der. garden, vb.; garden-ing, garden-er.

GARGLE, to rinse the throat. (F.) In Cotgrave. Modified from O. F. gargouiller, just as the M. E. gargyll (a gargoyle) is from O. F. gargouille. O. F. gargouille, to gargele, or gargarize; Cot. O. F. gargouille; for which see Gargoyle.

Gargouille, gor which see Gargoyle.

Gargories, used by Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 2 (R.), is from O. F. gargarizer, to gargle (Cot.), borrowed (through Lat. gargarizer) from G. E. gargarizer, and the gargele.

from O. F. gargarizer, to gargle (Cot.), borrowed (through Lat. gargarizare) from Gk. γαργαρίζειν, to gargle. This is a reduplicated form from the φ GAR, to swallow, devour; as explained in Curtius, ii. 80. The words were probably confused. Der. gargle, sb. GARGOYLE, in architecture, a projecting spout. (F., — L.) M. E. gargoyle, also spelt gargyll. The spelling gargoyle is in Lidgate's Troybook (R.); we read of 'gargylles of golde fiersly faced with spoutes running' in Hall's Chron. Henry VIII, an. 19.—O. F. gargouille, 'the weesle or weason [weazand] of the throat; also, the mouth of a spout, a gutter;' Cot. Cf. Span. gargola, a gargoyle. 8. We find, in Ital., not only gargatta, gargozza, the throat, windβ. We find, in Ital., not only gargatta, gargozza, the throat, wind-pipe, but also gorgozza, the throat, gullet, dimin. of gorga, the throat. Thus gargoyle is merely the dimin. of F. gorge, the throat; throat. Thus gargoyle is merely the dimin. of F. garge, the throat; see Gorge.

\gamma\]. The change of vowel was due to confusion with Lat. gargarizare; just as gargle (q.v.) was confused with M. E. gargarise (explained under Gargle).

GARISH, GAIRISH, glaring, staring, showy. (Scand). 'The garish sun;' Romeo, iii. 2. 25. 'Day's garish eye;' Milton, Il Penseroso, 141. From the verb to gare. Chaucer uses the slightly different form gauren, to stare; C. T. 5332, 14375.

\b change of s to r, we see that gare, to stare, is a variant of M. E. gases, to gaze. (For an example of the change, see Frore.) See Gaze.

GARIAND, a wreath. (F.) In early use. M. E. gerlond, Chaucer, C. T. 668. The form gerlaundesche occurs in Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 23.—O. F. garlande, 'a garland;' Cot. [The mod. F. guirlande is borrowed from Ital. ghirlanda.] Cf. Span. guirnalda, Ital. ghirlanda, a garland.

Span. guirnalda, Ital. ghirlanda, Ital. ghirland fined gold, fine ornament. ¶ Mr. Wedgwood's explanation, that the r is intrusive, and that it belongs to the sb. gala, wholly fails for the Ital. and Span. forms. Der. garland, vb.

GARLIO, a plant of the genus Allium. (E.) Lit. 'spear-plant;' from the shape of the leaves. M. E. garlik; Chaucer, C. T. 636. A. S. garleac, used to translate Lat. allium in Ælfric's Glossary, ed. Somner, Nomina Herbarum. - A. S. gdr, a spear; and lede, a leek, plant. + Icel. geirlaukr, sim. formed. See Gar (1), Gore, and Leek.

The W. garlleg is borrowed from E. See Barley.

GARMENT, a robe, coat. (F., -O. H. G.) A corruption of

M. E. garnement, P. Plowman, C. x. 119. - O. F. garnement, garniment, a robe; formed (with suffix -ment = Lat. -mentum) from O. F. garnir, GARNER, a granary, store for grain. (F.,-L.) M. E. garner; Chaucer, C. T. 595.-O. F. gernier, a variant of grenier, a granary (Burguy).-Lat. granaria, a granary. Doublet, granary, q. v.

Der. garner, verb.

GARNET, a kind of precious stone. (F.,-L.) 'And gode garnettes bytwene;' Romance of Emare, ed. Ritson, l. 156. A corruption of granat, a form also used in E., and found in Cotgrave. - O. F. grenat [older form prob. granat], 'a precious stone called a granat, or garnet; Cot. Cf. Span. granate, Ital. granato, a garnet.—Low Lat. granatus, a garnet.—So called from its resemblance in colour and shape to the grains or seeds of the pomegranate; Webster. - Lat. granatus, having many grains or seeds; granatum (for malum granatum), a pomegranate.—Lat. granum, a grain; see Grain.

GARNISH, to embellish, decorate. (F.,—O. Low G.) In Spenser, Verses addressed to Lord Ch. Howard, l. 2; Prompt. Parv.

p. 188. Also spelt warnish in M. E.; the pp. warnished is in Will. of Palerne, l. 1083, —O.F. garnir, guarnir, older form warnir, to avert, warn, defend, fortify, garnish (Burguy); pres. part. garnis-ant, warnisant, whence E. garn-ish, warn-ish. Of O. Low G. origin; the form of the original is best shewn by A. S. warnian (also wearnian), to beware of; cf. O. Sax. warnian, to refuse, O. Friesic warnia, to give a pledge; all from the notion of 'wariness.' See further under Warn. Der. garnish, sb., garnish-ment, garnisher; also garnisture (Cotgrave), from F. garnish-ment, garnishment' (Cot.), formative, from Low Lat. garnishment' (Cot.), formative, from Low Lat. garnishment garnishment' (Cot.), formative, garnishment' (Cot.), tower. = O. F. garir, older spelling warir, to preserve, save, keep. O. H. G. warjam, to defend; cf. A. S. wariam, to hold, defend. The latter is derived from A. S. war, wary. See Wary and Warn. The O. F. garir is perhaps rather of Low G. than of High G. origin, as such seems to be also the case with the O. F. garnir; see Garnish.

GARRISON, a supply of soldiers for defending a fort. (F., = O. Low G.) M. E. garnison, provision, in La Belle Dame sans Mercy, l. 175, pr. in Political, Religious, and Love Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 57; Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xvii. 294 (footnote), where another spelling is warnyson, and other reading is varnysing. - O. F. garnison, store, provision, supply—O. F. garnis-ant, pres. part. of garnir, to supply, garnish; see Garnish. Thus garrison nearly is a doublet of garniture; also (nearly) of garment.

¶ Not quite the same word as M. E. garison or warison, on which see note to Warvsoun in Gloss. to Bruce.

Warysour in Gloss. to Bruce.

GARROTE, GARROTE, a method of effecting strangulation. (Span.,—C.) 'Garrotte, a machine for strangling criminals, used in Spain. Many attempts to strangle were made by thieves called garrotters, in the winter of 1862-63. An act was passed in 1863 to punish these acts by flogging;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. [See garrot and garroter in Cotgrave.]—Span. garrote, a cudgel, tying a rope tight, strangling by means of an iron collar. Formed, with diminishing of the from Span garra a claw a talon clutch whence also the suffix -ote, from Span. garra, a claw, a talon, clutch, whence also the suffix -ote, from Span. garra, a claw, a talon, clutch, whence also the phrase echarle a uno la garra, to grasp, imprison. Of Celtic origin; connected with Breton gar, garr, W. and Corn. gar, the shank of the leg (Diez); cognate with Irish cara, the leg. — KAR, to run, move. See Car. Der. garrotte, verb; garrotter; and see garter.

GARRULOUS, talkative. (L.) 1. Milton has garrulity, Sams. Agonistes, 491; and it occurs in Cotgrave, to translate F. garrulité,

2. The adj. garrulous from Lat. acc. garrulitatem, talkativeness. occurs in Chapman's Homer, Comment. on Iliad, b. iii; note 2. It is borrowed from Lat. directly, by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, strenu-ous, &c. - Lat. garrulus, talkative. Formed, with suffix oss, sections, sections, the same section of the s Leaf (15th cent.), l. 519. The order was instituted by Edw. III, 23 April, 1349.—O. F. gartier, in dialects of N. France (Hécart), 23 April, 1349.—O. F. gartier, in dialects of N. France (Hécart), spelt jartier in Cotgrave, and explained by him as 'a garter; mod. F. jarretière. Closely connected with O. F. garret (Burguy), mod. F. jarret, the ham of the leg; both words being alike formed from an O. F. garre* (equivalent to Span. garra, a claw, talon).—Bret. gar, garr, the shank of the leg; cf. W. gar, the shank; see Garrote. Der. garter, verb, All's Well, ii. 3. 265.

GAS, an aeriform fluid. (Dutch.) The term is known to have been a pure invention. The Belgian chemist Van Helmont (died A.D. 1644) invented two corresponding terms, gas and blas; the former came into use, the latter was forgotten. We may call it a Dutch word, as gas is the Du. spelling.

As the word is thus known to have been an invention, it is absurd to find an origin for it.

known to have been an invention, it is absurd to find an origin for it. The utmost that can be said is that Van Helmont may have had in his mind the Du. geest, spirit, ghost, volatile fluid, as a foundation for gas; and the verb blazen, to blow, as a foundation for blas. Der.

GATE, a door, opening, way. (E.) [In prov. E. and M. E. we often find gate = a street; this use is Scand.] M. E. gate, yate, yate. Spelt gate, O. Eng. Homilies, cd. Morris, i. 237, l. 31; 3ate, yate. Spelt gate, O. Eng. Homilies, cd. Morris, i. 237, l. 31; 3ate, Will. of Palerne, 3757; 3et, Ancren Riwle, p. 74.—A. S. geat, a gate, opening; Matt. vii. 13. + Du. gat, a hole, opening, gap, mouth. + Icel. gat, an opening; gata, a way, path, street. + Swed. gata, a street, lane. + Dan. gade, a street. + Goth. gatwo, a street. + G. gasse, a street. B. The root is seen in A. S. gitan, to get, hence, to arrive at, reach; so that gate = a way to get a thing a passage lane opening. First so that gate = a way to get at a thing, a passage, lane, opening; Fick, iii. 98. See Got. (So also O. H. G. gazza, a street, is from kezzan, to get.)

¶ Not from the verb to go. Der. gat-ed, gate-way.

GATHER, to draw into a heap, collect. (E.) Just as father corresponds to M. E. fader, so gather corresponds to M. E. gadern or gaderien, to gather; as also mod. E. together corresponds to M. E. togideres. 'And gadred hem alle togideres' - and gathered them all together; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 80. – A. S. gædrian, gaderian; Luke, vi. 44; Grein, i. 366, 373.

B. Formed, with causal suffix -ian, together; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 80.—A. S. gadrian, gaderian; Luke, vi. 44; Grein, i. 366, 373.

B. Formed, with causal suffix -ian, from A. S. gader, together, preserved in the compound gader-tang, associated with (Grein, i. 365), and also as gador or geador, together (Grein, i. 491); see Together.

Y. Again, the suffix -er or -or (orig. -ar) has a frequentative force, and is a mere addition. A shorter form appears in the A. S. gad, society, fellowship, company; whence also the A. S. gad-ei-ing, an associate, comrade; cf. Goth. gad-il-iggs (= gad-il-ings), a sister's son, Col. iv. 10. According to Fick (iii. 98) the Teutonic base GAD means to fit, to suit, and is also the origin of E. gadd. see GAD means to fit, to suit, and is also the origin of E. good; see Good. + Du. gaderen, to collect, from gader, together; the base GAD appears in gade, a spouse, consort; with which cf. G. gatte, a husband, gattin, a wife. Der. gather, sb.; gather-ing, gather-er.

GAUD, a show, ornament. (L.) Also spelt gawd, Shak. Mids. Also spelt gawa, Snak, Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 33. Chaucer uses gaude in the sense of 'specious trick;' C.T. 12323.—Lat. gaudium, gladness, joy; used in Low Lat. of 'a large bead on a rosary;' whence M. E. gauded, furnished with large beads. 'A peire of bedes gauded al with grene;' Chaucer, C. T. 159 (see note in Clarendon Press edition); or see Gaudees in Halliwell. Cf. Lat. gaudere, to rejoice, pt. t. gaussus sum; from a base gare. + Gk. γalew, to rejoice; γαῦροι, proud; see Curtius, i. 211. Der. gaudey, gaude is showey: 'In gaudy grene' Chapper C. T. 2081: gaudilly gaude is showey.

radiev, to rejoice; γαῦρος, proud; see Curtius, i. 211. Der. gaud-y, i. e. show-y; 'In gaudy grene,' Chaucer, C. T. 2081; gaud-i-ly, gaud-i-ness. Doublet, joy, q. v.

GAUGE, GAGE, to measure the content of a vessel. (F., - Low L.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. ii. 2. 208 (where the old edd. have gage). 'Or bore or gage the hollow caues uncouth;' Surrey, tr. of Virgil, Æneid, ii. 52. - G.F. gauger (printed gaugir in Roquefort), later jauger, 'to gage, or measure a piece of [or?] cask;' Cot. - O. F. gauge* (not found), old form of jauge, 'a gage, the instrument wherewith a cask is measured, also an iron leaver;' Cot. - Low Lat. gaugis the standard measure of a wine-cask (a. p. 1446): Ducanyer. gaugia, the standard measure of a wine-cask (A.D. 1446); Ducange. Also spelt gauja; and cf. Low Lat. gaugatum, the gauging of a winecask; gaugettum, a tribute paid for guaging, a guage; gaugiator, a gauger.

B. All these words are probably further allied to Low gauger. β . All these words are probably further. Lat. jalagium, the right of gauging wine-casks; jalea, a gallon, F. jalle, a bowl; and hence related also to E. gallon; see Gallon.

Forby as a Norfolk, and in Moor as a Suffolk word. an East-Anglian word, it is presumably Scandinavian. It corresponds to Norweg. gand [= gant], a thin pointed stick, a tall and thin man, an overgrown stripling (Aasen); we also find Swed. dial. gank, a lean and nearly starved horse (Rietz). Cf. 'arm-gaunt steed,' Shak. Ant. and Cleop. i. 5. 48. Der. gaunt-ly, gaunt-ness. GAUNTLET, an iron glove. (F.,—Scand.) In Spenser, F. Q.

i. 4. 33. — O. F. gantelet, 'a gantlet, or arming-glove;' Cot. Formed, with dimin. suffixes -el- and -et, from O. F. gant, a glove. Of Scand. origin. — O. Swed. wante, a glove (Ihre); whence O. F. gant by the usual change of w to g in French; see Garnish. — Dan vante, a witten — leel with (stem watter care). mitten. + Icel. vöttr (stem vatt = vant), a glove. + Du. want, a mitten.

B. The most probable source is O. Swed. winda, to wind, hence to involve, wrap, cognate with E. wind, verb. See Wind.

GAUZE, a thin silken fabric. (F., - Palestine.) 'Gawz, a thin sort of silk-stuff;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. - O. F. gazz, 'cushoir with the contract of the canvas, the thin canvas that serves women for a ground unto their cushions or pursework; also, the sleight stuffe tiffany;' Cot. Of historical origin; so called because first brought from Gaza, in Palestine. Cf. Low Lat. gazetum, wine brought from Gaza; gazzatum, gauze.

¶ Several kinds of stuffs are named from places; e.g. gauze. damask from Damascus, calico from Calicut, &c.

GAVELKIND, a peculiar sort of tenure. (C.) ed. 1627. 'Gavelkind, a tenure, or custom, whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death among all his sons;' Blount's a. The word has clearly taken its present Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. form owing to a supposed derivation from M. E. gauel (with u=v), tribute, occurring in Ancren Riwle, p. 202, &c., and derived from A. S. gáfol, tribute (Leo, Bosworth); with the E. suffix kind (as in man-kind). β. Yet this is a mere adaptation, the word being really of Celtic origin, and the custom a remnant from O. British.—Irish gabhailcine, the ancient law of gavelkind; where gabhail signifies a receiving, a tenure, from gabhaim, I take, receive; and cine signifies a race, tribe, family; so that the word means 'family-tenure.' Cf. W.

gafael, Corn. gavel, a hold, holding, tenure; and cenedl, a tribe.

GAVOTTE, a kind of dance. (F.) Spelt gavot in Arbuthnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus, as quoted in Todd's Johnson. - O. F. gavots, 'a kind of brawle [dance], danced, commonly, by one alone;' Cot. Of historical origin; 'orig. a dance of the Gavotes, i. e. people of Gap;' Brachet. Gap is in the department of the Upper Alps, and in the old province of Dauphine.

GAWK, a simpleton, awkward fellow. (E.) The orig. sense is a 'cuckoo.' M. E. gowke, a cuckoo, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 927. The dimin. form goky is used in the sense of 'simpleton;' P. Plowman, B. xi. 299. – A.S. geúc, a cuckoo; Grein, i. 495. + Icel. gaukr, a cuckoo. + Dan. giög, a cuckoo. + Swed. gök, a cuckoo; en otacksam gök, an unthankful fellow. + O. H. G. couch, M. H. G. gouch, G. gauch, a cuckoo, a simpleton. Cf. also Lat. cucus, a cuckoo, a fool; used as a term of reproach. An imitative word; see Cuckoo. Der. gawk-y, awkward, ungainly.

Der. gawk-y, awkward, ungainly.

GAY, lively, merry, sportive. (F., -M.H.G.) M.E. gay, Chaucer, C. T. 3213; Will. of l'alerne, 816; King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 3204. - O. F. gai, merry; spelt gay in Cotgrave. -M. H. G. gahe, O. H. G. gaihi (older form kihli), G. jähe, quick, sudden, rash, and hence, lively; we also find M.H. G. gaich, with the same sense. M. H. G. gain, G. gehen, to go; cognate with E. go; see Go. Cf. the
E. slang phrase 'to be full of go.' Der. gai-ly, Will. of Palerne, 1625; gai-e-ty, used by Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, c. 5. s, 5 [not 15] (R.), from O. F. gayeté, 'mirth,' Cot. Also jay, q. v.

GAZE, to behold fixedly, stare at. (Scand.) M. E. gasen. 'When GAZE, to behold fixedly, stare at. (Scand.) M. E. gasen. 'When that the peple gased up and down;' Chaucer, C. T. 8879. Of Scand. origin, and perfectly preserved in Swed. dial. gasa, to gaze, stare, as in the phrase gasa dkring se, to gaze or stare about one (Rietz). B. The original notion is 'to stare in terror,' or 'to stick to the spot in terror; 'from the Goth. base gais, which occurs in us-gaisjan, to make utterly afraid, and us-geis-nan, to be amazed.—

GHAIS, to stick fast (esp. with terror); see this root discussed
s.v. Aghast, sect. B.
By the change of s to r, we have the form gauren, to stare, Chaucer, C. T. 10504, 14375. Der. gaze, sb., gaz-ing-stock; also gar-ish.
GAZELILE, a kind of antelope. (F., - Arab.)

Formerly gazel " Gazel, a kind of Arabian deer, or the antilope of Barbary; 'Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.—O. F. gazel, gazelle, 'a kind of wild goat;' Cot. 'Of Oriental origin; introduced from Africa by St. Louis' crusaders;' Brachet. -- Arab. gkazdl, 'a fawn just able to walk; a wild goat;' Richardson's Dict. p. 1050. Explained as 'a gazelle' in Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 440.

GAZETTE, a small newspaper. (F., -Ital.) 'As we read a gazett;' Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. ser. I (R.) -O. F. gazette, 'a certain Venetian coin scarce worth our farthing; also, a bill of news, or a short relation of the generall occurrences of the time, forged most bform of Eingender, q.v.

8. Being a commonly at Venice, and thence dispersed, every month, into most it correspond parts of Christendom: parts of Christendom; 'Cot. B. The word is certainly from Ital. gazzetta, but that word has two meanings, viz. (1) 'a yoong piot of magot a pie' [mag-pie]; and (2) 'a small coine in Italie;' Florio. Now the value of the latter (less than a farthing) was so small, that Mr. Wedgwood's objection is sound, viz. 'that it never could have been the price either of a written or a printed sheet; 'so that this (the usual) explanation is to be doubted. C. We may rather suppose that the word gazzetta in the sense of magpie (and hence tittle-tattle) may have given name to the original Venetian gazette, first published about 1530 (Haydn); and hence came the Ital. gazzettare, to chatter as a magpie, to write gazettes (Florio).

D. Gazzetta, a magpie, about 1536 (Haydn); and hence came the Ital. gazzettare, to chatter as a magpie, to write gazettes (Florio). D. Gazzetta, a magpie, is a dimin. from Ital. gazz, a magpie (Florio). E. Gazzetta, a small coin, is prob. a dimin. from Lat. gaza, treasure, wealth, a word borrowed from Gk. γάζα, wealth, a treasury; which, again, is said to be from the Persian. ¶ 1. The word gazet, meaning a small coin, occurs in Massinger, Maid of Honour, iii. I (speech by Jacomo), and in Ben Jonson, The Fox, ii. I (speech by Peregrins). 2. In Chambers' Etym. Dict. it is suggested that the coin gazzetta was paid, not for the gazette itself, but for the privilege of preamed it: and it is added that it was 'a written sheet, which appeared it; and it is added that it was 'a written sheet, which appeared about the middle of the 16th century, during the war with Soliman III.' The reader can take his choice. Der. gazett-eer, orig, a writer for a gazette, now used to denote a geographical dictionary.

GEAR, dress, harness, tackle. (E.) The orig. sense is 'preparation.' M. E. gere, Chaucer, C. T. 354.—A. S. gearwe, pl. fem., preparation, dress, ornament; Grein, i. 495; whence was formed the verb gearwian, to prepare, cognate with Icel. göra, to cause; see [Gev(a)] A. O. Say green, i. gen. Logal görgi göra, to cause; see Gar(2).+ O.Sax. garuwi, gear. + Icel. görvi, gjörvi, gear. + O.H.G. garawi, M. H. G. garwe, gear; whence O. F. garbe, and E. garb; see Garb (1).

B. These sbs. are derived from an older adjective, preserved in Shak. in the form yare; viz. A.S. gearu, ready, Grein, i.

served in Shak. in the form yare; viz. A. S. gearu, ready, Grein, i. 493; O. Sax. garu; O. H. G. garo (cf. G. gar, entirely); Du. gaar, dressed; see Yare. Der. gear, verb; gear-ing. Doublet, garb. GED, the fish called a pike. (Scand.) A North. E. word.—Icel. gedda, a pike; Swed. gädde; allied to Icel. gaddr, a goad; see Gad, Goad. Named from the sharp thin head; whence also the name 'pike.' So also gar-fish, q. v.

GELLATINE, a substance which dissolves in hot water and cools a significant of the state of t

as a jelly. (F., -L.) 'Gelatina, any sort of clear gummy juice; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. The mod. form is French. - F. gélatine. -Low Lat. gelatina, as cited by Kersey; formed from Lat. gelatis, pp. of gelare, to congeal.—Lat. gelu, frost; allied to E. cool, cold; see Cool. Der. gelatin-ate, gelatin-ous; and see Gelid. From the same source, jelly.

GELD, to emasculate. (Scand.) M. E. gelden; Wyclif, Matt. xix. 12. 'Geldyn, castro, testiculo, emasculo; Prompt. Parv. p. 190. [The A.S. gylte, gelt, is due to Somner, and unauthorised.] - Icel. [Inc A.S. gitte, gett, is due to Somner, and unauthorised.]—Icel. gelda. + Swed. gitta (for gülda). + Dan. gilde. Possibly related to Goth. giltha, a sickle; Mark, iv. 29. Der. geld-er; also geld-ing (Chaucer, C. T. 693), from Icel. gelding, a gelding = Swed. gälling = Dan. gilding. On the suffix-ing, see March, A.S. Gram. sect. 228. GELID, cool, cold. (L.) germans, i. e. cousins having the same grandfather. In Shak. Wint. Ta. v. 4. 802; Timon, iv. 3. 344; Hamlet, v. 2. 165. Formerly also spelt germain, as in Cotgrave, and orig. derived rather from the French than directly from Latin. The phrase 'cosins germains' (with the pl. adj. in s according to the F. idiom) occurs in Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus, C. T. Group B, 2558.—O. F. germain, 'germaine, come of the same stock;' Cot.—Lat. germanus, fully akin, said of brothers and sisters having the same parents. From the same root as Germ, q. v.

GERMEN, GERMINAL, GERMINATE; see Germ.

The derivative gers

GERUND, a part of a Latin verb. (L.) The derivative gerundine is used as a coined word in Beaum. and Fletcher, Wit at Several Weapons, i. 1 (speech of Wittypate). - Lat. gerundium, a gerund. - Lat. gerundus, that which is to be done or carried on; fut. part. pass. of gerere, to carry on, perform. — \checkmark GAS, to bring, cause to go; an extension of \checkmark GA, to go, come; allied to E. come. Der. gerund-i-al (from gerundi-um). See also below.

GESTATION, the carrying of young in the womb. (F., — I.,) It occurs in the Index to Holland's tr. of Pliny. — O. F. gestation, 'a bearing, or carrying; 'Cot. - Lat. acc. gestationem, from nom. gestatio, a carrying. - Lat. gestatus, pp. of gestare, to carry; intensive form of gerere, to carry. See above. Der. gestat-or-y.

GESTICULATE, to make gestures. (L.) 'Or what their servile apes gesticulate;' Ben Jonson, Poetaster, To the Reader (an Epilogue).—Lat. gesticulats, pp. of gesticulari, to make mimic gestures.—Lat. gesticulus, a mimic gesture; formed, with suffixes -cuand -l- from gesti-- gestu-, crude form of gestus, a gesture. - Lat, gestus, pp. of gerre, to carry; reflexively, to behave. See Gorund.

Der. gesticulat-ion, gesticulat-or, gesticulat-or-y.

GESTURE, a movement of the body. (L.) In Shak. Temp. iii.

3. 37. - Low Lat. gestura, a mode of action. - Lat. gesturus, fut. part. act. of gerere, to carry; reflexively, to behave oneself. See Gerund and Gesticulate.

GET, to seize, obtain, acquire. (E.) M. E. geten, pt. t. gat, pp. geten; Chaucer, C. T. 5792, 293.—A.S. gitan, also gytan, gietan, geotan; pt. t. gat, pp. giten; rarely used in the simple form, but common in the compounds on-gitan, and-gitan, for-gitan, be-gitan, the compounds of the compounds &c.; Grein, ii. 346, i. 511. + Iccl. geta. + Goth. gitan, in the comp. bi-gitan, to find, obtain. + Lat. -hendere (base hed), in the comp. pre-the same root are ap-pre-hend, com-pre-hend, re-pre-hend, &c.; also apprise, comprise, enterprise, surprise; impregnable, &c.

GEWGAW, a plaything, specious trifle. (E.) 'Gewgaws and gilded puppets;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Four Plays in One, Triumph of Time, sc. t. Spelt gewgaudes, id. Woman's Prize, i. 4 (Rowland). Also gugawes, Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, c. 4. 'He counteth them for gygawes;' Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Court, 1060. Cotgrave explains babiole as a trifle, whimwham, gugaw, or said a trifle, whimwham, gugaw, or said a trifle, who who who was a described to the said of the form of the said of toy; and fariboles as 'trifles, nifles, film-flams, why-whaws, idle discourses.' The latter form why-whaw is a mere imitation of the older gugaw. The form gugaw is a corruption of M. E. giuegoue (= givegove); worldes weole, ant wunne, ant wurschipe, and over swuche giuegoues = the world's wealth and joy and worship, and other such gewgaws; Ancren Riwle, p. 196. β . The hard sound of g, and gewgaws; Ancren Riwle, p. 196. gewgaws; Ancren Rivie, p. 196. B. The hard sound of g, and the pl. ending in -en, shew the word to be E. Also u between two vowels=v=older f; so that ginegoue=gifegofe. Here gife is the dat. of gifu, a gift, and signifies ' for a gift; ' or it may simply stand for the aom. gifu. And gofe may be A. S. geafe, a gift, Grein, i. 401; cf. A.S. geafe, the dat. case of a sh. signifying 'grace' or 'favour;' Diplematarium Anglicum Ævi Saxonici, ed. Thorpe, p. 459, l. 2.

Y. In any case, the word is clearly a reduplicated form the work wifer to give; and the sense is 'civerage and iff'. 459, l. 2. Y. In any case, the word is clearly a reduplicated form from the verb gifan, to give; and the sense is 'given as a gift,' a trifling present, favour, trinket.

8. It is preserved in North E. 'giffgaff, interchange of discourse, mutual donation and reception; hence the proverb—giffgaff makes good fellowship;' Brockett's Glossary of Northern Words.

gegaf, base, vile, is impossible. In that word, the ge- is a mere unaccented prefix; yet the latter syllable may be from the same root. Cf. Icel. gyli-gjöf, gewgaws, showy gifts; where -gjöf = E. -gaw.

GEYSIR, a hot spring in Iceland. (Icelandic.) Geysir, the name of a famous hot spring in Iceland.... The word grain "a gusher," must be old, as the inflexive ir is hardly used but in obsolete words; 'Cleasby and Vigfusson. - Icel. geysa, to gush; a secondary words; 'Cleasby and Vigfusson. — Icel. geysa, to gusn; a secondary form from giosa, to gush; see Gush.

GHASTLY, terrible; (E.) The k has been inserted, for no very good reason. M. E. gastly; 'gastly for to see;' Chaucer, C. T., 1986.—A. S. gastlie, terrible; Grein, i. 374. Formed, with suffix -lic (= like, -ly), from a base gaist (from an older gist), which is an extension of the base gais (from an older gis) seen in the Goth. usgais-jan, to terrify, and in the Goth. usgais-jan, to terrify, and in the Goth. wsgais-nan, to be astonished.

Not to be confused with ghostly, and chartli-ness: cf. also pasted. K. Lear, ii. 1. 57; gastness, q.v. Der. ghastli-ness; cf. also gasted, K. Lear, ii. 1. 57; gastness, Oth. v. 1. 106.

GHERKIN, a small cucumber. (Du., - Pers.) The h is inserted to keep the g hard. 'Gherkins or Guerkins, a sort of pickled cucumbers; 'Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Spelt gherkin in Skinner, ed. 1671. Shortened for agherkin. - Du. agurkje, a gherkin; cf. 'Gherkins, agurkes' in Sewel's Eng.-Du. Dict. ed. 1754. B. Note that the Du. dimin. suffix -ken was formerly used (as explained by Ten Kate) where the dimin. suffix -je now occurs; so that agurkje stands for an older form agurkken, whence the E. gherkin must have been borrowed, with the loss merely of initial a. The form agurkken or agurken presupposes the older form agurke, cited from Sewel, y. Of Oriental origin; the a- is due to the Arab. article al; -gur-kgost; Chaucer, C. T. 2770.—A. S. gást, a spirit; Grein, i. 371. + Du. geest. + Dan. geist, genius, a spirit (perhaps borrowed from G.). + G. geist, a spirit.

B. The root is the Teutonic GIS = Aryan + G. geist, a spirit. β. The root is the Teutonic GIS = Aryan GHIS, to terrify; as seen in Goth. ns-gais-jan, to terrify. It seems to have been given as denoting an object of terror, much as in mod. E. Closely allied to ghastly, from which it differs, however, in the vowel-See Ghastly; and see Yeast. Der. ghost-ly, ghost-li-ness. GHOUL, a kind of demon. (Pers.) Pron. gool, to rime with cool. - Pers. ghól, an imaginary sylvan demon; supposed to devour men and animals; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1062.

GIAOUR, an infidel. (Ital., -Pers.) 'In Dr. Clarke's Travels, this word, which means infidel, is always written djour. Lord Byron adopted the Ital. spelling usual among the Franks of the Levant; note 14 to Lord Byron's poem of The Giaour. — Pers. gáwr, an infidel; Rich. Dict. p. 1227. An Aryan word (Max Müller). GIANT, a man of great size. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) The i w The i was formerly e; but i has been substituted to make the word look more like the Lat, and Gk, forms. M. E. geant, geaunt; Chaucer, C. T. 13738; King Alisaunder, 3465.—O. F. geant, 'a giant;' Cot.—Lat. acc. gigantem, from nom. gigas, a giant.—Gk. γίγαs, a giant (stem γιγαντ-). β. From the 4 GAN, to beget, as if the word meant 'produced;' the prefix ye- seeming to be no more than a reduplication, though sometimes explained from Gk. 74, the earth, as if the word meant

'earth-born.' But this is merely a specimen of popular etymology. Cf. Gk. γί-γ(ε)ν-ομαι, I am born. Der. gigant-ic, q. v.; giant-ess. GIBBERISH, nonsensical talk. (E.) Holinshed speaks of 'gibberishing Irish;' Descr. of Ireland, c. I. 'All kinds of gibberish the had learnt to know; Drayton, The Mooncalf (R.) Formed from the old verb gibber, to gabble; Hamlet, i. 1. 116. This is merely an imitative word, formed as a variant of jabber, and allied to gabble. The suffix er is frequentative, and the base gib is a weak form of gab. See Gabble, Jabber.

GIBBET, a gallows. (F.) M. E. gibbet, gibet, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, i. 106; 'hangen on a gibet;' Ancren Riwle, p. 116.—O. F. gibbet, 'a gibbet;' Cot. (mod. F. gibet).

β. Of unknown origin; Littré suggests a comparison with O. F. gibet, a large stick (Roquefort); apparently a dimin. of O. F. gibbe, a sort of arm, an implement fort); apparently a dimin. of O. F. gibbe, a sort of arm, an implement for stirring the earth and rooting up plants, apparently a hoe (Roquefort). In this case, the old sense of gibbet was prob. 'an instrument of torture.' γ. Perhaps of Celtic origin; cf. Irish giob-aim, I tear, tug, pull; gibin, a jag. But this a mere guess.

GIBBON, a kind of ape. (?) Cf. F. gibbon, in Buffon.

GIBBOUS, humped, swelling. (F., -L.) 'Its round and gibbous back;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 26. § 5. The suffix rous is put for F. -eux, by analogy with other words in which -ous represents O. F. -os (later -eux). F. gibbeux, 'hulch, bunched, much represents O. F. -os (later -eus). - F. gibbeus, hulch, bunched, much swelling; Cot. - Lat. gibbosus, hunched. Formed, with suffix -osus, from Lat. gibba, a hump, hunch; cf. gibbus, bent; gibber, a hump. Cf. Skt. kubja, hump-backed, kumbh, kubh, to be crooked, a lost verb seen in the deriv. kumbha, a pot (Benfey). See Cubit and Hump, Der. gibbous-ness.

Fletcher, Woman-hater, i. 2. M. E. gibelet; see Wright's Vocab. i. 179.—O. F. gibelet, which, according to Littré, is the old form of F. gibelotte, stewed rabbit. Of unknown origin; not necessarily related to F. gibier, game. Cf. Gael. giaban, a fowl's gizzard.

GIDDY, unsteady, dizzy. (E.) M. E. gidi, gydi; Rob. of Glouc. p. 68, l. 3. [The A. S. gidig is unauthorised, being only found in Somner's Dict.] Formed from A. S. gyddian, giddian, gyddigan, to sing, be merry; whence the orig. sense of giddy was 'mirthful.' It is said of Nebuchadnezzar, when his heart was elate with pride, that ongan da gyddigan burh gylp micel' = he began then to sing (or, to be merry or giddy) through great pride; Cadmon, ed. Thorpe, p. 253; see Grein, i. 505. The verb giddian is a derivative from gid, 253; see Grein, 1. 505. The verb giddian is a derivative from gid, gidd, gied, gyd, a song, poem, saying; Grein, i. 504; a common sb., but of obscure origin. Dep. giddi-by, giddi-ness.

The base gid stands for an older gig; see Gig, Jig.

GIER-EAGLE, a kind of eagle. (Du. and F.) In Levit. xi. 18.

The first syllable is Dutch, from Du. gier, a vulture; cognate with G. geier, M. H. G. gir, a vulture. The word eagle is F. Sce Eagle.

GIFT, a thing given, present. (E.) M. E. gift, commonly 3ift, 3eft; Rob. of Glouc. p. 122; P. Plowman, A. iii. 90; B. iii. 99.

[The word is perhaps rather Scand. than E.] = A. S. gift, gyft, are in the sing. but common in the pl. (when it often has the sense of in the sing., but common in the pl. (when it often has the sense of 'nuptials,' with reference to the marriage dowry). In Bosworth's Dict., we find the form gysta, with a note that there is no singular, but immediately below is given a passage from the Laws of Ine, no. 31, in which the word gyft appears as a fem. sing., with the fem. sing. art. sio; see Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 122, sect. 31. In this obscure passage, sio gyf may mean either 'the dowry' or 'the marriage.' + Icel. gift, gipt (pron. gift), a gift. + Du. gift, a gift, present. + Goth. -gibts, -gifts, only in comp. fragibts, fragifts, promise, gift, espousal. + G. gift, chiefly used in comp. mitgift, a dowry. β. All from the corresponding verb, with the suffix -f (for -ti, weak form of -ta). See Give. Der. gift-ed; heaven-gifted, Milton, Samson Agon. 36.

GIG, a light carriage, a light boat. (Scand.) The orig. idea is that of anything that easily whirls or twirls about. In Shak. gig means a boy's top; L. L. L. iv. 3. 167; v. 1. 70, 73. In Chaucer Ho. of Fame, iii. 852, we have: 'This hous was also ful of gigges; In Chaucer, where the sense is uncertain; it may be 'full of whirling things; since we find 'ful . . of other werkings' = full of other movements, immediately below. Dr. Stratman interprets gigges by fiddles; but this is another sense of the same word.

B. The hard g shews it this is another sense of the same word.

p. The nart g snews it to be of Scand. origin, as distinguished from jig, the French form. The mod. Icel. gigja only means 'fiddle,' but the name seems to have been given to the instrument from the rapid motion of the player; been given to the instrument from the rapid motion of the player; cf. Icel. geiga, to take a wrong direction, to rove at random, to look askance; the orig. sense being perhaps 'to keep going.' Some translate Icel. geiga by 'to vibrate, tremble;' cf. Icel. gjögra, to reel, stagger; Prov. E. jigger, a swaggerer; Halliwell. y. Possibly from Teut. GA, to go, which seems to be reduplicated. See Jig. GIGANTIO, giant-like. (L., -Gk.) In Milton, P. L. xi. 659; Sams. Agon. 1249. A coined word, from the crude form giganti- of Lat. gieas, a giant; see Giant.

GIGGLE, to laugh lightly, titter. (E.) 'Giggle, to laugh out, laugh wantonly;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. 'A set of gigglers;' Spectator, no. 158. An attenuated form of M. E. gagelen, to 'gaggle,' or make a noise like a goose; where again gaggle is a weaker form of eachle. 'Gagelin, or cryyn as gees, clingo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 184. Cf. Icel. gagl, a goose; G. kichern, O. Du. ghichelen (Kilian), to giggle. A frequentative form, from an imitative root. See Cackle. Der. giggle, sh., giggl-er., GIGLET, GIGLOT, a wanton woman. In Shak. Meas. for Meas. v. 352; I Hen. VI, iv. 7. 41. Earlier, in Prompt. Parv. p. 194; and see the note. Cf. geglotrye, giddiness; How the Good Wife taught her Daughter, I. 159 (in Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat). A dimin., with suffix -et or -ot, from an older giggle or gigle. Cotgrave has: 'Gadroullette, a minx, gigle, flit, callet, ginte.' Here again, gig-le and gincie (= gig-sy) are connected with Icel. gikkr, a pert per. on, Dan. gisk, a wag; and perhaps with the base gig, applied to rapid motion, and thence to lightness of behaviour. See Gig.

GILD. to overlay with gold. (E.) M. E. gilden. Wyelif. Exod.

GILD, to overlay with gold. (E.) M. E. gilden, Wyclif, Exod. xxvi. 29.—A. S. gylden, only found in the sense 'to pay,' but this is the same word. The y is the usual substitution, by vowel change, for an original s, which appears in the Goth. gulth, gold. Cf. Icel. gylla (for gylda), to gild. See Gold, Guild. Der. gilt, contracted form of gild-ed; gild-er, gild-ing.

GILL (1), an organ of respiration in fishes. (Scand.) 'Gylle of a fische, branchia;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt gile, Wyclif, Tobit, vi. 4. — Dan. gialle, a gill; Swed. gäl. + Icel. gjölnar, sb. pl., the gills of a fish. Cf. Icel. gin, the mouth of a beast. — GHI, to gape, yawn. See Yawn, and see below.

GIII. (2) a raying yawning chasm (Scand.)

GILL (2), a ravine, yawning chasm. (Scand.) Also spelt ghyll; common in place-names, as Dungeon Ghyll. - Icel. gil, a deep narrow glen with a stream at the bottom; geil, a ravine. - 4 GHI, to yawn; see above.

GILL (3), with g soft; a quarter of a pint. (F.) M.E. gille, gylle; P. Plowman, B. v. 346 (where it is written lille-jille).—O.F. gelle, a sort of measure for wine; Roquefort. Cf. Low Lat. gillo. a wine-vessel; gella, a wine-vessel, wine-measure; Ducange. Allied to F. jale, a large bowl; also to E. gallon, which is the augmentative form, since a gallon contains 32 gills. See Gallon.

GILL (4), with g soft; a woman's name; ground-ivy. (L.) The name Gill is short for Gillian, which is in Shak. Com. Errors, iii. I. 31. And Gillian is a softened form of Lat. Iuliana, due to F. pro-31. And Gillian is a softened form of Lat. Inliana, due to F. pronunciation. This personal fem. name is formed from Lat. Inline; see July. B. The ground-ivy was hence called Gill-creep-by-the-ground (Halliwell); or briefly Gill. Hence also Gill-ale, the herb ale-hoof (Hall.); Gill-burnt-tail, an ignis fatuus; Gill-hooter, an owl; Gill-firt, a wanton girl; flirt-gill, the same, Romeo, ii. 4. 162. GILLIE, a boy, page, menial. (Gael. and Irish.) Used by Sir W. Scott; but Spenser also speaks of 'the Irish horse-boyes or cuilles, as they call them; 'View of the State of Ireland, Globe etc., and the same of the Irish horse-boyes or cuilles, as they call them; 'View of the State of Ireland, Globe etc., and Irish gilla a boy lad youth.

GILLYFLOWER, a kind of flower, a stock. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) Spelt gelliflowres in Spenser, Shep. Kal. April, 137. Spelt gilloflower by Cograve. By the common change of r to l, gilloflower stands for giroflower, spelt geraflour in Baret's Dict. (Halliwell); where the ending flower is a mere E. corruption, like the fish in crayfish, q. v. -O. F. giroft'e, 'a gilloflower; and most properly, the clove gilloflower; 'Cot.

B. Here we have clove-gilloflower as the full form of the name, which is Chaucer's cloue gilofre, C. T. 13692; thus confirming the above derivation.

C. From F. clou de girofte, where clou is from Lat. clauus, a nail (see Clove); and girofte is corrupted from Low Lat. caryophyllum, a Latinised form of Gk. καρυόφυλλου, strictly 'nut-leaf,' a clove-tree. (Hence the name means nut-leaf,' or 'nut-leaf,' a clove-tree. (Hence the name means nut-leaf,' or 'nut-leaf,' or 'nut-leaf,' or 'nut-leaf,' or 'nut-leaf,' or 'nut-leaf,' a clove-tree. 'nut-leaf,' or 'nut-leaved clove.') = Gk. κάρυο-, crude form of κάρυον, a nut; and φύλλον, a leaf (= Lat. folium, whence E. foli-age).

GIMBALS, a contrivance for suspending a ship's compass so as to keep it always horizontal. (F., -L.) The contrivance is one which admits of a double movement. The name gimbals is a corruption (with excrescent b) of the older word gimmals, also called a gemmow or gemmow-ring. See also gimbol and gimmal in Halliwell; and the excellent remarks in Nares. 'Gemmow, or Gemmow-ring, a double ring, with two or more links;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. In Shak. 'a gimmal bit' is a horse's bit made with linked rings; Hen. V, ii. chor. 26. The forms gemmow and gimmal correspond to O. F. gemeau, masc., and gemelle, fem., a twin.—Lat. gemellus, a twin; a dimin. form from Lat. geminus, double. See Gemini.

GIMCRACK, a piece of trivial mechanism, slight device, toy. (F.? and C.) Formerly also ginerack. 'This is a ginerack;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Elder Brother, iii. 3; where it is applied to a young man, and signifies 'a fop,' or 'a spruce-looking simpleton.' man, and signines 'a top,' or 'a spruce-looking simpleton. 1. The former syllable may either be gin, an engine, contrivance see Gin (2); or, as would rather appear, is the prov. E. gim or jim, signifying 'neat, spruce, smart;' Halliwell, and Kersey. In the latter case, the spelling ginerack is erroneous. 2. The latter syllable is the splengy; see Halliwell and Nares. It is derived from the prov. E. crack to boast also spelt cracks well exemplified by Nares under the crack, to boast, also spelt crake, well exemplified by Nares under the latter form. Hence a gimerack = a spruce arch lad; or, as a term of contempt, an upstart or fop. Later, it was used of anything showy but slight; esp. of any kind of light machinery or easily broken toy.

Cf. Gael. cracaire, a talker. See Crack.

GIMLET, GIMBLET, a tool for boring holes. (F., -G.)

And see there the gimblets, how they make their entry; Ben Jonson, The Devil is an Ass, i. 1.—O. F. gimbelet, 'a gimlet or piercer;' Cot.—mod. F. gibelet (by loss of m). Formerly (better) spelt guimbelet or guibelet; as seen by quotations in Littré. B. As we also have the form wimble in English with the same sense, the O. F. gu = M. H. G. w. Hence the word is formed (with a frequentative suffix -el, and a dimin. suffix -el) from a Teutonic base WIMB. or WIMP, which is a substitution (for greater ease of pronunciation) & for the base WIND.

y. Of M. H. G. origin; the base wind and frequentative suffix -el produced a form windelen or wendelen, to turn repeatedly, preserved in mod. G. wendel-bohrer, a wimble or gimlet, wendel-baum, an axle-tree, and wendel-treppe, a winding staircase. See Wimble and Wind. There are Celtic forms for gimlet, but they seem to have been borrowed. The word is plainly Teubut they seem to have been borrowed. The word is plainly reutonic; cf. Icel. windla, to wind up, windill, a wisp.

GIMMAL, GIMMAL-RING; see Gimbals.

GIMP, with hard g, a kind of trimming, made of silk, woollen or cotton twist. (F., = Q. H. G.) 'Gimp, a sort of mohair thread covered with the same, or a twist for several works formerly in use;' Bailey's Dict, vol. ii. ed. 1731. Named from a resemblance to the folds of a nun's wimple, or neck-kerchief; at any rate, it is the same word. = F. guimpe, a nun's wimple, or lower part of the hood, gathered in folds round the neck; a shortened form of guimple; thus the index to Cotgrave has: 'the crepin [wimple] of a French hood, guimple, guimpe, guimple. = O. H. G. wimpal, which (according to Littre) meant a summer-dress or light robe; G. wimpel, a pennon, and the statement of the stateme pendant, streamer. See Wimple. It looks as if there has been confusion between the F. guimpe, a wimple, and the F. guipure, a thread of silk lace; since gimp (while answering to the former in form) certainly answers better to the latter in sense. The F. guipure is also of Teutonic origin, from the base WIP, to twist or bind round, appearing in Goth. weipan, to crown, wipja, a crown, waips, a crown = E. wisp, formerly wips. See Wisp. Note further, that wimple and wisp are both, probably, from the same root; which may account for the confusion above noted.

GIN (1), to begin. (E.; pron. with g hard.) Obsolete; or only used as a supposed contraction of begin, though really the orig. word whence begin is formed. It should therefore never be denoted by 'gin; but the apostrophe should be omitted. Common in Shak, Macb. i. 2. 25, &c. M. E. ginnen; Chaucer, C. T. 3020.—A.S. Mact. 1. 2. 25, &c. M. E. ginnen; Chaucer, C. 1. 3020.—A. S., ginnen, to begin; only used in the compounds on-ginnan, to begin, Matt. iv. 7; and be-ginnan, to begin. + Du. be-ginnen; the simple ginnen being unused. + O. H. G. bi-ginnan; G. be-ginnen. + Goth. ginnan, only in the comp. du-ginnan, to begin.

B. Fick (iii. 98) connects it with Icel. gunnr, war; as if the orig. sense was 'to strike.'

Cf. Skt. han, to strike. He also cites the Lithuanian ginu, I defend Cr. Skt. nan, to strike. He also cites the Lithuanian ginu, I defend (connected with genu, I drive), Ch. Slavonic źena, I drive; i. 79, 577.

— (GHAN, to strike. See Begin.

GIN (2), a trap, snare. (1. Scand.; 2. F., -L.)

1. M. E. gin; uele ginnes, help be dyeuel uor to nime bet uolk — many snares hath the devil for to catch the people; Ayenbite of Inwyt, ed. Morris, p. 54. In this particular sense of 'trap' or 'snare,' the word is really Scandinavian.—Icel. ginna, to dupe, deceive; whence ginning, imposture, fraud; and ginnungr, a juggler. 2. But the M. E. gin was also used in a far wider sense, and was (in many cases) certainly a contraction of F. engin = Lat. ingenium, a contrivance or piece of ingenuity. Thus, in describing the mechanism by which the horse of brass (in the Squieres Tale) was moved, we are told that 'therein lieth theffect of al the gin' = therein is the pith of all the contrivance; C. T. 10636. For this word, see Engine. ¶. Particularly note the use of the word in P. Plowman, B. xviii. 250; 'For gygas the geaunt with a gynne engyned.' = for Gigas the giant contrived by a contrivance.

GIN (3), a kind of spirit. (F., -L.) Formerly called geneva, whence gin was formed by contraction. Pope has gin-shops; Dunciad, iii. 148. 'Geneva, a kind of strong water;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. So called by confusion with the town in Switzerland of that name but really a corruption.—O. F. genevee, 'juniper;' Cot. [It is well-known that gin is flavoured with berries of the juniper.]—Lat.

GINGER, the root of a certain plant. (F., -L., -Gk., -Skt.)
So called because shaped like a horn; the resemblance to a deer's So called because shaped like a horn; the resemblance to a deer's antler is striking. In early use. M. E. ginger; whence ginger-bred (gingerbread); Chaucer, C. T. 13783. An older form ginguere (= gingivere) occurs in the Ancren Riwle, p. 370.—O. F. gengibre (and doubtless also gingibre) in the 12th century; mod. F. gingembre; Littré.—Lat. zingiber, ginger.—Gk. ζεγγίβερι, ginger.—Skt. griñga-vera, ginger.—Skt. griñga, a horn; and (perhaps) vera, body (i. e. shape). Der. ginger-bread.

GINGERLY, with soft steps. (Scand.) 'Go gingerly;' Skelton, Garl. of Laurell, l. 1203; see Dyce's note. Lit. 'with tottering steps;' cf. Swed. dial. gingla, gängla, to go gently, totter; frequent. verb from gång, a going; see Gang.

GINGHAM, a kind of cotton cloth. (F.) Modern. Not in Todd's Johnson. Called guingan in French. Both F. and E. words are corruptions (according to Littré) of Guingamp, the name of a town in Brittany where such fabrics are made.

Webster says 'Java ginggan;' without any further explanation. E. Müller cites from Heyse, p. 384, the Javanese ginggang, perishable.

GINGLE, another spelling of Jingle, q. v.

GIPSY, the same as Gypsy, q.v.

GIRAFFE, the camelopard, an African quadruped with long

Giraffa, an neck and legs. (F., = Span., = Arab., = Egyptian.) 'Giraffa, an Asian beast, the same with Camelopardus; 'Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Here giraffa = Span. girafa. We now use the F. form. = F. giraffa. = Span. girafa. = Arab. zaráf or zaráfat, a camelopard; Rich. Dict. p. 772, col. 2. See Dozy, who gives the forms as zaráfa, zoráfa, and notes that it is also called joráfa.

GIRD (1), to enclose, bind round, surround, clothe. (E.) M. E. gurden, girden, gerden; the pp. girt is in Chaucer, C. T. 331.—A. S. gyrdan, to gird, surround; Grein, i. 536. + Du. gorden. + Icel. gyrδa, to gird (a kindred word to gerδa, to fence in). + Dan. giorde. + G. gürten.

β. These are weak verbs; an allied strong verb occurs in the Goth. comp. bi-gairdan, to begird; from a base GARD, to enclose an extension of the Teut base GARD. to enclose, an extension of the Teut. hase GAR, to seize. — \sqrt{GHAR} , to seize (Fick, i. 580); whence also Gk. χeip , the hand; Skt. har, to seize, and Lat. hortus, an enclosure. γ . Fick (iii. 102) gives the old base GARD, to enclose, as the Teutonic form, whence were formed the Teutonic garda, a hedge, yard, garden; gerda, a girth, girdle; and gordja, to gird. Der. gird-er; gird-le, q.v.; girth, q.v. From the same root we also have garden, yard; and even chirography, horticulture, cohort, court, and surgeon.

GIRD (2), to jest at, jibe. (E.) See Gride.

GIRDLE, a band for the waist. (E.) M. E. girdel, gerdel;

Chaucer, C. T. 360.—A. S. gyrdel, a girdle; Mark, i. 6. + Du.

gordel. + Icel. gyrôill. + Swed. gördel. + G. görtel. B. From the A.S. gyrdan, to gird, with suffix-el; see Gird. Doublet, girth.

GIRTH, the measure round the waist; the bellyband of a saddle. (Scand.) M. E. gerth. 'His gerth and his stiropes also;' Richard Coer de Lion, 5733; and see Prompt. Parv. This is a Scand. form.

—Icel. gjörð, a girdle, girth; gerð, girth round the waist. + Dan. giord, a girth. + Goth gairda, a girdle, Mark, i. 6. B. From the Teutonic base GARD, to enclose (Fick, iii. 102); see Gird.

Der. girth, verb; also written girt. Doublet, girdle.

GIRL, a female child, young woman. (O. Low G.) M. E. gerl, girl, gurl, formerly used of either sex, and signifying either a boy or girl. In Chaucer, C. T. 3767, girl is a young woman; but in C. T. 666, the pl. girles means young people of both sexes. In Will. of Palerne, 816, and King Alisaunder, 2802, it means 'young women;' in P. Plowman, B. i. 33, it means 'boys;' cf. B. x. 175. Both boy and girl are of O. Low German origin; see Boy.

as a dimin., with suffix -l (= -la), from O. Low G. $g\bar{v}r$, a child; see Bremen Wörterbuch, ii. 528. Cf. Swiss gurre, gurrii, a depreciatory term for a girl; Sanders, G. Dict. i. 609, 641. Root uncertain.

Der. girl-ish. girl-ish-ly, girl-ish-ness, girl-hood.

GIST, the main point or pith of a matter. (F., -L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. The sb. giste (-O. F. giste, a lodging, resting-place) occurs in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, and in Kersey. The latter has: 'Giste, a couch, or resting-place.' But the use of the word is seally due to an old F. property from the Course of the word is has: Giste, a couch or resume practs. But the second really due to an old F. proverb, given by Cotgrave, s. v. lieure. 'Ie scay bien ou gist le lievre, I know well which is the very point, or knot of the matter,' lit. I know well where the hare lies. This gist knot of the matter, itt. I know well where the hare lies. This gist is the mod. F. git, and similarly we have, in modern French, the phrase 'tout git en cela,' the whole turns upon that; and again, 'c'est là que git le lièvre,' there lies the difficulty, lit. that's where the hare lies; Hamilton's F. Dict.

β. The O. F. sb. giste (F. gite) is derived from the vb. gésir, to lie, of which the 3 pers. pres. was gist (mod. F. git). — Lat. incēre, to lie, an intransitive verb formed from Lat incere to throw. See Let in the latest the latest throw the latest throw the same latest throw the latest throw throw the latest throw throw the latest throw the latest throw the latest throw the latest throw throw throw the latest throw throw the latest throw the latest throw the latest throw throw throw the latest throw throw throw throw throw throw throw the latest throw thro from Lat. iacere, to throw. See Jet, verb.

GITTERN, a kind of guitar. (O. Du., -L., -Gk.) M. E. gitern (with one t); Chaucer, C. T. 12400; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 233. A corruption of cittern or cithern; see Cithern and Guitar. The form of the word is O. Dutch. 'Ghiterne, ghitterne, a guitar; Kilian and Oudemans.

GIVE, to bestow, impart, deliver over. (E.) M. E. yeuen, yiuen, yeuen, yiuen (with u for v); Chaucer, C. T. 230. In old Southern and Midland English, the g almost always appears as y (often written 3); the modern hard sound of the g is due to the influence of Northern English. 'Gifand and takand woundis wyd;' Barbour's Bruce, xiii.

160. The pt. t. is yaf or 3af, Northern gaf, changing to yeuen or genen in the pl. number; pp. yiuen, ziuen, zouen, youen, rarely zifen, gifen.—A. S. gifan (also giefan, geofan, giofan, gyfan), Grein, i. 505; pt. t. io geaf, pl. we gedfon, pp. gifen. + Dn. geven. + Icel. gefa. + Dan. give. + Swed. gifva. + Goth. giban. + G. geben.

Teutonic base GAB, to give; root unknown. Der. giver; also gift, q.v.

GIZZARD, a first stomach in birds. (F., -L.) Spelt gisard in
M. E. siser. 'The fowel that Minsheu. The d is excrescent. M. E. giser. 'The fowel that hyst voltor that eith the stomak or the giser of ticius' - the bird that is named the vulture, that eats the stomach or gizzard of Tityus;

Chancer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 12, l. 3054. - O. F. gezier, jugier, 713. Either borrowed from O. Dutch, or of Scand, origin; it is better fuiter (mod. F. gésier); see Littré, who quotes a parallel passage from Le Roman de la Rose, 19506, concerning 'li juisier Ticius' the gizzard of Tityus. - Lat. gigerium, only used in the pl. gigeria, the gizzard of Tityus.—Lat. gigerium, only used in the pl. gigeria, the cooked entrails of poultry.

GLABROUS, smooth. (L.) Rare. 'French elm, whose leaves are thicker, and more florid, glabrous, and smooth;' Evelyn, i. iv. § I (Todd's Johnson). Coined, by adding suffix -ous, from Lat. glabr, base of glaber, smooth. Akin to Lat. glubere, to peel, and gluma, a husk; the orig, sense being 'peeled.' Akin to Gk. γλαφυρόs, hollowed, smoothed, from γλάφειν, to hew, carve, dig, a variant of γράφειν, to smoothed, from γλάφειν, to hew, carve, dig, a variant of γράφειν, to grave. See Grave, verb.

GLACIAL, icy, frozen. (F., -L.) 'Glacial, freezing, cold;'
Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'White and glacious bodies;' Sir T.
Browne, Vulg. Errors, bk. ii. c. 1. § 3. - F. glacial, 'icy;' Cot. - Lat. glacialis, icy. - Lat. glacies, ice. Cf. Lat. gelu, cold; see Gelid.

Der. From same source, glacier, q. v.; glacis, q. v.

GLACIER, an ice-slope or field of ice on a mountain-side.

ice; id.—F. glace, ice. See above.

GLAD, pleased, cheerful, happy. (E.) M. E. glad, Chaucer, C. T. 310; also glsd, Ancren Riwle, p. 282.—A. S. glad, shining, bright, cheerful, glad; Grein, i. 512. + Du. glad, bright, smooth, sleek; O. Du. glad, glowing (Kilian). + Icel. gladr, bright, glad. + Dan. glad, joyous. + Swed. glad, joyous, + G. glatt, smooth, even, polished. + Russ. gladkie, even, smooth, polished, spruce. B. According to Fick, iii. 112, the base is GAL, equivalent to Aryan GHAL or GHAR. The orig. sense was 'shining;' hence it is from GIIAR, to shine, Fick, i. 81; cf. Skt. gkri, to shine, gharma, heat; Gk. xhapós, warm. See Glidle, Glow. Der. glad-ly, glad-ness; also gladsome = M. E. gladsum, Wyclif, Psalm, ciii. 15, Chaucer, C. T. 14784; glad-some-ly, glad-some-ness; also gladd-en, in which the suffix forrest, by a hollow glade;' Spenser, F. Q. vi. 5. 13. Of Scand.

origin, and closely connected with Icel. gladr, bright, shining (see Glad), the orig sense being an opening for light, a bright track, hence an open track in a wood (Nares), or a passage cut through reeds and rushes, as in Two Noble Kinsmen, ed. Skeat, iv. 1. 64. Cf. Swed, dial. glad-yppen, completely open, said of a lake from which the ice has all melted away (Rietz); Swed. dial. glatt (= gladt), completely, as in glatt öppet, completely open; id. Mr. Wedgwood completely, as in glatt opper, completely open; id. Mr. Wedgwood also cites the Norwegian glette, 'a clear spot among clouds, a little taking up of the weather; gletta, to peep; glott, an opening, a clear spot among clouds;' see Aasen. These are exactly similar formations from Icel. glita, to shine; see Glitter, a word which is from the same root as Glad. And see Glow.

GLADIATOR, a swordsman. (L.) 'Two hundred gladiators;'

Dryden, tr. of Persius, vi. 115.—Lat. gladiator, a swordsman.—Lat. gladius, a sword. See Gladve. Der. gladiator.i-al; also, from the same source, gladi-ole, a plant like the lily, from Lat. gladi-ol-us, a small sword, dimin. of gladius.

GLADSOME, glad, cheerful; see Glad.

GLATR, the white of an egg. (F.,—L.) Little used now. M. E. gleyre of an ey = white of an egg; Chaucer, C. T. 16274; and Prompt. Parv.—O. F. glaire; 'la glaire d'vn ceuf, the white of an egge;' Cot. B. Here glaire is a corruption of claire, as evidenced by related words.

β. Here glaire is a corruption of claire, as evidenced by related words, esp. by Ital. chiara d'un ovo, 'the white of an egge,' Florio (where Ital. chi=Lat. cl, as usual); and by Span. clara de huevo, glair, white of an egg.—Lat. clarus, clear, bright; whence Low Lat. clara cui, the white of an egg (Ducange). See Clear, Clarify. Not to be confused with Glare.

to take it as the latter, since the Swedish and Danish account for it more completely. Also note that the sb. is older than the verb, more completely. Also note that the sb. is older than the verb, contrary to what might (at first) be expected.—Swed, glans, lustre, gloss, brightness, splendour; O. Swed. glans, splendour; whence the derived verb glansa, to shine. + Dan. glands, lustre, brightness, splendour, gloss; whence the verb glandse, to gloss, glaze. + Du. glans, lustre, brightness, splendour, gloss; whence glanzen, to put a gloss upon. + G. glanz, splendour; whence glanzen, to glitter. B. But this sb. glans is formed from an older verb, preserved in Dan, glindse to shine and in the Swed diel glitter. glindse, to shine, and in the Swed. dial. glinta, glanta, to slip, slide, glance aside (as when we speak of an arrow glancing against a tree); Rietz. Rietz makes the important and interesting remark, that Grimm (Gramm. iii. 59) supposes the existence of a strong verb glintan, to shine, with a pt. t. glant, and pp. gluntan, 'which is precisely the very form which survives among us [Swedes] still.' \(\gamma\). It is further evident that glint is a nasalised form from the Teutonic base GLIT, to shine, glance (Fick, iii. 112); whence Icel. glit, a glitter, glita, glitra, to glitter, Goth. glit-munian, to shine, glitter; also (with inserted n), Swed. dial. glinta, M. E. glinten; we may also compare Du. glinster, a glittering, glinsteren, to glitter. See Glint, Glitter, Glisten, Glass, and Glow.

GLAND, a cell or fleshy organ in the body which secretes animal fluid. (F., -L.) 'Gland, a flesh-kernel;' Kersey, ed. 1715. -O. F. glande, 'a kernell, a fleshy substance filled with pores, and growing between the flesh and skin; Cot. - O. F. gland, an acorn. - Lat. glandem, acc. of glans, an acorn.

B. Lat. glans stands for galans, and is cognate with Gk. βάλ-αν-οs, an acorn, lit. the 'dropped' or 'shed' fruit, from Gk. βάλλειν, to cast. — GAL, older form GAR, to fall, to let fall, cast; cf. Skt. gal, to fall, to drop. The change to Gk. β occurs also in Gk. βυῦε – Skt. go = E. cow;

The change to Gk. 8 occurs also in Gk. 800s Skt. go E. cow; &c. Der. glandi-form, from Lat. glandi-, crude form of glans; glandi-fer-ous (from Lat. -fer, bearing); gland-ule, a dimin. form, whence glandul-ar, glandul-ous; gland-ers, a disease of the glands of horses, Taming of the Shrew, iii. 2. 51.

GLARE, to shine brightly, to stare with piercing sight. (E.) M. E. glaren. 'Swiche glaring eyen hadde he, as an hare;' Chaucer, C. T. 686 (or 684). 'It is not al gold that glareth;' id. House of Fame, i. 272. 'Thet gold thet is bricht and glareth;' Kentish Sermons, in An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 27, l. 31. Probably a true E. word; cf. A. S. glær, a pellucid substance, amber (Bosworth, Leo). + Du. gloren, to glimmer. + Icel. glira, to gleam, (Bosworth, Leo). + Du. glorm, to glimmer. + Icel. glira, to gleam, glare like a cat's eyes. + M. H. G. glosen, to shine, glow. B. The r stands for an older s, as shewn by the M. H. G. form. Hence glare r stands for an older s, as shewn by the stands for an older s, as shewn by the stands for a stands for a stands of the stands o A.S. glas, glass; Grein, i. 513. + Du. glas. + Dan. glas, glar. + Swed. glas; O. Swed. glas, glar (Ihre). + Icel. glsr, sometimes glas. + G. glas, O. H. G. clas.

B. One of the numerous derivatives of the old European base GAL, to shine (Fick, iii. 103). - & GHAR, to shine; cf. Skt. ghri, to shine; gharma, warmth. See Glow. Der. glass-blower, glass-wort, glass-y, glass-i-ness; also glaze = M. E. glasen, P. Plowman, B. iii. 49, 61; whence glaz-ing, glaz-i-er (= glaz-er, like bow-y-er, law-y-er = bow-er, law-er).
GLAUCOUS, grayish blue. (L., - Gk.) A botanical word; see Bailcy's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. – Lat. glaucus, blueish. – Gk. γλαυκόs, gleaming, glancing, silvery, blueish; whence γλαύσσειν (= γλαυκόs, gleaming, glancing, silvery, blueish; whence γλαυσσευν (= γλαυκόιν), to shine.

GLAZE, to furnish a window with glass. (E.) See Glass.

GLEAM, a beam of light, glow. (E.) M. E. gleam, gleem, glem; Havelok, 2122; Ancren Riwle, p. 94.—A. S. glem or glem [accent uncertain], splendour, gleam, brightness, Grein, i. 513; Leo.

Cf. gliomu, glimu, brightness, ornament; Grein, i. 515. + O. Sax. glimo, brightness; in 'glitandi glimo'-glittering splendour; Heliand, 3140. + O. H. G. glimo, a glow-worm.

β. The exact formation of the word is a little obscure; but the final m is merely suffixed (as in doo-m), the Teutonic base being gli- or gla-, put for su mai, the white of an egg (Ducange), See Clear, Clarify. ¶ Not to be confused with Glare.

GLAIVE, a sword. (F, -L.) M. E. gleiue (with u=v); Have-lok, 1770; glayue, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 653 (or 654).—O. F. glaive, 'a gleave, or sword, also, a launce, or horseman's staffe;' Cot.—Lat. gladius, a sword; see Brachet. β. The form gladius stands for cladius, as shewn by the Irish claidheamh, a sword; see Claymore. Cf. Lat. clades, destruction, slaughter. γ. The form of the base is hla, for hal, leading to γ KAR. The sense of the root seems to be 'to strike;' cf. Skt. pri, to hurt, to wound, break. ¶ Perhaps allied to Hilt, q.v.

GLANCE, a swift dart of light, a glimpse, hasty look. (Scand.) Not in early use. Spencer has glaunce as a verb: 'The glauncing sparkles through her bever glared;' F. Q. v. 6. 38. It occurs often in Shak, both as vb. and sb.; Two Gent. i. 1. 4; Mids. Nt. Dr. v.

metathesis, as gelm, which was weakened, as usual, to yelm. 'Yelm, 'Yelm weateness, as gelm, which was weatened, as usual, to yelm. 'Pelm,' v. to place straw ready for the thatcher, lit. to place handfuls ready. Women sometimes yelm, but they do not thatch;' Oxfordshire Glossary, E. D. S. Gl. C. 5. 6. The original of gelm, or yelm, is the A. S. gilm, a handful; cf. 'gilm, a yelm, a handful of reaped com, a bundle, bottle, manipulus. Eówre gilmas stódon = your sheaves stood up; Gen. xxxvii. 7;' Bosworth's A. S. Dict. 6. The probrot is GHAR, to seize, whence, by the usual and regular gradations, would be formed a Tentonic base GAL or GIL, giving the tions, would be formed a Teutonic base GAL or GIL, giving the sb. gil-m, a handful; cf. Gk. χaip , the hand, Skt. harma, the hand, also a seizing, a carrying away, Skt. hary, to take, hri, to scize, carry away.

¶ In this view, the O.F. glener was really derived from E., and not vice versa. In fact, the Low Lat. form cannot be clearly traced to any other source. The better form is gleam.

GLEBE, soil; esp. land attached to an ecclesiastical benefice. (F.,-L.) 'Have any glebe more fruitful;' Ben Jonson, The Fox, A. v. sc. 1 (Mosca). The comp. glebe-land is in Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 21.-O. F. glebe, 'glebe, land belonging to a parsonage;' Cot.-Lat. gleba, soil, a clod of earth; closely allied to Lat. globus.

See Globe. Der. gleb-ous, gleb-y; glebe-land.
GLEDE (1), the bird called a kite. (E.) M. E. glede, Allit.
Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 1696.—A. S. glida, a kite, lit. 'the glider,' from the sailing motion of the bird; Grein, i. 56; allied to A. S. glidan, to glide. See Glide.

Strictly, glida is from a base glidan, to glide. See Glide. GLID, whence also glidan.

GLEDE (2), a glowing coal; obsolete. (E.) M.E. glede, Chaucer, C. T. 1999.—A. S. gléd, Grein, i. 513. [Here é=ö, mutation of o.]—A. S. glówan, to glow; see Glow. So also Dan. glöde, tion of o.] = A. S. glówan, to glow; see GIOW.

a live coal; from gloe, to glow.

GLEBE, joy, mirth, singing. (E.) M. E. gle, glee; Will. of Palerne, 824; also gleu, glew, Havelok, 2332-A. S. gleow, gleó, gliw, and sometimes glig, joy, mirth, music; Grein, i. 515. + Iccl. gly, glee, gladness. + Swed. dial. gly, mockery, ridicule (Rietz).

Cf. Gk. χλεύη, a jest, joke; Russ. glum', a jest, joke.

GLEEN, a narrow valley. (C.) In Spenser, Sheph. Kalendar, April, 26.—Gael. and Irish gleann, a valley, glen; W. glyn; Corn. glyn.

β. Perhaps related to W. glan, brink, side, shore, bank (of a river); with which cf. Goth. hlains, a hill, orig. 'a slope; Luke, iii. 5; Lat. elinare, E. lean. See Lean.

The alleged

Luke, iii. 5; Lat. clinare, E. lean. See Loan. A.S. glen is unauthorised.

GLIB (1), smooth, slippery, voluble. (Dutch.) The orig. sense is 'slippery;' Shak. has 'gib and oily;' K. Lear, i. I. 227; 'glib and slippery;' Timon, i. I. 53. We also find glibbery. 'What, shall thy lubrical and glibbery muse,' &c.; Ben Jonson, Poetaster, Act v (Tibullus). These are forms borrowed from Dutch.—Du. glibberig, slippery; glibberen, to slide; related to glippen, to slip away, glijden, to glide, glad, smooth, slippery.

B. This Du. glibbery (of which glib is, glad, smooth, slippery. B. This Du. glibbery (of which glib is, apparently, a familiar contraction) prob. superseded the M. E. glider, a form not found in books, but preserved in Devonshire glidder, slippery (Halliwell), of which the more original glid occurs as a translation of lubricum in the A.S. version of Psalm, xxxiv. 7, ed. translation of atoricum in the A.S. version of Psaim, xxxiv. 7, ed. Spelman. This form glid, with its extension glider, is from A.S. glidan, to glide. [In exactly the same way we find M.E. slider, slippery (Chaucer, C. T. 1266), from the verb to slide.] See Glide. I find 'glib, slippery' in O'Reilly's Irish Dictionary, but this is doubtful; it seems due to Irish glibsleamhain, slippery with sleet, in which it is really the latter half of the word that means 'slippery.' The Gael. glib, gliob really means 'sleet,' and orig. 'moisture;' cf. Corn. gleb, wet, moist, gliber, moisture. These words give no satisfactory explanation of Du. glibberig, which must not be separated from Du. glippen, to slip, steal away, glissen, to slide, and glijden, to glide. Der. glib-ly, glib-ness.

GLIB (2), a lock of hair. (C.) 'Long glibbes, which is a thick curled bush of heare, hanging downe over their eyes;' Spenser, View of State of Ireland; Globe ed. p. 630, col. 2.—Irish and Gael. glib, a lock of hair: also, a slut.

GLIB (3), to castrate; obsolete. (E.) In Shak. Wint. Tale, ii. r. 149. The g is merely prefixed, and stands for the A. S. prefix geologic to lib, to splaie; Florio, ed. 1612. Of E. origin, as shewn by the prefixed g; lib would answer to an A. S. lybban*, where y would stand for an older u. Clearly cognate with Du. lubben, to castrate; and prob. allied to lop. See Lop.

GLIDE, to slide, flow smoothly. (E.) M. E. gliden, pt. t. glod or glood; Chaucer, C. T. 10707.—A. S. gliden, Grein, i. 516. + Du. gliden. + Dan. glide. + Swed. glida. + G. gleiten. Cf. Russ. gladkie, smooth; gladite, to make smooth; also goluii, naked, bare, bald.

glimms, to shine, Swed. glimma, to glitter, Du. glimmen, G. glimmen, to shine.

y. Even these shorter forms are unoriginal; cf. prov. G. glimm, a spark (Flügel); Swed. dial. glim, a glance (kietz); words closely related to the E. sb. gleam. See Gleam, Glow. We even find the sb. glim, brightness, in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 1087; this is borrowed from the Scandinavian rather than taken from A.S.

Der. glimmer, sb.; and see below.

GLIMPSE, a short gleam, weak light; hurried glance or view.

(Scand.) The p is excrescent; the old word was glimse. M. E. glimsen, to glimpse; whence the sb. glimsing, a glimpse. 'Ye have som glimsing, and no parfit sight;' Chaucer, C. T. 10257. The word is a mere variant of glimmer, and formed by suffixing -s to the base glim. See above.

GLINT, to glance, to shine. (Scand.) Obsolete: but important as being the word whence glance was formed; see Glance. 'Her eye glent Aside;' Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1223; cf. Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 70, 114, 671, 1026; B. 218. A nasalised form from the base GLIT, to shine; see Glitter, Glow.

base GLIT, to shine; see Glitter, Glow.

GLISTEN, GLISTER, to glitter, shine. (E.) These are mere extensions from the E. base glise, to shine; which appears in M. E. glissen, to shine; 'in glysyinde wede' = in glistening garment; An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 91, l. 21. -A. S. glissan*, only in the deriv. glisnian, to gleam; Grein, i. 516.

B. Glisnian is formed from the base glise by the addition of the n so often used to extend such bases; and hence we had M. E. glisnian, with present. glisnande, glittering; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 165. This part. glisnande, glittering; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 165. This M. E. glisnien would give a later E. glisen, but the word is always spelt glis-t-en, with an excrescent t, which is frequently, however, not B. Similarly, from the base glis-, with suffixed -t and the sounded. frequentative -er, was formed M.E. glisteren or glistren. 'The water glistred over al;' Gower, C. A. ii. 252. Cf. O. Du. glisteren (Oudemans); now nasalised into mod. Du. glinsteren, to glitter. C. Finally, mans); now nasalised into mod. Du. glinsteren, to glitter. C. Finally, the base gliss stands for an older glits; see Glitter, Glint. GLITTER, to gleam, sparkle. (Scand.) M. E. gliteren (with one t); Chaucer, C. T. 979 (or 977); 'gliteren and glent;' Gawain and the Grene Knight, 604.—Icel. glitra, to glitter; frequentative of glitta, to shine, sparkle. + Swed. glittra, to glitter; glitter, sb. glitter, spangle. Cf. A. S. glitimian, to glitter, Mark, ix. 3; Goth. glitmunjan, to shine, Mark, ix. 3. B. Shorter forms appear in O. Sax. glitan, M. H. G. glizen (G. gleissen), to shine; Icel. glit, sb. glitter. y. All from the Teutonic base GLIT, to shine; Fick, iii. 112. This is an extension of the Teutonic base GLI, to shine; from Aryan &GHAR, to shine. See Gleam, Glow. Der. glitter, from Aryan & GHAR, to shine. See Gleam, Glow. Der. glitter, sb.; and see glisten, glister, glint.

GLOAT, to stare, gaze with admiration. (Scand.) Also spelt glote. 'So he glotes [stares], and grins, and bites;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Mad Lover, it. 2. 'Gloting [peeping] round her rock;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odyssey, xii. 150.—Icel. glotta, to grin, smile scomfully. + Swed. dial. glotta, glutta, to peep (Rietz); connected with Swed. dial. gloat, (1) to glow, (2) to stare. Cf. Swed. glo, to stare; Dan. gloe, to glow, to stare.

GLOBE, a ball, round body. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 153.—O. F. globe, 'a globe, ball; 'Cot.—Lat. globum, acc. of globus, a ball; allied to glomus, a ball, clue (E. clue or clew), and to gleba, a clod of earth (E. glebe). See Glebe and Clew. Root uncertain. Der. globate (Lat. globatus, globe-shaped); glob-ose (Lat. globosus), Der. glob-ats (Lat. globatus, globe-shaped); glob-oss (Lat. globosus), Milton, P. L. v. 753, also written glob-ous, id. v. 649; glob-y; glob-ule (Lat. glob-ul-us, dimin. of globus); glob-ul-ar, glob-ul-ous, glob-ul-ar-i-ty. See below.

GLOMERATE, to gather into a mass or ball. (Lat.) 'A river,

Swed. glam, in adj. glamig, wan, languid of look; Swed. dial. ii. 248, l. 3.—O.F. glu, 'glew, birdlime;' Cot.—Low Lat. glutten, glaming, staring, woful, wan, from the vb. glo, gloa, to glow, shine, stare (Rietz).

B. This connects the word at once with E. glow; see Glow. The orig. sense was 'a glow,' i. e. faint light; similarly glimmer is used of a faint light only, though connected with glam.

Note also prov. G. gluming gloomy, troubled glums. See Glow, Claw, Cleave (2). Der. glue-y; and see glutin-ous, and see glutin glimmer is used of a faint light only, though connected with gleam.
γ. Note also prov. G. glumm, gloomy, troubled, glum; see Glum.

¶ The connection between gloom, faint light, and glow, light, is well illustrated by Spenser. 'His glistering armour made A little glooming light, much like a shade;' F. Q. i. 1. 14. Der. gloom-y, Shak. Lucrece, 803; gloom-i-ly, gloom-i-ness; gloam-ing.

GLORY, renown, fame. (F.,-L.) M. E. glorie, Ancren Riwle, op. 358, 362.-O. F. glorie, later gloire.-Lat. gloria, glory; no doubt for cloria; ef. Lat. inclytus (in-clu-tus), renowned. + Gk.
κλίοε, glory; κλυτόε, renowned. + Skt. gravas, glory. + Russ. slava, glory. β. From the verb which appears in Lat. cluere, Gk. κλύευ, glory. β. From the verb which appears in Lat. cluere, Gk. κλύειν, Russ. slumate, Skt. cru, to hear; all from KRU, KLU, to hear; whence also E. loud. See Loud. Der. glori-ous, in early use, Rob. whence also E. total. See Isotal. Der. giori-ous, in early use, Rob. of Glouc. p. 483; glori-ous-by, P. Plowman, C. xx. 15; glori-ous-ses, also glori-fy, M. E. glorifien, Wyclif, John, vii. 39 (F. glorifier, Lat. glorificare, to make glorious, from glori- = gloria, and fic- (= fac-ere), to do, make); also glori-fic-at-ion (from Lat. acc. glorificationem).

Also Slav-onic, from Russ. slav-a, glory.

GLOSS (1), brightness, lustre. (Scand.) In Shak. Much Ado, iii. 2. 6. Milton has glossy, P. L. i. 672. — Icel. glossi, a blaze; glys, finery. + Swed. dial. gldsa, a glowing, dawning, becoming light; glossa, to glow, shine. + M. H. G. glosen, to glow; glose, a glow, gleam.

β. An extension of Swed. dial. gloa, Icel. glóa, to glow. See Glow. Der. gloss, verb.

¶ Quite distinct from gloss (2), though some writers have probably confused them. Der. gloss-y, gloss-i-ly, gloss-i-ness.

GLOSS (2), a commentary, explanation. (L., -Gk.) M. E. glose (with one s), in early use; P. Plowman, C. xx. 15. [But the verb closer, to gloss or gloze, was much more common than the sb.; see Chaucer, C. T. 7374, 7375; P. Plowman, B. vii. 303.] This M. E. glose is from the O. F. glose, 'a glosse;' Cot. But the Lat. form glosse (with double s) was substituted for the F. form in the 16th century; as, e.g. in Udal on S. Luke, c. 12 (R.) – Lat. glossa, a difficult word requiring explanation. – Gk. $\gamma\lambda \hat{\omega} \sigma \sigma_n$, the tongue; also, a tongue, language, a word needing explanation. Of uncertain origin. Der. gloss, verb; gloze, q. v.; gloss-ar-y, q. v.; glosso-graphy, glossology; glottis, q.v. GLOSSARY, a collection of glosses or words explained. (L., -Gk.) In Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. - Lat. glossarium, a glossary; formed with suffix -ari-um from Lat. gloss-a, a hard word needing explanation. - Gk. γλῶσσα, the tongue, &c. See Gloss (2). Der.

GLOSSOGRAPHER, a writer of glossaries or glosses. (Gk.) In Blount's Glossographia, ed. 1674. Coined from glosso-, put for Gk. γλῶσσα, a hard word; and Gk. γράφ-ειν, to write. See Gloss (2). GLOTTIS, the entrance to the windpipe. (Gk.) 'Glottis, one of the five gristles of the larynx;' Kersey, ed. 1715. – Gk. γλῶττιε, the of the five gristles of the farynx; Kersey, ed. 1715.—GK. γλωττι, the mouth of the windpipe (Galen).—Gk. γλωττα, Attic form of γλωσσα, the tongue. See Gloss (2). Der. gloti-al, adj.; epi-glottis.

GLOVE, a cover for the hand. (E.) M. E. gloue (with u for v), glove; Chaucer, C. T. 2876: King Alisaunder, 2033.—A. S. glof, glove; Grein, i. 516. Cf. Icel. gl/fi; prob. borrowed from A. S. glof.

β. Possibly the initial g stands for ge- (Goth. ga-), a common prefix; and the word may be related to Goth. lofa, Icel. loff, the first great gath of the hand. the flat or palm of the hand; Scottish loof. Cf. Gael. lamh, the hand;

the flat or palm of the hand; Scottish loof. Cf. Gael. lamh, the hand; whence lamhainn, a glove. Der. glover, fox-glove.

M. E. glowen, Chaucer, C. T. 2134.—A. S. glówan, to glow; very rare, but found in a gloss, as cited by Leo; the word is, rather, Scandinavian. + Icel. glóa. + Dan. gloe, to glow, to stare. + Swed. glo, to stare; Swed. dial. glo, gloa, to glow, to stare. + Du. gloeijen, to glow, to heat. + G. glühen. Cf. Skt. gharma, warmth. B. From a Teut. base GLO (Fick, iii. 104), which from an older base GAL = GAR. — & GHAR, to shine; cf. Skt. ghri, to shine, glow. Der. glow, sb.; glow-worm, Hamlet, i. 5. 80. Der. glow, sb.; glow-worm, Hamlet, i. 5. 89. The E. derivatives from the GHAR, to shine, are numerous. The Teutonic tives from the GHAR, to shine, are numerous. The Teutonic form of this root was GAL, whence, by various modifications, we obtain the following. (1) Base GLA; whence (a) GLA-D, giving E. glad, glade; and (b) GLA-S, giving E. glass, glare (=glase). (2) Base GLO; whence E. glow, gloat, gloom, glum, gloss (1), glade (=glöd). (3) Base GLI; whence glib, glide; also GLI-M, giving gleam (=glima), glimmer, glimpse; also GLI-T, giving glitter, glint, glance, glisten, glister. See each word discussed in its due place. GLOZE, to interpret, deceive, flatter. (F.,=L.) In Rich. II, it. 1. 10. M. E. glosen, to make glosses; from the sb. glose, a gloss. See further under Gloss (2).

GLIUE a sticky substance. (F.,=L.) M. E. glose, Gower, C. A.

GLIUM, gloomy, sad. (Scand.) 'With visage sad and glum;'
Drant, tr. of Horace; to translate Lat. saeuus, Epist. ii. 2. 21. But the word was formerly a verb. M. E. glommen, glomben, to look gloomy, frown; Rom. of the Rose, 4356; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 94; Halliwell's Dict., p. 404.—Swed. dial. glomma, to stare; from Swed. dial. gloa, to stare; connected with Swed. gldmug, gloomy, and E. gloom: see Gloom.

and E. gloom; see Gloom.
GLUME, a husk or floral covering of grasses. (L.) A botanical term. Borrowed, like F. glume, from Lat. gluma, a husk, hull. -Lat. glubere, to peel, take off the husk; whence glubma = gluma.

I Fick (i. 574) suggests a connection with E. cleave, to split asunder. See Cleave (1). Der. glum-ac-e-ous (Lat. glumacens).

GLUT, to swallow greedily, gorge. (L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 1.
63. 'Till leade (for golde) do glut his greedie gal;' Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 68.—Lat. glutire, gluttire, to swallow, gulp down. + Skt. grit, to devour; whence also Lat. graph the throat. Der. glutter a v. from the same root.

+ Skt. gri, to devour; gai, to eat. • GAR, to devour; whence also Lat. gula, the throat. Der. glutt-on, q. v.; from the same root, de-glut-it-ion, gullet, gules; probably glycerine, liquorice.
GLUTINOUS, gluey, viscous, sticky. (L.) 'No soft and glutinous bodies;' Ben Jonson, Sejanus, i. 1. 9. Englished from Lat. glutinosus, sticky. — Lat. glutin-um, glue; also gluten (stem glutin-), glue. See Glue. Der. glutinous-ness; also Cot. has 'glutinosité, glutinosité, glutin-at-ive; ag-glutin-ate.
GLUTTON, a voracious eater. (F.,—L.) M. E. gloton, Chaucer, C. T. 12454; whence glotonie, gluttony; id. 12446. — O. F. gloton, later glouton, 'a glutton;' Cot. — Lat. acc. glutonem, from gluto, a glutton.—Lat. glutire, to devour. See Glut. Der. glutton-y, glutton-ous.
GLYOBERINE, a certain viscid fluid, of a sweet taste. (F.,—Gk.)

GLYCERINE, a certain viscid fluid, of a sweet taste. (F., - Gk.)

Modern. Named from its sweet taste. F. glycerine; coined from Gk. γλυκερόs, sweet, an extension of γλυκύs, sweet; on which see Curtius, i. 446. 'If Gk. Advise and Lat. ducies, sweet, go together, g must be earlier than d;' Curtius. Cf. Lat. glu-t-ire, to devour; from GAR, to devour. See Glut. Der. from the same source, liquorice, q. v.

GLYPTIC, relating to carving in stone. (Gk.) Mere Greek.—

GLYPTIC, relating to carving in stone. (Gk.) Mere Greek.— Gk. γλυπτικόε, carving; γλυπτόε, carved, fit for carving. - Gk. γλύφειν, to hollow out, engrave. Allied to Gk. γλάφειν, to hew, γράφειν, to grave. See Grave, verb.

GNARL, to snarl, to growl. (E.) Perhaps obsolete. Shak has 'gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite;' Rich. II, i. 3. 292; 'Wolves are gnarling;' 2 Hen. VI, iii. 1. 192. Gnar-l (with the usual added -l) is the frequentative of gnar, to snarl. 'For and this curre do gnar' = for if this cur doth snarl; Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, 297. This word is imitative; the alleged A.S. gnyrran, rests only on the authority of Somner. But the word may be called E. + Du. knorren, to growl, snarl. + Dan. knurre, to growl, snarl; cf. knarre, knarke, to creak, grate; knur, a growl, the purring of a cat. cr. knarre, knarre, to creak, grate; knur, a growl, the purring of a cat. + Swed. knorra, to murmur, growl; knorr, a murmur. + G. knurren, to growl, snarl; knarren, knirren, to creak. Allied to Gnash, q. v. GNARLED, twisted, knotty. (E.) 'Gnarled oak;' Meas. for Meas. ii. 2. 116. Gnarled means 'full of gnarls,' where gnarl: is a dimin. form of gnar or knar, a knot in wood. M. E. knarre, a knot in wood; Wyclif, Wisdom, xiii. 13; whence the adj. knarry, full of knots. 'With knotty knarry barein trees olde;' Chaucer, C. T. 1979. β. The spelling knur or knurr (for knar) also occurs; 'A bounche [bunch] or knur in a tree;' Elyot's Dict., ed. 1559, s. v. Bruscum. This word has also a dimin. form knurl, with the same sense of 'hard knot.' These words may be considered E., though not found in A.S. + O. Du. knor, 'a knurl;' Sewel's Du. Dict.; cf. Du. knorf, a knot. + Dan. knort, a knot, gnarl, knag; knortet, knotty, gnarled. + Swed. knorla, a curl, ringlet; knorlig, curled. + Icel. gnerr, a knot, knob. + G. knorren, an excrescence, lump; knorrig, gnarled. Remoter origin unknown. See Knurr.

GNASH, to grind the teeth, to bite fiercely. (Scand.) A modification of M. E. gnasten, to gnash the teeth; Wyclif, Isaiah, v. 293 viii. 19.—Swed. knastra, to crash (between the teeth). + Dan. knasks. to crush between the teeth, to gnash. + Icel. gnastan, sb. a gnashing; to crush between the teeth, to gnash. + Icel. gnastan, sb. a gnashing gnista, to gnash the teeth, to snarl; gnesta, to crack. + G. knastern, to gnash, crackle.

B. Cf. also Du. knarsen, to gnash; G. knirscken, to gnash, crash, grate. The word seems to be a mere variant of Crash, and ultimately related to Crack. The same substitution of n for r is seen in Gael. cnac, to crack, break, crash, split, splinter.

GNAT, a small stinging insect. (E.) M. E. gnai, Chaucer, C. T., 5929. - A. S. gnat, Matt. xxiii. 24.

B. It has been suggested that the insect was so named from the whirring of its wings; cf. Icel. gnata, rustling noise. Note also Norweg. Instia (Aasen), Dan. Initire, Du. Initireen, to crackle.

¶ It should, however, be noted that Swed. knitteren, to crackle. ¶ It should, however, be noted that Swed.
gnet means 'a nit;' this suggests a possible connection between the two words; yet the A.S. form of nit is hnit, which does not seem to dnaw, to bite furiously or roughly. (E.) M. E. gnawen; the pt. t. gnow occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 14758; and gnew in Rich. Coer de Lion, ed. Weber, 3089.—A. S. gnagan; the compound for-gnagan, to devour entirely, occurs in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 194, l. 1. + Du. to devour entirely, occurs in Elitric's Homilies, ii. 194, i. 1. + Dil. Imagen. + O. Icel. gnaga, mod. Icel. naga. + Dan. gnave. + Swed. gnaga.

3. In this word the g is a mere prefix, standing for A. S. ge-Goth. ga-. The simple verb appears in Icel. naga, Dan. nage, G. nagen, to gnaw, Swed. nagga, to nibble; and in the prov. E. nag. to tease, worry, irritate, scold. See Nail.

GINEISS, a species of stratified rock. (G.) Modern. A term in greelogy.

Borrowed from G. greeix a name given to a certain kind geology. Borrowed from G. gneiss, a name given to a certain kind of rock. Der. gneiss-o-id, with a Gk. suffix, as in Asteroid, q. v. GNOME, a kind of sprite. (F., -Gk.) In Pope, Rape of the Lock, i. 63. -F. gnome, a gnome. Littré traces the word back to Paracelsus; it seems to be an adaptation of Gk. γνώμη, intelligence, from the notion that the intelligence of these spirits could reveal the secret treasures of the earth. The gnomes were spirits of earth, the sylphs of air, the salamanders of fire, and the nymphs of water. 6. Others regard the word as a briefer form of gnomon, but the result is much the same. The Gk. γνώμη is from γνῶναι, to know. See Gnomon.

GNOMON, the index of a dial, &c. (L., -Gk.) 'The style in the dial called the gnomon;' Holland's Pliny, b. ii. c. 72.—Lat. gnomon, which is merely the Gk. word.—Gk. γνώμων, an interpreter, lit. one who knows;' an index of a dial.—Gk. γνώναι, to know.— GAN, to know; whence also E. GNU, a kind of antelope. (Hottentot.) Found in S. Africa. The word is said to belong to the Hottentot language.

GO, to move about, proceed, advance. (E.) M. E. gon, goon, go; Chaucer, C. T. 379 (or 377); common.—A. S. gán, a contracted form of gangan (i. e. gang-an, where -an is the suffix of infin. mood); Grein, i. 368, 369. + Du. gaan. + Icel. ganga. + Dan. gaae. + Swed. gd. + Goth. gaggan, put for gangan. + G. gehen; O. H. G. kankan, gangan, gán, gén.

Not to be confused with Skt. gá, which is etymologically related to E. come; see Curtius, ii. 75. Doublet, gang G. V. Der groch grocert garger going: also gait a. v.

GOAD, a sharp pointed stick for driving oxen. M. E. gode.
Will a longe gode; P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 433.—A. S. gád, not common; but we find 'ongean ha gáde' = against the goad (cf. Acts, ix. 5); Ælfric's Hom. i. 386, l. 9 (where the accent seems to be that of the MS. itself). We find also gadu, a goad; Grein, i. 366. B. The appearance of the word under two forms see Gad (1). The form gada answers to gasd, the s being dropped before d in this instance. Similarly, the Icel. gaddr = gasdr, by assimilation. These words are cognate with Goth. gazds, a goad, prick, lation. These words are cognate with Golff. guests, a gosal, pross, sting (Gk. κέντρον); 1 Cor. xv. 55.
γ. Again, by the common change of s to r, the form gasd also passed into an A. S. gard*, a rod, written gierd, gyrd, Grein, i. 536; whence E. yard. See Yard, in the sense of 'rod' or 'stick.

δ. Again, the Goth, gazds is the call state of the gazds is cognate with Lat. hasta, a spear; and the collation of all the forms leads us to infer an Aryan form ghasta, from a supposed of GHAS, to strike, pierce, wound; cf. Skt. hims, to strike, kill.

GOAL, the winning-post in a race. (F., -O. Low G.) in running races. 'As, in rennynge, passynge the gole is accounted but rasshenesse; 'Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 20. l. 4. 'No person... should have won the ryng or gott the gole before me;' Hall's Chron. Rich. III, an. st. The 'gole' was a pole set up to mark the winning-place, and is now called the 'post.' = F. gaule, 'a pole, big rod;' Cot. In O.F., spelt waule (Roquefort). B. Of O. Low G. origin; O. Friesic walu, a staff; North Friesic wall (Outren). + Icel. völr, a round stick, staff. + Goth. walus, a staff; Inke, ix. 2. Cf. proy. E. wallop, in the sense 'to heat.' and see Luke, ix. 3. Cf. prov. E. wallop, in the sense 'to beat;' and see Wale, in the sense of 'a stripe made by a blow.' y. The staff was Wale, in the sense of 'a stripe made by a blow.' Y. The staff was named walus from its roundness; cf. Russ. val', a cylinder, from valiate, to roll; also Goth. walwjan, to roll; Lat. wolvers. See Voluble.

GOAT, the name of a well-known quadruped. (E.)

M. E. goot, gete; Chaucer, G. T. Goo (or 688).—A. S. gat; Grein, i. 373. + Du.

to clash; gnat, the clash of weapons; gnauba, to rustle, gnaub, a geit. +Dan. ged. +Swed. get. +Icel. geit. +G. geiss. +Goth. rustling noise. Note also Norweg. knetta (Aasen), Dan. knittre, Du. gaitsa. +Lat. kaedus.

B. All from an Aryan form GHAIDA, gaitsa. + Lat. haedus.

β. All from an Aryan form GHAIDA, which from & GHID, prob. meaning 'to play, sport; cf. Lithuanian źaid-źu, I play (base ghid-). Fick, i. 584. Der. goats-beard, goat-math, GOBBET, a mouthful, a little lump, small piece. (F.,-C.) The short form gob is rare. 'Gob or Gobbet, a great piece of meat;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. M. E. gobet, a small piece; P. Plowman, C. vi. 100; Chaucer, C. T. 698. 'Thei tooken the relifs of brokun gobetis, twelue cofyns ful;' Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 20. –O. F. gobet, a more all of food not given in Buyenu or Cotyone but preserved in morsel of food, not given in Burguy or Cotgrave, but preserved in the modern F. gobet, given as a popular word in Littre. A dimin. form, with suffix -et, from O.F. gob, a gulp, as used in the phrase 'l'avalla tout de gob = at one gulpe, or, as one gobbet, he swallowed it all;' Cot. = O. F. gober, 'to ravine, devour, feed greedily;' Cot. B. Of Celtic origin; cf. Gael. gob, the beak or bill of a bird, or (ludicrously) the mouth; Irish gob, mouth, beak, snout; W. gwp, the head and neck of a bird. ¶ The prov. E. gob, the mouth, is borrowed from Celtic directly. And see Gobble.

GOBBLE, to swallow greedily. (F.; with E. suffix.) 'Gobble up, to eat gobs, or swallow down greedily; 'Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Not in early use. A frequentative, formed by adding -le, of O. F. gober, 'to ravine, devour, feed greedily, swallow great morsels, let downe whole gobbets;' Cot. See Gobbet.

B. At a late period, the word gobble was adopted as being a suitable imitative word, to represent the sound made by turkies. In this sense, it occurs in Goldsmith's Animated Nature.

GOBELIN, a rich French tapestry. (F.) 'So mamed from a house at Paris, formerly possessed by wool-dyers, whereof the chief (Giles Gobelin) in the reign of Francis I. [1515-1547] is said to have found the secret of dyeing scarlet; Haydn, Dict. of Dates.

GOBLET, a large drinking-cup. (F., -L.) 'A goblet of syluer;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, v. ii. c. 87. - F. gobelet, 'a goblet, bole, or wide-mouthed cup;' Cot. Dimin. (with suffix -et) of O. F. gobel, (later form gobeau) which Cot. explains by 'a mazer or great goblet." -Low Lat. cupellum, acc. of cupellus, a cup; a variant of Lat.

cupella, a kind of vat, dimin. of cupa, a tub, cask, vat. See Coop, Cup. For the change from c to g, cf. Bret. kóp, góp; a cup. GOBLIN, a kind of mischievous sprite, fairy. (F., -L., -Gk.) Formerly gobeline, in 3 syllables. 'The wicked gobbelines;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10. 73. -O. F. gobelin, 'a goblin, or hol-goblin;' Cot. -Low Lat. gobelinus, an extension of Low Lat. cobalus, a goblin, demon. - Gk. κύβαλος, an impudent rogue, a sprite, goblin. See GOBY, a kind of sea-fish. (L., -Gk.) 'Gobio or Gobius, the gudgeon or pink, a fish; 'Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. The goby is a mere corruption of Lat. gobius (cf. F. gobie), orig. applied to the gudgeon. – Gk. κωβιόε, a kind of fish, gudgeon, tench. See Gudgeon.

GOD, the Supreme Being. (E.) M. E. god (written in MSS. with small initial letter); Chaucer, C. T. 535.—A. S. god; Grein, i. 517. + Du. god. + Icel. gub. + Dan. gud. + Swed. gud. + Goth. guth. + G. gott.

B. All from a Teutomic base GUTHA, God; Fick, iii. 107. Of unknown origin; quite distinct and separate from good, with which it has often been conjecturally connected. See Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 316, 8th ed. Der. godd-ess, q.v.; god-child; god-father, q.v.; god-head, q.v.; god-less, god-like, god-ly, god-send, god-son; also good-bye, q.v.; gospell, q.v.; gossip, q.v.; GODDESS, a female divinity. (E.; with F. suffix.) M. E. goddesse (better godesse), a hybrid compound, used by Chaucer, C. T.

1103; Gower, C. A. i. 91. Made by adding to God the O. F. suffix -esse (= Lat. -issa = Gk. -100a). ¶ The A. S. word was gyden (Grein, sese (= Lat. *issa= Gk. *isoa). ¶ The A. S. word was gyden (Grein, i. 536); correctly formed by vowel-change and with the addition of the fem. suffix -en. as in Vixen, q. v. Cf. G. göttin, fem. of gott. GODFATHER, a male sponsor in baptism. (E.) M. E. godfader, Rob. of Glouc, p. 69. Earlier, in William of Shoreham's Poems, ed. Wright, p. 69 (temp. Edw. II). From god, God; and fader, father. B. Other similar words are godchild, Ancren Riwle, p. 210; M. E. goddoster = god-daughter, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 48; M. E. godmoder = god-mother, id. same page; M. E. godsune = god-son, Wright's Vocab. i. 214, col. 2. And see Gossip. GODHEAD, divinity, divine nature. (E.) M. E. godked, Chaucer, C. T. 2383; spelt godkod, Ancren Riwle, p. 112. The suffix is wholly different from E. head, being the same suffix as that which is commonly written -hood. The etymology is from the A. S. hád, office, state, dignity; as in 'pri on hádum' = three in (their) Persons; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 42. ¶ This A.S. hád properly passed into -hood, as in E. man-hood; but in M. E. was often represented by -hede or -had, so that we also find manhede, Will, of Palerne, 431. This accounts for the double form maiden-hood and maiden-head. for the double form maiden-hood and maiden-head

GODWIT, the name of a bird. (E.) 'Th' Ionian godwit;' Ben nimed then the death-fire consumes every creature, animals and birds; Cynewulf's Crist, 1. 982. The form is even closer to A. S. gód wit = good wit, intelligence; but the sense is too abstract. GOGGIE-EYED, having rolling and staring eyes. (Of C. origin?). 'They gogle with their eyes hither and thither;' Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, c. 1. 'Glyare, or gogul-eye, limus, strabo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 199. 'Gogyl-eyid, gogelere, limus, strabo;' id. p. 201. Wyclif translates Lat. luscum by 'gogil-ijed' = goggle-eyed; Mark, ix. 46. 'Goggle-eyed man, louche;' Palsgrave. The suffix -le is, as usual, frequentative; the base appears to be Celtic. — Irish and Gael. gog. a nod, slight motion; Irish gogaim, I nod, gesticulate; gogach, wavering, reeling; gogor, light (in demeanour); Gael. gogach, nodding, fickle; gogaill, a silly female, coquette. The special application of the word appears clearly in Irish and Gael. gogshuileach, goggle-eyed, having wandering eyes; from gog, to move nimed' - then the death-fire consumes every creature, animals and gogskuileach, goggle-eyed, having wandering eyes; from gog, to move slightly, and suil, the eye, look, glance. B. The original sense is clearly having roving, unsteady, or rolling eyes: afterwards used of ugly or staring eyes. The use of the word by Wyclif, in the sense of 'one-eyed,' suggests that he was thinking of the Lat. cocles, which of 'one-eyed,' suggests that he was thinking of the Lat. cocles, which is probably not connected. Der. goggle, verb, to roll the eyes (Butler): goggles, i. e. a facetious name for spectacles.

GOITRE, a swelling in the throat. (F., -L.) Modern. Used in speaking of the Swiss peasants who are afflicted with it. -F. gottre, a swelled neck. - Lat. guttur, the throat (through a debased form gutter); see Juvenal, Sat. xiii. 162.

GOID, a precious metal. (E.) M. E. gold, Chaucer, C. T. 12704. - A. S. gold; Grein, i. 510. + Du. goud [for gold]. + Icel. gutt. + Swed. and Dan. guld. + G. gold. + Goth. gulth; I Tim. ii. 9. + Russ. zlato. + Gk. xpvo6s. + Zend. zaranu, zaranya, gold. + Skt. hirana, gold. See the letter-changes noticed in Curtius, i. 251.

B. The primary form is phar-ta (whence Goth. gulth. Russ. zla-to). B. The primary form is ghar-ta (whence Goth. gul-th, Russ. zla-to), whence also ghar-tja (giving Gk. xpu-ros = xpu-rjos); &c. = $\sqrt{GlIAR}$, to be yellow, related to GHAR, to shine. See Fick, i. 579. And see Green, Yellow, Chlorine; all from the same source. Der. gold-en (A. S. gyld-en, by the usual letter change, but altered in M. E. to gold-en); gold-beater, gold-duit, gold-finch (Chaucer, C. T. 4365), gold-fich, gold-leaf, gold-smith (Prompt. Parv. p. 202); mary-gold or GOLF, the name of a game. (Du.) Mentioned in Acts of James II. See Jamieson's Dict., where the earliest mention of it is said to be in 15.38. The name is taken from that of a Du. game played with a mall and ball. — Du. kolf, 'a club to strike little bouls or balls with, a mall-stick; 'Sewel's Du. Dict. + Icel. kálfr, the (rounded) clapper of a bell, a bulb, a bolt for a crossbow; kylfa, a club. + Dan. kolbe, the butt-end of a weapon; kolv, a bolt, shaft, arrow. + Swed. kolf, a buttend, bolt, retort (in chemistry). + G. kolbs, a club, mace, knob, buttend of a gun; retort (in chemistry).

B. The original sense seems to have been 'rounded end.' Of uncertain origin; see Fick, iii. 45. GOLOSH, a waterproof overshoe. (F.,-L.) The same as Galoche, q. v. GONDOLA, a Venetian pleasure-boat. (Ital., -Gk.) Shak. has gondola, Merch. of Ven. ii. 8. 8; and gondolier, Oth. i. 1. 26. - Ital. gondola, a boat used (says Florio) only at Venice; a dimin. of gonda, used with the same meaning. - Gk. κόνδυ, a drinking-vessel; which the gondola was supposed to resemble. the gondola was supposed to resemble. Said to be a word of Pers. origin. Perhaps from Pers. kandú, an earthen vessel, butt, vat; Rich. Dict. p. 1210.

GONFANON, GONFALON, a kind of standard or banner. (F.,=M.H.G.) M. E. gonfanon, Rom. of the Rose, 1201, 2018. The form gonfalon is a corruption. The sb. gunfaneur = banner-bearer, occurs in the Ancren Riwle, p. 300. = O. F. gonfanon, gunfanon, = M. H. G. gundfano, a banner, lit. battle-standard. = M. H. G. gund, pund, battle (chiefly preserved in female names, as Rhadegund); and fano, vano (mod. G. fahne), a standard, banner. B. The M. H. G. gund is cognate with A. S. guið (for gunð), war, battle; Icel. gunnr, guðr, battle; from & GHAN, to strike; cf. Skt. han, to strike, kill; Russ. gnate, goniate, to chase; Pers. jang, war. Y. G. fahne is cognate with E. vane; sec Vane.

GOOSE, the name of a bird. (E.) M. E. gos, goos, pl. gess; Chaucer, C. T. 4135, 15397.—A. S. gos, pl. gés; Grein, i. 523 (where gots stands for an older gone the long of height gives to love of a).

chaucer, C. 1. 4135, 15397.—A. S. gos, ph. ges; Grein, 1. 523 (where go's stands for an older gans, the long δ being due to loss of n). + Du, gans. + Dan, gaas (for gans), pl. gas. + Swed. gds (for gans), + Icel. gás (for gans). + G. gans. + Lat. an-er. + Gk. χήν. + Skt. hamsa. + Russ. gus'. + Lithuan. zasis.

β. 'Kuhn (Zeitschrift, ii. 261) is doubtless right in referring the stem χην to a form χενε... The oft-repeated etymology from xaireir, to gape, does very well so far as the meaning goes, but the s, which is found in the word in all languages, is against it. It seems to be an addition to the root; Curtius, i. 200. ¶ From the same base GHAN we have also gannet and gan-d-er. See Gannet, Gander. The occurrence of these words favours the theory that, in the primary form GHANSI (= goose), the s is a mere addition; thus making the derivation from GHA, to gape, yawn, very probable. See Yawn. Der. goosegrass (so called because geese are fond of it), goosequill, gos-hawk, GOOSEBERRY, the berry of a certain shrub. (Hybrid; F., -M. H. G.; and E.) 'Not worth a gooseberry;' 2 Hen. IV, i. 2. 196. 'A gooseberrie, vua [uva] crispa; Levins, 104. 28. The ending berry is E. A. As in groom, q. v., an r has been inserted, so in gaffer and gooseberry an r has been lost. It is retained in North E. grosers, gooseberries (Halliwell, Brockett). Burns has grozet, a gooseberry; To a Louse, st. 5.

B. Thus gooseberry is equivagooseberry; To a Louse, st. 5. B. Thus gooseberry is equiva-lent to gross-berry or gross-berry, where gross or gross is an ab-breviated (or more likely an original, but unrecorded) form of O.F. groisele, groselle, or groiselle, a gooseberry. The spellings groiselle and groselle are in Cotgrave; the spelling groisele ings grossele and grossele are in Cotgrave; the speling grossele occurs in a poem of the 13th century; see Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 378, l. 33. Cf. groiselier, grosselier, 'a gooseberry shrub;' Cotgrave. C. We have further proof; for the same O. F. groise (= groisele) has found its way into Irish, Gaelic, and Welsh; cf. Irish groiseid, Gael. groiseid, a gooseberry; W. grwys, a wild gooseberry.

D. The O. F. groisele is a dimin. of groise *, obviously of Teutonic origin; viz. from M. H. G. krús, curling, crisped; whence mod. G. krausbere, a craherry, rough gooseberry.

Cf. Swed krushdr, a gooseberry: Du kruisbezie (lit. a cross-herry). Cf. Swed. krusbür, a gooseberry; Du. kruisbezie (lit. a cross-berry), a singular corruption of kroesbezie, by confusion between kruis, a cross, and kross, crisp, frizzled. Thus, the orig. form of the first syllable is traced back, with great probability, to M. H. G. krús, Swed. krus, Du. kross, crisp, curled, frizzled; with reference to the short crisp curling hairs upon the rougher kinds of the fruit; cf. the Lat. name uva crispa in Levins, given above. ¶ Add, that the F. grossillier was Latinised as grossularia, with a further tendency to confusion with Lat. grossus, thick; so that if the name had been the confusion with Lat. grossus, thick; so that if the name had been surprising. The sugturned into gross-berry, it would not have been surprising. The suggestion (in Webster) a connection with E. gorse (formerly gorse) is quite out of the question, and entirely unsupported.

GOPHER, a kind of wood. (Heb.) In A. V. Gen. vi. 14.

Heb. gipher, a kind of wood; supposed to be pine or fir.

GORBELLIED, having a fat belly. (E.) In Shak. I Hen. IV, ii. 2. 93. Compounded of E. gore, lit. filth, dirt (here used of the contents of the stomach and intestines); and belly.

B. All doubt sontents of the stomach and intestines); and belly.

B. All doubt as to the origin is removed by comparing Swed. dial. gdr-baig, a fat paunch, which is certainly compounded of Swed. dial. gdr (Swed. gorr), dirt, the contents of the intestines, and baig, the belly. See Rietz, p. 225. See Gore (1). And see below.

GORCROW, the carrion-crow. (E.) 'Raven and gorcrow, all my birds of prey;' Ben Jonson, The Fox, Act i. Compounded of E. gore, filth, dirt, carrion (a former sense of the word); and crow, See Gore (1). And see above.

GORDIAN, intricate. (Gk.) Only in the phr. 'Gordian knot;' Cymb. ii. 2, 34. Named from the Phrygian king Gordius (Gk. róp-bsos), father of Midas, who, on being declared king, 'dedicated his chariot to Zeus, in the Acropolis of Gordium. The pole was fastened to the yoke by a knot of bark; and an oracle declared that whosoever should untie the knot should reign over all Asia. Alexander, on his arrival at Gordium, cut the knot with his sword, and applied the oracle to himself;' Smith's Classical Dict.

the oracle to himself; Smith's Classical Dict.

GORE (1), clotted blood, blood. (E.) It formerly meant also dirt or filth. It occurs in the sense of 'filthiness' in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, ii. 306.—A. S. gor, dirt, filth; Grein, i. 520. + Icel. gor, gore, the cud in animals, the chyme in men. + Swed. gorr, dirt, matter.

B. Allied to Icel. garnir, görn, the guts; Gk. x0p8h, a string of gut, cord; Lat. hira, gut, hernia, hernia. See Fick, i. 580; iii. 102; Curtius, i. 250.—4 GHAR, of uncertain meaning. Hence Cord, Chord, Yarn, and Hernia are all related words.

Der. gor-belly, a. v. gor-grey a. v. Also gor-y Macheth, iii. 4. 51. Der. gor-belly, q. v., gor-crow, q. v. Also gor-y, Macbeth, iii. 4. 51. GORE (2), a triangular piece let into a garment; a triangular slip of land. (E.) M. E. gore, Chaucer, C. T. 3237. – A. S. gara, a projecting point of land; Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, i. 1. 27. – A. S. gar, in the control of land (2).

β. Similarly we have lock gets, a triangular piece of land; from geirr, a spear. Also O. H. G. kero, M. H. G. gere, a promontory; G. gehre, a wedge, gusset; Du. geer, a gusset, gore.

GORE (3), to pierce, bore through. (E.) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. 1. 25. Formed, as a verb, from M. E. gare, gore, gar, a spear. Brennes . . . lette glide his gar' = Brennus let fall his spear; Layamon, 5079.—A. S. gár, a spear; Grein, i. 370. (The vowel-change is perfectly regular; cf. bone, stone, loaf, from A. S. bán, stán, hláf). + Iccl. geirr, a spear. + M. H. G. ger, O. H. G. ker, a spear.

B. We know that r here stands for an older s, because the Lat. gaesum, a javelin. is a borrowed word from the Teutonic. Hence the theoretical Teutonic form is gaisa, a spear; Fick, iil. 96. Der. gore (2); see above.

GORGE, the throat; a narrow pass. (F., -L.) the throat; Allit. Morte Arthur, ed. Brock, 3760. - O. F. gorge, the throat, gullet.—Low Lat. gorgia, the throat, a narrow pass; gorga, gurga, the same as Lat. gurges (Ducange).—Lat. gurges, a whirlpdol, abyss; hence applied, in late times, to the gullet, from its voracity. Cf. Lat. gurgulio, the gullet. + Skt. gargara, a whirlpool; a reduplicated form, from & GAR, to swallow, devour; cf. Skt. gri, to devour. Der. gorge, verb. Romeo, v. 3. 46; gorg-et, a piece of armour to protect the throat, Troilus, i. 3. 174; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 3.

GORGEOUS, showy, splendid. (F., -L.) 'In gorgeous aray; Sir T. More, Works, p. 808 c; 'they go gorgeously arayed;' id. 808 a. A corruption of the singular O. F. gorgias, 'gorgeous, gaudy, flaunting, brave, gallant, gay, fine, trimme, quaintly clothed; Cot. Cf. se gorgiaser, 'to flaunt, brave, or gallantise it;' id. \(\beta\). Perhaps formed from O. F. gorgias, 'a gorget;' id.; as though to wear a gorget were a fine thing; or from the swelling of the throat considered as a symbol of pride. y. Either way, the word depends upon F. gorge, the throat; and much light is thrown upon the word by another entry in Cotgrave, viz. 'se rengorger, to apon the word by another entry in Cotgrave, viz. 'se rengorger, to hold down [let sink down] the head, or thrust the chin into the neck, as some do in pride, or to make their faces look the fuller; we say, to bridle it.'

5. Note also Span, gorja, the throat; gorjal, a gorget, the collar of a doublet; gorguera, a gorget; gorguero, a kind of neckcloth, of ladies of fashion; gorguerin, a ruff round the neck. See Gorge. Der. gorgeous-ly, gorgeous-ness.

GORGON, a terrible monster. (L., — Gk.) In Shak, Macb.ii. 3. 77.

Let Gorgon — Gk. Forget the Govern a monetar of for fully Lat. Gorgon, Gorgo. – Gk. Γοργώ, the Gorgon, a monster of fearful aspect. – Gk. γοργώ, fearful, terrible. Root unknown; perhaps related to Skt. garj, to roar. Der. Gorgon-ian, Milton, P. L. ii. 611. GORILLA, a kind of large ape. (O. African.) The word is an old one, lately revived. It occurs just at the end of a treatise called the Periplus (*epinhous), i.e. 'circumnavigation,' written by a Carthaginian navigator named Hanno. This was originally written in the Punic language, and afterwards translated into Greek. He there the Punic language, and afterwards translated into Greek. describes some creatures 'which the interpreters called Gorillas.'

describes some creatures 'which the interpreters called Gorillas.'

GORMANDIZE, to eat like a glutton. (F.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. ii. 5. 3. Cotgrave has: 'Gourmander, to ravine, devour, glut, gormandize or gluttonize it.' The addition of -ize was no doubt suggested by the previous existence in E. of the sb. gourmand, as in 'they eate withoute gourmandyse;' Sir T. Elyot, Castle of Helth, b. ii. c. 1. This is from O. F. gourmandize, gluttony; Cot. Both the sb. gourmandize and the vb. gourmander are from the O. F. gourmand. 'a glutton, gormand, belly-god;' Cot. See Gourmand.

GORSE, a prickly shrub, furze. (E.) For gorst. M. E. gorst, GORSE, a prickly shrub, furze. (E.) For gorst. M. E. gorst, where occur the words gossibe, sibbe, and gossibrede (also spelt godfurze; Wyclif, Isaiah, lv. 13.—A. S. gorst. 'On gorste;' Luke, vi. sibrede), a derivative from godit by suffixing M. Du. gors, grass (Oudemans); Wedgwood refers it to W. gorse, gorset, waste, open. But gorse is neither 'grass' nor 'an open space. γ. I should rather suppose gorst = gro-st [cf. frost = A. S. forst]; and refer it to A. S. grówan, to grow, with the sense of 'growth.' Cf. blass from blow = A. S. blówan; blowsom (A. S. blósst-ma) from blow = A. GOSHAWK, a kind of hawk. (E.) Lit. a 'goose-hawk.' M. E., goshauk, Wyclif, Job, xxxix. 13. The connection with goose is proved by two successive entries in Wright's Vocab. i. 29, col. 1, viz. 'Auca, gos;' and 'Aucarius, gos-hafuc.' Here gos=A.S. gós, a goose; and hafuc=a hawk. The Vocabulary is ascribed to the tenth century. + Icel. gás-haukr, similarly formed. And see below.

GOSLING, a young goose. (E.) In Shak. Cor. v. 3. 35. Here gos=M. E. gos=A.S. gós, a goose. The suffix-ling is a double diminutive, = l-ing. Cf. duck-ling, from duck. See Goose.

GOSPEL, the life of Christ. (E.) M. E. gospel, Chaucer, C. T. 483. Also godspel, P. Plowman, C. xiii. 100.—A. S. godspell, Grein, i. 519.—A.S. god, God; and spell, a story, history, narrative; see Grein, ii. 469. B. Thus the lit. sense is the 'narrative of God,' i.e. the life of Christ. It is constantly derived from A.S. gód, good, and spell, story, as though gód spell were a translation of Gk. sóay-yéhov; and it was no doubt sometimes so understood, as, e. g. Hore and the sell to γέλιον; and it was no doubt sometimes so understood, as, e.g. in the Ormulum, l. 157 of the Introduction, where we read: *Goddspell on Ennglissh nemmnedd iss god word and god tipennde' = Gospel is named in English good word and good tiding.

7. This derivation gives an excellent sense, and would have served well for a translation of the Greek word. Yet it is not a little remarkable that, when the A.S. word was introduced into Iceland, it took the form when the A.S. woth was introduced to spiall = good story. And the O. H. G. word was likewise gotspel (= God story), and not guot spel. We must accept the fact, without being prejudiced; remembering that, in compound substantives, the former element is much more often a sb. than an adjective. ¶ Some have conjectured that the word may have been altered from godspel. It so, the O. H. G. word requires a similar conjecture. And we have no proof of it.

GOSSAMER, fine spider-threads seen in fine weather. (E.) M.E. gossomer, Chaucer, C. T. 10573. Spelt gossomer by W. de Biblesworth (13th cent.); Wright's Vocab. i. 147, last line. Of disputed origin; but M. E. gossomer is lit. goose-summer, and the prov. E. (Craven) name for gossamer is summer-goose; see Craven Gloss. The word is probably nothing but a corruption of 'goose-summer' or 'summer-goose,' from the downy appearance of the film. Thus the Gael, name is cleit lusan, lit. down on plants; and the Du. Dict. gives dons der planten, with the same sense, as an equivalent for gossamer. β. We may note, further, that Jamieson's Scottish Dict. gives summer-cout, i. e. summer-colt, as the name of exhalations seen rising from the ground in hot weather; and the Yorkshire expression for the same is very similar. 'When the air is seen on a warm day to undulate, and seems to rise as from hot embers, it is said, "see how the summer-colt rides!" Whitby Glossary, by F. K. Robinson; quoted from Marshall.

7. In the same Whitby Glossary, the word for 'gossamer' is entered as summer-gauze. This may be confidently pronounced to be an ingenious corruption, as the word gauze is quite unknown to Middle-English and to the peasants of Craven, who say summer-goose; see Carr's Craven Glossary, where the summer-lived content of the content of colt and summer-goose are, however, confounded together. A homely derivation of this kind is likely to be the trae one; the only real difficulty is in the transposition of the words. 8. But here we are helped out by the German, which shews that the difficulty really lies in the double sense of the word summer. The G. sommer means not only 'summer,' but also 'gossamer,' in certain compounds. The G. name for 'gossamer' is not only sommerfaden (summerthreads), but also mädchen-sommer (Maiden-summer), der-alte-Weibersommer (the old women's summer), or Mechtildesommer; see E. Müller. This makes G. sommer = summer-film; and gives to gossamer the possible sense of 'goose-summer-film.' The connection of the word with summer is further illustrated by the Du. zomerdraden, radan, E. red in kind-red).

B. Thus gossis stands for god-sib, be—Lat. gradus, a step, degree.—Lat. gradi (pp. gressus), to step; i.e. related in God, as said above. The word sib in A.S. means 'peace,' but there was a derived word meaning 'relative' of which there are some traces. Thus, in Luke, xiv. 12, the Northumb. glosses to Latin cognatos are (in one MS.) sibo and (in the other) grad-wal, q. v., grad-wale, q. v. Doublet, gradus. From the same are degree degreed, refronced in gradient, sibo gradus and degree degreed in gradus in gradus. plosses to Latin cognatos are (in one MS.) sibbo and (in the other) glosses to Latin cognatos are (in one MS.) sibbo and (in the other) gisibbs; and again, in the Ormulum, I. 310, it is said of Elizabeth that she was 'Sante Marye sibb,' i. e. Saint Mary's relative. Cf. Icel. cif, affinity; sifi, a relative; G. sipps, affinity; pl. sippen, kinsmen; Goth. sibja, relationship, adoption as sons, Gal. w. 5; unsibis, lit. unpeaceful, hence, lawless, wicked, Mark, xv. 28; unsibja, iniquity, Matt. vii. 23. These are further related to Skt. sabhya, relating to an assembly, fit for an assembly, trusty, faithful; from sabha, an assembly.

GOUGE, a chief with a hollowed blade. (F., Low Lat.)

Formerly googe. 'By googing of them out; Ben Jonson, The Devil is an Ass, A. it. sc. I (Meercraft).—F. gouge, 'a joyners googe; 'Cot. Cf. Span. gubia, a gouge.—Low Lat. guvia, a kind of chisel, in Isidore of Seville, lib. xix. De Instrumentis Lignariis (Brachet).

3. Of obscure origin. F suggest a connection with Gk. kowkus; a chisel, kowie, a broad curved knife; from SKAP, to hew.

GOURD, a large fleshy fruit. (F., - L.) M. E. gourd, Chaucer,

C. T. 17031. - F. gourde, formerly spelt goukourde or congourde, both of which spellings are in Cotgrave. Gourde is short for goukourde, which is a corruption of cougourde. - Lat. cucurbita, a gourd; evidently a reduplicated form. Perhaps related to corbis, a basket;

Fick, i. 542.

GOURMAND, a glutton. (F.) Also gormand, gormond. 'To that great gormond, fat Apicius;' Ben Jonson, Sejanus, A. i. sc. I.
'To gurmander, abligurire;' Levins, 83. 21.—F. gourmand, glutton, gormand, belly-god;' Cot. \(\beta\). Of unknown origin; possibly from the Scandinavian. Cf. Icel. gormr, ooze, mud, grounds of coffee, &c., allied to gor, gore; see Gore (i). The Span. gormand.

means 'to vomit.' Der. gormand-ize or gormand-ise, q. v.

GOUT (1), a drop, a disease. (F.,—L.) 'Gouts of blood;'

Macb. ii. 1. 46. 'And he was al-so sik with goute,' i. e. with the disease; Rob. of Glouc. p. 564. The disease was supposed to be caused by a defluxion of humours; so that it is the same word as gout, a drop. = O. F. goute, goutte, a drop; also, 'the gowt;' Cot. = Lat. gutta, a drop. Prob. related to Skt. cchut, to ooze, drop, distil; chyut, to drop; from chyu (= cchyu), to move, depart, fall. Der.

GOUT (2), taste. (F., -L.) Merely borrowed from F. gout, taste.

Lat. gustare, to taste; from the same root as E. choose. See Choose.

Lat. gustare, to taste; from the same root as E. choose. M. E. gouernen, GOVERN, to steer, direct, rule. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. gouernen, (with a fer v), Rob. of Glouc, p. 44. - O. F. governer, later gowerner.

acc. gubernatorem; governor-ship.

GOWAN, a daisy. (Gael.) 'And pu'd the gowans fine;' Burns, Auld Lang Syne, st. 2. — Gael. and Irish gugan, a bud, flower, daisy.

GOWN, a loose robe. (C.) M. E. goune, Chaucer, C. T. 393;

P. Plowman, B. xiii. 227. [Probably borrowed directly from the Celtic, rather than through O. F. gone, a gown, which is likewise of Celtic origin.] - W. gwn, a gown, loose robe; cf. gwnio, to sow, stitch. + Irish gunn, Gael. and Corn. gun, a gown; Manx goon.

Der. gown-s-man.

GRAB, to seize, clutch. (Scand.) A vulgar word, seldom used, yet answering exactly to Swed. grabba, to grasp, and very near to O. Skt. grabh, to seize, a Vedic form, of which the later form is grah. The standard E. word is gripe. See Grapple, Gripe, Grapp, Grasp.

GRACE, favour, mercy, pardon. (F., - L.) M. E. grace, in early use; Layamon, 6616 (later text). - O. F. grace. - Lat. gratia, favour. - Lat. gratus, dear, pleasing. - GHAR, to yearn; whence also Gk. valoeiv. to reioice, xapá, joy, xápis, favour, grace; Skt. hary, to The state of the s greedy, grallatory.

GRADIENT, gradually rising; a slope. (L.) Chiefly used in modern mechanics.—Lat. gradient, stem of gradiens, pres. part. of gradi, to walk, advance. See Grade.

GRADUAL, savancing by steps. (L.) 'By gradual scale;' Milton, P. L. v. 483. [Also as sb., a gradual, a service-book called in Latin graduale, and more commonly known in M.E. by the F. form grayl.]—Low Lat. gradualis*, but only used in the neut, graduale (often gradale), to signify a service-book 'containing the portions to be sung by the choir, so called from certain short phrases after the Epistle sung. in gradibus' [upon the steps]; Proctor, On the Common Prayer, p. 8. Formed, with suffix -alis, from graducrude form of gradus, a step. See Grade. Der. gradual-ly. And GRADUATE, one who has received a university degree; as verb, to take a degree, to mark off degrees. (L.) Cotgrave has: 'Gradué, graduated, having taken a degree;' and also: 'Gradé, graduate, or having taken a degree.' 'I would be a graduate, sir, no freshman; Beaum. and Fletcher, Fair Maid, A. iv. sc. 2 (Dancer). Low Lat. graduatus, one who has taken a degree; still in use at the universities.—Lat. gradu-, crude form of gradus, a degree; formed with pp. suffix -atus. Der. graduat-ion, graduat-or.

GRAFT, GRAFF, to insert buds on a stem. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) The form graft is corrupt, and due to a confusion with graft a, which was orig, the pp. of graft. Shak. has grafted, Macb. iv. 3. 51; but he also rightly has graft as a pp. 'Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants;' Rich. III, iii. 7. 127. Also the verb to graff, As You Like It, iii. 2. 124. Cf. Rom. xii. 17. M. E. graften, to graft; P. Plowman, B. v. 137. B. The verb is formed from the sb. graff, a scion. 'This bastard graff shall never come to growth;' Shak. Lucr. 1062. O. F. greel; Roquefort.—Low Lat. gradale; see explanation s. v. Gradual.

GRAIL (2) the Hell. Field at the Vel.

GRAIL (2), the Holy Dish at the Last Supper. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10. 53. A much disputed word; but the history has been thoroughly traced out in my Pref. to Joseph of Arimathie, published for the Early Eng. Text Society. Some of my remarks are copied into the article on Grail in the Supplement to the Eng. Cyclopædia. It is there shewn that the true etymology was, at an Dish) into Sang Real (Royal Blood, but perversely made to mean Real Blood).—O. F. graal, greal, grasal, a flat dish.—Low Lat. gradale, grasale, a flat dish, a shallow vessel. [The various forms in O. F. and Low Lat. are very numerous; see the articles in Roquefort, Ducange, and Charpentier's Supplement to Ducange.]

Ducange, and Charpentier's Supplement to Ducange.]
B. The word would appear to have been corrupted in various ways from Low Lat. cratella, a dimin. of crater, a bowl. See Crater.
γ. The sense of grail was, in course of time, changed from 'dish' cup.' It was, originally, the dish in which Joseph of Arimathea is said to have collected Our Lord's blood; but this was forgotten, and the Cup at the Last Suppler was substituted to explain it.

GRAIL (3), fine sand. (F., =L.) Spenser uses the word in a way peculiarly his own; he seems to have meant 'fine particles;' he speaks of 'sandie graile,' and of 'golden grayle;' F. Q. i. 7. 6; Visions of Bellay, st. 12. = O. F. graile, fine, small; Burguy (mod. F. gréle). = Lat. gracilis, slender. + Skt. kriga, thin, emaciated.

A KARK, to be thin or lean; cf. Skt. krig, to become thin. From the same root is Colossus.

GRAMPUS, a kind of fish. (Ital.?-L.) 'Grampus, a fish somewhat like a whale, but less;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Sir T, Herbert mentions 'porpice, grampasse (the sus marinus), mullet,' &c.; Travels, p. 404, ed. 1655 (or p. 3'4, Todd's Johnson). There likewise we saw many grandpisces or herring-hogs hunting the scholes of herrings; Josselyn (A. D. 1675); cited (without a reference) in Webster. The word is a sailor's corruption, either of Ital. gran pesce, great fish, or of Port. gran peixe, or Span. gran pez, with the same meaning.

—Lat. grandis piscis, a great fish; see Grand and Fish. ¶ The word porpoise is similarly formed. See Porpoise.

GRANARY, a storchouse for grain. (L.) 'Granary or Garner;'

GRANITE, a hard stone. (ltal., -L.) 'Granite or Granita, a kind of speckled marble; 'Kersey, ed. 1715. - Ital. granito, 'a kind of speckled stone; Florio. - Ital. granito, pp. of granirs, to reduce into graines; Florio; hence, to speckle. - Ital. grano, corn. - Lat.

gramm, corn. See Grain.
GRANT, to allow, bestow, permit. (F.,-L.) M. E. graunten, granten, in very early use; Layamon, 4789, later text; Ancren Riwle, p. 34.—O. F. granter, graunter, another spelling of O. F. erganter, creanter, to caution, to assure, guarantee; whence the later senses of promise, yield. Cf. Low Lat. creantare, to assure, gua-

(Hamilton). The phrase 'to dye in grain' meant to dye of a fast arantee; ereantium, a caution, guarantee; Ducange.—Late Lat. erecolour, by means of cochineal, &c.; whence grained, deeply dyed, dentare*, to guarantee, not found except in the corrupter form cre-Hamlet, iii. 4. 90. The phrase is an old one; see P. Plowman, C. antare; closely related to Low Lat. credentia, a promise, whence F. dentare*, to guarantee, not found except in the corrupter form ereantare; closely related to Low Lat. credentia, a promise, whence F.
créance.—Lat. credent-, stem of pres. part. of credere, to trust. See Creed. Der. grant, sb., grant-or, grant-ee.
initial may have been influenced by confusion with O. F. garantir, to warrant; see Guarantee.

GRANULE, a little grain. (L.) 'Granule, a little grain, or barley-corn;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. (Prob. directly from Lat.; but cf. F. granule.) - Lat. granulum, a little grain; dimin. of granum, a grain.

See Grain. Der. granul-ar, granul-ate, granul-at-ion, granul-ous. GRAPE, the fruit of the vine. (F., -M. H. G.) In Chaucer, C. T. 17032; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 30. -O. F. grappe, 'a bunch, or cluster of grapes; 'Cot. [The orig. sense was 'a hook,' then 'clustered fruit' (Brachet). In E., the sense has altered from 'cluster' to 'single berry']. Cf. Span. grapa, a hold-fast, cramp-iron; Ital. grappare, to seize; grappo, a clutching; grappolo, a cluster of grapes.

—M. H. G. krapfe, O. H. G. ckrapho, a hook. —M. H. G. kripfen, § 503 (R.) 'Each line, as it were graphic, in the face;' Ben Jonson, An Elegy on My Muse, Underwoods, 101. ix. 154.—Lat. graphiens,

An Elegy on My Muse, Underwoods, 101. IX. 154.— Lat. grapnicus, belonging to painting or drawing.— Gk. γραφικόε, the same.— Gk. γράφεν, to write; see Grave. (1) Der. graphic-al, graphic-al-ly. GRAPNEL, a grappling-iron. (F.,— M. H. G.) M. E. grapenel (trisyllabic); Chaucer, Legend Of Good Women, 640 (Cleopatra).— O. F. (and F.) grappin, a grapnel; with dim. suffix -el, thus giving grappinel, in three syllables. Formed, with suffix -in, from F. grappe, a hook.— M. H. G. krapfe, a hook. See Grape, Grapple.

GRAPPIE to lay fast hold of clutch (F.) In Shak I. I. I.

GRAPPLE, to lay fast hold of, clutch. (F.) In Shak, L. L. L. ii. 218; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 4. 29. Properly to seize with a grappel; and formed from the sb. -O. F. grappil, 'the grapple of a ship;' Cot. The same in sense as F. grappin. Both grapp-il and grapp in are formed from F. grappe, sometimes formerly used in the sense of 'hook;' cf. the phrase mordre à la grappe, to bite at the hook, to swallow the bait (Hamilton). See further under Grape.

GRASP, to seize, hold fast. (E.) M. E. graspen, used in the sense of 'grope,' to feel one's way; as in 'And graspeth by the walles to and fro;' Chaucer, C. T. 4291 (or 4293); also in Wyclif. Job. v. to and fro; Chaucer, C. T. 4291 (or 4293); also in Wyclif, Job, v. 14, xii. 25 (carlier version), where the later version has grope. Just as class was formerly class, so grass stands for grass. The M. E. graspen stands for grap-sen, an extension of M. E. grapen-gropen, to grope. Thus grasp = grap-s is a mere extension of grope. See ¶ Similarly transpositions of sp are seen in the prov. Grope. E. wops for wasp, in A. S. haps, a hasp, A. S. aps, an aspen-tree; &c. The extension of the stem by the addition of s is common in A.S., and remains in E. clean-se from clean.

GRASS, common herbage. (E.) M. E. gras, gres; also gers. Spelt gras, Chaucer, C. T. 7577; gres and gresse, Prompt. Parv. p. 210; gers, Ayenbite of Inwyt, ed. Morris, p. 111.—A. S. gærs, græs, Grein, i. 373, 525. + Du. and Iccl. gras. + Swed. and Dan. gräs. + Goth. gras. + G. gras.

B. The connection with Lat. gramen is not at all certain. It is rather to be connected with green and grow. See Grow. Der. grass-plot, grass-y; grass-happer = A.S. gars-hoppa, Ps. lxxvii. 51, cd. Spelman; graze=M. E. gresin, Prompt. Parv. p. 210; graz-i-er=graz-er (cf. bow yer, law-yer).

GRATE (1), a frame-work of iron-bars (Low Lat., =L.) M. E. grate. 'Grate, or trelys wyndowe, cancellus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 207.—Low Lat. grata, a grating; cf. Ital. grata, a grate, gridiron. A variant of Low Lat. crata, a grating, crate. - Lat. crates, a hurdle. See Crate. Thus grate is a mere variant of crate, due to a weakened See CFate. Inus grate is a mere variant or crate, due to a weakened pronunciation. Der. grat-ing, a dimin. form; grat-ed.

GRATE (2), to rub, scrape, scratch, creak. (F., -Scand.) M. E. graten. 'Grate brede [to grate bread], mico; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 207. 'Gratynge of gyngure, frictura; 'id. = O. F. grater, 'to scratch, to scrape; 'Cot. = F. gratter. Cf. Ital. grattare, to scratch, rub. = Low Lat. cratare, found in the Germanic codes; 'si quis all the control of the composition of the unguibus cratauerit; Lex Frisonum, app. 5.—Swed. kratta, to scrape; Dan. kratte, kradse, to scrape. + Du. krassen, to scratch. + G. kratzen, to scratch. Cf. M. E. cracchen, to scratch, P. Plowman, B. prol. 186. Der. grat-er, grat-ing, grat-ing-ly. Doublet, scratch.

GRATEFUL, pleasant, thankful. (Hybrid; F. and E.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 1. 132. The suffix -ful is E., from A.S. -ful, full. The first syllable appears again in in-grate, and is derived from O. F. grat, likewise preserved in O. F. in-grat, 'ungrateful;' Cot. -Lat. gratus, pleasing. See Grace. Der. grateful-iy, grate-ful-ness; also gratify, q. v.; and see gratis, gratitude, gratuitous, gratulate;

GRATIFY, to please, soothe. (F.,-L.) In Shak. Merch. of GRAZE (2), to feed cattle. (E.) Merely formed from grass. Ven. iv. 1. 406. — O. F. gratifier, 'to gratifie;' Cot.—Lat. gratificare, gratificari, to please.—Lat. grati-grato-, crude form of grass.

Pleasing; and ficare (= facere), to make. See Grateful, Grace.

Der. gratification, from Lat. sec. gratificationem, which from grass.

201.—F. gratitude; Cot.—Low Lat. gratitudinem, acc. of gratitudo, thankfulness. Formed (like beatitudo from beatus) from gratus, pleasing; see Grateful.

GRATUITOUS, freely given. (L.) 'By way of gift, merely gratuitous;' Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3. rule 81.—Lat. gratuitus, freely given. Extended from gratus, for gratus, pleasing. See Grateful. Der. gratuitous-ly; and see below.

GRATUITY, a present. (F.,—L.) So called because given freely or gratis. 'To be given me in gratuity;' Ben Jonson, The Humble Petition of Poor Ben to K. Charles, I. 10. And in Cot-grave. = O. F. gratuité, 'a gratuity, or free gift;' Cot. = Low Lat. gratuitatem, aoc. of gratuitas, a free gift. = Lat. gratuitus, freely given. See above.

GRATULATE, to congratulate. (L.) In Shak. Rich. III, iv. 1. 10.—Lat. gratulatus, pp. of gratulari, to wish a person joy. Formed as if from an adj. gratulus*, joyful; an extension of gratus, pleasing. See Grateful. Der. gratulation, gratulatory; also congratulate, which has now taken the place of the simple verb.

con-gratulate, which has now taken the place of the simple verb.

GRAVE (1), to cut, engrave. (E.) M. E. grauen (with u for v), to grave, also to bury; Chaucer, C. T. 8,557; Layamon, 9960.—

A. S. grafan, to dig, grave, engrave; Grein, i. 523. + Du. graven, to dig. + Dan. grave, to dig. + Icel. grafa, to dig. + Swed. grafva, to dig. + Goth. graban; Luke, vi. 48. + G. graben. + Gk. γράφειν, to scratch, engrave, write. + Lat. seribere, to write, inscribe; cf. Lat.
serobis, serobs, a ditch, dike, i.e. cutting; sealpere, to cut.—

SKRABH, SKARBH, an extended form of γ SKAR, to cut, shear; see Shear; also Scalp, Sculpture, Scribe.

¶ The loss of initial s at once accounts for the close likeness between the snear; see Bhear; also Scalp, Sculpture, Scribe. ¶ The loss of initial s at once accounts for the close likeness between the Gk. and E. forms. Der. grave, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 12599, lit. 'that which is dug out,' a word which is found again even in the Russ. grob, a grave, a tomb; also graver, graving, grove, groove.

Doublet, scalp, verb; also (probably) carve. From the same root are glabrous, grammar, graphic, en-grave, and the endings -graph, grief, q.v.; also ag-grav-ate, ag-grieve, baro-meter.

GRAVE (2), solemn, sad. (F., -L.) Lit. 'heavy.' In Spenser, F. Q. v. 7. 18. -F. grave, 'grave, stately;' Cot. -Lat. gravis, heavy, grave. + Goth. kaurs, heavy, burdensome; 2 Cor. x. 10. + Gk. βαρύε, heavy. + Skt. guru, heavy. All from an Aryan form GARU, heavy. Der. grave-ly, grave-ness; also grav-i-ty (Shak.), from F. gravit (Cot.), from Lat. acc. gravitatem; gravi-t-ate, gravit-t-at-ion; gravi-d, from Lat. gravidus, burdened. From the same root, eare, q. v.; grief, 0. v.; also graveragete, agravieue have-meter.

GRAVEL, fine small stones. (F., -C.) M. E. gravel (with u for v), in early use; in King Horn, ed. Lumby, l. 1405. -O. F. gravele, later gravelle (Burguy, Cot.); dimin. of O. F. grave (spelt greve in Burguy), rough sand mixed with stones (Brachet).

B. Prob. of Celtic origin; the original is also the base of the Bret. grouan, gravel, Com. grow, gravel, sand W. gro, pebbles; cf. also Gael. grothlach, gravelly, and Skt. gravan, a stone, rock. Der. gravelly.

GRAVY, juice from cooked meat. (Scand.?) In Shak. 2 Hen.

IN S. 2. 184. Also spelt greavy, or greavy (with u for v). 'In fat and greavy;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odyss. xviii. 167. 'With all their fat and greavi;' id. xviii. 63. Origin uncertain; but prob. originally the adjective formed from greave or greaves (also grave, graves), tallow-drippings. Thus gravy would signify (1) tallow-y, fat; and (2) fat, gravy. Observe that the word fat has suffered the very same change, from adj. to sb. See Greaves (1).

GRAY. ash-coloured: white mixed with black, (E.) M. E. grav.

GRAY, ash-coloured; white mixed with black. (E.) M. E. gray, gray. 'Hire eyen gray as glas;' Chaucer, C. T. 152.—A. S. grág; Grein, i. 525. [The final g passes into y by rule, as in E. day from A. S. dag.] + Du. graauw. + Icel. grár. + Dan. graa. + Swed. grå. + G. grau. + Lat. rauus, gray (put for kravus, according to Fick, iii. 110). Cf. Skt. ghúr, to become old; also spelt júr. The Gk. ypaños, aged, gray, is also related. Der. gray-isk, gray-beard; gray-king (with double dimin. suffix).

James, aged, gray, is also related. Der. gray-isa, gray-osara; gray-ing (with double dimin. suffix).

GRAZE (1), to scrape slightly, rub lightly. (F.?) 'With the grasing of a bullet upon the face of one of the servants;' Ludlow, Memours, vol. i. p. 51 (R.) Apparently a coined word, founded on rass, i.e. to scrape lightly, the initial g having been suggested by the verb to grate.

S. Rase is from F. raser, 'to touch or grate on a thing in passing by it;' Cot. See Rase.

The form of the word may be due to some confusion with grase (2).

nedes mote; said of Nebuchadnezzar; Gower, C. A. i. 142. See Grass. Der. graz-i-ar.

GREASE, animal fat, oily matter. (F.,-L.) M. E. grece, gress; Chaucer, C. T. 135, 6069.—O. F. gresse, graisse, fatness (Burguy, s. v. eras).—O. F. gras, orig. eras, fat.—Lat. erassus, thick, fat. See Crass. Der. gress-y, greas-i-ness.

GREAT, large, ample, big. (E.) M. E. gret, grets; Chaucer, C. T. 1279.—A. S. gredt, Grein, i. 527. + Du. groot. + G. gross. B. Perhaps further related to Lat. grandis, great. Der. great-ly, great-ness; great-coat, great-kearted; also great-grandfather, great-grandson. And see groot.

GREAVES (1), GRAVES, the sediment of melted tallow. (Scand.) 'To Grave a skip, to preserve the calking. by laying over a mixture of tallow or train-oil, rosin, &c. boiled together;' Kersey's a mixture of tallow or train-oil, rosin, &c. boiled together; 'Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. This verb merely means to smear with grave or graves, i. e. a tallowy mess. Of Scand. origin; cf. O. Swed. grefwar, dirt, ljus-grefwar, candle-dirt, refuse of tallow (Ihre); Swed. dial. grever, sb. pl. leavings of tallow, greaves (Rietz); cf. Platt-Deutsch grever, greaves; Bremen Wörterbuch, ii. 541. + G. griebe, the fibrous remains of lard, after it has been fried (Flügel). $, Of uncertain origin; see the account in Rietz. Der. grav-y, q.v.

GREAVES (2), armour for the legs. (F.) In Milton, Samson, 1121.—O. F. graves, 'boots, also greaves, or armour for the legs.' till.—O. F. greves, Doots, also greaves, or armout for the legs; Cot. Cf. Span. grebas (pl. of greba), greaves.—O. F. greve, 'the shank, shin, or forepart of the leg;' Cot. B. Origin unknown; Littré derives it from Arab. jawrab, a shoe, stocking, sandal; Rich. Dict. p. 525. He adds that this word is pronounced gawrab in Egypt.

This is not convincing.

GREBE, an aquatic bird. (F., -C.) Modern; not in Johnson. So named from its crest. -F. grebe, a grebe (Hamilton). - Bret. krib, a comb; cf. Bret. kriben, a crest or tuit of feathers on a bird's head. Corn. and W. erib, a comb, crest; Corn. eriban, a crest, tuft, plume;
 W. eribyn, a crest, eribell, a cock's comb.
 GREEDY, hungry, voracious. (E.) M. E. gredi. gredy; Ancren

Riwle, p. 416; whence gradinesse, id. p. 416.—A. S. gradig, gradig, Grein, i. 525. + Du. gretig (for gredig). + Icel. gradugr. + O. Swed. gradig, gradig (thre). + Dan. graadig. + Goth. gradags. + Skt. gridhm, gridhra, griddhin, greedy; from the verb gridh (base gardh), to be greedy. - GARDH, to be greedy i whence also E. grade; see Grade. Der. greed-i-ly, greed-i-ness. The sb. greed, though of late use, is a perfectly correct form, answering to Icel. grade; bunger Russ gold, hunger Russ gold, though of late use, is a perfectly correct form, answering to Icel. grador, Goth. gredus, hunger, Russ. golod', hunger.

GREEN, of the colour of growing plants. (E.) M. E. green, grene, Chaucer, C. T. 6568; used as sb., 159, 6580, 6964.—A. S. grene, Grein, i. 526. [Here & stands for \(\vec{o}\), the mutation of \(\vec{o}\), so that the base is gro-.] + Du. groen. + Icel. grann (for grann). + Dan. and Swed. gr\vec{o}\)n, H. G. gruene, O. H. G. kruoni. + Russ. zelene, greenness. + Lithuan. \(\vec{d}\)dies, green (Schleicher). + Gk. \(\chi\)Amples, greenish. + Skt. \(\kari\), green, yellow. — \(\vec{o}\) GHRA, GHAR, GHAL, to be green; whence also yellow. See Yellow and Chlorine. From the same root is Grow, \(\vec{o}\), v. Der. greens; the phrase 'wortes of greens' is used to translate \(\kartheta\)olera kerbarum in The Anglo-'wortes of grenes' is used to translate Aplera herbarum in The Anglo-Saxon and Early English Psalters, ed. GREET (1), to salute. (E.) M. E. greten, Chaucer, C. T. 8890;
Ancren Riwle, p. 430.—A.S. grétan, to approach, visit, address;
Grein, i. 526. + Du. groeten, to greet, salute. + M. H. G. gruezen, G. grüssen, to greet. Root obscure. Der greet-ing.

GREET (2), to weep, cry, lament, (E.) In Northern E. only.
M. E. greten, Havelok, 164, 241, 285.—A. S. grátan, grétan, to weep; Grein, i. 525. + Icel. gráta. + Dan. græde. + Swed. gráta. + Goth. gretan, to weep. Probably allied to Skt. hrad, to sound inarticulately, roar as thander. - GHRAD, to sound, rattle; Fick, i. 82.
GREGARIOUS, associating in flocks. (L.) 'No birds of prey are gregarious;' Ray, On the Creation, pt. i. (R.)—Lat. gregarius, belonging to á flock.—Lat. greg., base of gren, a flock; with suffix arius. B. Apparently from a base gar-g, lengthened form of

S. grim, fierce, cruel, severe, dire, Grein, i. 527; st granada, a pomegranate, a hand-grenade. – Span. granado, full of seeds. – Lat. granatus, full of seeds. – Lat. granum, a grain. See Grain, Garnet. Der. grenad-ier.

GREY, the same as Gray, q.v. GREYHOUND, a swift slender hound. (Scand.) Greihoundes GREYHOUND, a swift slender hound. (Scand.) 'Greihoundes he hadde as swift as foul of flight; 'Chaucer, C. T. 190. Also spelt greakund, Ancren Riwle, p. 333, last line.—Icel. greyhundr, a greyhound; composed of grey, a dog, and kundr, a hound. The Icel. grey is also used alone in the sense of greyhound or dog; and the Icel. greybaka means a bitch. Cf. also Icel. greyligr, paltry.

Whatever be the source of Icel. grey, there is no pretence for connecting it with E. gray, for which the Icel. word is grár.

GRIDDLE, a pan for baking cakes. (C.) M. E. gredil, a gridiron (in the story of St. Lawrence), Ancren Riwle, p. 122. Called a girdle (— gridle) in North. E.—W. gredyll, greidell, gradell, a circular aron (in the story of St. Lawrence), Ancren Riwle, p. 122. Called a girdle (=gridle) in North. E.—W. gredyll, greidell, gradell, a circular iron plate to bake on, a griddle, grate; from greidio, to scorch, singe.

I ish greideal, greideil, a griddle, gridiron; also greadog, a griddle; from greadaim, I scorch, parch, burn. (The Swed. grädda, to bake, is prob. of Celtic origin.) Der. From the same base, by a slight change, was made the M. E. gredire, a griddle, P. Plowman, C. iii. 130. Very likely, this was at first a mere change of l to r, but the latter part of the word thus became significant. the M. E. ire the latter part of the word thus became significant, the M. E. ire the latter part of the word thus became significant, the M. E. tre heaning 'iron;' hence our grid-iron, spelt gyrdiron in Levins, 163.

69. Not related to grill.

GRIDE, to pierce, cut through. (E.) A favourite word with Spenser; see F. Q. ii. 8. 36; Sheph. Kal. February, l. 4; Virgil's Gnat, 254. And cf. 'griding sword;' Milton, P. L. vi. 329. A mere metathesis of gird, M. E. girden, to strike, pierce, cut through, used by Chaucer, and borrowed from him by later poets. 'Thurgh girt [pierced through] with many a grevous blody wound;' Chaucer, C. T. 1012. B. This yerb girden means to strike with a rod, from M. E. β. This verb girden means to strike with a rod, from M. E. gerde, generally softened to serde, a rod (mod. E. yard); cf. 'Or if men smot it with a zerde;' Chaucer, C. T. 149. Cf. G. gerte, a switch; and see Yard.

y. The same word is used metaphorically in the phrase 'to gird at,' i.e. to strike at, try to injure; see Shak. 2 Hen. IV, i. 2. 7; so also a gird is a cut, a sarcasm, Tam. Shrew, v. 2. 48. \P The same metathesis of r takes place in bride, q. v. The usual derivation of gride from Ital gridare, to cry aloud, as

GRIEF, great sorrow. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. grief, gref; spelt gref, Floriz and Blancheflur, ed. Lumby, 187. - O. F. gref, grief, adj. burdensome, heavy, sad. - Lat. grauis, heavy, sad, grave. See Grave. Der. grieve, &c. See below.

GRIEVE, to afflict; to mourn. (F., -L.) M. E. greuen (with w=v), Rob. of Glouc. p. 41; P. Plowman, C. v. 95. -O. F. grever, to grieve, burden, afflict.—Lat. grauare, to burden.—Lat. grauis, heavy. GRIFFIN, GRIFFON, an imaginary animal. (F., -L., -Gk.) Griffin is a weakened spelling; a better spelling is griffon. M. E. griffon, Chaucer, C. T. 2135.—F. griffon, 'a gripe, or griffon;' Cot. Formed, with suffix -on, from Low Lat. griffus, a griffin.—Lat. gryphus, an extended form of gryps, a griffin.—Gk. γρύψ (stem γρυπ-), a griffin, a fabulous creature named from its hooked beak.—Gk.

purise, curved; also, hook-nosed, hook-bcaked. Root unknown.

GRIG, a small lively eel; a cricket. (Scand.) 'A grigge, a young cele. A meric grigge'; Minsheu, ed. 1627. The final ground be due to an older k, and the word is easily deducible from erick, the word of which crick-et is the diminutive. Cf. Lowland Sc. crike, crick, a tick, a louse (Jamieson). It is certainly of O. Low G. origin, and probably Scandinavian. - Scand. dial. kräk, also hrik, a little creature, esp. a crawling creature; Rietz. (Cf. Du. kriek, rik, a little creature, esp. a crawling creature; Rietz. (Cf. Du. kriek, a cricket; krekel, a cricket.) = Swed. dial. kräka, to creep (Rietz); Leel. kreika, to crouch. Cf. G. kriechen, to creep. See Cricket. (1). The phrase as merry as a grig is either of independent origin, or an easy corruption of the (apparently) older phrase as merry as a Greek; see quotations in Nares, amongst which we may note 'she's a merry Greek indeed;' Troilus, i. 2. 118; 'the merry Greeks,' id. iv. 4. 58. Merrygreek is a character in Udall's Roister Doister; A.D. 1553. Cf. Lat. gracari, to live like Greeks, i. e. effeminately, luxuriously; Horat. Sat. ii. 2. 11.

GRILL, to broil on a gridiron. (F., =L.) Extended to grilly by Butler. 'Than have them grillied on the embers;' Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 15 from end. = F. griller, 'to broile on a gridiron, to scorch;' Cot. = F. grill, 'a gridiron;' id. Formerly spelt greil, grail (Brachet). = Lat. acc. craticulum, a masc. form of craticula, a small gridiron; Mart. xi. 221 (whence F. grille, a grating). These are dimin. forms from Lat. crates, a hurdle. See Grate (1), Crate.

also A.S. grimatan, to rage, roar, grunt. + Du. grimmig, angry; cf. grimmen, to foam with rage. + Icel. grimmr, grim, stem; gramr, wrathful. + Dan. grim, ugly, grim; gram, wrathful. + Swed. grym, cruel, grim, furious; cf. grymta, to grunt. + Goth. gram*, angry; only preserved in the derived verb gramjan, to make angry, excite to wrath. + G. grimmig, furious; grimmen, to rage; grimm, fury; gram, grief; gram, hostile. β. Other alkied words are Russ. grom', a loud noise, thunder; gremiete, to thunder; Gk. χρόμη, χρόμος, noise; χρεμίζειν, χρεμετίζειν, to neigh; see Curtius, i. 250. γ. All from σ GHARM, to make a loud noise, an extension of GHAR, to make a noise, to yell; cf. Skt. gharghara, an inarticulate noise, a rattle, gurgle; ghargharita, grunting. See Yell.

GRIMACE, an ugly look, smirk. (F., - Scand.) 'Grimace and affectation;' Dryden, Poet. Epist. to H. Higden, l. 10. - F. grimace, and affectation;' Crit. Les to H. Higden, l. 10. - F. grimace, and the characteristic of the control of the con

'a crabd looke;' Cot. - Icel. grima, a mask, kind of hood or cowl; whence grimu-maôr, a man in disguise. A grimace is so called from the disguised appearance due to it. + A. S. grima, a mask, helmet. B. Origin obscure; Fick connects it with the verb to grin; iii. 111. This relationship is rendered very probable by the Du. grijns, a mask, a grin. See Grin. Der. grimace, verb. And see Grime, Grim. GRIMALKIN, a cat. (E. ; partly from Heb.) See Nares, that it stands for gray makin, in pame for a fend supposed suggests that it stands for gray malkin, 'a name for a fiend, supposed to resemble a grey cat.' He is probably right. In this view, Malkinis for Moll-kin, a dimin. of Moll (for Mary), with suffix -kin. The name Mary is Hebrew. The M. E. Malkin, as a dimin. of Mary, was in very common use; see Chaucer, C. T. 4450. It was a name for a slut or loose woman.

GRIME, dirt that soils deeply, smut. (Scand.) In Shak. Com. of Errors, iii. 2. 106. As a verb, K. Lear, ii. 3. 9. M. E. grim; 'grim or gore;' Havelok, 2497. [The A. S. grima, a mask, is (apparently) the same word, but the peculiar sense is Scand.] - Dan. grim, griin, lampblack, soot, grime; whence grimet, streaked, begrimed. + Swed. dial. grima, a spot or smut on the face; Rietz. + Icel. grima, a cowl worn for disguise, mask. + O. Du. grijmsel, grimsel, soot, smut (Kilian); grimmelen, to soil, begrime (Oudemans). + Friesic grime, a mask, dark mark on the face; cited by Rietz. Cf. also Du. grijns, a mask, a grin; which connects the word with Grin, q.v. And see Grimace. Der. grim-y.

GRIN, to snarl, grimace. (E.) M. E. grennen, Ancren Riwle, 212; Layamon, 29550.—A.S. grennian, to grin; Grein, i. 525. + Du. grijnen, to weep, cry, fret, grumble; whence grijnsen, to grumble, to grin. + Icel. grenja, to howl. + Dan. grine, to grin, simper. + Swed. grina, to distort the face, grimace, grin. + G. greinen, to grin, grimace, weep, cry, growl. β. A mere variant of Groan, q.v. Also further related to Grim, q.v. From \checkmark GHARN, an extension of \checkmark GHAR, to make a noise, discussed under Grim. Der grin, sb. GRIND, to reduce to powder by rubbing. (E.) M. E. grinden, Chaucer, C. T. 14080; Ancren Riwle, p. 70. - A. S. grindan, Grein, β. The base is GHRI, whence also Lat. fri-are, to rub, crumble to pieces; cf. Gk. xpleiv, to graze, Skt. ghrish, to grind, from a base GHARS, in which the s is additional, as noted by Curtius, i. 251. These analogies are quite clear, though not pointed out in Fick or Curtius. All from & GHAR, to grind. The Lat. fri-c-are, to rub, also shews an addition to the base. Der. grind-er, grind-stone; also grist, q.v. From the same base, fri-able, fri-c-tion.

GRIPE, to grasp, hold fast, seize forcibly. (E.) Also grip; but the form with long i is the original.

1. Grip is a very late form, altogether unnoticed in Todd's Johnson; it is French, from F. gripper, a word of Scand. origin, from Icel. gripa. the common old form, both as sb. and verb; see Shak. Macb. iii. 1. the common old form, both as so, and verb; see Shak. Mach. in. 1. 62; K. John, iv. 2. 190. M. E. gripen, P. Plowman, B. iii. 248.—
A. S. gripan, to seize; Grein, i. 529. + Du. grijpen. + Icel. gripa.
+ Dan. gribe. + Swed. gripa. + Goth. greipan. + G. greifen. +
Russ. grabite, to seize, plunder. + Lith. gröbiù, I seize (Schleicher).
+ Skt. grab (Vedic grabh), to seize, take. - GARBH, to seize;
cf. E. grab. Der. gripe, sh., gripes; and see grab, grope, grasp.

[But grappel and grapple are not related.]

GRISETTE, a gay young Frenchwoman of the lower class.

(F.,-M. H. G.) Lately borrowed from F. grisette, orig. a cheap M. H. G. gris, gray; cf. G. greis, a grayhaired man. See Grisaly.

M. H. G. gris, gray; cf. G. greis, a grayhaired man. See Grisaly.

Hence also F. gris, the fur of the gray squirrel; Chaucer, C. T. 194.

GRISLED, the same as Griszled, q. v.

GRISLING.

GRISKIN, the spine of a hog; prov. E. (Scand.) The lit. sense is 'a little pig;' it is formed by the dimin, suffix -kin from the once common word gris or grice, a pig. 'Bothe my gees and my grys'=both my geese and pigs; P. Plowman, B. iv. 51. 'Gryce, swyne, or pygge, porcellus,' Prompt. Parv. p. 211; and see Way's note. - Icel. griss, a young pig. + Dan. griis, a pig. + Swed. gris, a pig. + Gk. xeises (for xopo-ue), a young pig; Curtius, i. 250. + Skt. grissvis, a boar; cited by Curtius.

B. The root is clearly GHARS, to grind, rub; though the reason for the sense of the sb. is not clear; it may refer to the use of the animal's root. is not clear; it may refer to the use of the animal's snout. See GEIST.Y, hideous, horrible. (E.) M. E. gristy, Chaucer, C. T. 1973, 14115.—A. S. grystic, in the compound an-grystic, horrible, terrible; Grein, i. 8. By the common change of s to r, we also find A.S. gryselie, terrible; Grein, i. 532. Allied to A.S. grysen*, to feel terror, shudder (base grus), only found in the comp. dgrisen, put for dgrysen. 'And for helle agrise' = and shudder at the thought of hell; Laws of Caut, i. 25; see Ancient Laws, ed. Thorpe, vol. i. p. 374. Cf. G. grausig, causing horror; graus, horrible, horror; grausen, to make to shudder = M. H. G. grusen. β. Possibly related to Goth. gaurjan, to grieve, make to grieve; gaurs, sad, grieved; which answers in form to Skt. ghora, horrible, dreadful, violent. Doublet, gruseome, q. v.

GRIST, a supply of corn to be ground. (E.) M. E. grist. 'And moreouer . . . grynd att the Citeis myllis . . as long as they may have sufficiaunt grist; Eng. Gilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, pp. 335, 336.—A. S. grist, as a gloss to Lat. molitura; Wright's Vocab i. 34, col. 2. We also find A. S. gristitan, to gnash or grind the teem (Grein, i. 520), with the same word forming a prefix. Formed from the base gri- of the verb grindan, to grind. See Grind.

G. bla-st from blaw (as wind), blossom (= blo-st-ma) from blow (to flourish).

Der. grist-le.
GRISTLE, cartilage. (E.) 'Seales have gristle, and no bone; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xi. c. 37; vol. i. p. 345a. The word gristly occurs in the preceding clause. It was especially used with reference to the nose. 'Grystylle of the nose, cartilago;' Prompt. Parv. 'Nease-gristles,' i. e. gristles of the nose (speaking of many people together); O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 251.—A. S. gristle, as a gloss to cartilago; Ælfric's Glos. in Wright's Vocab. i. 43, col. 2. +O. Fries. gristel, gristl, grestel, gerttel; Richtofen. B. The word is certainly the dimin. of grist, and derivable from the root of grind; with reference to the necessity of crunching it if eaten. So also with reference to the necessity of crunching it if eaten. So also Du. knarsbeen, gristle, from knarsen, to crunch (Wedgwood). See Grist. Der. gristl-y.

GRIT, gravel, coarse sand. (E.) Formerly greet. 'Greete, sabulum;' Levins, 89. 11. 'Sablonniere, a sand-bed, . . a place full of sand, greet, or small gravel; 'Cotgrave, M. E. greet, Ancen Riwle, p. 70.—A. S. greet, grit, dust; Grein, i. 527. + O. Fries. gret. + Icel. grjót. + G. gries. Closely allied to Grout, q.v. Der. gritt-y, gritt-i-ness; see also groats, grout.

GEIZZLY, GRIZZLED, of a grey colour. (F.,—M. H. G.;

GEIZZLY, GRIZZLED, of a grey colour. (F., -M. H. G.; with E. suffix.) Shak. has grizzled, Hamlet, i. 2. 240 (in some copies gristy); also grizzle as sb., a tinge of gray, Tw. Nt. v. 168. Formed with suffix -y (or -ed) from M. E. grisel, a gray-haired man. 'That olde grisel is no fole' [fool]; Gower, C. A. iii. 356. Grisel is formed, with suffix -el, from F. gris, gray. -M. H. G. gris, gray; cf. G. greis, a gray-haired man. B. Possibly related to E. gray, but the connection is not at all clear. Der. From the same source, gris-ette, q. v. GROAN, to moan. (E.) M. E. gronen, Chaucer, C. T. 14892; Ancren Riwle, p. 326. -A. S. gránian, to groan, lament; Grein, i. 524; allied to grennian, to grin. See Grin. Der. groan-ing. GROAT, a coin worth 4d. (O. Low G.) M. E. grote, Chaucer, C. T. 7546; P. Plowman, B. v. 31. -O. Low G. grote, a coin of Bremen, described in the Bremen Wörterb. ii. 550. The word (like Du. groot) means 'great'; the coins being greater than the small Du. groot) means 'great'; the coins being greater than the small copper coins (Schwaren) formerly in use in Bremen. Cognate with groute, Liber Cure Cocorum, ed. Morris, 47 (Stratmann).—1cci. graute, porridge. Eognate with A.S. grut, coarse meal, whence E. grout, coarse meal, grouts, dregs. See Grout. ¶ Groats and grouts are the same word; the only difference is one of dialect. Groats is the North, E. or Scand. form, and grouts the English. GROCEIR, a dealer in tea and sugar. (F.,—L.) Formerly spelt grosser, as in Holinshed's Chron. Rich. II, an. 1382; Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. i. p. 193 (R.) A. In olden times, those whom we now call grocers were called spicers. Dealers were of two kinds, as now: there were wholesale dealers, called grossers or engrossers, and now; there were wholesale dealers, called grossers or engrossers, and retail dealers, called regrators; see Liber Albus, ed. Kiley, p. 547, note 1. Thus the word grosser, properly 'a whole-sale dealer, is now spelt grocer, and means 'a spicer.' B. Borrowed from O. F. grosser, 'a grocer; much means a spacer. B. Borrowed from O. F. grosser, 'a grocer; marchant grosser, that sels only by the great, or utters his commodities wholesale;' Cot.—O. F. gross, fem. grosse, great. See Gross. Der. grocer-y, formerly grossery, from O. F. grosserie, 'great worke; also grossery, wares uttered, or the uttering of wares, by whole-sale;' Cot.

GROATS, the grain of oats without the husks. (Scand.) M. E. grotes, Liber Cure Cocorum, ed. Morris, 47 (Stratmann). - Icel.

GBOG, spirits and water, not sweetened. (F., -L.) An abbrevig-tion of grogram. 'It derived its name from Admiral Edward Vernon, who wore grogram. 'It derived its name from Admiral Edward vernon, who wore grogram breeches, and was hence called "Old Grog." About 1745, he ordered his sailors to dilute their rum with water. ... He died 30 Oct., 1757; 'Haydn, Dict. of Dates. See Grogram. GROGRAM, a stuff made of silk and mohair. (F., L.) Formerly grogram, a more correct form (Skinner). 'He shall have the grograms at the rate I told him; 'Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, il.

at the rate I told him; 'Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, ii. I. 10. So called because of a coarse grain or texture.—O.F. grosgrain, 'the stuffe grogeran;' Cot.—F. gros, gross, great, coarse; and grain, grain. See Gross and Grain. Der. grog, q.v. GROIN, the fork of the body, part where the legs divide. (Scand.) In Shak. 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 227. The same word as prov. E. grain, the fork of the branches of a tree. The word occurs in the Percy Folio MS., ed. Hales and Furnivall, i. 75, l. 12, where it is misinterpreted by Percy, but rightly explained in a note at p. lxiii. 'Grain, (1) the junction of the branches of a tree or forked stick; (2) the groin; 'Peacock, Gloss. of Words used in Manley (E. D. S.). And see Atkinson's Cleveland Glossary, and Halliwell.—Icel. grein, a branch, arm; cf. greina, to fork, branch off. + Dan green, a branch. a branch, arm; cf. greina, to fork, branch off. + Dan. green, a branch, prong of a fork. + Swed. gren, a branch, arm, fork, stride; see gren in Rietz. (Root unknown.) Der. groin-ed, i. e. having angular curves which intersect or fork off.

about horses; but orig. of wider use. It meant a lad, servant in waiting, or sometimes, a labourer, shepherd. M. E. grom, grome; Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 135; P. Plowman, C. ix. 227; Havelok, 790; King Horn, 971. B. Of uncertain origin; Stratmann cites the O. Du. grom and O. Icel. grome, a boy, as parallel forms; but neither of these forms have any obvious etymology, and may be no more than corruptions of Du. gom (only used in the comp. bruidegom, a bridegroom) and Icel. gumi, a man, respectively. Y. In our word bridegroom, q. v., the r is well known to be an insertion, and the same may be the case when the word is used alone. Though the insertion of r is very remarkable, there are other instances, as in cart-r-idge for cartouche, part-r-idge, co-r-poral for F. caporal, vagr-ant, hoa-r-se, &c.; see Mätzner, Engl. Gramm. i. 175.

8. A remarkable example shewing the probability of this insertion occurs in P. Plowman. In the A-text, vii. 205, the text has gomes, but three MSS. have gromes. In the B-text, vi. 219, at least seven MSS have gomes. In the C-text, ix. 227, the MSS. have gromes. e. If the r can thus be disposed of, the etymology becomes extremely simple, viz. thus be disposed of, the etymology becomes extremely simple, viz. from A. S. guma, a man, Grein, i. 532; which is cognate with Du. gom (in bruide-gom), G. gam (in brüutigam), O. H. G. gumo, Icel. gumi, Goth. guma, Lat. homo, a man. See Human.

GROOVE, a trench, furrow, channel. (Du.) In Skinner; rare in early books. 'Groove, a channel cut out in wood, iron, or stone;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Also: 'Groove or Grove, a deep hole or pit sunk in the ground to early for minerale,' id.

in the ground, to search for minerals; id. β. The proper spelling of the latter word is grove; see Manlove's poem on Leadmines (E. D. S. Glos. B. 8, H. 18, 22, and the Glossary), printed A.D. 1653. We certainly ought to distinguish between the two forms. form groove, as a joiner's term, is Dutch, and borrowed from Du. groef (pron. groof) or groeve, a grave, channel, groove.

2. Grove, a mine, is the real E. form, and merely a peculiar use of the word

a mine, is the feath E. torni, and metery a pectuar use of the word grove, usually applied to trees. See Grove.

GROPE, to feel one's way. (E.) M. E. gropen, C. T. 646 (or 644); used in the sense of 'grasp,' King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1057.—A. S. grápian, to seize, handle, Grein, i. 524; a weak verb, and unoriginal.—A, S. gráp, the grip of the fingers, grasp of the hand; id.—A. S. grápan, to gripe. See Gripe. B. Similarly the Icel. greip, grip, grasp, is from Icel. gripa, to gripe; and the O. H. G. greifa, a two-pronged fork (cited by Fick, iii. 111) is from O. H. G. grifan, to gripe. And see Grasp. Der. grop-ing-ly.

GROSS, fat, large. (F.,—L.) Very common in Shak.; Merry Wives, iii. 3. 43, &c. 'This grosse imagination;' Frith's Works, p. 140, col. 2.—O.F. gros (fem. grosse), 'grosse, great, big, thick;' Cot.—Lat. grossus, thick (a late form). Of uncertain origin; see Fick, i. 525 (s. v. krat). Der. gross-ly, gross-ness, gros-beak or gross-beak (F. gros bec, great beak, the name of a bird), grocer, q. v., grocer-y; also gross, sb., en-gross, in-gross, gro-gram, grog.

GROT, a cavern. (F.,—L.,—Gk.) 'Umbrageous grots and caves;' Milton, P. L. iv. 257.—F. grotte, 'a grot, cave;' Cot. (Cf. Prov. crota, formerly cropta, cited by Littré.)—Low Lat. grupta, a crypt, cave; a form found in a Carolingian document: 'Insuper eidema contuli gruptas eremitarum ... cum omnibus ad dictas gruptas perti-

From Greek; see Crypt. And see Grotto. Doublet, crypt; also grotto. Der. grot-esque, q.v. GROTTO, a cavern. (Ital.,—L.,—Gk.) A corruption of the older form grotta. 'And in our grottoes;' Pope, tr. of Hosser's project and wild; Milton, F. L. IV. 130. 'And this grotesque design; Dryden, Hind and Panther, iii. 1044.—O. F. grotesque; pl. grotesques, 'pictures wherein all kinds of odde things are represented;' Cot.—Ital. grottesca, 'antick or landskip worke of painters;' Florio. [So called because such paintings were found in old crypts and grottoes.]—Ital. grotta, a grotto. See Grot, Grotto. ¶ Sir T. Herbert uses the Ital. form, 'The walls and pavements,... by rare artificers carved into story and grotesco work;' Travels, ed. 1605, GROUND, the surface of the earth. (E.) M.E. grund, ground, GROUND, the surface of the earth. (E.) M. E. grund, ground, Chaucer, C. T. 455; Havelok, 1979; Layamon, 2296. — A. S. grund; Grein, i. 530. + Du. grond. + Icel. grunnr. + Dan. and Swed. grund. + Goth. grundus*, only in the comp. grundu-waddjus, a ground-wall, foundation; Luke, vi. 48, 49. + O. H. G. grunt, G. grund. + Lith. grùntas (Schleicher). β. The common supposition that the orig. sense was 'dust' or 'earth,' so the word meant 'ground small,' is very plausible. Certainly it appears as if connected with the verb to grind. See Grind. We also find Gael. grunnd, Irish grunnt, ground, bottom, base. Der. ground, verb (Chaucer, C. T. 416); ground-less, ground-less-ly, ground-less-ness, ground-ling, q. v., ground-sil, q. v., ground-sel, q. v.; also ground-floor, -ivy, -plan, -rent, -swell, -work. Also grounds, q. v. GROUNDLING, a spectator in the pit of a theatre. (E.)

GROUNDLING, a spectator in the pit of a theatre. (E.) In Shak. Hamlet, iii. 2. 12; Beaum. and Fletcher, Prophetess, i. 3. 32. A term of contempt; made by suffixing ling, a double different contempt; made by suffixing ling, a double different color colo A term of contempt; made by suffixing -ling, a double dimin. ending grundswyligs; Wright's Vocab. i. 68, col. 2, l. 1. B. The lit. sense is 'ground-swallower,' i.e. occupier of the ground, abundant weed. - A. S. grund, ground; and swelgan, to swallow. See Leo's Glossar, col. 240

GROUNDSILL, the timber of a building next the ground; a threshold. (E.) Spelt grunsel, Milton, P. L. i. 460. 'And so fyll downe deed on the groundsyll;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 176 (R.) Compounded of ground and sill; see Sill.

GROUP, a cluster, assemblage. (F., - Ital., -G.) 'Group, in painting, a piece that consists of several figures;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'The figures of the groups;' Dryden, Parallel of Painting and Poetry 'The figures of the groups;' Dryden, Parallel of Painting and Poetry (R.) = F. groups, a group; not in Cot. = Ital. groppo, a knot, heap, group, bag of money. = G. kropf, a crop, craw, maw, wen on the throat; orig. a bunch. Cf. Icel. kroppr, a hunch or bunch on any part of the body. Prob. originally of Celtic origin. See Crop, of which group is a doublet. Der. group-ing, group, verb.

GROUSE, the name of a bird. (F.) 'Grouss, a fowl, common in the North of England;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Prof. Newton has highly sent me, a much earlier instance of the word. Attorse kindly sent me a much earlier instance of the word. 'Attagen, kindly sent me a much earlier instance of the word. 'Attagen, perdix Asclepica, the Heath-cock or Grouss. . . Hujus in Anglia duas habemus species, quarum major vulgo dicitur, the black game, . . minor vero, the grey game;' Charleton, Onomasticon Zoicon, London, 1668, p. 73. β. Grouse appears to be a false form, evolved as a supposed sing from the older word grice (cf. mouse, mice). Grice was used (according to Cotgrave) in the same sense. He gives: 'Griesche, gray, or peckled [speckled?] as a stare [starling]; Perdris griesche, the ordinary, or gray partridge; Poule griesche, a moorhen, the hen of the grice or moorgame.' " Grice is merely. a moorhen, the hen of the grice or moorgame.

7. Grice is merely borrowed from this O.F. griesche; cf. also O. F. greeche, a 13th cent. borrowed from this O.F. grissche; cf. also O. F. greeche, a 13th cent. form given by Littré, s. v. grièche. He quotes as follows: Contornix est uns oisiaus que li François claiment greeches, parce que ale fu premiers trovee en Grece, i. e. Cotornix is a bird which the French call greeches, because it was first found in Greece; Brunetto Latini, Trés. p. 211.

8. The stinging-nettle was called ortis griesche even in the 13th cent.; see Wright, Vocab. i. 140, col. 2. Of unknown origin; it can hardly be from Lat. Græeiscus, Greekish.

¶ 1. That our E. grouse can be in any way related to Pers. hharés, a dung-hill cock (Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 221), is, I think, out of the question. The suggestion appears in Webster.

3. Another suggestion is to connect grouse with W. grugiar, a moor-hen (from grug, heath, and iar, a hen), but the col. 2. Of unknown origin; it can hardly be from Lat. Græciscus, Greckish. ¶ 1. Another suggestion is to connect grouse with W. gruchen, gruchen, gruchen, to murmur. 'Why grucchen we?' Chaucer, C. T. Webster. 2. Another suggestion is to connect grouse with W. gruchen,

B. From a base ghrufe (Fick). Doublet. β. From a base ghruda (Fick). Doublet, broken small, rubble.

greats, q. v. Allied to grit, q. v. Der. gru-el, q. v. GBOVE, a collection of trees. (E.) The orig. sense must have been 'a glade,' or lane cut through trees; for this sense, cf. Glade. The word is a mere derivative of the E. verb grave, to cut. M. E. grove (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 1480, 1602; Layamon, 469.—
A. S. gráf, a grove (Lye); but the word is very scarce. Leo refers to Codex Diplomaticus, ed. Kemble, 305.—A. S. grafan, to dig, grave, cut. See Grave (1). Doublet, groove, q. v.

GROVEL, to fall flat on the ground. (Scand.) In Shak. K. John, if you have the grape of the grape

ii. 305. The formation of the verb to grovel was perhaps due to a singular grammatical mistake. Groveling was in use as an adverb with the suffix -ling, but this was readily mistaken for the pres. part. of a the sunk ting, but this was readily mistaken for the pres. part. of a verb, and, the ing being dropped, the new verb to grovel emerged. B. Spenser uses the form groveling only. 'Streight downe againe herselfe, in great despight She groveling threw to ground;' F. Q. ii. 1. 45. 'And by his side the Goddesse groveling Makes for him endlesse mone;' F. Q. iii. 1. 38. 'Downe on the ground his carkas groveling fell;' F. Q. iii. 5. 23. In the last instance, the sense is 'flatly' or 'flat.' Y. The M. E. groveling or grovelings is a mere adverb. 'Grovelyng to his fete thay fell;' Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1120. 'Grovelynge. or grovelyngs, adv. Suppine. resupine:' A. 1120. 'Growlynge, or growlyngys, adv. Suppine, resupine;' Prompt. Parv. p. 215. After which is added: 'Grovelynge, nom. Suppinus, resupinus;' shewing that, in A. D. 1440, the word was beginning to be considered as being sometimes a nom. pres. part. Note also: 'Therfor groflynges thou shall be layde;' Towneley Myst. p. 40. Way notes that, in Norf, and Suff, the phrase 'to lie grubblins,' or with the face downwards, is still in use. grubblins, or with the face downwards, is still in use. 8. The correct M. E. form is grofling or groflinges, where the -ling or -lings is the adv. suffix that appears in other words, such as dark-ling, flat-ling; see Darkling, Headlong. The former part of the word could be used alone, with exactly the same adverbial sense; as 'they fallen grof; Chaucer, C. T. 951. The phrase is of Scand. origin. — Icel. grufa, in the phr. liggja á grufu, to lie grovelling, to lie on one's face, symja à gruju, to swim on one's belly. Cf. also grujfa, to grovel, couch, or cower down. Hence was formed grujfa, to grovel, which justifies the E. verb, though clear proof of direct connection between the words is wanting. + Swed, dial. gruva, flat on one's face; ligga à gruve, to lie on one's face; Rietz. Root unserview.

S. grówan, pt. t. greów, pp. grówen; Grein, i. 529. + Du. groeijen. + Icel. gróa. + Dan. groe. + Swed. gro. \(\theta\). Esp. used of the growth of vegetables, &c., and hence closely connected with the word green, which is from the same root. See Green. \(\Pi\) The A. S. word for the growth of animals is properly weaxan, mod. E. wax, q.v. Der. grow-er; growth, Othello, v. 2. 14, not an A. S. word, but of Scand. origin, from Icel. gróßr, growth.

GROWL, to grumble. (Du.) In Skinner, ed. 1671; and in Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 195. Apparently borrowed from Dutch. — Du. grollen, to grumble. + G. grollen, to bear ill-will against, to be angry; also, to rumble (as thunder). + Gk. γρυλλίζειν, to grunt; γρύλλος, a pig; from γρῦ, the noise of grunting. β. Of imitative origin; see Grumble. Der. growl, sb., growl-er. GROWTH, sb.; see under Grow. GRUB, to grope in the dirt. (E.) M. E. grubben, grobben. 'To grobbe vp metal;' Chaucer, Ætas Prima, l. 29. 'So depe their grubbed and so fast;' Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 94. 1. 268. Of obscure origin; but probably a mere variant of grope. The M.E. grobben may stand for grobien = gropien, from A.S. grapian, to grope. The orig. sense of grub would thus be 'to grope,' hence 'to feel for' or 'search for,' esp. in the earth. See Grope. ¶ It cannot well be from the Teutonic base GRAB, to dig, because the A. S. form of this verb was grafan, whence E. grave and grove. The connection of grub is rather with grab, gripe, grope, and grasp. Der.

GRUFF, rough, surly. (Dutch.) A late word. 'Such an one the tall, . . . such an one the gruff;' Spectator, no. 433.—Du. grof, coarse, plump, loud, blunt, great, heavy. + Swed. grof, coarse, big, rude, gross. + Dan. grov, the same. + G. grob, coarse; M. H. G. gerob, grop. β. The M. H. G. form shews that the initial g stands for ge (=A.S. ge-=Goth. ga-), a mere prefix. The prob. root is the Teutonic RUB, to break, violate, break through; whence A.S. reofan, Icel. rjufa, to break, cognate with Lat. rumpere, to break. See Rupture. If this be right, the orig. sense was 'broken,' hence rough, coarse, &c. Der. gruff-ly, gruff-ness.

GUARANTEE, GUARANTY, a warrant, surety. (F., O. H. G.) Guarantee appears to be a later spelling of guarantee. garanty, or garranty, probably due to the use of words such as lesses, feoffee, and the like; but the final -ee is (in the present case) incorrect. Jeogree, and the like; but the maines is (in the present case) incorrect. Blount's Nomo-lexicon gives the spellings garanty and warranty. Cotgrave has garrantie and warrantie. — O. F. garrantie (better garantie), 'garrantie, warrantie, or warrantise,' Cot.; fem. form of garanti, warranted, pp. of garantir, to warrant. — O. F. garant, also spelt guarant, warrant (Burguy), and explained by Cotgrave as 'a vouchee, warrant, warranter, supporter, maintainer.' See further under Warrant. — The O. H. G. w became in O. Parv.-F. goujon, 'a gudgeon-fish, also the pin which the truckle of a pully runneth on; also, the gudgeon of the spindle of a wheele; any gudgeon;' Cot.-Lat. gobionem, acc. of gobio, a by-form of gobius, a gudgeon.-Gk. κωβιόν, a kind of fish, gudgeon, tench. The Sicilian name was κώθου (Liddell and Scott).

GUELIDER-ROSE, a species of Viburnum, bearing large white ball-shaped flowers. (Dutch.) So named from some resemblance of the flower to a white rose. The word rose is of Latin origin; see Rose. The word guelder stands for Gueldre, the F. spelling of the province of Gelderland in Holland.

GUERDON, a reward, recompense. (F., = O. H. G. and L.) Chaucer, C. T. 7460, 8759. He also has the verb guardonen = to reward; Pers. Tale, Group I, l. 283, Six-text ed.; but this is derived from the sb. Guardonless occurs in Lydgate, Complaint of Black Knight, l. 400. - O. F. guerdon, 'guerdon, recompence, meed;' Cot. Equivalent to Ital. guidardone, a guerdon. - Low Lat. widerdonum, which, according to Littré, is found in the time of Charles the Bald. β. This is a singular hybrid compound from O. H. G. wider (G. wieder), against, back again, and the Lat. donum, a gift; and the whole word is an adaptation of O.H.G. widarlin, a recompence (Graff, ii. 220). Y. The O.H.G. word has its exact cognate in the A. S. wider-leún, a recompence, Grein, ii. 697; which is compounded of the prefix wiver, against, back again (connected with E. uith in the word with tand) and the sb. lean = mod. E. loan. See With, Donation, and Loan.

¶ The same notion of 'back' occurs in the synonymous words re-ward, re-compence, re-muneration.
GUERILLA, GUERRILLA, an irregular warfare carried on by small bands of men. (Span., -O. H. G.) We speak of 'guerilla warfare, making the word an adj., but it is properly a sb. Span. guerrilla, a skirmish, lit. a petty war; dimin. of guerra, war (= F. guerre). — O.H.G. werra, discord, the same word as E. war. See War. GUESS, to form an opinion at hazard, to conjecture. (Scand. or O. Low G.) The insertion of u was merely for the purpose of preserving the g as hard. M. E. gessen; Chaucer, C. T. 82. – Dan. gisse; Swed. gissa, to guess. + Icel. giska, to guess. + Du. gissen. + N. Friesic gezze, gedse (Outzen). B. Closely related to Dan. gjette, to guess; the Icel giska = git-ska, formed from Icel. geta (1), to get, (2) to guess. The latter word is cognate with A. S. gitan, and mod. E. get; and it is highly probable that guess meant originally 'to See Get. Der. guess, sb.; guess-work.

GUEST, a stranger who is entertained. (E.) The u is inserted to preserve the g as hard. M. E. gest, Hampole, Pricke of Conscious.

1374; also gist, Ancren Riwle, p. 68. — A. S. gæst, gest, gast; also gist, gist; Grein, i. 373. + Icel. gestr. + Dan. giest. + Swed. gäst. + Du. gast. + Goth. gasts. + G. gast. + Lat. kostis, a stranger, guest, Du. gast. + Goth. gasts. + G. gast. + Lat. hostis, a stranger, guest, enemy.

B. The orig. sense appears to be that of 'enemy, whence the senses of 'stranger' and 'guest' arose. The lit sense is 'striker.' - & GHAS, GHANS, to strike; an extension of & GHAN, to strike. Cf. Skt. hims, to strike, injure, desiderative of han, to strike, wound. Der guest-chamber, Mark, xiv. 14. From the same root, gore, verb, garlie; good, hostile.

GUIDE, to lead, direct, regulate. (F., - Teut.) M. E. gyden, Chaucer, C. T. 13410, 13417. [The M. E. form gyen is also common. (C. T. 1952); see Guy.] The sb. is gyde, C. T. 806. - O. F. guider; cf. Ital. guidare, Span. guiar.

B. The etymology has not been well made out; the initial gu, corresponding to Teutonic w, shews that the word is of Teutonic origin.

y. The obscurity is merely due to the want of a connecting link; the ultimate origin is doubtless, as suggested by Diez, to be found in the Mccso-Goth. witan, to watch, observe; cf. A. S. witan, to know. The original sense of guide was, probably, 'to make to know,' to shew; cf. Icel. viti, a leader, also a signal; A.S. witan, to observe; A.S. adj. wis, wise, knowing, wisa, a leader, directer, wisian, to guide. lead, shew the GUARD, to ward, watch, keep, protect. B. This word is nothing but the pl. of F. gueule, the mouth (just as Low Lat. gulæ is the pl. of gula), though the reason for the name is not very clear, unless the reference be (as is probable) to the colour of the open mouth of the (heraldic) lion. - Lat. gula. the throat. 'Gome in mannys mowthe, pl. goomys, Gingiva, vel gingive, plur.;'
Prompt. Parv. – A. S. góma, the palate, jaws; Grein, i. 523. + Icel. gómr, the palate. + Swed. gom, the palate. + Dan. gane (for game?), the palate. + O. H. G. guomo, G. gaumen, the palate. - ✓ GHA, to gape, the orig. sense being 'open jaws;' cf. Gk. χήμη, a cockle, 'from its gaping double shell' (Liddell and Scott); χαίνειν, to gape.

Der. gum-boit.

GUM (2), the hardened adhesive juice of certain trees. (F., -L., -Gk.)

M. E. gomme, Chaucer, Good Women, 121; P. Plowman, -Gk. κόμμι, gum; but B. ii. 226. F. gomme, gum. - Lat. gummi. - Gk. κόμμ, gum; but not orig. a Gk. word. Remoter source unknown. Der. gum, verb; gummi-ferous, from Lat. suffix -fer, bearing, which from ferre, to bear; gumm-y, gummi-iness.

GUN, an engine for throwing projectiles. (C.?) M. E. gonne, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, 553; P. Plowman, C. xxi. 293; King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 3268. See note by Way in Prompt. Parv. p. 218. - W. gwn, a bowl, a gun (used in the latter sense by Dafydd ab Gwilym in the 14th cent.); cf. Irish and Gael. gunna, a gun. ¶ Of obscure origin; the word was first applied to a catapult, or machine for throwing stones, &c. Perhaps the signification 'bowl' of W. gwn points to the orig. sense, viz. that of the cup wherein the missile was placed. Der. gunn-er, gunn-er-y, gun-barrel, -boat, -carriage, -cotton, -powder, -shot, -smith, -stock; also gun-wale, q. v.

GUN WALE, the upper edge of a ship's side. (C. and E.) Corruptly pronounced gunnel [gun1]. In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Gunwale, or Gunnel of a Ship, a piece of timber that reaches from the halfdeck to the forecastle on either side;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Wales or Wails, those timbers on the ship's sides, which lie outmost, and are usually trod upon, when people climb up the sides to get into the ship; 'id. β. Compounded of gun and wale; see Wale. So called because the upper guns used to be pointed from it. The sense of wale is 'stick' or 'beam,' and secondly, 'the mark of a blow with a stick.'

or beam, and secondly, the mark of a blow with a suck.

GURGLE, to flow irregularly, with a slight noise. (Ital., -L.)

'To gurgling sound Of Liffy's tumbling streams;' Spenser, Mourning Muse of Thestylis, I. 3. Imitated from Ital. gorgogliare, to gargle, purl, bubble, boil; cf. gorgoglio, a warbling, the gurgling of a stream.—Ital. gorgo, a whirlpool, gulf.—Lat. gurges, a whirlpool; cf. Lat. gurgulio, the gullet. See Gorge. To be distinguished from garges though both are from the same root GAR, to devour. from gargle, though both are from the same root GAR, to devour.

Der. guggle, a corrupted form (Skinner).

GURNARD, GURNET, a kind of fish. (F., -L.; with Teut. suffix.) 'Gurnard, fysche;' Prompt. Parv. 'Gurnarde, a fysshe, gournault;' Palsgrave. See Levins. Shak. has gurnet, I Hen. IV, v. 2. 13. Cotgrave has: 'Gournauld, a gurnard fish;' but the E. word answers rather to a F. gournard (the suffixes -ard, -ald, -auld being convertible); and this again stands, by the not uncommon bifting of r. for gravesed. The latter form is represented in Cota shifting of r, for grounard. The latter form is represented in Cotgrave by 'Grougnaut, a gurnard,' marked as being a Languedoc word.

$\beta$. Again, we find another form of the word in O. F. grongnard (mod. F. grognard), explained by Cotgrave as 'grunting;' and, in fact, the word gurnard means 'grunter.' 'The gurnards... derive their popular appellation from a grunting noise which they make when taken out of the water; Eng. Cyclop. s. v. Trigla. y. Formed by the suffix -ard (= O. H. G. hard, hart) from F. grogner, to grunt. - Lat. grunnire, to grunt. See Grunt.
GUSH, to flow out swiftly. (Scand.) M.E. guschen, Morte

Arthure, ed. Brock, 1130.—Icel. gusa, to gush, spirt out, another form of the common verb gissa (pt. t. gauss, pp. gosians), to gush, break out as a volcano. + Du. gustsen, to gush; 'het bloed gudsde a bird, throat. Remoter source unknown. Der. gustser.

The word occurs in Cotgrave. -F. gousset, 'a gusset; the piece of armour, or of a shirt, whereby the arm-hole is covered: Cot. B. Named from some fancied resemblance to the husk of a bean or pea; the word being a dimin. of F. gousse, the huske, swad, cod, hull of beanes, pease, &c.; Cot.—Ital.

GUST (1), a sudden blast or gush of wind. (Scand.) In Shak. Mer. of Ven. iv. 1. 77.—Icel. gustr, a gust, blast; also gjósta, a gust. Cf. Swed. dial. gust, a stream of air from an oven (Rietz).—Icel. gjósa, to gush; Swed. dial. gdsa, to reck (Rietz). See Gush. Der. gust-y, gust-i-ness.

GUST (2), relish, taste. (L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 3. 33; and in Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 39.—Lat. gustus, a tasting, taste (whence F. goûl); cf. gustare, to taste.— & GUS, to choose; whence also Skt. jush, to enjoy, like, Gk. Yeveuv, to taste, and E. choose. See Choose. Doublet, gusto, the Ital form of the word. Der. dis-gust, q.v.

Doublet, gusto, the Ital. form of the word. Der. dis-gust, q. v. GUT, the intestinal canal. (E.) [The same word as prov. E. gut, a water-course, wide ditch; M. E. gote, Prompt. Parv. p. 205; see Way's note.] M. E. gutte, gotte; P. Plowman, B. i. 36; Rob. of Glouc. p. 289.—A. S. gut, 'receptaculum viscerum,' A. S. Gloss. in Haupt's Zeitschrift, ix. 408; A. S. Gloss. in Mone's Quellen und Forschungen, i. 1830, 198 (Leo). Ettmüller gives the pl. as guttas. B. The orig. sense is 'channel;' cf. Swed. gjuta, a mill-lcat (Rietz); Dan. gyde, a lane; O. Du. gote, a channel (Hexham); G. gosse, a drain; M. E. gote, prov. E. gut, a drain, water-course. γ. All from γ GHUD, to pour; see Gush, Fuse. Σ Not connected with gutter, which is of Latin origin. Der. gut, verb. GUTTA-PERCHA, a solidified juice of certain trees. (Malay.)

GUTTA-PERCHA, a solidified juice of certain trees. (Malay.) 'Made known in England in 1843;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. The trees yielding it abound in the Malayan peninsula and in Borneo.— Malay gatah, guttah, gum, balsam (Marsden's Malay Dict., p. 283); and percha, said to be the name of the tree producing it. Hence the sense is 'gum of the Percha-tree.'
\(\beta \). The spelling gutta is obviously due to confusion with the Lat. gutta, a drop, with which it has nothing whatever to do. 'Gutta in Malay means gum, percha is the name of the tree (Isonandra gutta), or of an island from which the tree was first imported (Pulo-percha); 'Max Müller, Lect. on Language, 8th ed. i. 231. Marsden (p. 218) gives Pūlau percha as another name for the island of Sumatra. Pūlau means 'island,' id. p. 238; percha is explained in Marsden as meaning 'a remnant, small piece of cloth, tatters, rags;' and from this he takes Pūlau-percha to be named, without further explanation.

GUTTER, a channel for water. (F., -L.) M. E. gotere; Prompt. Parv. The pl. goteres is in Trevisa, i. 181. -O. F. gutiere, [gotiere?], goutiere; see quotations in Littre, s. v. gouttière, a gutter; cf. Span. gotera, a gutter. β . Esp. used of the duct for catching the drippings of the eaves of a roof; hence the deriv. from O. F. gote, gonte (mod. F. goutte), a drop. Lat. gutta, a drop. Root uncertain.

Der. gutter, verb. See below.

GUTTURAL, pertaining to the throat. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave.

-F. guttural, 'gutturall, belonging to the throat;' Cot. -Lat. gutturalls; formed with suffix alis from guttur, the throat.

Teut.) A nautical term. In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Guy, a rope made use of to keep anything from falling or bearing against a ship's side, when it is to be hoised in;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.—Span. guia, a guide, leader, guy.—Span. guiar, to guide; the same word as F. guider, to guide. See Guide.

GUZZLE, to swallow greedily. (F.) 'Guzzle, to drink greedily, to tipple;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Cotgrave explains O. F. martiner by 'to quaffe, swill, guzzle.—O. F. gouziller, given by Cotgrave only in the comp. desgouziller, 'to guip, or swill up, to swallow down;' but Littre gives gosiller, saying that brandy is 'said gosiller, when, in distillation, it passes over mixed with wine. Cf. also F. s'egosiller, to make one's throat sore with shouting: clearly connected with F. make one's throat sore with shouting; clearly connected with F. gosier, the throat.

B. Littré connects gosier with Lorraine gosse, of Eastern origin; cf. Pers. jabsin, lime; Arab. jibs, plaster, mortar; Rich. Dict. p. 494.

GYPSY, one of a certain nomad race. ((F., -L., -Gk., -Egypt.) Spelt gipsen by Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, l. 86. This is a mere corruption of M. E. Egyptien, an Egyptian. Chaucer calls St. Mary of Egypt 'the Egipcien Marie;' C. T. Group B. 500 (l. 4920); and Skelton, swearing by the same saint, says 'By Mary Gipey' Garland of Laurell, 1455.—O. F. Egyptien, Egiptien.—Late Lat. Egyptianus, formed with suffix -anus from Lat. Agyptius, an Egyptian.—Gk. 'Arywiros, an Egyptian.—Gk. 'Arywiros, an Egyptian.—Gk. 'Arywiros, Egypt. From the name of the country.

The supposition that they were Egyptians was false; their orig. home was India.

GYRE, a circle, circular course. (L., -Gk.) 'Or hurtle rownd in warlike gyre;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 5. 8; cf. iii. 1. 23.—Lat. gyrus, a circle, circuit.—Gk. γῦροs, a ring, circle; cf. γῦροs, adj. round. Der. gyrate, from Lat. gyratus, pp. of gyrare, to turn round, formed from gyrus; gyration, gyrat-or-y; also gyr-falcon, q. v.

gyrus; gyral-ion, gyral-ory; also gyr-falcon, q.v.

'Gyrfalcon, a bird of prey;' Kersey, ed. 1715; spelt gerfaulcon in Cotgrave; girefaucoun in Trevisa, i. 323, to translate Lat. gyrofalco.

a. The prefix is French, the word being modified from O. F. gerfaulcon, the greatest of hawks called also falcon gerfault.' a. The prenx is French, the word being modified from O. F. gerfault, 'a gerfaulcon, the greatest of hawks, called also falcon gerfault;' Cot. Cf. Ital. gerfalco, girfalco, girfalco, a gerfalcon.—Low Lat. gerofalco, a gerfalcon, a corruption of Low Lat. gyrofalco, a gyrfalcon. B. So named from his circling flight.—Lat. gyro, crude form of gyrus, a circle (of Gk. origin); and falco, a falcon. See Gyre and Falcon.

Not from G. geier, a vulture, which is itself derived from Lat. gyrare (Diez). But others take gyro- to be put for gero, which is referred to M. H. G. gir, G. geier, a vulture, supposed in that case to be a Teutonic word.

GYVES, fetters. (C.) In early use; only in the plural. M.E. giues, gyues (with u for v); Layamon, 15338; P. Plowman, C. xvi. 254. Of Celtic origin; cf. W. gefyn, a fetter, gyve; Gael. geinheal [with mh=v], a fetter, chain; I rish geinheal, geibheal, geibhionn, chains, gyves, fetters, restraint, bondage, captivity. B. The source of these sbs. appears in the Irish geibhim, I get, obtain, find, receive; gabhaim, I take, receive; Gael. gabh, to take, accept, receive.

HA, an exclamation. (E.) 'A ka! the fox!' Chaucer, C. T. 15387. When reduplicated, it signifies laughter. 'Ha! ka! ka!' Temp. ii. 1. 36. Common in Shak. as an exclamation of surprise. Of onomatopoetic origin; see also Ah. +O. Fries. kaka, to denote laughter. +M. H. G. ka, G. &. ke; M. H. G. kaká, to denote laughter. HABERDASHER, a seller of small wares. (F., -Scand.) 'An kaberdasker;' Chaucer, C. T. 363. 'The haberdasker heapeth wealth by hattes;' Gascoine, Fruits of War, st. 64. 'Haberdasker, a hatter, or seller of hats: also, a dealer in small wares:' Kersey. 'A haber-or seller of hats; also, a dealer in small wares; Kersey. 'A haber-dasher, mercier; a poore, petty haberdasher of small wares, mercerot;' Sherwood, index to Cotgrave. a. So named from their selling a stuff called Apertas* in Old French, of which (possibly) hats were a. So named from their selling a sometimes made. In the Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 225, is mentioned 'la charge de haperias;' in the E. version by Riley, 'the load of hapertas.' And again, at p. 231, we find 'les feez de leyne d'Espagne, wadmal, mercerie, canevas, . feutre, lormerie, peil, haberdashrie, esquireux, . . et les autres choses qe l'em acustument par fee, vi. d'i thus Englished by Riley: 'the fixed charge upon wool of Spain.

wadmal, mercery, canvas, . . felt, lymere, pile, haberdassheris, squirrel-skins, . . and upon other articles that pay custom at a fixed rate, is six pence.'

B. The word is of Scand. origin. Mr. Wedgwood cites from an old Icel. lexicon (by Gudmundus Andrese) the Icel. hapurtask, which he explains by 'trumpery, things of trifling value, scruta frivola, ripsraps.' But this throws no light on the Icel. word itself.

Y. I suspect that the true sense of the word hapertas was, originally, 'pedlars' wares,' and that they were named from the bag in which they were carried; cf. Icel. haprask, haprask, a haversack (Cleasby and Vigfuson.

8. In this case, the primary use of the bag was to carry oats or provisions in and the former year. of the bag was to carry oats or provisions in; and the former part of the word is the same as the former part of the word Haversack, e. The syllable task is from Icel. taska, a trunk, chest, pouch, pocket; cognate with G. tasche, a pouch, scrip, Thus the orig. sense of haberdasher was one who bears an oat-bag, hence, a pedlar. Der. haberdasher-y.

Der. haberdasker-y.

HABERGEON, a piece of armour to defend the neck and breast. (F.,=O. H. G.) M. E. habergeon, Chaucer, C. T. 76; hawberioun, Wyclif, 1 Kings, xvii. 5.=O. F. haubergon, hauberjon, a small hauberk (Burguy); dimin. of O. F. hauberc; see Hauberk.

HABILIMENT, dress, attire. (F.,=L.) 'The whiche furnysshynge his people with all habylymentys of warre;' Fabyan's Chron., Charles VII. (of France); ed. Ellis, p. 553.=F. habillement, 'apparell, clothing;' Cot. Formed with suffix -ment from habiller, 'to cloth, dresse, apparell;' Cot. β. The verb habiller ssignified orig. 'to get ready' and is a clumsy formation from the F. habile. orig. to get ready, and is a clumsy formation from the F. habile, able, ready; which is from the Lat. habilis, manageable, fit. See HABIT, practice, custom, dress. (F., -L.) M. E. habit, abit; the latter spelling being common. Spelt habit, P. Plowman, B. prol. 3; abit, id. C. prol. 3; Ancren Riwle, p. 12, 1. 8. -O. F. habit, 'a garment, raiment, . . . also, an habit, a fashion settled, a use or custom gotten; Cot. - Lat. habitum, acc. of habitus, condition, habit, dress, attire. - Lat. habitus, held in a certain condition, pp. of habers, β. The origin of Lat. habere remains quite to have, hold, keep. uncertain; it is not the same word with E. have, which = Lat. capere; see Have. Der. habit. verb, pp. habited, i. e. dressed, Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 557; habit-u-al, from O. F. habitual (mod. F. habituel), explained 'habituall' by Cotgrave, and from Low Lat. habitu-alis, formed with suffix -alis from habitu-, crude form of habitus, habit; habit-u-al-ly; habitu-ate, from Lat. habituatus, pp. of habituare, to bring into a certain habit or condition. Also, from the same source, habit-ude, q. v., habit-able, q. v., habit-at, q. v., habit-at-ion, q.v., hab-ili-ment, q. v. From the Lat. habere are also numerous derivatives, as ex-hibit, in-hibit, in-habit, pro-hibit; ab-le, ab-ili-ty, dis-hab-ille; deht; prebend; binnacle, malady.

HABITABLE, that can be dwelt in. (F.,-L.) In Milton, P. L. viii. 157; earlier, in Gower, C. A. iii. 104. - F. habitable, 'inhabitable;' Cot. - Lat. habitabilis, habitable; formed with suffix -bilis from habita-re, to dwell, frequentative form of Lat. habere, to have (supine habit-um). HACK (1), to cut, chop, mangle. (E.) M.E. hakken. 'To hakke and hewe;' Chaucer, C. T. 2867. 'Hacke' of his heaued' = hacks and newe; Chaucer, C. 1. 2007. Hacker of his header = hacks of his head; Ancren Riwle, p. 298.—A.S. hackan, to hack (Bosworth); for which I can find no authority. + Du. hakken, to hew, chop. + Dan. hakke, to hack, hoe. + Swed. hacka, to chop. + G. hacken, to chop, cleave.

B. All from a base HAK, to cut. hacken, to chop, cleave. β. All from a base HAK, to cut.

Der. haggle, q. v. Doublet, hash; and see hatch.

Em. Mr. Oliphant calls attention to O. Northumb. hackande, troublesome, in Early Eng. Psalter, Surtees Soc., Ps. xxxix. 13. 'Hence, perhaps, our "hacking cough."'

HACK (2), a hackney. See Hackney.

HACK BUT, an arquebus, an old kind of musket. (F., -Du.) In Holinshed, Hist. Scotland, an. 1583; hackbutter, a man armed with a hackbut, id. an. 1544. Rich. says that 'the 33 Hen. VIII. c. 6, regulates the length in stock and gun of the hagbut or demihaque, and sets forth who may keep and use them.' Also spelt hagbut, less coigne's Flowers, Memories, John Vaughan's Theme, l. 26. - O. F. correctly. - O. F. haquebute, 'an haquebut, or arquebuze, a caliver;' hagard, 'hagard, wild, strange, froward... Faulcon hagard, a hagard, Cot. β. So called from the bent shape of the gun, which was an improvement upon the oldest guns, which were made straight; see Arquebus. It seems to be a mere corruption of Du. haakbus (hackbusse in Hexham), an arquebus; due, apparently, to some confusion with O. F. buter, to thrust.—Du. haak, a hook; and bus, a gun-barrel; thus the sense is 'gun with a hook.'

HACKLE (1), HATCHEL, an instrument for dressing flax or hemp. (Du.) Better spelt Heckle, q. v.

HACKLE (2), any flimsy substance unspun, as raw silk. (Du.)

So named from its looking as if it had been dressed or hackled; see Hackle (1). It also means a long shining feather on a cock's neck; or a fly for angling, dressed with such a feather.

HACKNEY, HACK, a horse let out for hire. (F., -Du.)

M. E. hakeney; Chaucer, C. T. 16027; P. Plowman, B. v. 318.
O. F. haquenée, hacquenée, 'an ambling horse, gelding, or mare;' Cot.

Cf. Span. hacanea, Ital. chinea (short for acchinea), the same. -O. Du. hackeneye, an hackney (Hexham). B. Of obscure origin; but probably derived from Du. hakken, to hack, chop, hew, mince; and Du. negge, a nag. Cf. Swed. hacka, to hack, hew, peck, chatter with cold, stammer, stutter; this suggests that the Du. hakken was here familiarly used in the sense of 'jolt;' and, probably, the orig. sense was 'jolting nag,' with reference to the rough horses which customers who hired them had to put up with, or with reference to their 'faltering' pace. See Hack and Nag. ¶ Littré gives the syllable hack in this word the sense of 'horse;' this is quite wrong, as hack in the sense of 'horse' is merely a familiar abbreviation of hackney, just as cab stands for cabriolet, or bus for omnibus. So, too, the verb to hack, in the sense of 'treat roughly,' or 'use for rough riding,' is quite modern, and due to the abbreviated form of the substantive. Der. hackney-ed, hackney-coach.

HADDOCK, a sea-fish. (E.?) M. E. haddoke. 'Hic morus, a haddoke;' Wright's Vocab. i. 222, col. 2. Spelt haddok, Prompt. Parv. Of unknown origin; the Gael. adag, a haddock, seems merely a borrowed word from English; similarly, the O. F. hadot, 'a salt haddock' (Cotgrave), is plainly a less original form. The suffix -ock is perhaps diminutive, as in hill-ock; the base had- has some similarity to Gk. γάδος, a cod, but it is hard to explain the forms. The Irish name is codog. ¶ Webster explains it from W. ħ2dog, having seed, prolific, from the sb. ħad, seed; but I find no proof that W. hadog means a haddock. Can haddock be a corruption of A. S. hacod? See Hake.

HADES, the abode of the dead. (Gk.) Spelt Ades, Milton, P. L. ii. 964.—Gk. ἄιδης, ἄδης (Attic), ἀίδης (Homeric), the nether world. 'Usually derived from a, privative, and ἰδεῦν, to see [as though it meant 'the unseen']; but the aspirate in Attic makes this very doubtful;' Liddell and Scott.

HAFT, a handle. (E.) M. E. haft, heft. 'Los in the haft' = loose in the handle; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 339. Spelt haft, Wyclif, Deut. xix. 5; heft, Prompt. Parv. = A. S. haft, a handle; Grein, ii. 20. + Du. heft, hecht. + Icel. hepti (pron. hefti). + G. heft, a handle, hilt, portion of a book.

B. The orig. sense is 'that which is seized;' from the pp. seen in Icel. hafter, one who is taken, a prisoner, and in Goth. hafts, joined together; with which compare

Lat. captus, taken. v. All from the verb seen in A. S. habban, Icel. hafa, Goth. haban, Lat. captre. See Have.

HAG, an ugly old woman. (E.) M. E. hagge; P. Plowman, B. v. 191. The pl. heggen is in the Ancren Riwle, p. 216. The A. S. forms is fuller with harders used to translate Let authorizes. form is fuller, viz. hagtesse, used to translate Lat. pythonissa, a prophetess or witch; Wright's Vocab. i. 60, col. 1. In the same column, we also find: 'Tisiphona, wælcyrre; Parcæ, hægtesse;' on which Mr. Wright remarks: 'The Anglo-Saxon of these words would appear to be transposed. Hagiesse means properly a fury, or in its modern representative, a hag, and would apply singly to Tysiphone, while walcyrian was the name of the three fates of the A.S. mythology.' [Somner also gives a form hagesse, but for this I can find no authority.] + G. here, a witch; O. H. G. hazissa, apparently short for hagazissa; cf. M. H. G. hacke, a witch.

B. The suffix -t-esse, O. H. G. -z-issa, contains a feminine ending; the base is possibly (as has been suggested) the A.S. haga (G. hag), a hedge, bush; it being supposed that witches were seen in bushes by night. See Hedge, and Haggard. ¶ The Du. kaagdis, kaagedis, a lizard, strikingly resembles in form the A.S. hagtesse; and is easily derived from Du. haag, a hedge. Der. hag-gard (2), q. v.; and even haggard (1) is from the same base.

HAGGARD (1), wild, said of a hawk. (F., -G.) Orig. the name of a wild, untrained hawk. 'As hagard hauke;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 11. 19. 'For haggard hawkes mislike an emptie hand;' Gascoigne's Flowers, Memories, John Vaughan's Theme, l. 26. -O. F.

HAGGARD (2), lean, hollow-eyed. meagre. (E.) This word is certainly a corruption of kagged, confused in spelling by the influence of the word above. 'The ghostly prudes with hagged face;' Gray, A Long Story, 4th stanza from end. Wedgwood cites from Lestrange's Fables: 'A kagged carrion of a wolf and a jolly sort of dog with good flesh upon's back fell into company.' The orig. sense is 'hag-like,' or 'witch-like;' formed with suffix -ed from

HAGGLE (1). to cut awkwardly, mangle. (E.) 'York, all haggled over;' Hen. V, iv. 6. 11. A weakened form of hack-le, the frequentative of hack, to cut. See Hack (1). Cf. Lowland Sc. hag, to hack. And see below. HAGGLE (2), to be slow in making a bargain. (E.) Cotgrave explains O. F. harceler by 'to vex, harry, . . . also, to haggle, hucke, hedge, or paulter long in the buying of a commodity.' He similarly neede, or patter tong in the obying of a commodity. He similarly explains barguigner by 'to chaffer,... dodge, haggle, brabble, in the making of a bargain.' It is plain that higgle is a weakened form of the same word. β. It seems probable that haggle stands for hackle, the frequentative of hack; see Hack (1). The particular use of the word appears more plainly in Dutch. Cf. Du. hakkelen, to mangle, to stammer; explained by Sewel as 'to hackle, mangle, faulter;' also Du. hakkeleren, to wrangle, cavil; both derivatives of Du. hakkelen to hack

y. Thus the word is ultimately the same as Haggle (1). Der. haggl-er; and see higgle.

HAGIOGRAPHA, holy writings. (Gk.) A name given to the last of the three Jewish divisions of the Old Testament, containing Ps., Prov., Job. Dan., Ez., Nehem., Ruth. Esther, Chron., Cant., Lam., and Eccles. — Gk. ἀγιόγραφα (Βιβλία), books written by inspiration. — Gk. ἀγιο-, crude form of ἄγιοε, devoted to the gods, sacred, holy; and γράφ-ειν, to write.

β. ἄγιοε is from γ YAG, to worship; cf. Skt. yaj, to worship. For γράφειν, see Grave. Der.

HA-HA, the same as Haw-haw; see Haw.

HAIL (1), frozen rain. (E.) M. E. hazel, Layamon, 11975; spelt hawel in the later text. Later hayl (by loss of 3 or w), Chaucer, Good Women, Cleop. 76.—A. S. hagal, hagol; Grein. + Icel. hagl. + Du., Dan., Swed. hagel. + G. hagel. Allied to Gk. καχλαξ, κοχλαξ, a round pebble; so that hail-stone is tautological. Der. hail, verb. M. E. hailen, Prompt. Parv.; also hail-stone, M. E. hailstoon, Wyclif, Wisdom, v. 23 (later text).

HAIL (2), to greet, call to, address. (Scand.) M. E. heilen. 'Heylyn, or gretyn, saluto;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt heylenn (for hezlen), Ormulum, 2814. A verb formed from Icel. heill, hale, sound, in good health, which was particularly used in greeting, as in kom heil = welcome, hail! far heill, farewell!

B. The usual Icel. verb β. The usual Icel. verb is heilsa, to say hail to one, to greet one, whence M. E. hailsen, to greet. In P. Plowman, B. v. 101, we have: 'I hailse hym hendeliche, as I his frende were '= I greet him readily, as if I were his friend; and, in this very passage, the Bodley MS. reads: 'I haile him.' Cf. Swed. hel, hale, helsa, health, helsa, to salute, greet; Dan. heel, hale, hilse, to salute, greet. See Hale (1), and Whole.

HAIL! (3), an exclamation of greeting. (Scand.) 'All hail, great master! grave sir, hail, I come! Temp. i. 2. 189. 'Hayl be bow, mary'=Lat. aue Maria; Myrc's Instructions for Parish Priests, ed. Peacock, 1. 422.—Icel. heill, hale, whole; but esp. used in greeting. See Hail (2), and Hale. Similar is the use of A. S. wes hall, lit. be whole, may you be in good health; but the A. S. hall produced the E. whole, as distinct from Scand. hale. See Wassail. HAIR, a filament growing from the skin of an animal. (E.)

HAKE, a sea-fish of the cod family. (Scand.) 'Hake, fysche, squilla;' Prompt. Parv. - Norweg. hakefisk (lit. hook-fish), a fish with squilla; Prompt. Parv.—Norweg. hakefisk (lit. hook-hsn), a nsn with hooked under-jaw, esp. of salmon and trout (Aasen); from Norweg. hake, a hook; see Hook. Compare A.S. hacod, glossed by Lat. hucius; Wright's Vocab. i. 55, col. 2; whence also Prov. E. haked, a large pike (Cambridgeshire); Blount's Glossographia. + G. hecht, M. H. G. hechet, O. H. G. hachit, a pike.

$\beta$. This explains A. S. hacod as meaning 'hooked,' -od being the pp. ending; see Hatch (1). Observe also Icel. haka (Swed. haka, Dan. hage), the chin, with reference to the peculiar under-jaw of the fish; cf. Icel. haki, Swed.

β. The orig sense is 'living in a hedge,' hence, wild. Formed with suffix =rd (of G. origin) from M. H. G. hag (O. H. G. hae), a hedge; see Hedge, Haw.

β. Quite distinct from haggard (2), β. The orig sense is 'living in a hedge,' hence, wild. Formed Man, ed. Wheatley, iii. 5. 14.=0. F. halebarde, 'an halberd;' Cot. hedge; see Hedge, Haw.

β. Quite distinct from haggard (2), which to split a helmet, furnished with a conveniently long handle, as if derived from M. H. G. (and G.) helm, a helmet; and M. H. G. (and G.) barte, O. H. G. parta, a broad axe.

8. But this was an accommodation of the sense to the common meaning of helm; the real orig. meaning was 'long-handled axe,' from M. H. G. halm, a helve, handle; see Helm (1).

2. The origin of O. H. G. parta is obscure; some derive it from O. H. G. perjan, M. H. G. bern, berren, to strike, cognate with Icel. berja, Lat. ferire, to strike; see Ferule. Others connect O. H. G. parta with O. H. G. part, G. bart, a beard, and this certainly accounts better for the vowel. As to the connection between 'beard' and 'axe,' compare Icel bart' (the same word as E. beard, but used in the sense of a fin of a fish, or beak of a ship) with Icel. barba, a kind of axe; whilst the Icel. skeggia, a kind of halberd, is plainly derived from skegg, a beard. The conkind of halberd, is plainly derived from skegg, a beard. The connection is again seen in O.F. barbelé, explained by Cotgrave as bearded, also full of snags, snips, jags, notches; whence flesche barbelée, a bearded, or barbed arrow; see Barb. Similarly the halberd may have been named from the jagged and irregular shape of the iron head. Der. halberd-ier, O.F. halebardier, 'an halberddier;' Cot.

HALIBUT.

HALCYON, a king-fisher; as adj., serenc. (L., -Gk.) 'Halcyon days'-calm days, I Hen. VI, i. 2. 131. It was supposed that the weather was always calm when the kingfishers were breeding. 'They lay and sit about midwinter, when daies be shortest; and the time whiles they are broody, is called the haleyon daies; for during that season, the sea is calme and nauigable, especially in the coast of Sicilie; Holland's Pliny, b. x. c. 32.—Lat. haleyon, commonly aleyon, a kingfisher. – Gk. ἀλκυών, ἀλκυών, a kingfisher. β. Of uncertain origin; the aspirate seems to be wrong; clearly cognate with Lat.

HALE (1), whole, healthy, sound. (Scand.) 'For they bene hale enough, I trowe;' Spenser, Sheph. Kal., July, 107. M. E. heil, heyl. 'Heyl fro sekenesse, sanus;' Prompt. word. Spelt halie, P. Plowman, B. viii. 95; hale, Chaucer, Parl, of Foules, 151.—A.S. holian, geholian, to acquire, get; it occurs as geholode, pl. of the pp., in Gregory's Pastoral Care, ed. Sweet, p. 209, l. 19. + O. Fries. halia, to fetch. + O. Sax. halón, to bring, fetch. + Du. halen, to fetch, draw, pull. + Dan. hale, to haul. + Swed. hala, to haul. + G. holen, to fetch (as a naut. term, to haul); O. H. G. holón, halón, to summon, fetch.

HALF, one of two equal parts of a thing, (E.) M. E. half; half a bushel; Chauçer, C. T. 4242.—A. S. healf, Northumb. half, Luke, xix. 8; where the later A. S. text has half. + Du. half. + Icel. halfr. + Swed. half. + Dan. halv. + Goth. halbs. + G. halb, O. H. G. hálfr. + Swed. half. + Dan. halv. + Goth. halbs. + G. halb. O. H. G. halp.

B. In close connection with this adj. we find M. E. half, A. S. healf (Gen. xiii. 9), Icel. hálfa, Goth. halba, O. H. G. halpa, used with the sense of 'side,' or 'part;' and this may have been the orig. sense. It occurs, e. g. in the Goth. version of 2 Cor. iii. 9, where the Gk. hv roure ra uhepe is translated by in thizai halbai. Thus the European type is HALBA, sb., a part, side.

Y. A late example of the sb. is in the phrase left half = left side, or left hand;
P. Plowman, B. ii. 5. It survives in mod. E. behalf; see Behalf.
Der. halve, verb, M. E. haluen (= halven), Wyclif, Ps. liv. 24; halved; half-blood, half-breed, half-bred, half-brother, half-sister, half-moon, half-pay, half-way, half-witted, half-yearly. Also half-penny, in which the f (as well as the l) has long been lost in pronunciation; spelt halpen, P. Plowman, B. vi. 307. Also be-half.

HALIBUT, a large fint-fish. (E.) 'Hallibut, a fish like a plaice;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Cotgrave translates O. F. flatelet by 'a hallibut (fish).' Compounded of M. E. hali, holy (see Holy), and butte, a flounder, plaice, which occurs in Havelok, 759. So called because excellent eating for holidays; the sense being 'holy (i. e. holiday) plaice.' The fish often attains to a large size, and weighs as much as 400 lbs. The cognate languages have

HALL, a large room. (E.) M. E. halls, Chaucer, C. T. 2523. -A. S. heall, heal (for older hal), Grein, ii. 50; the acc. healls occurs in Mark, xiv. 15, where the latest text has halle. + Du. hal. + Icel. hall, höll. + O. Swed. hall. (The G. halls is a borrowed word.)

B. From the Teutonic base HAL, to conceal, whence A. S. helan, to hide, conceal, cover; just as the corresponding Lat. cella is from Lat. celare, to conceal, cover; the orig. sense being 'cover,' or place of shelter. See Cell, a doublet, from the same root. Der. hall-mark, gui'd hall.

rui'd hall. 65 Quite unconnected with Lat. aula. HALLELUJAH, the same as Alleluiah, q. v.

HAILLARD, the same as Halyard, q. v. HAILLOO, HAILLOA, a cry to draw attention. (E.) 'Halow, schypmannys crye, Celeuma;' Prompt. Parv. Cf. halloo, King Lear, iii. 4. 79, where the folio edd. have alow, and the quarto edd. have a lo (Schmidt). I suppose it to differ from Holla, q. v., and to be nothing else but a modification of the extremely common A.S. interj. eald, Matt. xxiii. 33, 37.

B. In this word, ea stands for a, the modern at 1 whilst ld is the modern lo. See Ah and Lo. 7. The prefixing of h is an effect of shouting, just as we have ha! for ah! when uttered in a bolder tone; or it may have been due to confusion with holla. Der. halloo, verb, Tw. Nt. i. 5. 291. grave has F. halle, 'an interj. of cheering or setting on a dog,' whence haller, 'to hallow, or incourage dogs with hallowing.'

HALLOW, to sanctify, make holy. (E.) M. E. halzien, Layamon, 17496; later halwe, P. Plowman, B. xv. 557; halewe, halowe, Wyclif, John, xi. 55.—A. S. halgian, to make holy; from halig, holy. See Holy. And see below.

HALLOWMASS, the feast of All Hallows or All Saints. (Hybrid; E. and L.) In Shak. Rich. II, v. i. 80. A familiar abbreviation for All Hallows' Mass—the mass (or feast) of All Saints. In Eng. Gilds. ed. Toulmin Smith. p. 221. we have the expression In Eng. Gilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, p. 351, we have the expression alle halowene tyd = all hallows' tide; and again, the tyme of al halowene =the time of all hallows. B. Here hallows' is the gen. pl. of M. E. halowe or halwe, a saint; just as halowene is the M. E. gen. pl. of the same word. The pl. halws (= saints) occurs in Chaucer, C. T.

receive its objects erroneously, hallucination; 'Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 18. § 4. Also in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Formed, by analogy with F. sbs. in -tion, from Lat. hallucinatio, allucinatio, or alucinatio, a wandering of the mind. - Lat. hallucinari, allucinari, or alucinari, to wander in mind, dream, rave. Of uncertain origin.

Der. hallucinate, verb, hallucinat-or-y.

HALM, the same as Haulm, q. v.

HALO, a luminous ring round the sun or moon. (L., -Gk.) 'This halo is made after this manner;' Holland's Plutarch, p. 681 (R.) -Lat. acc. halo, from nom. halos, a halo. - Gk. äλωs, a round threshing-uoluere, to roll, Skt. valaya, a circle, circular enclosure. See Voluble.

HALSER (in Minsheu), the same as Hawser, q.v.

HAMADRYAD, a dryad or wood-nymph. (L., -Gk.) Properly used rather in the pl. Hamadryades, whence the sing. hamadryad was (incorrectly) formed, by cutting off the suffix -es. Chaucer, C. T. 2030, has the corrupt form Amadrydes. - Lat. pl. hamadryades (sing. hamadryas), wood-nymphs. - Gk. pl. Amadryades, wood-nymphs; the life of each nymph depended on that of the tree to which she was attached. - Gk. Eua, together with (i.e. coexistent with); and δρῦε, a tree. "Aμα is co-radicate with same; and δρῦε with tree. See Same and Tree.

HAMLET, a small village. (F., -O. Low G.) M. E. hamelet, of three syllables; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 269; spelt hamelat, Barbour, Bruce, iv. 195; hamillet, id. ix. 403 (Edinb. MS.); hamlet, id. x. 403 (Camb. MS.). - O. F. hamel (whence mod. F. hameau), with dimin. suffix -et. Hamel is used by Froissart, ii. 2. 232 (Littré). The suffix -et is also dimin.; the base being ham.—O. Friesic ham (North Friesic hamm, Outzen), a home, dwelling; cognate with A.S. hám, whence E. home. See Home.

¶ The fact that the word is French explains the difference of vowel.

HAMMER, a tool for driving nails. (E.) M. E. hamer, hammer; Chaucer, C. T. 2510; Havelok, 1877.—A.S. hamor, Grein, ii. 11. ‡ Chaucer, C. 1. 2510; Havelok, 1877.—A. S. hamor, Grein, II. 11. + Du. hamer. + Icel. hamarr. + Dan. hammer. + Swed. hammare. + G. hammer; O. H. G. hamar. B. Of doubtful origin; Curtius (i. 161) connects it with Church Slavonic kameni (Russ. kamene), a stone, Lithuanian akmû (stem akmen), a stone, Gk. άκμων, an anvil, thunderbolt, Skt. agman, a stone, thunderbolt; and remarks that 'in German, as in Slavonic, metathesis has taken place.' This etymology appears to be correct; and the root is (probably) AK, to pierce, the orig. sense of Skt. agman being 'pointed stone;' cf. Skt. agant, the thunderbolt of Indra; and note the 'hammer of Thor,' i. e. a thunderbolt. Y. Fick (iii. 64) says that the comparison of hammer with Skt. aeman is 'not to be thought of,' and refers it to ✓ KAM, to be crooked; but this gives no appreciable sense. We should naturally expect the original hammer to have been a stone, and the metathesis of form is quite possible. Der. hammer, verb, K. John, iv. 1. 67; hammer-head (a kind of shark).

HAMMERCLOTH, the cloth which covers a coach-bex.
(Hybrid; Du. and E.) In Todd's Johnson. The form hammer is an E. adaptation of the Du. word hemel (which was not understood); with the addition of E. cloth, by way of giving a sort of sense.— Du. hemel (1), heaven (2) a tester, covering. Den hemel van een koetse, the seeling of a coach, Hexham; explained by Sewel as 'the testern of a coach.'

B. Cognate with Swed., Dan., and G. himmel, testern of a coach.' β . Cognate with Swed, Dan, and G. himmel, heaven, a canopy, tester. All these are derivatives from the form appearing in A.S. hama, Icel. hamr, a covering. — Teut. base HAM = KAM, to curve, cover as with a vault; see Chamber.

HAMPER (1), to impede, hinder, harass. (E.) M. E. hamperen, hamperen; the pp. is hampered and hampred, Will. of Palerne, 441, 4694. 'For, I trow, he can hamper thee;' Rom. of the Rose, 6418, A difficult word; the p is probably excrescent, giving an older form hameren, equivalent to M. E. hamelen, to mutilate, which itself took an excrescent b at a later time, so that hamper and hamble are, in fact, doublets. 'Hameling or hambling of dogs is all one with expeditating. Manwood says, this is the ancient term that foresters used for that matter; Blount's Law Lexicon. Expeditate, in forest laws, signifies to cut out the ball of great dogs' fore-feet, for preservation of the king's game; id. The orig. sense of to hamble or hamper is to mutilate, render lame; cf. Fr. hanap (Low Lat. hanapus), a drinking-cup. - O. H. G.

in.—G. Fr. hanap (Low Lat. hanapus), a drinking-cup.—O. H. G. haap (M. H. G. nap), a drinking-cup. + A. S. haap, as a gloss to Lat. ciathus (cyathus); Wright's Vocab. i. 24, col. 2. + Du. nap, a cup, bowl, basin. Root unknown. Doublet, hanaper.

HANAPER, the old form of Hamper, q. v. Cf. hanppere, or hamper, canistrum; Prompt. Parv., p. 226. 'The Hanaper office in the Court of Chancery derives its name from the hanaparium, a large basket in which writs were deposited, &c.; Way's note.

HAND, the part of the body used for seizing and holding. (E.)

M. E. hand, hond, Chaucer, C. T. 843.—A. S. hand, hond; Grein, ii.

11. + Du. hand. + Icel. hönd, hand. + Dan. haand. + Swed. hand. + Goth. handus. + G. hand; O. H. G. hant. B. The European type is HANDU; derived from HANTH, base of Goth. hinthan, to seize, a strong verb (pt. t. hauth, pp. hunthans), only found in the seize, a strong verb (pt. t. hanth, pp. hunthans), only found in the compounds frahinthan, to take captive, uchinthan, to take captive. Remoter origin unknown. Der. hand, verb, Temp. i. 1. 25; hand-er; hand-barrow, hand-bill, hand-book (imitated from G. handbuch, see Trench, Eng. Past and Present; kand-breadth, Exod. xxv. 25; kand-eart; kand-ful (Wyclif has hondfullis, pl., Gen. xxxvii. 7); kand-gallop; kand-glass, hand-grenade, kand-kerchief (see Kerchief), hand-less, hand-maid (Gen. xvi. 1), hand-maide (Luke, i. 48), hand-hand-hand-hand (Fact. vvii. 2). spike, hand-staves (Ezek. xxxix. 9), hand-weapon (Numb. xxxv. 18), hand-writing. And see hand-cuff, hand-i-cap, hand-i-craft, hand-i-work, hand-le, hand-sel, hand-some, hand-y.

HANDCUFF, a manacle, shackle for the hand. (E.) In Todd's Johnson, without a reference; rare in books. The more usual word (in former times) was hand-fetter, used by Cotgrave to translate O. F. manette, manicle, and manotte. The word is undoubtedly an adaptation of M. E. kandcop: a handcuff; the confusion between cops, a fetter (an obsolescent word) and the better known M. E. coffes (cuffs) was inevitable. We find 'manica, hond-cops' in a vocabulary of the 12th century; Wright's Vocab. i. 95, col. 2.—A. S. hand-cops; we find 'manice, hand-cops' in an earlier vocabulary; id. i. 86, col. 1; also 'compes, fot-cops,' just above. The A. S. cops is also spelt cosp;

Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, lib. iv. met. 3. HANDICAP, a race for horses of all ages. (E.) In a handicap, horses carry different weights according to their ages, &c., with a view to equalising their chances. The word was formerly the name of a game. 'To the Miter Taverne in Woodstreete... Here some of us fell to handycappe, a sport I that never knew before; Pepys' Diary, Sept. 18, 1660. The game is thus explained in Dr. Brewer's Dict. of Phrase and Fable. 'A game at cards not unlike Loo, but with this difference; the winner of one trick has to put in a double stake, the winner of two tricks a triple stake, and so on. Thus: if six persons are playing, and the general stake is is., and A gains 3 tricks, he gains 6s., and has to "hand i' the cap" or pool 3s. [4s.?] for the next deal. Suppose A gains two tricks and B one, then A gains 4s. and B 2s., and A has to stake 3s. and B 2s. for the next deal. But this game does not seem to have originated the phrase.

B. There was, I believe, a still older arrangement of the kind, described in Chambers' Etym. Dict., where it is explained as 'originally applied to a method of settling a bargain or exchange by arbitration, in which each of the parties exchanging put his hand into a cap while the terms of the award were being stated, the award being settled only if money was found in the hands of both when the arbiter called "Draw."

γ. A curious description of settling a bargain by arbitration is given in P. Plowman, B. v. 327; shewing that it was a custom to barter articles, and to settle by arbitration which of the articles was more valuable, and how much (by way of 'amends') was to be given to the holder of the inferior one. From this settlement of 'amends' arose the system known as handicapping. The etymology is clearly from hand i cap (= hand in cap), probably rather from the drawing of lots than from the putting in of stakes into a pool. See my Notes on P. Plowman.

HANDICRAFT, manual occupation, by way of trade. (E.)

Cotgrave translates O. F. mestier by 'a trade, occupation, mystery, handicraft.' A corruption of handeraft; the insertion of i being due to an imitation of the form of handiwork, in which i is a real part of the word. - A. S. handcraft, a trade; Canons under K. Edgar, sect. xi; in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, ii. 246. See Hand and Craft.

The prefix ge in A.S. is extremely common, and makes no appreciable difference in the sense of a word. In later

E., it is constantly rendered by i- or y-, as in y-eleps, from A.S. geeleoped. In Icel. kandaverk, kanda is the gen. pl.

HANDLE, to treat of, manage. (E.) M. E. kandlen, Chaucer, C. T. 8252.—A.S. kandlian, Gen. xxvii. 12. Formed with suffix d and causal -ian from A.S. kand, hand. + Du. kandelen, to handle, and causal stan from A.S. same, finite, p. Du. samesen, to install, trade. + Icel. köndla. + Dan. handle, to treat, use, trade. + Swed. handle, to trade. + G. kandeln, to trade. All similarly formed. See Hand. Der. handle, sb., lit. a thing by which to manage a tool; the pl. handlen occurs early, in St. Juliana, ed. Cockayne and Brock, p. 59; cf. Dan. handel, a handle.

HANDSEL, HANSEL, a first instalment or earnest of a bargain. (E. or Scand.)

1. In making bargains, it was formerly usual to pay a small part of the price at once, to conclude the bargain and as an earnest of the rest. The lit. sense of the word is 'delivery into the hand' or 'hand-gift.' The word often means a gift or bribe, a new-year's gift, an earnest-penny, the first money received in a morning, &c. 3 See Hansel in Halliwell. M. E. hansele, P. Plowman, C. vii. 375; B. v. 326; hansell, Rich. Redeles, iv. 91.

2. Another sense of the word was 'a giving of hands,' a shaking of hands by way of concluding a bargain; see handsal in Icel. Dict.; and it is probable that this is the older meaning of the two. - A. S. handselen, a delivery into the hand; cited by Lye from a Glossary (Cot. 136), but the reference seems to be wrong. [The A. S. word is rare, and the word is rather to be considered as Scand.] - A. S. hand, the hand; and sellan, to give, deliver, whence E. sell. Thus the word handsel stands for hand-sale. See Hand and Sell, Sale. + Icel. handsal, a law term, the transaction of a bargain by joining hands; 'hand-shaking was with the men of old the sign of a transaction, and is still used among farmers and the like, so that to shake hands is the same as to conclude a bargain' (Cleasby and Vigfusson); derived from Icel. hand, hand, and sal, a sale, bargain. + Dan. handsel, a handsel, earnest. + Swed. handsöl. Der. handsel or hansel, verb, used in Warner's Albion's England, b. xii. c.

HANDSOME, comely, orig. dexterous. (E.) Formerly it signified able, adroit, dexterous; see Trench, Select Glossary; Shak. has it in the mod. sense. M. E. hand:um. 'Handsum, or esy to hond werke, esy to han hand werke, manualis;' Prompt. Parv. - A. S. hand, hand; and suffix -sum, as in wyn-sum, winsome, joyous; but the whole word handsum does not appear. + Du. handzaam, tractable, serviceable.

6. The suffix sum is the same as Du. -zaam, G. -sam (in lang-sam); see Winsome. Der. handsome-ly; handsomeness, Troil. ii. 1. 16.

HANDY (1), dexterous, expert. (E.) 'With handy care;' Dryden, Baucis and Philemon, l. 61. The M. E. form is invariably hendi (never handi), but the change from e to a is a convenience; it is merely a reversion to the orig. vowel. It occurs in King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1336. 'Thenne beo se his hendi children' = then ye are his dutiful children; Ancren Riwle. p. 186.—A. S. hendig, appearing in the comp. list-hendig, having skilful hands (Grein); which is composed of A. S. list, skill, and hendig, an adj. regularly formed from the sb. hand by the addition of the suffix -ig and the consequent vowel change from a to e. See Hand. + Du. handig, handy, expert. + Dan. handig, usually behandig, expert, dexterous. + Swed. händig, dexterous. + Goth. handugs, clever, wise. Cf. G. behend, agile, dexterous; and see Handy (2).

HANDY (2), convenient, near. (É.) This is not quite the same word as the above, but they are from the same source. 'Ah! though he lives so handy, He never now drops in to sup;' Hood's Own, i. 44. M. E. hende. 'Nade his help hende ben' = had not help been near him; William of Palerne, 2513.—A. S. gehende, near; 'sumor is gehende' = summer is nigh at hand, Luke, xii. 30; 'he wæs gehende ham scipe' = he was nigh unto the ship, John, vi. 19. [The prefix gecould always be dropped, and is nearly lost in mod. English.] The A. S. gehende is arrady, and prep., formed from hand by suffixed.—

A.S. gehende is an adv. and prep., formed from hand by suffixed of (for i?) and vowel-change. See Handy (1).

HANDYWORK, the same as Handiwork, q.v. HANG, to suspend; to be suspended (E.) In mod. E. two verbs have been mixed together. The orig. verb is intransitive, with the pt. t. hung, pp. hung; whence the derived transitive verb, pt. t. and pp. hanged. [So also in the case of lie, lay, sit, set, fall, fell, the intrans. is the orig. form.] The infin. mood follows the form of the A. S. trans. rather than of the intransitive verb, on which account the provinging form will be first considered here. xi; in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, ii. 246. See Hand and Craft.

Der. handicrafts-man.

HANDIWORK, HANDYWORK, work done by the hands.

(E.) M. E. handiwerk, handiwere; spelt handiwere, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 129, l. 20.—A. S. handgeweere, Deut. iv. 28.—A. S. hand; and geweere, another form of weere, work. See Hand hangian, hongian, Grein, ii. 14; the pt. t. hangode occurs in Beowulf, BHARANGUE, a popular address. (F., = O. H. G.) In Milton, ed. Grein, 2085. + Icel. hengia, to hang up (weak verb). + G. hängen P. L. xi. 663. = O. F. harangue, 'an oration, . . set speech, long tale;' ed. Grein, 2085. + Icel. Amgia, to hang up (weak verb). + G. Aängen (weak verb). These are the causal forms of the strong verb following. B. M. E. hangen, pt. t. heng (sometimes hing), pp. hongen. 'And theron heng a broche of gold ful schene;' Chaucer, C. T. 160. 'By unces henge his lokkes that he hadde;' id. 679. The infin. hangen is conformed to the causal and Icel. forms, the A. S. infin. being always contracted and S. him to hope into the causal and Icel. contracted. - A. S. hon, to hang, intr. (contr. from hahan or hanhan); pt. t. héng, pp. hangen; Grein, ii. 95. + Icel. hanga, to hang, intr.; pt. t. héhk (for héng), pp. hangin. + Goth. hahan, pt. t. haihah (formed by reduplication), pp. hahans. + G. hangen, pt. t. hieng, hing, pp. gehangen.

C. All these verbs are from a European base that the first it. pp. gehangen. C. All these verbs are from a European base HANH (Fick, iii, 58), corresponding to a root KANK, whence Lat. eunctari, to hesitate, delay, and Skt. cank, to hesitate, be in uncertainty, doubt, fear. And again, KANK is a nasalised form of KAK, whence Gk. bereiv, to linger, be anxious, fear, standing for an older form κοκνείν. 'We must assume an Indo-European root hak, nasalised kank, and refer δικνος to κύκνος;' Curtius, ii. 375. The orig. sense of Δ KAK seems to be 'to be in doubt,' 'be anxious,' be suspended in mind,' or simply 'to waver.'

¶ The Du. hangen, Dan. hange, Swed. hange, are forms common to both and others senses. and intrans. senses. Der. hanger, (1) one who hangs, (2) a suspended sword, orig. part of a sword-belt whence the sword was suspended, Hamlet, v. 2. 157; hanger-on, hang-ing; hang-ings, Tam. Shrew, ii. 351; hang-man, Meas. iv. 2. 18; hang-dog, Pope, Donne Versified, Sat. iv. 267; also hank, q. v.; hank-er, q. v.

HANK, a parcel of two or more skeins of yarn, tied together.

(Scand.) Cotgrave translates O. F. bobine by 'a skane or hanke of gold or silver thread.' Cf. prov. E. hank, a skein, a loop to fasten a gate, a handle (Halliwell). The rare M. E. verb hanken, to fetter, occurs in Cursor Mundi, 16044.—Icel. hanki, the hasp or clasp of a chest; hönk, hangr, a hank, coil; hang, a coil of a snake. + Dan. hank, a handle, ear of a vessel. + Swed. hank, a string, tie band. + G.

B. The orig. sense seems to be 'a loop' for fastening things together, also a loose ring to hang a thing up by; and the form hangr shews the connection with Icel. hanga, to hang, also to hang on to, cleave to; whence the sense of fastening. Cf. G. henken, to hang (a man). See Hang,

Hanker.

HANKER, to long importunately. (E.) Not in early use. 'And felt such bowel-hankerings To see an empire, all of kings;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 239. Cf. prov. E. hank, to hanker after (North); Halliwell. This verb is a frequentative of hang, with the same change of ng to nk as in the sb. hank; cf. the phrases to hang on,' and 'to hang about,' and the use of Icel. hanga in the sense of 'to cleave to.' + O. Du. hengelen, to hanker after (Sewel), from Du. hangen, to hang, depend; mod. Du. hunkeren, to hanker after, corrupted from the older form honkeren (= hankeren); see Sewel. The change from ng to nk is also well shewn by G. henker (-hang-er), a hangman; G. henken, to hang (a man). See Hank, Hang.

HANSEATIC, pertaining to the Hanse Towns in Germany.

(F., = O. H. G.) The Hanse towns were so called because associated in a league. = O. F. hanse, 'the hanse; a company, society, or corporation of merchants;' Cot. = O. H. G. hansa, mod. G. hanse, an association, league (Flügel). + Goth. hansa, a band of men, Mk. xv. 16; Luke. vi. 17. + A. S. hos [for hans], a band of men; Beowulf, 924. The league began about A. D. 1140 (Haydn).

HANSEL, the same as Handsel, q. v.

HANSOM, a kind of cab. (E.) Modern. An abbreviation for 'Hansom's patent safety cab. From the name of the inventor. Hansom is no doubt the same as handsome, in which the d is frequently dropped. Many surnames are nicknames; see Handsome.

dropped. Many sumames are nicknames; see Handsome. HAP, fortune, chance, accident. (Scand.) M.E. hap, happ; P. Plowman, B. xii. 108; Layamon, 816, 3857.—Icel. happ, hap, chance, good luck. Cf. A.S. gehap, fit; Ælfric's Colloquy, in Thorpe's Analecta, p. 21, l. 7; also A.S. magenhap, full of strength, modhap, full of sourage, Grein, ii. 219, 259. ¶ The W. hap, luck, hap, chance, must be borrowed from E.; but the Irish cobh, victory, triumph, is prob. cognate. Der. happ-y, orig. lucky, Pricke of Conscience, 1334; happ-i-ly, happ-i-ness; hap-less, Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 108; hap-less-ly; hap-ly, Shak. Two Gent. i. 1. 32 (hap-silv in the same sense. Meas, iv. 1. 98); hap-hazard, Holland, fr. of pily in the same sense, Meas. iv. 1. 98); hap-hazard, Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 878 (R.): habben, verb. a. v. michel.

Livy, p. 178 (R.); kapp-en, verb, q. v.; mis-hap, per-haps.

HAPPEN, to befal. (Scand.) M. E. happenen; Gower has kapneth = it happens; C. A. iii. 62. '3if me pe lytte happene' = if life happens: It happens; C. A. III. 02. '311 me pe lytte happens' =11 life be granted me; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1269. B. The form happens is an extension of the commoner form happen (mod. E. hap); 'In any cas that mighte falle or happe;' Chaucer, C. T. 587. Y. The latter verb is formed directly from the sb. hap above. With the ending enen compare Goth. verbs in nan.

Cot. Cf. Span. arenga, tal. aringa, arringa, an harangue. B. The Ital. aringa signifies a speech made from an aringo, which Florio explains by 'a pulpit;' aringo also meant an arena, lists, and prob. a hustings. The more lit. sense is a speech made in the midst of a ring of people. O. H. G. hring (mod. G. ring), a ring, a ring of people, an arena, circus, lists; cognate with E. ring and circus. See Ring, Circus. The vowel a (for i) reappears in the sb. rank; see Rank, Range. The prefix ha- in F., and a- in Span, and Ital., are due to the G. h-, now dropped. Der. harangue, verb, Butler, Huddiras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 438. Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 438.

HARASS, to torment, vex. plague. (F.) Also spelt harras. 'To harass and weary the English;' Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 61 (spelt harrasse in R.) = O. F. harasser. 'to tire, or toile out,... p. 01 (spelt harrasse in R.) = O. F. harasser, 'to tire, or toile out, ... vex, disquiet;' Cot. β. Of disputed origin; but it seems best to suppose it to be an extension of O. F. harer; 'harer vn chien, to hound a dog at, or set a dog on a beast;' Cot. = O. H. G. haren, to cry out. = √ KAR, to call out; cf. Gk. κηρνέ, a herald. Der. harass, sb., Milton. Samson, 257; harass-er.

HARBINGER, a forerunner. (F., = O. H. G.) In Shak. Macb. i. 4. 45. See Trench, Select Glossary. The n stands for r, and the older form is M.E. herbergeour, one who provided lodgings for a host or army of people. This sense is retained in Bacon, who save: 'There or army of people. This sense is retained in Bacon, who save: 'There or army of people. This sense is retained in Bacon, who says: 'There was a harbinger who had lodged a gentleman in a very ill room;' Apophthegms, no. 54. 'The fame anon throughout the toun is born . . By herbergeours that wenten him beforn; Chaucer, C. T. 5417. In the title of the legend of St. Julian, in Bodley MS. 1596, fol. 4, he is the title of the regent of St. Julian, in Bodey M.S. 1590, 101. 4, he is called 'St. Julian the gode herberjour,' i. e. the good harbourer. Herbergeour is formed (by help of the suffix -our, denoting the agent) from the O. F. herberger, 'to harbour, lodge, or dwell in a house;' Cot. (and see Burguy).—O. F. herberge, 'a house, harbour, lodging;' Cot. and F. harbour, lodging;' Cot. and F. harbour, lodging;' Cot. The second F. harbour, lodging;' Cot Cot.; mod. F. auberge. - M. H. G. herberge, O. H. G. hereberga, a lodging, harbour; see further under Harbour.

HARBOUR, a lodging, shelter, place of refuge. (Scand.) M. E. herberwe, Chaucer, C. T. 767; whence mod. E. harbour by change of -erwe to -our, and the use of ar to represent the later sound of er. The w stands for an older 3, and this again for g; the spelling herberge is in Layamon, 28878.—Icel. herbergi, a harbour, inn, lodging, lit. a 'host-shelter;' derived from Icel. herr, an army, and bjarga, to save, help, defend. + O. Swed. hærberge, an inn; derived from hær, an army, and berga, to defend (lhre). + O. H. G. hereberga, a camp, lodging; der. from O. H. G. heri, hari (mod. G. heer), an army, and bergan, to shelter: whence come mod. F. auberge, Ital. albergo, an inn, and mod. E. harbinger, q.v. B. For the former element, cf. also A. S. here, Goth. harjis, a host, army, the European form being HARJA (Fick, iii. 65). Cognate with Lithuan. haras, war, army, lit. 'destroyer,' from KAR, to kill, destroy, whence Skt. war, army, in: destroyer, hours army, in destroyer, hours, para, hurting, pri, to hurt, wound, Gk. κλάειν, to break, and perhaps Russ. Larate. to punish: see Harry. C. For the latter element, Russ karate, to punish; see Harry. cf. Goth. bairgan, A. S. beorgan, to preserve; and see Bury.

¶ It is usual to cite A. S. hereberga as the original of harbour; but it is quite unauthorised. Der. harbour, verb, M. E. herberwen, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 73, from Icel. herbergja, to shelter, harbour, a verb formed from the sb. herbergi; also harbour-er; harbour-age, K. John, ii. 234; harbour-less; harbour-master; also harbinger, q.v. HARD, firm, solid, severe. (E.) M. E. hard, Chaucer. C. T. 229

Wright's Vocab. i. 22, 78. + Du. hass. + Dan. and Swed. hars. + Doppular etymology which connected the word with Charles Quint (Charles V.); see the story in Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 581.

HARLOT, a wanton woman. (F.) Orig. used of either sex indifferently; in fact, more commonly of men in Mid, Eng. It has not, either, a very bad sense, and means little more than 'fellow.' 'He was a gentil harlot and a kind;' Chaucer, C. T. 649. 'A sturble of the distance of the connected with E. haste. See Haste. Der. an older assa, as shewn by the but, G., and Skt. forms. In e Skt. gives the etymology; cas being from the verb cap, orig. cas, to jump, move along by leaping. Hence all the forms are from a root KAS, to jump, prob. connected with E. haste. See Haste. Der. hars-brained, I Hen. IV, v. 2. 19; hars-lip, K. Lear, iii. 4. 123; hars-lip, K. Lear, iii. 4.

HAREBELL, the name of a flower. (E.) In Cymb. iv. 2. 222. The word does not appear among A. S. names of plants. Certainly compounded of hare and bell; but, owing to the absence of reason for the appellation, it has been supposed to be a corruption of hairbell. with reference to the slenderness of the stalk of the true hairbell, the Campanula rotundifolia. The apparent absence of reason for the name is, however, rather in favour of the etymology from hare than otherwise, as will be seen by consulting the fanciful A.S. names of plants given in Cockayne's Leechdoms, vol. iii. To name plants from animals was the old custom; hence hare's beard, hare's-ear, hare's foot, hare's lettuce, hare's palace, hare's tail, hare-thistle, all given in Dr. Prior's Popular Names of British Plants; to which add A.S. haran-hyge (hare's foot trefoil), haran-specel (now called viper's bu-gloss), haran-wyrt (hare's wort), from Cockayne's Leechdoms. The spelling hair-bell savours of modern science, but certainly not of the peting nair-vet savours of modern science, but certainly not of the principles of English etymology.

A similar modern error is to derive fox-glove from folks-glove (with the silly interpretation of folks as being 'the good folks' or fairies), in face of the evidence that the A.S. name was foxes gloja = the glove of the fox.

HAREM, the set of apartments reserved for females in large Eastern houses. (Arab.) Not in Todd's Johnson. Spelt haram in Moore's Lalla Rookh; 'And the light of his haram was young Nourmahal.' Also in Byron, Bryde of Abydos, c. i. st. 14.—Arab. haram, women's apartments; lit. 'sacred;' Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 197.—Arab. root harama, he prohibited; so that the haram is the place which men are prohibited from entering.

HARICOT, (1) a stew of mutton, (2) the kidney bean. (F.) · Haricot, in cookery, a particular way of dressing mutton-cutlets; also, a kind of French beans; 'Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. - F. haricot, 'mutton sod with little turneps, some wine, and tosts of bread crumbled among,' &c.; Cotgrave (who gives two other methods of preparing it, shewing that it was sometimes served with 'chopped herbs').

$\beta$. See Littré, who discusses it; it is found that the herbs'). β. See Littré, who discusses it; it is found that the sense of 'bean' is late, whilst the sense of 'minced mutton with herbs' is old. The oldest spelling is herigote (14th cent.); cf. O. F. harligote, a piece, morsel (Burguy). We may certainly conclude that the bean was so named from its use in the dish called haricot. γ. Of unknown origin, but presumably Teutonic. We also find the following. 'Herigotes, dew-claws, also spurs;' Cot. 'Harigot, petite flûte, flageolet fait avec les os des pieds, ou tibia de chevrau et d'agneau;' Roquefort. 'Arigot, larigot, sorte de fifre, petite flûte militaire;' id. (The right key would probably connect and explain these words).

HARK! listen! (E.) M. E. herke, Coventry Mysteries, 55 (Stratmann). The imp. mood of M. E. herken; 'to herken of his sawe,' Chaucer, C. T. 1528. Closely allied to M. E. herknen, to hearken.

See Hearken.

HARLEQUIN, the leading character in a pantomime. (F.) The joy of a king for a victory must not be like that of a harlequin upon a letter from his mistress; Dryden (in Todd's Johnson; no reference). - F. arlequin, a harlequin; spelt harlequin in the 16th cent. Cf. Ital. arlecchino, a harlequin, buffoon, jester. B. Some derive the F. word from the Italian; but it is not an old word in the latter language, and the borrowing seems to have been the other way. Y. It seems best to connect F. arlequin (harlequin) with the O. F. hierlekin or hellequin (13th century) for which Littré gives quotations. This word was used in the phrase li maisnie hierlekin (Low Lat. harlequini familias) which meant a troop of demons that haunted lonely places, called in Middle-English Hurlewaynes kynne or Hura lewaynes meyné = Hurlewain's kin or troop, mentioned in Richard the Redeles, i. 90, and in the Prologue to the Tale of Beryn, l. 8. The orig signification of O. F. hierlekin, Low Lat. harlequinus, and M. E. hurleways seems to have been a demon, perhaps the devil. Cf. also Ital. Alichino, the name of a demon in Dante, Inf. xxi. 118. The origin of the name is wholly unknown. See note to Rich. Redeles, ed. Skeat, i. 90. ¶ I shall here venture my guess. Perhaps hierlekin may have been of O. Low German origin; thus O. Friesic Aelle kin (A. S. helle cyn, Icel. heljar kyn) would mean 'the kindred of hell' or 'the host of hell,' hence a troop of demons. The sense being lost, the O. F. maisnie would be added to keep up the idea of Dauwe the dykere with a dosen harlotes of portours and pykeporses and pylede toth-drawers' = Davy the ditcher with a dozen fellows and pylede toth-drawers = Davy the uncher with a dozen tenows who were porters and pick-purses and hairless (?) tooth-drawers; P. Plowman, C. vii. 369. 'Begge as on harlor' = beg like a vagabond, Ancren Riwle, p. 356. Undoubtedly of Romance origin. = O. F. arlor (probably once harlor), explained by Roquefort as 'fripon, O. F. arlot (probably once harlot), explained by Roquefort as 'fripon, coquin, voleur,' a vagabond, a robber; also spelt herlot, for which Diez gives a reference to the Romance of Tristran, i. 173. B. The Prov. arlot, a vagabond, occurs in a poem of the 13th century; Bartsch, Chrestomathie Provençale, 207. 20. Florio explains Ital. arlotto by 'a lack-Latin, a hedge-priest,' and arlotta as a harlot in the modern E. sense. Ducange explains Low Lat. arlotus to mean a glutton. Y. Of disputed origin, but presumably Teutonic, viz. from the O. H. G. karl, a man. This is a well-known word, appearing also as Icel. karl, a man, fellow, A. S. ceorl, a man, and in the mod. E. churl; see Churl. The suffix is the usual F. dimin. suffix -ot, as in bill-ot from bille; see Brachet's Dict. § 281; it also appears in the E. personal name Charlotte, which is probably the very same word. E. personal name Charlotte, which is probably the very same word. We actually find the whole word carlot in Shak. As You Like It, iii. 5. 108. Note also the form Arletta, said to have been the name of the mother of William I. ¶ We find also W. herlod, a stripling, lad; but this is merely the E. word borrowed; the Cornish not only borrowed the E. harlot unchanged (with the sense of 'rogue'), but also rowed the E. harlot unchanged (with the sense of 'rogue'), but also the word harlutry, corruption, which is plainly the M. E. harlotrie, with a suffix (*rie) which is extremely common in French. See Williams, Cornish Lexicon, p. 211. Der. harlot-ry = M. E. harlotrie, of which one meaning was 'ribald talk;' see Chaucer, C. T. 563, 3147. The suffix -ry is of F. origin, as in caval-ry, bribe-ry, &c.

HARM, injury, wrong. (E.) M. E. harm, P. Plowman, C. xvi.

113; spelt herm, Ancren Riwle, p. 116. – A. S. hearm, herm, grief of paind also harm, injury: Grein ii for + Icel harms, crief + Don mind, also harm, injury; Grein, ii. 60. + Icel. harmr, grief. + Dan. harme, wrath. + Swed. harm, anger, grief, pity. + G. harm, grief. B. Cf. Russ. srame, shame; Skt. orama, toil, fatigue. The latter is from the vb. cram, to exert one's self, toil, be weary. - KRAM, or KARM, to be tired; whence some derive also Lat. elemens, and E. element (Fick, i. 48). Der. harm, verb, M. E. harmen, spelt hearmin in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, p. 263, l. 7; harm-ful, Wyelif, Prov. i. 22; harm-ful-ly, harm-ful-ness; harm-less = M. E. harmles, Will of Poleme 1632; herm-ful-ly, harm-ful-ness. Will. of Palerne, 1671; harm-less-ly, harm-less-ness.

HARMONY, concord, esp. of sounds. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. harmonie, Gower, C. A. iii. 90. 'There is a melodye in heauen, whiche clerkes clepen armony;' Testament of Love, in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. cccii. col. 2. - F. harmonie. - Lat. harmonia. -Gk. αρμονία, a joint, joining, proportion, harmony.—Gk. αρμός, a fitting, joining.—Gk. αρειν (fut. αρῶ), to fit, join together.—A AR, to fit; whence also E. arm, article, &c. Der. harmoni-c, Milton, P. L. iv. 689; harmoni-cs, harmoni-c-al, harmoni-c-al-ly; harmoni-ous, Temp. iv. 119; harmoni-ous-ly, harmoni-ous-ness; harmon-ise (Cudworth), harmon-is-er, harmon-ist, harmoni-um (about A. D. 1841).

HARNESS, equipment for a horse. (F., - C.) In old books, it almost always means body-armour for soldiers; 1 Kings, xx. 11; &c. M. E. harneis, harneys, Chaucer, C. T. 1613; spelt herneys, P. Plowman, B. xv. 215. 'He dude quyk harnesche hors' = he commanded horses to be quickly harnessed, King Alisaunder, 4708. = O. F. harnes, harnois, hernois, armour. = Bret. harnez, old iron; also armour. = Bret. houarn (pl. hern), iron; cognate with W. haiarn, Gael. iarunn, Irish iaran, iron. See Iron.

The G. harnisch, Du. harnas, &c., are borrowed from French.

Der. harness, verb, = O. F. harnascher.

M. E. harpe, Gower, C. A. iii. 301; Layamon, 4898.—A. S. hearpe, Grein, ii. 62; and see Elfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxv. § 6 (b. iii. met. 12). + Du. harp. + Icel. harpa. + Swed. harpa. + Dan. harpe. + G. harfe. O. H. G. harpha.

B. Root unknown; but perhaps connected with Lat. crepare, to crackle, erabro, a hornet; if so, it orig. meant 'louds sounding.'

There is no pretence for connecting it, as assual, with Gk. how, meaning 'a sickle,' or 'a bird of prey'l See note to Harpoon. Der. harper = A. S. hearpere, in Ælfred, as above; harp, werb A. S. hearpering id. (to hearticher) a. V.

werb, A.S. hearpian, id.; also harpsichord, q. v.

HARPOON, a dart for striking whales. (Du., = F.) 'Some fish with harpons' (late edd. harpons), Dryden, Art of Love, 875. The dart is also called 'a harping-iron.' Harpon is the F., harpon the Du. form. = Du. harpon (pron. like E. harpon), 'a harping-iron the Du. form. = Du. harpon (pron. like E. harpon), 'a harping-iron the Du. form. = Du. harpon (pron. like E. harpon), 'a harping-iron the promise of the property of the pro host,' turning hierlehin into (apparently) a personal name of a single | Sewel. = F. harpon, orig. 'a crampiron wherewith masons fasten demon. The change from hellehin to h:riequin, &co., arose from a stanes together (Cotgrave); hence, a grappling-iren. = O. F. harpo, *a dog's claw or paw; 'Cot.; cf. 'se harper l'un à l'autre, to grapple, grasp, hasp, clasp, imbrace, cope, close together, to scuffle or iall together by the ears; 'id. Cf. Span. arpon, a harpoon, arpeo, a grappling-iron, arpar, to tear to pieces, rend, claw. Also Ital. arpagone, a harpoon, arpese, a cramp-iron, clamp, arpicare, to clamber ap, arpino, a hook, arpions, a hinge, pivot, hook, tenter.

B. The notion of 'grappling' seems to underlie all these words; but the origin is by no means clear; Littré cites an O. H. G. harfan, to seize, which Scheler spells krepan; this seems to be nothing but mod. G. raffen, to snatch up; and I doubt its being the true source. y. Surely the Ital. arpagone is nothing but the Lat. acc. harpagonem; I suppose the base harp to be no other than that which appears in Lat. harpago, a hook, grappling-iron, harpaga, a hook, and harpax, rapacious; all words borrowed from Gk.; cf. Gk. apπαγή, a hook, rake, aρπαf, rapacious, aρπη, a bird of prey, all from the base APΠ rake, home, rapacious, hom, a bird of prey, all from the base APII in home feet, to snatch, tear, ravish away; the true form of the root being RAP, as in Lat. rapers. to seize. See Harpy. The Diez identifies F. harps, a dog's claw, with F. harps, a harp, on the plea that the harp was probably 'hook-shaped;' of which there is no proof. Der. harpoon-er.

HARPSICHORD, an old harp-shaped instrument of music. (F.) Also spelt harpsicon or harpsecol. 'On the harpsicon or virginals;' Partheneia Sacra, ed. 1633, p. 144 (Todd). 'Harpsechord or Harpsecol, a musical instrument;' Kersey. Spelt harpsechord in Minsheu, and the first The corrupt forms of the word are not easy to explain; in

ed. 1627. The corrupt forms of the word are not easy to explain; in particular, the letter s seems to have been a mere intrusion. — O. F. harpechords, 'an arpsichord or harpsichord,' Cot. Compounded of O. F. harpe, a harp (from a Teutonic source); and chorde, more commonly corde, a string. See Harp, Chord, and Cord.

HARPY, a mythological monster, half bird and half woman. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) In Shak. Temp. iii. 3. 83. - O. F. harpie, or harpye, 'a harpy;' Cot.-Lat. harpyia, chiefly used in pl. harpyia, Verg. Æn. iii. 226. - Gk. pl. άρπυιαι, harpies; lit. 'the spoilers.' - Gk. άρπ-, the base of aρπάζειν, to seize; cognate with Lat. rap-, the base of rapere, to seize. See Rapacious.

HARQUEBUS, the same as Arquebus, q.v.

HARRIDAN, a worn-out wanton woman. (F.) In Pope, Macer, a Character, l. 24. It is a variant of O. F. haridelle, which Cot. explains by 'a poor tit, or leane ill-favored jade;' i.e. a wornout horse. Probably connected with O.F. harer, to set a dog on a beast, hence, to drive, urge. See Harass.

HARRIER (1), a hare-hound. (E.) Formerly harier, more Minchen ed. 1627. The word occurs also in with correctly. So spelt in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Blount, Ancient Tenures, p. 39 (Todd). Formed from hare, with suffix -ter; cf. bow-yer from bow, law-yer from law.

HARRIER (2), a kind of buzzard. (E.) Named from its harrying or destroying small birds. See Harry. HARROW, a frame of wood, fitted with spikes, used for breaking the soil. (E.) M. E. harwe, P. Plowman, B. xix. 268; spelt haru, harou, harwe, Cursor Mundi, 12388. Not found in A. S., but prob. an E. word. The doubtful form hyrwe is given in Somner and Lye. + Du. hark, a rake. + Icel. herfi, a harrow. + Dan. harv, a harrow; harve, to harrow. + Swed. harka, a rake; harka, to rake; harf, a harrow; harfya, to harrow. + G. harke, a rake (Flügel); harken, to rake. Root unknown; cf. Gk. κέρκις, a peg, pin, skewer. ¶ The F. herce, a harrow, is a different word; see Hearse. Dor. harrow, verb, M. E. harwen, P. Plowman, C. vi. 19.

HARRY, to ravage, plunder, lay waste. (E.) Also written harrow, but this is chiefly confined to the phrase 'the Harrowing of Hell, i. e. the despoiling of hell by Christ. M. E. herzien, later herien, herwen, harwen. 'By him that harwed helle;' Chaucer, C. T. 3512. 'He that keried helle;' Will, of Palerne, 3725.—A. S. hergian, to lay waste, Grein, ii. 38. Lit. to 'over-run with an army;' cognate with Icel. herja, Dan. harge, to ravage.—A. S. herg., which appears in herg-es, gen case of here, an army, a word particularly used in the sense of 'destroying host;' Grein, ii. 35.

A. S. here is cognate with Icel herr, Dan hær, Swed här, G. heer, and Goth. Aarjis, a host, army; all from European base HARJA, an army, from Europ. root HAR, to destroy, answering to Aryan KAR, to destroy; cf. Skt. cri, to hurt, wound, cirna, wasted, de-

HARSH, rough, bitter, severe. (Scand.) M. E. harsh, rough to the touch, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1084, 'Harshe, or hashe, as sundry frutys; Prompt. Parv.—Dan. harsh, rancid; Swed. härsh, rank, rancid, rusty; O. Swed. harsh (Ihre). + G. harsch, harsh, rough.

(Fick, iii. 67), from a shorter HERU; the latter corresponds to Lat. ceruus, a hart, W. carw, a hart, stag, and these are again expansions from the base KAR which appears in the Gk. spas*, a horn, and is related to E. korn. The orig. sense is 'horned animal.' See further under Horn. Der. Aarts-korn, so called because the horns of the hart abound with ammonia; harts-tongue.

HARVEST, the ingathering of crops, the produce of labour. (E.) Sometimes used in the sense of 'autumn;' see Wyclif, Jude, 12; Shak. Temp. iv. 116. M. E. heruest (with u for v), P. Plowman, B. vi. 292, 301. - A. S. hærfest, autumn, Grein, ii. 24; the orig. sense being 'crop.' + Du. herfst, autumn, Grein, il. 24; the Grig. school being 'crop.' + Du. herfst, autumn (contracted form). + Dan. höst, harvest, crop (contr. form). + Swed. höst, autumn (contr. form). + G. herbst, autumn, harvest; M. H. G. herbst, O. H. G. herpist.

B. All with a suffix -as-ta from Teut, base harf, equivalent to the base καρπ- of the cognate Gk. κάρπος, fruit.

- ✓ KARP, to seize; as in Lat. carp-ere, to pluck, gather.

y. This root is perhaps related to ✓ SKARP, to cut; see Sharp. Der. harvest, verb; harvest-er; harvest-home, I Hen. IV, i. 3. 35; harvest-man, Cor. i. 3. 39; harvest-moon, harvest-time. From the same root, ex-cerpt.

HASH, a dish of meat cut into small slices. (F., -G.) 'Hash, cold meat cut into slices and heated again with spice, &c.;' ed. 1715. An abbreviation of an older form hackey or hackee, in Cotgrave. - O. F. hachis, 'a hachey, or hachee; a sliced gallimaufrey or minced meat;' Cot. - O. F. hacher, 'to hack, shread, slice;' id. - G. hacken, to hack; cognate with E. hack. See Hack. ¶ In E., the sb. is older than the vb. to hash; conversely in F. Der.

HASP, a clasp. (E.) M. E. haspe, Chaucer, C. T. 3470. Hespe of a dore, pessulum; Prompt. Parv. [Haspe stands for hapse, by the same change as in clasp from M. E. clapsen, aspen from A. S. æps.] — A. S. hæpse, as a gloss to sera (a bolt, bar), in Wright's Vocab. i. 81, col. 1. + Icel. hespa. + Dan. haspe, a hasp, reel. + Swed. haspe, a hasp. + G. haspe, a hasp; haspel, a staple, reel, windlass; cf. Du. haspel, a windlass, reel.

β. All from an old Teut. base HAP-SA, in which the suffix may be compared with that in A. S. redel-s (for radel-sa), a riddle. The orig. sense 'that which fits;' cf. A.S.

gehap, fit; and see Hap.

HASSOCK, a stuffed mat for kneeling on in church. (C.) 'Hassock, a straw-cushion us'd to kneel upon;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Also in Phillips, New World of Words, 1706, in the same sense; see Trench, Select Glossary. So called from the coarse grass of which it was made; M. E. hassok. 'Hassok, ulphus;' Prompt. Parv.; see Way's Note, showing the word to be in use A.D. F147; whilst in 1465 there is mention of 'segges, soddes, et hassokes sedges, sods, and hassocks. Forby explains Norfolk hassock as coarse grass, which grows in rank tufts on boggy ground. A. In this case, the suffix answers rather to W. og than to the usual E. dimin. suffix; the W. og being used to form adjectives, as in goludog, wealthy, from golud, wealth. The orig. signification of the word is 'sedg-y,' the form being adjectival. — W. hesg-og, sedgy, from hesg, s. pl. sedges; cf. W. hesgyn, a sieve, hesor, a hassock, pad. Cf. also Corn. hescen, a bulrush, sedge, reed; and (since the W. initial h stands frequently for s) also Irish seisg, a sedge, bog-reed.

Assock (= sedg-y) is co-radicate with sedge. See Sedge.

HASTATE, shaped like the head of a halberd. (Lat.) Modern, and botanical.—Lat. hastatus, spear-like, formed from hasta, a spear, which is co-radicate with E. goad. See Goad.

HASTE, HASTEN, to go speedily; Haste, speed. (Scand.) The form hasten appears to be nothing more than the old infin. mood of the verb; the pt. t. and pp. hastened (or hastned) do not occur in early authors; perhaps the earliest example is that of the pp. hastened in Spenser, Shep. Kal., May, 152. Strictly speaking, the form haste (pt. t. hasted) is much to be preferred, and is commoner than hasten both in Shak, and in the A.V. of the Bible. M. E. hasten (pt. t. hastede), where the n is merely the sign of the infin. mood, and was readily dropped. Thus Gower has: 'Cupide . . Seih [saw] Phebus hasten him so sore, And, for he shulde him haste more. . . A dart Chaucer, C. T. 8854. 'But hasteth yow'=make haste; id. 17383. 'He hasteth wel that wysly can abyde; and in wikked haste is no profit;' id., Six-text, B. 2244.

B. It is hard to say whether the vb. or sb. first came into use in English; perhaps the earliest example is in the phr. in hast = in haste; K. Alisaunder, 3264. Neither are found in A. S. = O. Swed. hasta, to haste; hast, haste (Ihre); Dan. haste, to haste; hast, haste. + O. Fries. hast, haste. + Du. haasten, to haste; haste, haste. + G. hasten, to haste; haste (not perhaps old in G.).

Y. The base appears to be HAS, corresponding to KAS, whence Skt. pag (for pas), to jump, bound along (Benfey). See Hare. The suffix-ta is prob. used to form a sb., as in trust HART, a stag, male deer. (E.) M. E. hart, Chaucer, C. T.

11803; spelt heart, Layamon, 26762.—A. S. heart, heart, Grein, ii. 69.

+ Du. hert. + Icel. hjörtr. + Dan. hiart. + Swed. hjort. + G. hirsch.

6. H. G. hiruz.

B. These answer to a European type HERUTA & (base traus-ta); and the verb was formed from the sb. Der. hast-y.

(base cad), a helmet, from the base KAD, shortened form of SKAD, to cover; cf. Skt. chhad, to cover. ¶ Not to be confused with G. hut, which is cognate with E. hood. Der. hatt-er, hat-band (Minsheu).

HATCH (1), a half-door, wicket. (E.) A word presenting some difficulty. Leap the hatch; King Lear, iii. 6. 76. It is the same as North of E. heck, an enclosure of open-work, of sleader bars of wood, a hay-rack, the bolt or bar of a door; a heck-door is a door only partly panelled, the rest being latticed (Halliwell); cf. Lowland Sc. hack or heck, a rack for cattle, a frame for cheeses (Jamieson). It seems to have been specially used of anything made with cross-bars of wood. Palsgrave has: 'Hatche of a door, heeg.' In a 15th-cent. vocabulary we find: 'Hoc osticulum, a hatche;' Wright's Vocab. i. 201, col. 1. [The form hatch is prob. E.; the form heek is Scand.]—A. S. haca, the bolt of a door, a bar; a rare word, found in a gloss (Leo); whence probably a form hæces, for which the dictionaries give no reference. + Du. hek, a fence, rail, gate. + Swed. hück, a coop, a rack. + Dan. hæk, hække, a rack; cf. hækkebuur, a breeding-cage.

B. All, probably, from the same source as hook; the name seems to have been given to various contrivances made of light rails or bars fastened or 'hooked' together; cf. prov. E. hatch, to fasten (Halliwell); and see Shak. Per. iv. 2. 37. But the word remains obscure. See note to Hatch (2), and see Hook. Der.

hatch (2), q. v., hatch-es, q. v.; also hatch-way.

HATCH (2), to produce a brood by incubation. (E.) M. F. hacchen. 'This brid [this bird] . . hopith for to hacche;' Richard the Redeles, Pass. iii. 1. 44. Not found earlier, but formed from the sb. hatch discussed above.

B. To hatch birds is to produce them under a hatch or coop. Thus, from Swed. hück, a coop, is formed the verb hücka, to hatch, to breed; and from Dan. hakke, a rack, is formed hækkebuur, a breeding-cage (lit. a hatch-bower), and hækkefugl, a breeder (lit. a hatch-fowl). In German, we have hecken, to hatch, from the sb. hecke, a breeding-cage. ¶ The G. hecke also hatch, from the sb. hecke, a breeding-cage. ¶ The G. hecke also means a hedge, but its connection with E. hedge is not at all certain; the words for hatch and hedge seem to have been confused, though probably from different sources. Hence much of the difficulty of HATCH (3), to shade by minute lines, crossing each other, in drawing and engraving. (F., -G.) 'Hatch, to draw small strokes with a pen;' Kersey, ed. 1715. A certain kind of ornamentation on the strokes with a pen;' Kersey, ed. 1715. a sword-hilt was called hatching; hence 'hatched in silver,' Shak.

Bonduca, ii. 2.—F. hacher, 'to hack, . . also to hatch a hilt;' Cot.— G. hacken, to cut; cognate with E. hack. See Hack (1), and Hash. Der. hatch-ing (perhaps sometimes confused with etching); and see HATCHES, a frame of cross-bars laid over an opening in a ship's deck. (E.) M. E. hacches, Chaucer, Good Women, 648; Will. of Palerne, 2770. Merely the pl. of Hatch (1), q. v. Der. hatch-way, and the second s

from the sing. hatch.

HATCHET, a small axe. (F.,-G.) M. E. hachet. 'Axe other [or] hatchet;' P. Plowman, B. iii. 304.-F. hachette, 'a hatchet, or small axe;' Cot. Dimin. of F. hache, 'an axe;' id.-F. hacher, to hack; see Hatch (3).

HATCHMENT, the escutcheon of a deceased person, publicly displayed. (F.,-L.) In Shak. Hamlet, iv. 5. 214. Well known to be a corruption of atch'ment, the shortened form of atchievement (mod. E. achievement), the heraldic name for the same thing. Dryden uses atchievement in the true heraldic sense; Palamon and Arcite, l. 1620. See Achieve.

HATE, extreme dislike, detestation; to detest. (E.) A. The sb. is M. E. hate, Chaucer, C. T. 14506. — A. S. hete, Grein, ii. 39; the mod. E. sb. takes the vowel a from the verb; see further. + Du. haat. + Icel. hatr. + Swel. + Dan. had. + Goth. hatis. + G.

All from a Tatonic has HAT which Fisk (iii. 60) β. All from a Teutonic base HAT, which Fick (iii. 60) connects with E. hunt, with the notion of 'pursue.' The form of the root is KAD; cf. W. cas, hateful, casau, to hate. B. The verb is M. E. halien, haten. 'Alle ydel ich hatye' = all idle men I hate; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 225. - A. S. hatian, Grein, ii. 18. + Du. haten. + Icel. hata. + Swed. hata. + Dan. hade. + Goth. hatjan, hatan. + G. hassen. Der. hat-er; hate-ful, Chaucer, C. T. 8608, hate-ful-ly, hate-ful-ness; also hat-red, q. v.; from the same source, heinous, q. v.

(from the sb.; cf. Swed. and Dan. hastig, Du. haastig, O. Fries. hastich. hastig), Will. of Palerne, 47z; hast-i-ly, hast-i-ness.

We also find M. E. hastif, hasty, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, iii. 520; this is from O. F. hastif, hasty, allit. Poems, ed. Morris, iii. 520; this is from O. F. hastif, adj. formed from the O. F. haste (mod. F. hâte), haste, which was borrowed from the Teutonic.

HAT, a covering for the head. (E.) M. E. hat, Chaucer, C. T. 472, 1390.—A. S. hat; 'Galerus, vel pileus, fellen hat;' Wright's Vocab. i. 22, col. 1; 'Calamanca, hat;' id. i. 41, col. 1. + Icel. hattr. + Swed. hatt. + Dan. hat.

B. Prob. connected with Lat. cassis (base cad), a helmet, from the base KAD. shortened form of O. H. G. hals (G. hals), the neck cognate with A. S. hauter and the property of O. H. HAUBERK, a coat of ringed mail. (F., = O. H. G.) Orig.
armour for the neck, as the name implies. M. E. haubert, Chaucer, C. T. 2433; haubert, King Alisaunder, 2372. = O. F. hauberc, older form halberc (Burguy). = O. H. G. halsberc, halsberge, a hauberk. = O. H. G. hals (G. hals), the neck, cognate with A. S. heals, Lat. collum, the peak; and O. H. G. hargen technique to protect communication. the neck; and O. H. G. bergan, perkan, to protect, cognate with A. S. beorgan, to protect, hide. See Collar and Bury. Der. habergeen, > HAUGHTY, proud, arrogant. (F., -L.) a. The spelling with gh is a mistake, as the word is not E.; it is a corruption of M. E. hautein, loud, arrogant. 'I peine me to haue a hautein speech' = I haddeen, loud, arrogant. I penie me to make a namen special = 1 endeavour to speak loudly; Chaucer, C. T. 12264. 'Myn haddeyn herte' = my proud heart; Will. of Palerne, 472. B. The corruption arose from the use of the adj. with the E. suffix -ness, producing a form hautein-ness, but generally written hautenesse, and easily misdivided into hauteiness. 'For heo [she, i. c. Cordelia] was best and fairest, and to hautenesse drow lest' [drew least]; Rob. of Glouc. p. 29.—O. F. hautain, also spelt haultain by Cotgrave, who explains it by 'hauty, proud, arrogant.'—O. F. haut, formerly halt, high, lofty; with suffix -ain = Lat. -anus.—Lat. altus, high; see Altitude. Der. haughti-ly; haughti-ness (put for hautin-ness = hautein-ness, as explained

HAULM, HALM, HAUM, the stem or stalk of grain. (E.)

Little used, but an excellent E. word. 'The hawme is the strawe of the wheat or the rie; 'Tusser's Husbandry, sect. 57, st. 15 (E. D. S.). 'Halm, or stobyl [stubble], Stipula; 'Prompt. Parv. - A. S. healm; in the compound healm-stream, lit. haulm-straw, used to translate Lat. stipulam in Ps. lxxxii. 12, ed. Spelman. + Du. halm, stalk, straw. + Icel. halmr. + Dan. and Swed. halm. + Russ. soloma, straw. + Lat. culmus, a stalk; calamus, a reed (perhaps borrowed from Gk.)+ Gk. κάλαμος, a reed; καλαμή, a stalk or straw of corn.

GK. RARAMOS, A recu; RARAMOS, A STATE OF STATE O anca, the haunch; the F. word was also sometimes spelt anche (Cotgrave), the h being unoriginal. - O. H. G. enchú, einchú (according to Dicz, also ancha), the leg; allied to O. H. G. enchila, the ancle, and E. ancle. β. The orig. sense is 'joint' or 'bend;' cf. Gk. άγκη, the bent arm; and see Anole, Anchor.

HAUNT, to frequent. (F.) M. E. haunten, hanten, to frequent, use, employ. 'That haunteden folie' = who were ever after folly; Chaucer, C. T. 12398. 'We haunten none tauernes' = we frequent no taverns; Pierce Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, 106. 'Haunted Maumetric' = practised Mohammedanism, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 320. The earliest use of the word is in Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 25, l. 15.—O. F. hanter, 'to haunt, frequent, resort unto;' Cot.

\[\beta \] Origin unknown, and much disputed. Suggestions are: (1) Icel. heimta, lit. to fetch home, to draw, claim, recover; but neither form nor sense suit: (2) Bret. hent, a path: (3) a nasalised form of Lat. habitare, to dwell (Littré): (4) a Low Lat. form ambitare (not found), to go about, from Lat. ambitus, a going about (Scheler). The last seems to me the most likely; there are many such formations in F. Der. haunt, sb.

Also called obos, the Ital. name. In Shak. 2 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 351; where the old edd. have hoeboy. Spelt hau'boy (sic) in Ben Jonson, tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry, where the Lat. has tibia; Ars Poet. 202. Spelt kobois, koboy in Cotgrave. - O. F. kaultbois (or kaulbois), 'a hobois, or hoboy;' Cot. - O. F. kault, later kaut, high, from Lat. altus, high; and F. bois = Low Lat. boscus, a bush. See Altitude and Bush. Thus the lit. sense is 'high wood;' the kautboy being a and Bush. I hus the lit. sense is 'high wood;' the hautody being a wooden instrument of a high tone. Doublet, oboe.

HAVE, to possess, hold. (E.) M. E. hauen, pt. t. hadde, pp. had (common).—A. S. habban, pt. t. hæfde, pp. gehæfd. + Du. hebben. + Icel. hafa. + Swed. hafva. + Dan. have. + Goth. habban. + G. habban. B. All from the Teut. base HAB; Fick, iii. 63. Allied to Lat; capere, to seize, hold; Gk. κώπη, a handle; W. caffael, to get (Rhys).

— ψ KAP, to seize, hold; Fick, i. 518. Der. haft, q. v.; perhaps haven, q. v., hawk, q. v.; from the same root, cap-acious, and numerous other words; see Capacious.

HAVEN, an inlet of the sea, harbour, port. (E.) M. E. hause (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 409; spelt haume, Layamon, 8366.—
A. S. hafene (acc. hafenan), A. S. Chron' an. 1031. + Du. haven. + Icel. höfn. + Dan. havn. + Swed. hamn. + G. hafen.

to A. S. haf (Grein, ii. 19), Icel. and Swed. haf, Dan. hav, the open retailer (Sewel). We find also Dan. häher, a chandler, hucksten, sea, main; we also find O. H. G. haba in the sense, not only of possessions, but of 'the sea.'

7. From the Teut. base HAB, höhare, a chandler, cheesemonger. Also G. höcker, a retailer of goods. (A. S. habban, Goth. haban), to have, hold; the haven being that which contains ships, and the deep sea being capacious or all-containing. See Have. HAVERSACK, a soldier's bag for provisions. (F.,-G.) 'oat-bag' or 'oat-sack.' A late importation. It occurs in Smollet's tr. of Gil Blas, b. ii. c. 8 (R.) - F. havresac, a haversack, knapsack (Hamilton). - G. habersack, hafersack, a sack for oats. - (f. haber, hafersack). hafer, oats (cognate with Icel. hafr, Du. haver, Swed hafre, Dan. havre, oats), from M. H. G. habere, O. H. G. habaro, oats; and G.

sack, cognate with E. sack. See Haberdasher.

HAVOC, general waste, destruction. (E.?) 'Cry havoc,' Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 275; Jul. Cæs. iii. 1. 273; 'cries on havoc,' Haml. v. 2. 375. 'Pell-mell, havoc, and confusion;' 1 Hen. IV, v. 1. 82. Not in early use (in this sense at least). Of uncertain origin.

3. The best etymology seems to be that which supposes it to be the A.S. Aafoc, a hawk (see Hawk); the chief difficulty being in the late preservation of an A.S. form, esp. when the form hawk was in general use. But it may have been handed down in a popular proverb, without remembrance of the meaning; the phrase 'cry havoc'! (like Skelton's 'ware the hawke') seems to have been a popular exclamation, and has been supposed to have been orig. a term in hawking. The form hanek (havek) in the sense of 'hawk' occurs as late as about A. D. 1200, in Layamon, 3258. Y. Others derive it from W. hafoe, havoe, destruction; this would, of course, be right, were it not for the probability that this W. word is but the E. word borrowed; a probability which is strengthened by observing that there is a true W. word hafve, meaning 'abundant,' or 'common,' allied to W. hafug. abundance. Der. havoc, verb (rare), Hen. V, i. 2. 173, where a cat is said 'to tear and havoc more than she can eat.'

HAW, a hedge; a berry of the haw-thorn. (E.) 'inclosure' or 'hedge' is the orig. one. In the sense of 'berry;' the word is really a short form for haw-berry or hawthorn-berry; still it is of early use in this transferred sense. M. E. hawe. Chaucer uses hawe, lit. a haw-berry, to signify anything of no value, C. T. 6241; but he also has it in the orig. sense. 'And eke ther was a polkat in his have' = there was a polecat in his yard; C. T. 12789. - A. S. haga, an enclosure, yard, house, Grein, ii. 5; whence the usual change to later hage, hase, have, by rule. + Icel. hagi, a hedged field, a pasture. + Swed. hage, an enclosed pasture-ground. + Dan. have [for hage], a garden. + Du. haag, a hedge; whence 's Gravenhage, i. e. the count's garden, the place called by us the Hague. + G. hag, a fence hadge. fence, hedge; whence the deriv. hagen, a grove, now shortened to hain. β. All from the Teut. base HAG, to surround. - ✓ KAK, to surround; cf. Skt. kach, kahch, to bind, kakshya, a girdle, an enclosed court; from the same root is Lat. cingere, to surround, and E. cincture. See Cincture. Der. haw-haw, a sunk fence, a word formed by reduplication; haw-finch; haw-thorn = A. S. hægporn, which occurs as a gloss to alba spina, Wright's Vocab. i. 33, col. 2. Also hedge, q. v.

HAWK (1), a bird of prey. (E.) M. E. hauk, Chaucer, C. T. 4132, 5997. Earlier hauek (= havek), Layamon, 3258. - A.S. hafoc, more commonly heafoc, Grein, ii. 42. + Du. havic. + Icel. haukr. + Swed. kök. + Dan. hög. + G. habicht, O. H. G. hapuh. B. All probably from the Teut. base HAB, to seize, hold; see Have, and cf. Lat. capere. Der. hawk, verb, M. E. hauken, Chaucer, C. T. 7957;

HAWK (2), to carry about for sale. (O. Low G.) Not in early use. Rich. quotes from Swift, A Friendly Apology, the line: 'To hear his praises kawk'd about.' The verb is a mere development from the sb. hawker, which is an older word. See Hawker.

HAWK (3), to force up phlegm from the throat, to clear the throat. (W.) 'Without hawking or spitting;' As You Like It, v. 3.

12.—W. hochi, to throw up phlegm; hoch, the throwing up of phlegm.

Apparently an imitative word.

HAWKER, one who carries about goods for sale, a pedlar. (O. Low G.) Minsheu tells us that the word was in use in the reign of Hen. VIII; it is much older, in E., than the verb to hawk. · Hawkers, be certain deceitful fellowes, that goe from place to place buying and selling brasse, pewter, and other merchandise, that ought to be vttered in open market . . You finde the word An. 25 Hen. VIII, cap. 6, and An. 33 eiusdem, cap. 4; Minsheu. 'Those people which go up and down the streets crying newsbooks and selling them by retail, are also called Hawkers; Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. The earliest trace of the word is in P. Plowman, B. v. 227, where the trade of the pedlar is denoted by hokkerye, spelt also hukkerye and hukrie; shewing that the base of the word is the same as that of the word huckster. β. A word introduced from the Netherlands; cf. See further under Huckster.

HAWSER, HALSER, a small cable. (Scand.) 'Hawser, a three-stroud [three-strand?] rope, or small cable. Hawses, two large round holes in a ship under the beak, through which the cables pass when the ship lies at anchor; 'Kersey, ed. 1715. In Sherwood's index to Cotgrave, kalser means a tow-rope by which boats are drawn along. In Grafton's Chron., Rich. III, an. 3, we read: 'He wayed up his ancors and halsed up his sayles.' Like many seaterms, it is of Scand. origin. Both the sb. hawser and the verb to halse are formed from halse, sb. the orig. form of hawse, used as a seaterm. - Icel. háls, hals, the neck; also (as a sea-term), part of the bow of a ship or boat; also, the front sheet of a sail, the tack of a sail, the end of a rope; whence the verb kálsa, to clew up a sail. + Dan. hals, the neck; (as a sea-term) tack; ligge med styrbords halse, to be on the starboard tack; halser I raise tacks and sheets!+Swed. hals. neck, tack. And cf. Du. hals, neck; halsklamp, a hawse-hole. β. Thus the orig, sense is neck, then front of the bow of a ship; then a hole in the front of the bow; whence halser = a rope passing through such a hole; also halse, to clew up a sail, from the Icel. use ¶ Not to be confused with hale, haul, hoist, of the derived verb. or hoise. As to the word hals, a neck, see further under Hauberk. HAWTHORN, from haw and thorn; see Haw.

HAW THORN, from haw and horn; see Haw.

HAY, grass cut and dried. (E.) Formerly used also of uncut growing grass. M. E. hey, hay; Chaucer, C. T. 16963. 'Vpon grene hey' = on green grass; Wyclif, Mark, vi. 39. – A. S. hig, grass, hay; 'ofer bæt grene hig' = on the green grass; Mark, vi. 39. + Du. hooi. + Icel. hey. + Dan. and Swed. hö. + Goth. hawi, grass. + G. heu, M. H. G. houwe, O. H. G. hewi, hay. B. The true sense +G. heu, M. H. G. houwe, O. H. G. hewi, hay.

β. The true sense is 'cut grass;' the sense of 'growing grass' being occasional. The common Teutonic type is HAUVA, from the base HAU of the E. verb to hew, i. e. to cut; Fick, iii. 57. See Hew. Der. hay-cock, hay-maker. (But not M. E. hay-ward, where hay = hedge.)

HAZARD, chance, risk. (F., -Span., -Arab., -Pers.) M. E. hasard, the name of a game of chance, generally played with dice; Chaucer, C. T. 12525. Earlier, in Havelok, 2326.—F. Masard, 'hazard, adventure;' Cot. The orig. sense was certainly 'a game at dice' (Littré).

B. We find also Span. azar, an unforeseen accident, hazard, of which the orig. sense must have been 'a die; O. Ital. zara, 'a game at dice called hazard, also a hazard or a nicke at dice; Florio. It is plain that F. ha-, Span. a-, answers to the Arab. article al, turned into az by assimilation. Thus the F. word is from Span., and the Span. from Arab. al zur, the die, a word only found in the vulgar speech; see Devic's Supplement to Littré.-

Pers, zdr, a die; Zenker. Der. hazard, verb, hazard-ous. HAZE, vapour, mist. (Scand.?) Not in early use. The earliest Words, 1691 (1st. ed. 1674). He gives: 'it hazes, it misles, or rains small rain.' As a sb., it is used by Burke, On a Regicide Peace, let. 4 (R.) 'Hazy weather' is in Dampier's Voyages, ed. 1684 (R.) Being a North-Country word, it is probably of Scand. origin. Cf. Icel. hüss, gray, dusky, said of the colour of a wolf; a word certainly related to A. S. hasu, heasu, used to signify a dark gray colour, esp. the colour of a wolf or eagle; whence also hasu-fig, of a gray colour; see Grein, ii. 14, 15. If this be right, the orig, sense was 'gray,' hence dull, as applied to the weather; and the adj. hazy answers to A.S. haswig-, only found in the compound haswig-febere, having gray feathers (Grein).

aczen, a vapour, warm wind. Der. haz-y, haz-i-ness.

HAZEL, the name of a tree or shrub. (E.) M. E. hasel. 'The hasel and the has-porne' [haw-thorn]; Gawayne and the Grene Knight, ed. Morris, 744.—A. S. hæsel. 'Corilus, hæsel. Saginus, hwit hæsel;' Wright's Vocab. i. 32. col. I. 'Abellanæ, hæsl, vel hæsel-hnutu' [hazel-nut]; id. 3?, col. 2. + Du. hazelaar. + Icel. hasl, heeli. + Dan. and Swed. hassel. + G. hasel; O. H. G. hasala. + Lat. corulus (for cosulus). + W. coll (Rhys). B. All from the base KASALA, root KAS; but the orig. meaning is unknown. Der. hazel-nut = A.S.

har elhnutu; as above; hazel-twig, Tam. Shrew, ii. 255.

HE, pronoun of the third person. (E.) M. E. he; common.— A. S. hé; declined as follows. Maso, sing. nom. hé; gen. his; dat, him; acc. hine. Fem. sing. nom. heó; gen. and dat. hire; acc. hí. Neut. sing. nom. and acc. hit; gen. his; dat. him. Plural (for all genders); nom. and acc. hi, hig; gen. hira, heora; dat. him, heom. + Du. hij. + Icel. hann. + Dan. and Swed. han. B. The E. and A. S. forms are not connected with the Gothic third personal pronoun is (=G. er), but with the Goth. demonstrative pronoun his, this one, only found in the masc. dat. himma, masc. acc. hina, neut. acc. hita, in the singular number. Cf. Gk. encivos, neivos, that one, from a base O. Du. haukeren, to sell by retail, to huckster; heukelaar, a huckster, KI, related to the pronominal base KA. The latter base has an interrogative force; cf. Skt. kas, who, cognate with E. who. See HEARSE, a carriage in which the dead are carried to the grave.

HEAD, the uppermost part of the body. (E.) earlier heued (= heved), from which it is contracted. 'His hed was balled' [bald]: Chaucer, C. T. 198. In P. Plowman, B. xvii. 70, it balled' [bald]; Chaucer, C. T. 198. In P. Plowman, B. xvii. 70, it is spelt ked; but in the corresponding passage in C. xx. 70, the various readings are kede, keed, and keuede. — A. S. keafod, Mark, xvi. 24, where the latest MS. has keafed. + Du. hoofd. + Icel. λöfuθ. + Dan. hoved. + Swed. kufvud. + Goth. haubith. + G. haupt, O. H. G. houbit. + Lat. caput.

β. Further allied to Gk. κεφαλή, the head; Skt. kapála, the skull. From ✓ KAP, but it is uncertain in what sense; perhaps 'to contain;' see Have. Der. head, vb.; head-ache, -band (Isa. iii. 20). dress, -gear, -land, -less, -piece (K. Lear, iii. 20). granters, -stall (Tam. Shrew, iii. 28) schow (Zech iv.

head-ache, -band (Isa. III. 20), -dress, -gear, -land, -less, -piece (K. Lear, iii. 2. 26), -quarters, -stall (Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 58), -stone (Zech. iv. 7), -tire (r Esdras, iii. 6), -way, -wind. Also head-ing, a late word; head-s-man (All's Well, iv. 3. 342); head-y (2 Tim. iii. 4), headi-ly, head-i-ness. Also head-long, q.v. Doublet, chief, q.v. HEADLONG, rashly; rash. (E.) Now often used as an adj., but orig. an adv. M. E. hedling, headling, headlynges, heuedlynge; Wyclif, Deut. xxii. 8; Judg. v. 22; Matt. viii. 32; Luke, viii. 33. 'Heore hors heallyng mette' = their horses met head to head; King Alisaunder, 2261. The suffix is adverbial, answering to the A.S. suffix -lunga, which occurs in grund-lunga, from the ground. Funditus, grundlunga; Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Somner (1659); p. 42, 1. 4. In this suffix, the l is a mere insertion; the common form being -unga or -inga; as in eall-unga, entirely, fér-inga, suddenly. Again, -unga is an adv. form, made from the common noun-suffix ung, preserved abundantly in mod. E. in the form -ing, as in the word learn-ing.

HEAL, to make whole. (E.) M. E. helen. 'For he with it coude bothe hele and dere;' i. e. heal and harm; Chaucer, C. T. 10554. - A. S. hálan, to make whole; very common in the pres. part. halend = the healing one, saviour, as a translation of Jesus. Regularly formed from A.S. hil, whole; see Whole. + Du. heelen, from heel, whole. + Icel. heila, from heill, hale; see Hale. + Dan. hele. from heel, hale. + Swed. hela, from hel. + Goth. hailjan, from hails. + G. heilen, from heil. Dor. heal-er, heal-ing; and see health.

HEALTH, soundness of body, or of mind. (E.) M. F. helth, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 137. – A. S. hélið (acc. héliðe), Ælfric's Hom. i. 466, l. 8; ii. 396, l. 21. Formed from A. S. húl, whole; hélan, to heal. The suffix -8 denotes condition, like Lat. -tas. very common word in old writers; the more usual form is M. E. hele (P. Plowman, C. vi. 7, 10). from A. S. hélu, Grein, ii. 22. Der. health-y, health-i-ly, health-i-ness; health-ful, health-ful-ly, health-fulness; health-some, Romeo, iv. 3. 34.

ness; neatth-some, Romeo, iv. 3. 34.

HEAP, a pile of things thrown together. (E.) M. E. heep (dat. heepe, hepe), Chaucer, C. T. 577; P. Plowman, B. vi. 190. — A. S. hedp, a heap, crowd, multitude, Grein, ii. 56. + Du. hoop. + Icel. happ. + Dan. hob. + Swed. hop. + G. haufe, O. H. G. hufo. + Russ. hupa, a heap, crowd, group. + Lithuanian haupas, a heap (Fick, iii. 77).

B. All from ✓ KUP, which is perhaps the same as Skt. 77). B. All from AKUP, which is perhaps the same as Skt. hup, to be excited; the orig, sense seems to be 'tumult;' hence, a swaying crowd, confused multitude, which is the usual sense in M. E.

Swaying crowd, contused multitude, which is the usual sense in M. E. Der. heap, vb., A. S. heápian, Lu. vi. 38. Doublet, hope (2).

HEAR, to perceive by the ear. (E.) M. E. heren (sometimes huyre), pt. t. herde, pp. herd; Chaucer, C. T. 860, 13448, 1577.—

A. S. hýran, héran, pt. t. hýrde, pp. gehýred; Grein, ii. 132. + Du. horen. + Icel. heyra. + Dan. höre. + Swed. höra. + Goth. hausjan.

4 G. hören, O. H. G. hórjan.

B. Of uncertain origin; it seems heat to connect Ch. dvedou to hear with Lat aguest to however. best to connect Gk. drover, to hear, with Lat. cauere, to beware, Skt. kavis, a wise man, and the E. show (all from \(\struct \) SKAW), rather than with the Goth. hausjan, E. hear. See Curtius, i. 186. \(\gamma \). It does not seem possible so to ignore the initial h as to connect it with the word ear, though there is a remarkable similarity in form between Goth. hausjan, to hear, and Goth. auso, the ear. The latter, however, is allied to Lat. audire, which is far removed from E. hear.

See Ear. Der. hear-er, hear-ing, hear-say, q. v., hearken, q. v. HEARKEN, to listen to. (E.) M. E. herken, Chaucer, C. T. 1528. Another form was herknen, id. C. T. 2210. Only the latter is four. 1 in A. S. - A. S. hyrcnian (sometimes heorenian), Grein, ii. 133. Evidently an extended form from hyran, to hear. + O. Du. horehen, horhen, harehen, to hearken, listen (Oudemans); from Du. hooren, to hear. + G. horchen, to hearken, listen, from O. H. G. horjan (G. kören) to hear. See Hear.

HEARSAY, a saying heard, a rumour. (E.) From hear and say. 'I speake unto you since I came into this country by hearesay. For I heard say that there were some homely theeves,' &c.: Bp. Latimer, Ser. on the Gospel for St. Andrew's Day (R.) The verb say, being the latter of two verbs, is in the infin. mood, as in A. S. Ful ofte time I have herd sain; Gower, C. A. i. 367. 'He... seegan hyrde' = he heard say, Beowulf, ed. Grein, 875.

(F.,-L.) Much changed in meaning. M. E. herse, herce. First (perhaps) used by Chaucer: 'Adown I fell when I saw the herse: (permps) used by Chaucer: August 1 lell when 1 saw the aerse: Complaint to Pity, st. 3. Heeree on a dede corce (heree vpon dede corcys), Pirama, piramis; Prompt. Parv. p. 236. Mr. Way's note says: 'This term is derived from a sort of pyramidal candlestick, or frame for supporting lights, called hereia or herpica, from its resembled. blance in form to a harrow, of which mention occurs as early as the xiith century. It was not, at first, exclusively a part of funeral display, but was used in the solemn services of the holy week . . . Chaucer. appears to use the term herse to denote the decorated bier, or funeral pageant, and not exclusively the illumination, which was a part thereof; and towards the 16th century, it had such a general signification alone. Hardyng describes the honours falsely bestowed upon the remains of Richard II. when cloths of gold were offered "upon his hers" by the king and lords; &c. See the whole note, which is excellent. The changes of sense are (1) a harrow, (2) a triangular frame for lights in a church service, (3) a frame for lights at a funeral, (4) a funeral pageant, (5) a frame on which a body was laid, (6) a carriage for a dead body; the older senses being quite forgotten. O. F. herce, 'a harrow, also, a kind of portcullis, that's stuck, as a harrow, full of sharp, strong, and outstanding iron pins' [which leads up to the sense of a frame for holding candles]; Cot. Mod. F. herse, Ital. erpice, a harrow. - Lat. hirpicem, aco. of hirpex, a harrow, also A remarkable use of the word is in Berners' tr. spelt irpex. of Froissart, cap. cxxx, where it is said that, at the battle of Crecy, 'the archers ther stode in maner of a herse,' i. e. drawn up in a triangular form, the old F. harrow being so shaped. HEART, the organ of the body that circulates the blood. (E.) M. E. kerte, properly dissyllabic. 'That dwelled in his kertë sike and sore, Gan faillen, when the kertë feltë deth;' Chaucer, C. T. 2806, 2807. - A. S. heorte, fem. G. herzá. + Irish cridhe. + Russ. serdse. + Lat. cor (crude form cordi-). + Gk. κῆρ, καρδία. + Skt. hrid, hridaya (probably corrupt forms for crid, cridaya).

β. The Gk. καρδία is also spelt κραδία (Doric) and κραδίη (Ionic); this is connected with κραδάειν, κραδαίνειν, to quiver, shake; the orig. sense being that which quivers, shakes, or beats. - * KARD, to swing about, hop. leap; cf. HEART'S-EASE, a pansy. (E.) 'Hearth-ease, or Pansey, an herb;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Lit. ease of heart, i.e. pleasure-giving.

HEARTY, cordial, encouraging. (E.) M. E. herty. 'Herty, cordialis;' Prompt. Parv. An accommodation of the older M. E. hertly. '3e han hertely hate to oure hole peple' = ye have hearty hate against our whole people; Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Skeat, 961.

Thus the orig. sense was heart-like. Der. hearti-ly, hearti-ness. HEAT, great warmth. (E.) M. E. hete, Chaucer, C. T. 16876. A. S. hetu, heto; Grein, ii. 24; formed from the adj. hiit, hot. + Dan. hede, heat; from hed, hot. + Swed. hetta, heat; from het, hot. B. The Icel. hiti, heat, Du. hitte, G. hitze, are not precisely parallel forms; but are of a more primitive character. See further under Hot. Der. heat, vecb = A. S. hatan, in comp. onhatan, to make hot, formed rather from the adj. hat, hot, than from the sb.; heat-er.

HEATH, wild open country. (E.) M. E. hethe (but the final e is unoriginal); Chaucer, C. T. 6, 608; spelt heth, P. Plowman, B. xv. 451.—A.S. hab, Grein, ii. 18. + Du. heide. + Icel. heidr. + Swed. hed. + Dan. hede. + Goth. haithi, a waste. + G. heide. + W. Sax. hevan (the v being denoted by a crossed b). B. Of unknown origin; a connection with the verb to heave has been suggested, but has not been clearly made out. The G. himmel, Goth. himins, heaven (and perhaps the mod. Icel. himin) are from a different source; probably from the MKAM to hend: cf. Lat. eamera, a vault chamber. See from the KAM, to bend; cf. Lat. camera, a vault, chamber. See Fick, iii. 62, 64. Dor. heaven-ly = A. S. heofonlic; heavenly-minded; heaven-ward, heaven-wards, as to which see Towards.

HEAVY, hard to heave, weighty. (E.) M. E. heu, heny (with u -v). Chaucer has heny and heuinesse; C. T. 11134, 11140.—A. S. hefig, heavy; Grein, ii. 29; lit. 'hard to heave,' from A. S. hebban (-heffan, cf. pt. t. hof), to heave. + Icel. höfigr, heavy; from heffan, to heave. + O. H. HEDGE, a fence round a field, thicket of bushes. (E.) hegge, Chaucer, C. T. 15224. - A. S. hege; nom. pl. hegas; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 376, ll. 14, 17. Hege comes from a base hag-ia, formed Hom. 11. 370, 11. 14, 17. Hage comes from a base hag-ia, formed from hag- with suffix -ia, causing vowel-change of hag- to heg-; i. e. it is a secondary form from A. S. haga, a hedge, preserved in mod. E. in the form haw; see Haw. + Du. hegge, heg, a hedge; from haag, a hedge. + Icel. hegge, a kind of tree used in hedges; from hagi, a hedge (see note in Icel. Dict. p. 774). Der. hedge, verb (Prompt. Parv. p. 232), hedge-bill, hedge-born, I Hen. VI, iv. I. 43; hedge-hog, Temp. ii. 2. 10; hedge-pig, Macb. iv. 1. 2; hedge-priest, L. L. HEED, to take care attend to. (E.) M. E. hedge. pt. t. hedde:

HEED, to take care, attend to. (E.) M. E. heden, pt. t. hedde; Layamon, 17801; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1050 (or 1051). - A.S. hédan, to take care; pt. t. hédde; Grein, ii. 29. A weak verb, formed by vowel change from a sb. hód*, care, not found in A.S. but equivalent to G. hut, O. H. G. huota, heed, watchfulness. + O. Friesic which to G. mi, O. H. G. huded, need, watchinness, + O. Frieste hude, hode, to heed, protect; from hude, hode, sb. protection. + O. Sax. hódian, to heed. + Du. hoden, to heed, guard; from hode, guard, care, protection. + G. hüten, to protect (O. H. G. huaten), from G. hut (O. H. G. huota, protection).

B. For the vowel-change, cf. bleed (A. S. blédan) from blood (A. S. bléda).

Y. There is a disbleed (A. S. blédan) from blood (A. S. bléd). γ . There is a distinction to be made between this A. S. hód*, care (doubtless a fem. sb.), and A. S. hod, a hood (doubtless masc.); just as between Du. hoede, fem. heed, and hoed, masc. hood; and again, between G. hut, fem. heed, and hut, masc. a hat. Yet it seems reasonable to refer them to the same root. The notion of 'guarding' is common to both words. See Hood. Der. heed, sb. = M. E. hede, Chaucer, C. T. 305; heed-ful, heed-ful-ly, heed-ful-ness, heed-less, heed-less-ly, heed-

HEEL (1), the part of the foot projecting behind. (E.) M. E. Aeel, heele; Wyclif, John, xiii. 18.—A. S. hėla, the heel; Grein, ii. 30. We find also the gloss: 'Calx, hėla, hóh nipeweard'=the heel, the lower part of the heel; Wright's Vocab. i. 283, col. 2. + Du. kiel. + Icel. heell. + Swed. hill. + Dan. hæl.

B. Probably also the same productivit I of the heel. Lithuraina habi. Icel. kæll. + Swed. kül. + Dan. kæl.

β. Probably also the same word with Lat. calx, Gk. λάf (for κλάf), the heel; Lithuanian kulnis, the heel. the heel; Curtius, i. 451. Y. If so, there is probably a further connection with Lat. -cellere, to strike, occurring in the compound percellere, to strike, smite, the form of the root being KAR. Cf. Skt. kal, to drive; Fick, i. 45. ¶ It is proper to note Grein's theory, viz. that A. S. héla is a contraction for héh-ila, with the usual vowelchange from o (followed by i) to e; this would make the word a diminutive of A. S. hôh, which also means 'the heel,' and is a commoner word. But this seems to set aside the Du. and Scand. forms, and ignores the generally accepted identification of E. heel with Lat.

Der. heel-piece.

HEEL (2), to lean over, incline. (E.) a. This is a very corrupt form; the word has lost a final d, and obtained (by compensation) a lengthened vowel. The correct form would be held or hild. M.E. helden, hilden. Palsgrave has: 'I hylde, I leane on the one syde, as rate in state. Taisgive has a bote or shyp, or any other vessel, ie encline de cousté. Sytte fast, I rede [advise] you, for the bote begynneth to hylde. 'Heldyn, or bowyn, inclino, flecto, deflecto;' Prompt. Parv. p. 234; see Way's note.

3. The M. E. helden or hilden was frequently transitive, meaning (1) to pour, esp. by tilting a vessel on one side; and (2) intransitively, to heel over, to incline. Wyclif has: 'and whanne the boxe of alabastre was brokun, she helde it [poured it out] on his heed; Mark, xiv. 3.—A.S. hyldan, heldan, trans. to tilt, incline, intrans. to bow down; Grein, ii. 131. 'pu gesta oladest eoroan swa fæste, bæt hid on ænige healfe ne helded'—Thou hast founded the earth so fast, that it will not heel over on any side; Ælfred's Metres, xx. 164. It is a weak verb, formed from the (participial) adjective heald, inclined, bent down, which occurs in nider-heald, bent downwards; Grein, ii. 295. + Icel. halla, to lean sideways, heel over, esp. used of a ship; from hall, leaning, sloping. + Dan. helde, to slant, slope, lean, tilt (both trans. and intrans.); from held, an inclination, slope. + Swed. hälla, to tilt, pour. + M. H. G. halden, to bow or incline oneself downwards; from hald, leaning forwards. Root uncertain; perhaps Teut. HAL, to strike, bend; Fick, iii. 71. HEFT, a heaving. (E.) In Shak. Wint. Ta. ii. 1. 45. Formed from the verb to heave just as haft is formed from the verb to have.

Heft also occurs as another spelling of haft.

HEGIRA, the flight of Mohammed. (Arab.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'The era of the Hegira dates from the flight of Mohammed from Mecca to Medina, on the night of Thursday, July 15, 622. The era begins on the 16th; 'Haydn, Dict. of Dates. — Arab. hijrah. separation (here flight); the Mohammedan era; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 695. Cf. Arab. Aajr, separation, absence; id.

HEILE, a young cow. (E.) M. E. hayfare, hekfere. 'Juvenca, HEILL, the place of the dead; the abode of evil spirits. (E.) Rayfare; Wright's Vocab. i. 177, l. 4; 'Hec juvenca, a hehfere;' id. 250, col. 2.—A.S. hedkfore. 'Annicula, vel vaccula, hedkfore; 'also, 250, col. 2.—A. S. Medhfore: Annicula, vel vaccula, Medhfore; also, 'Altilium, fast hedhfore' [a fat heifer]; id. p. 23, col. 2. Lit. 'a high ox,' i. e. a full-grown ox or cow. Compounded of A. S. Medh, high; and fear (Northumb. far), an ox. In Matt. xxii. 4, the Lattauri is glossed by fearras, fearres in the Wessex versions, and by farras in the Lindisfarne MS.

B. The A. S. fear is cognate with M. H. G. pfar, O. H. G. varro, far, an ox, and the Gk. wópus, a heifer. PAR, as seen in Lat. parere, to produce; see Parent.

HEIGH-HO, an exclamation of weariness. (E.) Also, in Shak., an exclamation of joy; As You Like It, iv. 3. 169; ii. 7, 180, 182, 190; iii. 4. 54. Compounded of heigh, a cry to call attention, Temp. i. 1. 6; and ho! interjection. Both words are of natural origin, to

HELIACAL, relating to the sun. (L., =Gk.) A term in astronomy, used and defined in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 13. § 7; 'We term that . . the heliacal [ascension of a star], when a star which before, for the vicinity of the sun, was not visible, being further removed, beginneth to appear.' - Late Lat. heliacus, Latinised from the Gk. ήλιακόs, belonging to the sun. — Gk. ήλιοs, the sun; on which difficult word see Curtius; he shews the probability that it is from the US, to shine, burn, whence also Skt. ush, to burn. Der.

HELIOCENTRIC, belonging to the centre of the sun. (Gk.) An astronomical term; in Kersey, ed. 1715. Coined from helio—Gk. ήλιο-, crude form of ήλιο-, the sun; and centric, adj. coined from the sun; and centric, adj. coined from the sun; and centric adj. coined Gk. κέντρον, centre. See Heliacal and Centre. β. Similar formations are helio-graphy, equivalent to photography, from γράφειν, to write; helio-latry, sun-worship, from λατρεία, service, worship; helio-trope, q. v. HELIOTROPE, the name of a flower. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. – F. heliotrope, 'the herbe turnsole;' Cot. – Lat. heliotropium. – Gk. ηλιοτρόπιον, a heliotrope. – Gk. ηλιο-, crude form of ήλιος, the sun; and τροπ-, base connected with τρέπειν, to turn; so that the lit. sense is 'sun-turner,' or the flower which turns turn; so that the lift sense is 'sun-turner,' or the flower which turns to the sun. See Heliacal and Trope.

HELIX, a spiral figure. (L.,=Gk.) 'Helix, barren or creeping ivy; in anatomy, the outward brim of the ear; in geometry, a spiral figure;' Kersey, ed. 1715.—Lat. helix, a volute, spiral; kind of ivy.—Gk. ελιξ, anything twisted, a tendril, spiral, volute, curl.—Gk. ελισσεις, to turn round.—Gk. root Γελ, Γαλ; equivalent to Lat. suol- in soluers, to roll.—

WAR, to turn about. See Volute, of which helix is, practically, a doublet. Der. helices, the pl. form; helic-al, helic-al-ly.

M. E. helle; Chaucer, C. T. 1202.—A. S. hel, helle, a fem. sb., gen. helle; Chaucer, C. T. 1202.—A. S. hel, helle, a fem. sb., gen. helle; Grein, ii. 29. + Du. hel. + Iccl. hel. + Dan. helvede; Swed. helvete; from O. Swed. helivite, a word borrowed (says Ihre) from A. S. helle-wite, lit. hell-torment, in which the latter element is the A. S. wite, torment. + G. kölle, O. H. G. hella. + Goth. halja, hell. B. All from the Teutonic base HAL, to hide, whence A. S. helan, G. heller to hide; so that the originary in the hide; so that the originary in the hide; so that the originary in the hide; whence A. S. helan, G. Achien, to hide; so that the orig sense is the hidden or unseen place. The A. S. helan is cognate with Lat. celare, to hide, from the base KAL, to hide, whence also Lat. cella, E. cell. y. It is supposed that the base KAL, older form KAR, is a development from a root that the base KAL, older form KAK, is a development from a root SKAR, of which one meaning was 'to cover;' cf. Skt. kri, to pour out, to cast, to cover. Der. hell-ish, hell-ish-ly, hell-ish-ness: hell-fire = A.S. helle-fyr, Grein, it. 31; hell-hound, M. E. helle-hund, Seinte Marherete, ed. Cockayne, p. 6, l. 4 from bottom.

HEILEBORE, the name of a plant. (F., = L., = Gk.) Also spelt ellebore, as frequently in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxv. c. 5. = O. F. ellebore, 'hellebore;' Cot. Properly hellebore. = Lat. helleborus. Gk. his Meses the name of the plant. Of uncontain pointing points.

- Gk, λλλβορο, the name of the plant. Of uncertain origin; the latter half of the word is probably related to Gk. βορά, food.

HELM (1), the instrument by which a ship is steered. (E.) Properly used of the tiller or handle of the rudder. M. E. helme; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, iii. 149.—A. S. helma, masc., Ælíred's tr. of Boethius, cap. xxxv. § 4; lib iii. pr. 12. + Icel. hjdlm, a rudder.+ G. helm, a helve, handle.

β. Closely allied to haulm, from the likeness between a stalk and a handle. Another kindred word is helve. See Haulm, Helve, Halberd. Der. helms-man; where helms = helm's (the possessive case). Also hal-berd. HELM (2), HELMET, armour for the head. (E.) M. E. helm, Chaucer, C. T. 2611.—A. S. helm, masc., (1) a protector, (2) a pro-Chaucer, C. 1. 2011.—A. S. heim, masc., (1) a protector, (2) a protection, helm; Grein, ii. 31. + Du. helm (also helmet), a helm, casque. + Icel. hjálmr, a helmet. + Dan. hielm. + Swed. hjelm. + G. helm. + Goth. hilms. + Russ. shleme. a helmet. + Lithuan. szahnas. β. All formed with suffix -ma from the base KAL (Teutonic HAL), to cover, protect; the orig. sense being 'covering.' See Hell. Der. helm-ed, Chaucer, C. T. 14376; helm-et, a dimin. form, with suffix -et of F. origin, perhaps borrowed from Du. helmet.

HELMINTHOLOGY, the natural history of worms. (Gk.) A scientific word. Coined from Gk. Σλμνθος, crude form of Σλμνκ a scientific word. Coined from Gk. ελμινθο-, crude form of ελμινε, a worm; and -λογια, a discourse, from λέγειν, to speak. The Gk. ξλμινε is also found as ξλμιε, i. e. that which curls about; from the same source as «Auf, a helix. See Helix. Der. helminthologi-c-al. HELOT, a slave, among the Spartans. (L., -Gk.) Rarc. The pl. helots answers to Lat. pl. Hēlotes, borrowed from Ck. Eldwree, pl. of Eilos, a helot, bondsman; said to have meant originally an inhabitant of Elos (Elos), a town of Laconia, who were enslaved under the Spartans. Der. helot-ism.

HELP, to aid, assist. (E.) M. E. helpen, pt. t. halp, pp. holpen; Chaucer, C. T. 1670, 1651, 10244.—A. S. helpan, pt. t. healp, pp. holpen; Grein, ii. 33. + Du. helpen. + Icel. hjálpa. + Dan. hielpe. + Swed. hjelpa. + Goth. hilpan. + G. helfen, O. H. G. helfan. B. All from the Teutonic base HALP—Aryan KALP, to help; whence also Skt. klip, to be fit for, kalpa, able, able to protect; Lithuan. szelpti, to help. Der. help, sb. = A. S. helpe (Grein); help-er, help-ful, szeipi, to neip. Det neip, so. — R. S. neip (Stan), help-less, help-less, help-less-ness; also help-mate, a coinage due to a mistaken notion of the phrase an help meet (Gen. ii. 18, 20); thus Rich. quotes from Sharp's Sermons, vol. iv. ser. 12: 'that she might be an help-mate for the man."

she might be an help-mate for the man."

HELVE, a handle of an axe. (E.) M. E. helue (=helve), Wyclif, Deut. xix. 5; spelt hellfe (for helfe), Ormulum, 9948.— A. S. hielf, of which the dat. hielfe occurs in Gregory's Pastoral, ed. Sweet, p. 166, l. 8; also helfe, as in 'Manubrium, hæft and helfe;' Wright's Vocab. i. 35, col. 1. 4 O, Du. helve, a handle; Oudemans. + M. H. G. halp, a handle. Allied to Helm (1) and Haulm.

HEM (1), the border of a garment. (E.) M. E. hem; pl. hemmes, Wyclif, Matt. exiii. 5.— A. S. hemm, hem; 'Limbus, stemning vel hem;' Wright's Vocab. i. 26, col. 1. Allied to Friesic hümel, a hem, edge, border, noted by Outern a v. hemmel, heaven. (6, ch. hamme. 8 edge, border, noted by Outzen s. v. hemmel, heaven. Cf. G. hamme, a fence, hedge; Flügel. Also G. himmel, heaven, a canopy, orig. a vault, allied to Latin camera, a vault, chamber.

B. All from the Teut. base HAM, equivalent to Lat. KAM. - V KAM, to bend.

Thus the orig. sense is a 'bend' or curved border, edge. Der. hem, verb, chiefly in the phr. to hem in (cf. G. hemmen, to stop, check, hem, from hamme, a fence), Shak. Troilus, iv. 5. 193.

HEM (2), a slight cough to call attention. (E.) 'Cry hem! when he should groan,' Much Ado, v. 2. 16; cf. As You Like It, i. 3. 19. An imitative word, formed from the sound. Allied to Hum. In Dutch, we also find the same word hem, used in the same way. Der.

Aem, verb, As You Like It, i. 3. 18.

HEMATITE, an ore of iron. (L., -Gk.) The sesqui-oxide of iron; so called because of the red colour of the powder (Webster).

aluar-, stem of alua, blood.

HEMI-, half. (Gk.) From a Lat. spelling (hemi-) of the Gk. prefix ημ., signifying half; cognate with Lat. semi-, half. See Semi-.

HEMISPHERE, a half sphere, a half globe. (F., -L., -Gk.)
In Cotgrave. - O. F. hemisphere, 'a hemisphere;' Cot. - Lat. hemisphærium. - Gk. ημοφαίριον, a hemisphere. - Gk. ημε, prefix, hemisphærium. - Gk. ημοφαίριον, a hemisphere. - Gk. ημοφαίριον, a hemisphere. signifying half; and σφαίρα, a ball, sphere. See Hemi- and Sphere. Der. hemispheri-e-al; Sir T. Browne, Vulg, Errors, b. ii. c. 1. § 13.

HEMISTICH, half a line, in poetry. (L., = Gk.) Not from F. hemistique (Cotgrave), but directly from Lat. hemistichium, by dropping the two latter syllables. Kersey has: 'Hemistichium, a half verse.' = Gk. ημιστίχιον, a half verse. = Gk. ημισ, half; and στίχος, a row, order, line, verse. See Hemi- and Distich.

HEMI-OCK, a poisonous plant. (E.) M. E. hemlok; spelt humloke humlok Wright's Vocab is a 6 col. 1 a 65 col. 1 homelok id.

loke, humlok, Wright's Vocab. i. 226, col. 1, 265, col. 1; homelok, id. i. 191, col. 2.—A. S. hemlic, hymlice; Gloss. to Cockayne's Saxon Leechdoms.

1. The first syllable is of unknown origin; Stratmann connects it with a supposed M.E. hem, malign; but the instances of this word are not quite certain. Still it probably implies something bad; and may be related to G. hammen, to maim; see 2. The second syllable is from A.S. leúc, a leek, plant, whence the M. E. loke above, and modern E. -lock. The same ending occurs in char-lock, gar-lic. See Leek.

HEMORRHAGE, a great flow of blood (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt hemorragy by Ray, On the Creation, pt. 1 (R.) -O. F. hemorrhagie, an abundant flux of blood; Cot. - Late Lat. hemorrhagia, Latinised from Gk, almoppayla, a violent bleeding. - Gk. almo-, for alma, blood; and ραγ-, base of ρηγνυμι, I break, burst; the lit. sense being 'a bursting out of blood.' Gk. Γραγ = E. break; see Break.

HEMORRHOIDS, EMERODS, painful tubercles round the margin of the anus from which blood is occasionally discharged. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) 'Hemorroides be vaynes in the foundement;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 10. - F. hemorrhoide, 'an issue of blood by the veins of the fundament;' Cot. - Lat. hæmorrhoides, hemorrhoids, pl. of hamorrhois. - Gk. almoppotdes, pl. of almoppots, adj., liable to flow of blood. - Gk. aluo-, for alua, blood; and heev, to flow, cognate with Skt. sru, to flow. Der. hemorrhoid-al.

HEMP, a kind of plant. (L., -Gk. -Skt.) M. E. hemp, Havelok, 782. Contracted from a form hence; the n becoming m by the influence of the following p.—A. S. henep, hanep; Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, i. 124. II. 1, 3, and note. Cf. Du. hennep; Icel. hampr; Dan. hamp; Swed. hampa; G. hanf; O. II. G. hanaf (Fick). All from Lat. cannabis; Gk. κάνναβιε; hemp.—Skt. çana, hemp.

β. The from Lat. cannabis; Gk. κάνναβις; hemp. – Skt. cana, hemp. β. The Lat. word is merely borrowed from Gk. 'Grimm and Kuhn both consider the Gk. word borrowed from the East, and the Teutonic one from the Lat. cannabis which certainly made its way to them; Curtius, i. 173. The word was borrowed so early that it suffered letter-change. Der. hemp-en, with adj. suffix, as in gold-en; Hen. V, letter-change.

iii. chor. 8. Also canvas, q. v.

HEN, the female of a bird, especially of the domestic fowl. (E.) M. E. hen, Chaucer, C. T. 15445; pl. hennes, id. 14872. - A. S. henn, hen, han; Grein, ii. 23. The proper form is han, formed by vowel-change from A.S. hana, a cock; Grein, ii. 11. + Du. hen, fcm. of haan, a cock. + Icel. hana, fem. of hani, a cock. + Dan. hone, fem. of hane, a cock. + Swed. höna, fcm. of hane, a cock. + G. henne, fcm. of hahn, a cock. Cf. Goth. hana, a cock. B. Thus hen is the fcm. of a word for cock (obsolete in English), of which the old Teutonic type was HANA. y. The word hana means, literally, 'singer,' the suffix -a denoting the agent, as in A.S. hunt-a, a hunter. - VKAN to sing; whence Lat. canere, to sing. Der. hen-bane, Prompt. Parv. p. 235; lit. 'fowl-poison;' see Bane. Also hen-coop, hen-harrier, a kind of hawk (see Harrier); hen-pecked, i. e. pecked by the hen or wife, as in the Spectator, no. 176: 'a very good sort of people, which are commonly called in scorn the henpecki

HENCE, from this place or time. (E.) a. M. E. hennes, P. Plowman, B. i. 76; whence the shorter form hens, occurring in Lidgate's Minor Poems, p. 220 (Stratmann). In the modern hence, the -ce merely records that the M. E. hens was pronounced with sharp s. not with a final z-sound.

B. In the form hennes, the suffixed s was due to a habit of forming adverbs in -s or -es, as in twy-es, twice, need-es, needs; an older form was henne, Havelok, 843, which is found as late as in Chaucer, C. T. 2358.

Y. Again, henne represents a still older henen or heonen, spelt heonene in Ancren Riwle, p. 230, 1.8. - A. S. keonan, kionan, hence; Grein, ii. 67; also keonane, id. 68. Here heman stands as usual for an older hinan. Shorter forms appear in the A. S. keona (for kina), hence, Grein, ii. 67; kine, id. 76. + G. in the A.S. keona (for Atna), nemoe, Gran, in G., hinnan, kinnen (chiefly used with son preceding it), hence; O. H. G. kinnan, hinnen (chiefly used with son preceding it), hence; D. H. G. kinnan, bernan, hin there, thither, B. All hence; a shorter form appears in hin, there, thither,

"The sanguine load-stone, called hamatites;' Holland's Pliny, b. xxvi. these forms are adverbial formations from a pronominal base; cf. c. 16.—Lat. hamatites; Pliny.—Gk. alματίτηs, blood-like.—Gk. Goth. hina, him, accus. case of the third personal pronoun, cognate with A. S. hine, him, and G. ihn, him; also in the accus. case. nom. of A.S. hine is he, he; to which accordingly the reader is referred. See He. ¶ Similarly, Lat. hinc, hence, is connected with Lat. hic, this. Der. hence-forth, compounded of hence and forth, and answering to A. S. foro hencen, used of time; see examples in Grein, ii. 68, ll. 1-4; hence-forward, comp. of hence and forward.

HENCHMAN, a page, servant. (E.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 121. 'Compare me the fewe. disciples of Jesus with the solemne pomp . . . of such as go before the bishop, of his hensemen, of trumpets, of sundry tunes,' &c.; Udal, on St. Mark, c. 11 (R.) 'And every knight had after him riding Three henshmen on him awaiting; The Flower and the Leaf, l. 252 (a poem wrongly ascribed to Chaucer, and belonging to the fifteenth century).

$\begin{align*} \beta \]. Of disputed origin; but we also find \(\frac{\mathrea}{min} \) as a proper name in Wilts. (in the Clergy) List, 1873); and this renders it almost certain that the right etymology is from M. E. hengest (cognate with Du. and G. hengest, Swed. and Dan. hingst), a horse, and E. man. We find similar formations in Icel. hestvörör (lit. horse-ward), a mounted guard (Cleasby); and in Swed. hingstridare (lit. horse-rider), 'a groom of the king's stable, who rides before his coach;' Widegren's Swed. Dict. In this view, the sense is simply 'groom,' which is the sense required by the earliest quotation, that from the Court of Love. v. The M. E. hengest occurs in Layamon, l. 3546, and is from A, S. hengest, a horse (Grein, ii. 34), once a common word. It is cognate with Icel. hestr. Swed. and Dan. hingst and häst, G. hengst, from an orig. Teutonic hangista; Fick, iii. 59.

¶ The usual derivation is from haunch-man, a Fick, iii. 59. ¶ The usual derivation is from naunca-man, a clumsy hybrid compound, clumsily explained to mean 'one who stands beside one's hip.' Surely, a desperate guess. I find in Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691, the following: 'Henchman, qui equo innititur bellicoso, from the G. hengst, a war-horse: with us it signifies one that runs on foot, attending upon a person of honor or worship. [Mentioned] Anno 3 Edw. 4. cap. 5, and 24 Hen. 8. cap. 13. It is written henxman, anno 6 Hen. 8. cap. 1.

HENDECAGON, a plane figure of eleven sides and angles. (Gk.) So called from its eleven angles. – Gk. ἔνδεκα, eleven; and γωνία, an angle. "Ενδεκα = ἔν, one, and δέκα, ten. See Heptagon. HENDECASYLLABIC, a term applied to a verse of eleven syllables. (Gk.) From Gk. ἔνδεκα, eleven (= ἔν, one, and δέκα, ten);

and συλλαβή, a syllable. See Decasyllabic.

HEP, HIP, the fruit of the dog-rose. See Hip (2).

HEPATIC, pertaining to the liver. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'Hep tiques, obstructions of the liver;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - O. F. hepatique, 'hepatical, of or belonging to the liver;' Cot. - Lat. hepaticus. - Gk. ήπανικόs, belonging to the liver. -Gk. ήπανικ, crude form of ήπαρ, the liver. + Lat. iecur, the liver. + Skt. yakrit, yakan, the liver. Hopping a hase VAK. Dar hepatical hepaticus a flower the liver. from a base YAK. Der. hepatic-al; hepatic-a, a flower, the liverwort; see hepathique, hepatique in Cotgrave.

HEPTAGON, a plane figure with seven sides and angles. (Gk.)

In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. So called from its seven angles.—Gk. 4πτά, seven, cognate with E. even; and γονία, an angle, corner, from yow, a knee. See Seven and Knee. Der. heptagon-al. HEPTAHEDRON, a solid figure with seven bases or sides.

(Gk.) Spelt heptaedron in Kersey, ed. 1715.—Gk. ἐπτά, seven, cognate with E. seven; and ἔδρα, a seat, base, from the same base as E. seat and sit. See Seven and Sit.

HEPTARCHY, a government by seven persons. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Applied to seven Old-English kingdoms, viz. those of Kent. Sussex, Wessex, Essex, Northumberland, Mercia, and East Anglia. The term is not a good one; see Freeman, Old Eng. Hist. for Children, p. 40. – Gk. ἐπτ-, for ἐπτα, seven; and -αρχια, government. See Seven and Anarchy.

HER, possessive and objective case of the fem. of the third pers. pronoun. (E.) M. E. hire, the usual form; also here, Chaucer, C. T. 4880; hure, P. Plowman, C. iv. 45-48.—A. S. hire, gen. and dat. case of hed, she; the possessive pronoun being made from the gen. case, and indeclinable; see Sweet's A. S. Reader, Grammat. Introduction. The word is to be divided as hi-re, where hi- is to be referred to the Teutonic pronominal base HI (Fick, iii. 74), signifying 'this;' and -re is the usual A. S. fem. inflection in the gen. and dat. of adjectives declined according to the strong declension. See He. Der. ker-s, M. E. hires, Chaucer, C. T. 4647, not found much earlier; her-self. HERALD, an officer who makes proclamations. (F., -O. H. G.)

M. E. herald, heraud; Chaucer, C. T. 2601; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 16. -O. F. heralt, heraut, a herald; Low Lat. heraldus; cf. Ital. araldo, a herald. - O. H. G. kerolt (G. herold), a herald; we also find O. H. G. Heriold, Hariold, as a proper name, answering to Icel. Haraldr and E. Harold.

B. Hariold is a contracted form for Hari-wald, where Hari-= O. H. G. hari (G. heer), an army; and wald= O. H. G. walt, strength. Thus the name means 'army-strength,' i.e. support or stay of the army, a name for a warrior, esp. for an officer. The limitation the heir; Thorpe, Ancient Laws, b. ii. glossary, s. v. In later times, of the name to a herald was due to confusion with O. H. G. foraharo, a herald, from forharen, to proclaim; cf. Gk. htpuf, a herald.
y. We may note that O. H. G. hari answers to A. S. here, army; a word also used in forming proper names, as in Here-ward. See further under Harry. And, for the latter part of the word, see Valid. Der. herald-ic; also herald-ry, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 213, spelt heraldie, Gower, C. A. i. 173.

HERB, a plant with a succulent stem. (F., -L.) The word being of F. origin, the & was probably once silent, and is still sometimes of F. origin, the k was probably once silent, and is still sometimes pronounced so; there is a tendency at present to sound the k, the word being a short monosyllable. M. E. herbe, pl. herbes; Chaucer, C. T. 14972, 14955; King Alisaunder, 331.—F. herbe, 'an herb;' Cot.—Lat. herba, grass, a herb; properly herbage, food for cattle. β. Supposed to be allied to O. Lat. forbea, food, and to Gk. φορβή, pasture, fodder, forage.— I BHARB, to eat; Gf. Skt. bharb, to eat; Gk. φέρβων, to feed. Der. herb-less, herb-a-e-ous, in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6. § 15, from Lat. herbaceus, grassy, herb-like; herb-age, from F. harbage, 'herbage, pasture' (Cot.), answering to a Lat. form herbaticum*; herb-al; herb-al-ist, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6. § 4: herb-ar-ium. from Lat. herbarium. a book describing b ii. c. 6. § 4; herb-ar-ium, from Lat. herbarium, a book describing herbs, a herbal, but now applied to a collection of plants; herbivorous, herb-devouring, from Lat. uorare, to devour (see Voracious). And note M. E. herbere, a herb-garden, from Lat, herbarium through the French; a word discussed under Arbour.

HERD (1), a flock of beasts, group of animals. (E.) M. E. heerde, heorde. 'Heerde, or flok of beestys;' Prompt. Parv. p. 236. 'Ane hecrde of heorten' = a herd of harts; Layamon, 305. - A. S. heord, herd, hyrd, (1) care, custody, (2) herd, flock, (3) family; Grein, ii. 68. + Icel. hjürb. + Dan. hiord. + Swed. hjord. + G. heerde. + Goth. hairda. Root unknown. Der. herd, vb., M. E. herdien, to draw together into a herd, P. Plowman, C. xiv. 148; herd-man, M. E. herdeman, hirdeman, Ormulum, 6852; later form herd-s-man, Shak. Wint.

Ta. iv. 4. 344. Der. herd (2).

HERD (2), one who tends a herd. (E.) Generally used in the comp. shep.herd, cow-herd, &c. M. E. herde, Chaucer, C. T. 605 (or 603); Will. of Palerne, 6; spelt hurde, P. Plowman, C. x. 267.—

A.S. heorde, hirde; Grein, ii. 77. + Icel. hirdir. + Dan. hyrde. + Swed. herde. + G. hirt. + Goth. hairdeis.

B. Formed from the word above; thus A.S. heorde is from heard; Goth. hairdeis is from heard above; thus A.S. heard eigentes the agent, and signifies word above; thus A.S. suefrace here denotes the agent, and signifies 'keeper,' or 'protector of the herd.' Cf. Lithuan. kerdzus, a cowherd. Der. cow-herd. goal-herd, :hep-herd.

HERE, in this place. (E.) M. E. her, heer; Chaucer, C. T. 1610, 1612.—A. S. hér; Grein, ii. 34. + Du. hier. + Icel. hér. + Dan. her. + Swed. här. + G. hier; O. H. G. hiar. + Goth. her. B. All from a type HIRA, formed from the pronominal base HI (Fick, iii. 74.): so that here is related to he just as where is related to with. 74); so that here is related to he just as where is related to who. See He. Der. here-about, Temp. ii. 2. 41; here-abouts; hereafter, M. E. her-after, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 243; here-by, M. E. her-bi, Owl and Nightingale, 127; here-in, M. HEREDITARY, descending by inheritance. (L.) In Shak.
Temp. ii. 1. 223; and in Cotgrave, to translate F. hereditaire. Englished from Lat. hereditarius, hereditary. - Lat. heredita-, base of hereditare, to inherit. - Lat. heredi-, crude form of heres, an heir. See Heir. Der. hereditari-ly. From the same base we have heredita-ble, a late and rare word, for which heritable was formerly used, as in Blackstone's Comment. b. ii. c. 5 (R.); also heredita-ment, given in HERESY, the choice of an opinion contrary to that usually received. (F., -L., -Gk.) The word means, literally, no more than 'choice.' M. E. heresye, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 267 (see Spec. of English, ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 103, l. 149); eresie, Wyclif, Acts, xxiv. 14.-O. F. heresie, 'heresie, obstinate or wicked error;' Cot. Lat. hæresis. - Gk. αίρεσιε, a taking, choice, sect, heresy. - Gk. αίρεῦν, to take; on which see Curtius, ii. 180. Der. heretic, q. v.

HERETIC, the holder of a heresy. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. eretik, heretik, Wyclif, Tit. iii. 10. -O. F. heretique, 'an heretick;' Cot.

Lat. harreticus. — Gk. alperusés, able to choose, heretical. — Gk. alperusés, able to choose, heretical. — Gk. alperusés, able to choose, heretical. — Gk. alperusés, to take, choose. See Heresy. Der. heretic-al.

HEBIOT, a tribute paid to the lord of a manor on the decease of a tenant. (Ε.) See Blackstone, Comment. b. ii. capp. 6, 28; and see Harrier in Blount's Law Lexicon; and Herrier in Jamieson's Scot. Dict. Sir D. Lyndesay speaks of a herield hors, a horse paid as a heriot. The Monarche, b. iii. l. 4734. Corrupted from A. S. heregeatu, lit. military apparel; Grein, ii. 36. The heregeatu consisted of 'military habiliments or equipments, which, after the death of the vassal, escheated to the sovereign or lord, to whom they were delivered by horses and cows, and many other things were paid as heriots to the lord of the manor. 'And Jam cinge minne heregeatwa, feower sweord, and feower spera, and feower scyldas, and feower beagas... feower hors, and twa sylfrene fata;' i.e. And [I bequeath] to the king my heriots, viz. four swords, and four spears, and four shields, and four torques. four horses, and two silver vessels; Will dated about 946-955; in Thorpe's Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, p. 499.—

A. S. here, an army (hence, belonging to war); and geatu, geatwe, preparation, apparel, adornment; Grein, i. 495.

HERITAGE, an inheritance, (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. heritage, Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 25, last line but one; King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1281; also eritage, Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Skeat, 981. -O. F. heritage, 'an inheritance, heritage;' Cot. Formed, with suffix -age (answering to Lat. -aticum) from O. F. heriter, to inherit. - Lat. hereditare, to inherit; the loss of a syllable is exemplified by Low Lat. heritator, used for hereditator; it would seem as if the base heri- was substituted for heredi-. - Lat. heredi-, crude form of keres, an heir; see Heir. Der. from same source.

HERMAPHRODITE, an animal or plant of both sexes. L., - Gk.) In Gascoigne, The Steele Glas, l. 53. See Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii, c. 17.—Lat. hermaphroditus.—Gk. ερμαφρόδιτοε; a coined word, made up from Gk. Έρμης, Hermes (Mercury), as representing the male principle; and Αφροδίτη, Aphrodité (Venus), the female. Hence the legend that Hermaphroditus, son of Hermes and Aphrodite, when bathing, grew together with Salmacis, the nymph of a fountain, into one person. Der. hermaphrodit-ic, -ic-al, -ism; also hermaphrodism.

HERMENEUTIC, explanatory. (Gk.) A modern word. From Gk. ερμηνευτικόε, skilled in interpreting.—Gk. ερμηνευτήε, an interpreter; of which a shorter form is έρμηνεύε. Connected (perhaps) with Ερμής, Hermes (Mercury), the tutelary god of skill; but the connection is not certain; see Curtius, i. 433. Der. hermeneutical, hermeneutic-al-ly, hermeneutics (the science of interpretation).

HERMETIC, chemical, &c. (Gk.) 'Their seals, their characters, hermetic rings; Ben Jonson, Underwoods, lxi. An Execration upon Vulcan, l. 73. - Low Lat. hermeticus, relating to alchemy; a coined word, made from the name Hermes (= Gk. Ερμήε); from the notion that the great secrets of alchemy were discovered by Hermes Trismegistus (Hermes the thrice-greatest). Der. hermetic-al, hermetic-al ly. Hermetically was a term in alchemy; a glass bottle was said to be hermetically (i. e. perfectly) sealed when the opening of it was fused and closed against the admission of air.

HERMIT, one who lives in solitude. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. eremite, heremite; in early use. It first appears in Layamon, 18763, where the earlier text has æremite, the later heremite. This form was probably taken directly from Lat. heremita, the later form hermite being from the French. Heremite occurs in P. Plowman, B. vi. 190, and even as late as in Holinshed's Description of Britain, b. i. c. 9 (R.) The shorter form hermyte is in Berners' tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 204 (R.) - F. hermite, 'an hermit;' Cot. - Low Lat. heremita, a form occurring in P. Plowman, B. xv. 281; but usually eremita. - Gk. έρεμίτης, a dweller in a desert. - Gk. έρημία, a solitude, desert. - Gk. k ερημος, deserted, desolate. Root uncertain. Der. hermit-age, Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 34, spelt heremytage, Mandeville's Travels, p. 93, from F. hermitage, 'an hermitage;' Cot. Also hermit-ic-al, spelt heremiticall in Holinshed, Desc. of Britain, b. i. c. 9 (R.), from Lat. heremiticus

HERN, the same as Heron, q. v.

HERNIA, a kind of rupture; a surgical term. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715.—Lat. hernia, a rupture, hemia. Of uncertain origin.

HERO, a warrior, illustrious man. (F., —L., —Gk.) In Hamlet, ii.

2. 270.—O. F. heroë, 'a worthy, a demygod;' Cot.—Lat. heroëm, acc. of heros, a hero.—Gk. "powe, a hero, demi-god. + Skt. vira, a hero. + Lat. uir, a man, hero. + A. S. wer, a man. See Virile.

The mod. F. hero is now accommodated to the spelling of the Lat. nom. The Lat. acc. is, however, still preserved in the Span. heroe, Ital. eroe. Der. hero-ic, spelt heroicke in Spenser, F. Q. v. 1. 1, from O. F. heroique (Cot.), which from Lat. heroicus; hero-ic-al-ly, hero-ism; also hero-ine, q. v. HEROINE, a famous woman. (F., - L., - Gk.) In Minsheu. 'A heroine is a kinde of prodigy;' Evelyn, Memoirs; Mrs. Evelyn to Mr. Bohun, Jan. 4, 1672 (R.) - F. heroine, 'a most worthy lady;' Cot. - Lat. heroine. - Gk. howlvy, fem. of how, a hero.

Hero.

HERON, a long-legged water-fowl. (F., -O.H.G.) M.E. heroung, Chaucer, Parliament of Foules, 346. Also hapron, Wright's Vocab, i. 177. 'Hee ardea, a herne;' id. 253. 'Heern, byrde, heryn, herne, ardea;' Prompt. Parv. p. 237. -O. F. hairon, 'a heron, herne, hernshaw;' Cot. (Mod. F. heron; Prov. aigros; Ital. aghirone, airone; Span.

+ Swed. häger, a heron. + Dan. heire, a heron. + Icel. hegri, a heron. B. Fick further compares these words with G. häher, heher, a jackdaw, + Swed, hager, a neron. The same words with G. häher, heher, a jackdaw, B. Fick further compares these words with G. häher, heher, a jackdaw, lit. 'laugher,' from the & KAK, to laugh; cf. Skt. kakk, kakk, to laugh; Lat. cachinnus, laughter; prov. E. heighau, a wood-pecker. Similarly it is probable that the 'heron' was named from its harsh voice.

The A. S. name was hragra, Wright's Vocab. i. 29, col. 1; 77, col. 1; with which cf. W. cregyr, a screamer, a heron (from W. creg, cryg, hoarse); G. reiher, a heron; Lat. graculus, a law, all similarly named from the imitative word which appears in jay; all similarly named from the imitative word which appears in E. as crake, creak, croak. See Crake. Der. heron-er, M. E. heronere, Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 413; from O. F. haironnier; Cotgrave explains faulcon haironnier as 'a herner, a faulcon made only to the heron.' Also heron-ry. And see Heronshaw, Egret.

HERONSHAW, HERNSHAW, (1) a young heron (2) a heronry. (F.) Spenser has herneshaw in the sense of heron; F.Q. vi. 7. 9. Two distinct words have been confused here. 1. Hernshaw, 7. 9. Two distinct words have been confused here.

1. Iternsnaw, a heron, is incorrect, being a corruption of heronsewe; the name heronsew for the heron is still common in Lincolnshire and Yorkshire. Mr. Peacock's Glossary of Manley and Corringham (Lincoln) words has: 'Heronsew, the common heron. "There were vewed at this present survey certayne heronsewes whiche have allwayes used to brede there to the number of iiij."—Survey of Glastonbury, temp. Hen. VIII, Mon. Ang. i. 11. See Chaucer, Squyeres Tale, 68. The etymology of this heronsewe is not really known; Tyrwhitt cites the F. heronçeau from the glossary, meaning probably that in Urry's ed. of Chancer; and this has been copied ad nauseam, with the information that heroneeau means 'a young heron.' I will only say that 'a young heron' in French is certainly heronneau, O. F. haironneau; and that - yeau would not give M. E. - sewe. 2. Hernshaw in its other sense is correct; and is compounded of heron, and shaw, a wood. The 2. Hernshaw in its other sense sense is given by Cotgrave, who explains O. F. haironniers by 'a heron's neast, or ayrie; a herneshaw, or shaw of wood wherein herons

HERRING, a small fish. (E.) M. E. hering (with one r), Havelok, 758.—A. S. hærineg; the pl. hærinegas is in Ælfric's Colloquy, in Thorpe's Analecta, p. 24; also hæring, Wright's Vocab. i. 56, l. 4. + Du. haring. + G. hüring.

β. The explanation in Webster is probably correct; viz. that the fish is named from its appearance in large shoals; from the Teutonic base HARYA, an army (Kick, iii 62) as garen in Goth having. army (Fick, iii. 05), as seen in Goth. harjis, A.S. here, G. heer, (O. H. G. hari), an army. See Harry.

HESITATE, to doubt, stammer. (L.) Spelt hesitate, hæsitate

in Minsheu, ed. 1627. [Perhaps merely made out of the sb. hesitation, which occurs in Cotgrave to translate F. hesitation, whereas he explains heiter only by 'to doubt, feare, stick, stammer, stagger in opinion.'] - Lat. hasitatus, pp. of hasitare, to stick fast; intensive verb formed from hæsum, supine of hærere, to stick, cleave. + Lithuanian gaiszti, gaiszoti, to tarry, delay (Nesselmann); Fick, i. 576.—

GHAIS, to stick, cleave. Der. hesitat-ion, hesit-anc-y; from the same root, ad-here, co-here, in-her-ent.

HEST, a command. (E.) M. F. hest, heste, a command; also, a promise; Chaucer, C. T. 14062. The final t is properly excrescent, as in whils-t, agains-t, amongs-t, amids-t, from M. E. whiles, againes, amonges, amiddes. And it was easily suggested by confusion with the tall the same and the same and suggested by confusion with the leel. heit. — A. S. hátan, to command. + Icel. heit, a vow; from heita, to call, promise. + O. H. G. heiz (G. geheiss), a command; from O. H. G. heizan (G. heissen), to call, bid, command. Cf. Goth. haitan, to name, call, command. B. Fick (iii. 55) suggests a connection with Gk. nivoyau, I hasten, E.

hie, q. v. In this case, the base is KID, an extension of \checkmark KI. HETEROCLITE, irregularly inflected. (L., -Gk.) A g matical term; hence used in the general sense of irregular, disorderly.

Ther are strange heteroclits in religion now adaies; Howell, Familiar Letters, vol. iv. let. 35. - Lat. heteroclitus, varying in declension. - Gk. ereporation, otherwise or irregularly inflected. - Gk. Erepo-, crude form of trepos, other; and - khiros, formed from khivesy, to lean, cognate with E. lean.

HETERODOX, of strange opinion; heretical. (Gk.) In Blount's

Gloss., ed. 1674. Compounded from Gk. repo-, crude form of Frepos, another, other; and δόξα, opinion, from δοκεῖν, to think.

Der. keierodos-y, Gk. ετεροδοξία.

HETEROGENEOUS, dissimilar in kind. (Gk.) Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, gives the adjectives heterogene, heterogeneal, and the sb. keterogeneity. Compounded from Gk. ετερο-, crude form of ετεροs.

airon.) = O. H. G. heiger, heiger, a heron; with suffixed on (Ital. one). Deat. The mot appears to be KU, to strike, beat. Dec. hewer;

HEXAGON, a plane figure, with six sides and angles. (L., - Gk.) Hexagonal is in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. Hexagone in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Named from its six angles.—Lat. hexagonum, a hexagon,—Gk. Efayros, six-cornered.—Gk. Ef, six, cognate with E. six; and Gk. - ξάγγνο, six-cornered. -- Gk. εξ, six, cognate with E. sns; and γωνία, an angle, corner, from Gk. γόνν, a knee, cognate with E. knes. See Six and Knos. Der. hexagon-al-, hexagon-al-ly.

HEXAMETER, a certain kind of verse having six feet. (L., -- Gk.) 'This provoking song in hexameter verse;' Sidney's Arcadia, b. i. (R.) 'I like your late Englishe hexameters;' Spenser, letter to Harvey, qu. in Globe ed. of Spenser, p. xxviii. -- Lat. hexameter; to Harvey, qu. in Globe ed. of Spenser, p. xxviii. -- Lat. hexameter to Harvey, qu. in Globe ed. of Spenser, p. xxviii. -- Lat. hexameter and in meaning hexametrus. - Gk. εξάμετροε, a hexameter; properly an adj. meaning of six metres' or feet. - Gk. εξ, six, cognate with E. six; and μέτρον, a measure, metre. See Six and Metre.

HEY) AY (1), interjection. (E) M. E. hei, Legend of St. Katharine, l. 579; hay, Gawayn and Grene Knight, 1445. A natural exclamation. + G. hei, interjection. + Du. hei, hey! ho!

HEYDAY (1), interjection. (G. or Du.) In Shak. Temp. ii. 2.

HEYDAY (1), interjection. (G. or Du.) In Shak. Temp. ii. 2. 190. 'Heyda, what Hans Flutterkin is this? what Dutchman does build or frame castles in the air?' Ben Jonson, Masque of Augurs. Borrowed either from G. heida, ho! hallo! or from Du. hei daar, ho!

there. It comes to much the same thing. The G. da, Du. daar, are cognate with E. there. The interj. hey is older; see above.

HEYDAY (2), frolicsome wildness. (E.) 'At your age the heyday in the blood is tame;' Hamlet, iii. 4. 69. I take this to be quite a different word from the foregoing, though the commentators confuse the two. In this case, and in the appreciation therefore confuse the two. In this case, and in the expression 'heyday of youth,' the word stands for high day (M. E. hey day); and it is not surprising that the old editions of Shakespeare have highday in place of heyday; only, unluckily, in the wrong place, viz. Temp. ii. 2. 190. Cf. 'that sabbath day was an high day;' John, xix. 31. For the old spellings of high, see High.

HIATUS, a gap, defect, &c. (L.) In Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed.

1731.—Lat. hiatus, a gap, chasm.—Lat. hiatus, pp. of hiare, to yawn, gape; cognate with E. yawn. See Yawn. Doublet, chasm. q. v. HIBERNAL, wintry. (F.,—L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 13. § 10, where it is spelt hybernal.—F. hibernal, 'wintery;' Cot.—Lat. hibernalis, wintry; lengthened from Lat. hibernus, wintry. β. Hi-bernus is from the same root as Lat. hi-ems, winter, Gk. χι-ών, snow, and Skt. hi-ma, cold, frost, snow; the form of the root is GHI. Der. from same source, hibern-ate.

HICCOUGH, HICCUP, HICKET, a spasmodic inspiration, with closing of the glottis, causing a slight sound. (E.) Now generally spelt hiccough. Spelt hiccop (riming with prick up), Butler's Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1. 340. Also hicket, as in the old edition of Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 9. § 5; and in Minshen. Also hickeck; Florio explains Ital. singhiozzi by 'yexings, hichcocks.' Also hickock; Cotgrave has: 'Hoquet, the hickock, or yexing;' also 'Hocqueter, to yex, or clock [cluck], to have the hickop or hickcock.' B. It seems to be generally considered that the second syllable is come and such made such generally considered that the second syllable is cough, and such may be the case; but it is quite as likely that hiccough is an accommodated spelling, due to popular etymology. The evidence takes us back to the form hick-ock, parallel to hick-et, both formed from hick by the help of the usual dimin. suffixes och, et. Cf. F. koqueet, the hiccough, in which the final et is certainly a dimin. suffix; and probably some confusion with F. hoquet caused the change from hick-ock to hick-et.

7. The former syllable hic, hik, or hick is of imitative origin, to denote the spasmodic sound or jerk; and is preserved in the word Hitch, q. v. It is not peculiar to English. + Du. kik, the hiccough; hikken, to hiccough. + Dan. hikke, the hiccough; also, to hiccough. + Swed. hicke, the hiccough; also, to hiccough. And cf. W. ig, a hiccough, sob; igio, to sob; Breton hik, a hiccough, called hak in the dialect of Vannes, whence (probably) F. hoquet.

8. All from a base HIK, weakened form of KIK, used to denote convulsive movements in the throat; see Chincough.

HICKORY, an American tree of the genus Carya. Origin unknown

HIDALGO, a Spanish nobleman of the lowest class. (Span., -L) The word occurs in Terry, Voyage to East India, ed. 1655, p. 169 (Todd); also in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 116. Span. hidalgo, a nobleman; explained to have originally been hijo de Span. Madigo, a nonleman; explained to have originally been hip de algo, the son of something, a man of rank, a name perhaps given in irony. β. Hijo, O. Span. figo, is from Lat. filium, acc. of filius, son; see Filial: Algo is from Lat. aliquad, something.

HIDE (1), to cover, conceal. (E.) M. E. hiden, hiden; Chaucer, C. T. 1470; Ancren Riwle, p. 130.—A. S. hiden, hiden; Grein, ii. 125. + Gk. seives, to hide. And cf. Lat. custos (for eucles), a guardian, protector.— V KUDH, to hide; an extension of V KU, to hide: which again is a weakened form of A SKU to cover. Field sb. keterogeneity. Compounded from CK. $\text{erepo}$, crude form of $\text{erepo}$, another, other; and $\gamma^{\text{evo}}$, kind, kin, cognate with E. kin. Der. heterogeneous-ly, ness; heterogen HIDE (2), a skin. (E.) M. E. hide, Pricke of Conscience, 1. 5299; high-spirited; high-way = M. E. heigh weye, P. Plowman, B. x. 155; hade, Ancren Riwle, p. 120. - A. S. hid, the skin; Grein, ii. 125. + high-way-man; high-wrought, Othello, ii. 1.2; with numerous similar Du. haid. + Icel. hid. + Dan. and Swed. had. + O. H. G. hid; G. compounds. Also high-land, which see below. Du. hmid. + Icel. hib. + Dan. and Swed. hud. + O. H. G. hit; G. haut. + Lat. euris, skin. + Gs. hives, oxives, skin, hide. - SKU, to cover; Fick, i. 816. See Sky. Der. hide-bound, said of a tree the bark of which impedes its growth, Milton's Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 32, l. 2; also hide (3).

HIDE (3), to flog, castigate. (E.) Colloquial. Merely 'to skin' by flogging. Cf. Icel. hiba, to flog; from Icel. hib, the hide. Der.

by flogging.

HIDE (4), a measure of land. (E.) 'Hide of land;' Blount's Law Dict., ed. 1691. Of variable size; estimated at 120 or 100 acres; or even much less; see Blount. Low Lat. hida; Ducange. - A. S. hid; Ælfred's tr. of Bede, b. iii. c. 24; b. iv. c. 13, 16, 19. (See Kemble's Saxons in England, b. i. c. 4; and the Appendix, shewing that the estimate at 120 or 100 acres is too large.) β . This word is of a contracted form; the full form is kigid; Thorpe, Diplomatarium Evi Saxonici, p. 657; Kemble, Codex Diplomaticus, no. 240. This form higid is equivalent to hiwise, another term for the same thing; and both words orig. meant (as Beda says) an estate sufficient to support one family or household. They are, accordingly, closely connected with A. S. kiwan, domestics, those of one household, and with the Goth. keiwa-frauja, the master of a household; see further under Hive. Popular etymology has probably long ago confused the hide of land with hide, a skin; but the two words must be kept entirely apart. The former is A. S. higid, the latter A. S. hid.

HIDEOUS, ugly, horrible. (F.) The central e has crept into the word, and it has become trisyllabic; the true form is hidous. It is trisyllabic in Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 3, 34. M. E. hidous (the invariable form); Chaucer, C. T. 3520; he also has hidously, C. T. 1701.—O. F. hidos, hidus, hideus, later hideux, hideous; the oldest form is hisdos.

B. Of uncertain origin; if the former s in hisdos is not an inserted letter, the probable original is Lat. hispidosus, roughish, an extended form of Lat. hispidus, rough, shaggy, bristly.

Der. hideous-ly, hideous-ness.

DET. hideous-ly, hideous-ness. HIE, to hasten. (E.) M. E. hien, hyen, hizen; P. Plowman, B. xx. 322; cf. Chaucer, C. T. 10605. The M. E. sb. hie or hye, haste, is also found; id. 4627.—A. S. higian, to hasten; Grein, ii. 72. β. Allied to Gk. κίεν, to go, move, κίννμαι, I go; also to Lat. ciere, to summon, cause to go; citus, quick.— ✓ KI, to sharpen, excite; cf. Skt. ci. to sharpen; whence also E. hone. See Cite. HIERARCHY, a sacred government. (F.,—Gk.) Gascoigne has the pl. hierarchies; Steel Glass, 993; ed. Arber, p. 77. The sing is in Cotgrave.—F. hierarchie, an hierarchy; Cot.—Gk.

ieραρχία, the power or post of an leράρχης.—Gk. leράρχης, a steward or president of sacred rites.—Gk. leρ-, for leρo-, crude form of leρός, sacred; and άρχειν, to rule, govern.

B. The orig. sense of leρός was 'vigorous; 'cognate with Skt. ishiras, vigorous, fresh, blooming (in the Peterb. Dict.); see Curtius, i. 499; from
IS, probably 'to be vigorous.' For άρχειν, see Arch-, prefix. Der. hierarchi-c-al; we also find hierarch (Milton, P. L. v. 468), from Gk. leράρχης.

HIEROGLYPHIC, symbolical; applied to picture writing. (L.,—Gk.) 'The characters which are called hieroglyphichs;' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 1051 (R.) 'An hieroglyphical answer;' Ralegh, Hist. of the World, b. iii. c. 5. s. 4 (R.)—Lat. hieroglyphicus, symbolical.—Gk. leρογλυφικός, hieroglyphic.—Gk. leρο-, crude form of leρός, sacred; and γλύφειν, to hollow out, engrave, carve, write in incised characters. See Hierarchy and Chyptic. Der. hieroglyphic-al, -al-ly; also the sb. hieroglyph, coined by omitting -ic.

HIEROPHANT, a revealer of sacred things, a priest. (Gk.) In Warburton's Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 4 (R.) = Gk. lepo¢avrne, teaching the rites of worship. = Gk. lepo¢, crude form of lepo¢, sacred; and ¢aivew, to shew, explain. See Hierarchy and Phantom.

HIGGLE, to chaffer, bargain. (E.) 'To higgle thus;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2. l. 401. And used by Fuller, Worthies, Northumberland (R.) A weakened form of haggle; see Haggle (2).

Der. higgl-er.

HIGH, tall, lofty, chief, illustrious. (E.) M. E. heigh, high, hey, ky; Chaucer, C. T. 318; P. Plowman, B. x. 155.—A. S. heáh, héh; Grein, ii. 44. + Dn. hoog. + Icel. hár. + Swed. hög. + Dan. höi. + Goth. hauks. + G. hoch; O. H. G. hóh. β. The orig. sense is Goth. hauke. + G. hoch; O. H. G. hoh.

B. The orig, sense is 'knoblike,' humped or bunched up; cf. G. hocken, to set in heaps; knoblike,' humped or bunched up; cf. G. hocken, to set in heaps; knob, hump, bunch; G. hugel, a bunch, knob, hillock; Icel. haugr, a mound. The still older sense is simply 'bent' or 'rounded;' cf. Skt. hukhi, the belly, kucha, the female breast. Y. From Teutonic base HUH, to bend, bow, project upwards in a rounded form. — KUK, to bend, make round; cf. Skt. kuch, to contract, bend. Der. height, q. v.; high-ly; also high-born, K. John, v. 2, 79; high-bred; high-coloured, Ant. and Cleop. ii. 7. 4; high-fol.

Aigh-flown; high-handed; high-minded, I Hen. VI, i. 5. 12; high-priest; high-road; feet of a quadruped in the rear. But the older expression is 'hinder feet of a quadruped in the rear. But the older expression is 'hinder HIGHLAND, belonging to a mountainous region. (E.) 'A generation of highland thieves and redshanks;' Milton, Observ. on generation of nigmana there's and recisnatis; mitton, Observ. on the Art. of Peace (qu. in Todd). From high and land; corresponding somewhat to the M. E. whland, used of country people as distinguished from townsfolk. Der. highland-er; highlands.

HIGHT, was or is called. (E.) Obsolete. A most singular word, presenting the sole instance in English of a passive verb; the correct phrase was he hight = he was (or is) called, or he was named. This grisly beast, which lion hight by name' - which is called by the name of lion; Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 140. M. E. highte. 'But ther as I was wont to highte [be called] Arcite, Now highte I Philostrat;' Chaucer, C. T. 1557. Older forms hatte, hette. 'Clarice hatte that maide' = the maid was named Clarice; Floriz and Blancheflur, ed. Lumby, 1. 479. Thet hetten Calef and Iosue' = that were named Caleb and Joshua; Thet hetten Calef and Iosue' = that were named Caleb and Joshua; Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 67. And see Stratmann's Dict. s. v. hâten. = A. S. hátte, I am ealled, I was called; pres. and pt. t. of A. S. hátan, to be called, a verb with passive signification; from A. S. hátan, active verb, to bid, command, call; Grein, ii. 16, 17. + G. ich heisse, I am named; from heissen, (1) to call, (2) to be called.

B. Best explained by the Gothic, which has haitan, to call, name, pt. t. haihait; whence was formed the true passive pres. tense haitada, I am called, he is called; as in 'Thomas, saei haitada Didymus'= Thomas, who is called Didymas; John, xi. 6. See further under Hest. HILARITY, cheerfulness, mirth. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) Restraining his ebriety unto hilarity; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. v. c. 23, part 16. - F. hilarité, mirth; omitted by Cotgrave, but see Littré. at. kilaritatem, acc. of hilaritas, mirth. - Lat. hilaris, hilarus, cheerful, gay. Not an orig. Lat. word; but borrowed.—Gk. khap's, cheerful, gay. Cf. Gk. khap's, propitious, kind. Der. Hence the late word hilari-ous, formed as if from a Lat. hilarioss; hilarious does not occur in Todd's Johnson. From same source, ex-kilarate.

hilaris); Jan. 13.

HILDING, a base, menial wretch. (E.) In Shak, used of both sexes; Tam. Shrew, ii. 26; &c. [Not derived, as Dr. Schmidt says, from A. S. healdan, to hold; which is impossible.] 'The word is from A. S. healdan, to hold; which is impossible.] 'The word is still in use in Devonshire, pronounced hilderling, or hinderling;' Halliwell. Hence the obvious etymology. Hilding is short for hilderling, and hilderling stands for M. E. hinderling, base, degenerate; Ormulum, 4860, 4889. Made up from A. S. hinder, behind; and the suffix-ling. See Hind (3) and (on the suffix) Chamberlain.

HILL, a small mountain. (E.) M. E. hill (with one l); Havelok, 1287; also hul, Ancren Riwle, p. 178.—A. S. hyll; Grein, ii. 132. 'Collis, hyll;' Wright's Vocab. i. 54, col. I. And see Northumbrian version of St. Luke, xxiii. 30. + O. Du. hil, hille; Oudemans, G. Further allied to Lithnan. kalnas, Lat. collis, a hill; Lat. celsus, lofty; culmen, a top. See Culminate, and Haulm. Der. hill-y, hill-iness; dimin. hill-ock, in Shak. Venus and Adonis, 237. ¶ Not connected with G. hügel, a hill; for that is related to E. how, a hill; see How (2). see How (2).

HILT, the handle of a sword. (E.) In Shak. Hamlet, v. 2. 159; it was common to use the pl. hills with reference to a single weapon; Jul. Cæsar, v. 3. 43. M. E. hill; Layamon, 6506.—A. S. hill, Grein, ii. 75. + Icel. hjalt. + Q. H. G. helza, a sword-hilt.

B. The Icel. hjalt also means the guard between the hilt and blade; the Lat. gladius, sword, is perhaps related; Fick, iii. 72. ¶ In any case, it is quite unconnected with the verb to hold. Der. hill-ed.

HIM, the objective case of he; see He.

HIN, a Hebrew liquid measure. (Heb.) In Exod. xxis. 40, &c. Supposed to contain about 6 quarts. – Heb. hin, a hin; said to be a word of Egyptian origin.

HIND (1), the female of the stag. (E.) M. E. hind, hynde; P. HIND (1), the female of the stag. (E.) M. E. hind, hynde; P. Plowman, B. xv. 274.—A. S. hind, fem.; Grein, ii. 76. + Du. hinde, a hind, doe. + Icel., Dan., and Swed, hind. + O. H. G. hintd, M. H. G. hinde; whence G. hindin, a doe, with suffixed (fem.)—in. β. Fick (iii. 61) gives the Teutonic type as HENDA, as if from the Teut. base HANTH, to take by hunting; see Hand.

HIND (2), a peasant. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. vi. 8. 12. The d is excrescent. M. E. hine, Chaucer, C. T. 605; hyne, P. Plowman, B. vi. 133.—A. S. hina, a domestic; but the word is unauthenticated as nom. sing., and is rather to be considered a gen. D.: 50 that hina.

feet, as in St. Brandan. ed. Wright, 30, the pos. degree not being used; we also find hynderere, hyndrere, Wyclif, Gen. xvi. 13.—A.S. hindan, only as adv., at the back of; hindeward, hindwards, backwards; hinder, adv. backwards; Grein, ii. 76. + Goth. hindar, prep. behind; hinden, prep. beyond. + G. hinter, prep. behind; hinten, adv. behind. All from the base which appears in A.S. hine, hence. See Hence, He. Behind. Der hindered Wyclif Pr. viv. 17. See Hence, He, Behind. Der. hind-ward, Wyclif, Ps. xlix. 17, See Hence, He, Behind. Der. hind-ward, Wyclif, Ps. xlix. 17, lxix. 4; also hind-most, q.v.; hinder, verb, q.v.; be-hind.

HINDER, to put behind, keep back, check. (E.) M. E. hindren, hyndren; Gower, C. A. i. 311. He also has the sb. hinderer; i. 330; iii. 111.—A. S. hindrian; A. S. Chron. an. 1003.—A. S. hinder, adv. behind; from hindan, behind. + Icel. hindra, to hinder. See Hind (3). Der. hinder-er; also hindr-ance (for hinder-ance), with F. suffix -ance; 'damage, hurt, or hinderaunce;' Frith's Works, p. 15.

HINDMOST, last. (E.) In Shak Sonnet 85, 12; 2 Hen. VI, iii. 1. 2. a. The suffix has nothing to do with the word most; the word is to be divided as hind-most, a double superlative; where the word is to be divided as hind-m-ost, a double superlative; where both -m- and -ost (=-est) are superlative suffixes; so also in the case of Aftermost, Utmost. The corruption of -est to -ost is due to confusion with the word most in popular etymology. The form hindmost is not old; Chaucer has hinderest, C. T. 624.

B. The suffix est being the usual one for the superlative, we have only to account for the rest of the word. - A. S. hindema, hindmost; Grein, ii. 76. Here the suffix -ma is the same as that seen in Lat. opti-mus, optu-mus, best; see Aftermost. + Goth. hindumists, hindmost, Matt. viii. 12; to be divided as hind-u-m-ists; cf. Goth. fru-ma, first. See Hind (3). Also spelt hindermost, as in Holinshed, Hist. Scotland, an. 1290 (R.) Here the r is an insertion, due to confusion with hinder; but the e is correct; cf. A. S. hindema.

HINGE, the joint on which a door turns. (Scand.) The i was formerly e. M. E. henge (with hard g), a hinge; with dimin. form hengel, a hinge. 'As a dore is turned in his hengis' [earlier version, in his heng]; Wyclif, Prov. xxvi. 14. 'Hengyl of a dore;' Prompt. Parv. p. 235. 'Hie gumser, a hengylle;' Wright's Vocab. i. 261, col. β. So called because the door hangs upon it; from M. E. hengen, to hang, a word of Scand. origin. 'Henged on a tre;' Havelok, 1429.—Icel. hengja, to hang; cognate with A. S. hangian, to hang; see Hang (A). Cf. Du. hengsel, a hinge. Der. hinge, v.

HINT, a slight allusion. (E.) a. The verb is later than the sb. As I have kinted in some former papers; Tatler, no. 267. Only the sb. occurs in Shak., where it is a common word; Oth. i. 3. 142, 166. Esp. used in the phrases 'to take the hint,' or 'upon this hint.' B. Hint properly signifies 'a thing taken,' i. e. a thing caught or apprehended; being a contraction of M. E. hinted, taken; or rather a variant of the old pp. hent, with the same sense. 'Hyntyd, raptus; Hyntyn, or revyn, or hentyn, rapio, arripio;' Prompt. Parv. p. 240. The earlier spelling of the verb was henten, pt. t. hente, Chaucer, C. T. 700; the pp. hent occurs even in Shak. Meas. iv. 6. 14.—A. S. hentan, to selze, to hunt after; Grein, ii. 34. Cf. Goth. hinthan, to seize, catch with the hand. See Hit, Hunt. Der. hint, verb.

HIP (1), the haunch, upper part of the thigh. (E.) M. E. hupe, kipe, hippe. 'About hire hippes large;' Chaucer, C. T. 474. 'Hufes will. of Paleme. ed. Skeat. – A.S. hype; Gregory's Pastoral, ed. Sweet, p. 383, 1. 2. + Du. heup. + Icel. huppr. + Dan. hofte. + Swed. hift. + Goth. hups. + G. hufte. O. H. G. huf. these words stands for the old Aryan suffix -ta; the Teutonic base of Aip is HUPI; Fick, iii. 77. The orig, sense was probably 'a bend,' a joint, or else, 'a hump;' cf. Gk. κύπτειν, to bend forward; κυφύε, bent; a joint, or eise, 'a nump; ct. Ok. κυπτειν, to bend forward; κυφοι, bent; κυφοι, a hump, hunch. - ✓ KUP, also KUBH, to go up and down; Fick, i. 536, 537. See Heap, Hump, Hoop, Hop. Der. hipbone, A.S. hype-bán; Wright's Vocab. i. 44, col. 1, last line. ¶ From the phrase 'to have on the hip,' or 'catch on the hip' (Merch. of Ven. i. 3. 47, iv. I. 334) may very well have been formed the word hipped, i. e. beaten, foiled; but this word was sooner or later connected with hypochondria; see Hippish.

HIP (2), also HEP, the fruit of the dog-rose. (E.) M. E. hepe.

And swete as is the brambel flour That bereth the rede heps; Chaucer, C. T. 13677.—A. S. heóp, in the comp. heóp-brymel, a hip-bramble; Wright's Vocab. i. 33, col. 1; to translate Lat. rubus. +

M. H. G. hiefs, O. H. G. hiufo, a bramble-bush. Root unknown. HIPPISH, hypochondriacal. (Gk.) In Byron, Beppo, st. 64 The word is merely a colloquial substitute for hypochondriacal, of which only the first syllable is preserved. And see note at end of Hip (1).

HIPPOCAMPUS, a kind of fish. (Gk.) It has a head like a horse, and a long flexible tail; whence the name.—Gk. Ιπποκάμπος, ἐπποκάμπη, a monster, with a horse's head and fish's tail. - Gk, ἐππο-, crude form of immos, a horse; and mammers, to bend.

HIPPOPOTAMUS, the river-horse. (L., - Gk.) M. E. ypotamus, Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Skeat, 157. Also ypotanos, King have crept into the word in mo Alisaunder, 6554. Both corrupted from Lat. hippopotamus. - Gk. Hustle, q. v. Der. hitch, sb.

river-dwelling horse.—Gk. lπνο., crude form of iπνοs, a horse; and ποταμόs, a river.

β. The Gk. iπποs stands for iκκοs, cognate with Lat. equus, a horse; see Equine. Ποταμόs is fresh, drinkable water; see Potable. Go From the same Gk. Invos we have hippo-drome, a race-course for horses; hippo-phagy, a feeding on horse-flesh; hippo-griff, a monster, half horse, half griffin; &c.

HIRE, wages for service. (E.) M. E. hire, Chaucer, C. T. 509; also hure, huyre, hyre, P. Plowman, A. ii. 91; B. ii. 122.—A.S. hyr, asso nure, nuyre, nyre,

Matt. xx. 7; hire-ling, A.S. hýreling, Mark, i. 20.

HIRSUTE, rough, shaggy, bristly. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed.
1674; and in Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 616 (R.)—Lat. hirsutus, rough, bristly. Allied to Lat. horrere, to bristle. See Horror. Der.

hirsute-ness (Todd).

HIS, of him, of it. (E.) Formerly neut. as well as masc. See He, Its.

HISS, to make a sound like a serpent or a goose. (E.) Wyclif has hisshing, a hissing, 2 Chron. xxix. 8. The Lat. sibulat is glossed by hyssyt, i.e. hisses; Wright's Vocab. i. 180, l. 1.—A. S. hysian, to hiss; the Lat. irridebit is glossed by hysed; A. S. Psalter, ed. Spelman, ii. 4. + O. Du. hisschen, to hiss; Kilian, Oudemans. β. Formed from the sound; the Du. sissen, G. zischen, to hiss, are even more expressive; cf. fizz, whizz, whistle. Der. hiss, sb.; hiss-ing, Jer. xviii. 16, &c.; and see hist, hush.

HIST, an interjection enjoining silence. (E. or Scand.) In Shak.

Romeo, ii. 2. 159. In Milton, Il Penseroso, 55, the word hist appears to be a past participle = hushed, silenced; so that 'with thee bring . the mute silence hist along' = bring along with thee the mute hushed silence. (So also whist; see Whist.) Perhaps the orig. form was hiss, a particular use of the verb above. Cf. Dan. hys, interj. silence! hysse, to hush. See Hush.

HISTOLOGY, the science which treats of the minute structure of the tissues of plants and animals. (Gk.) A modern scientific term. Coined from Gk. loτο-, crude form of loτόs, a web; and -λογια, equivalent to λόγος, a discourse, from λέγειν, to speak. β. The orig. sense of ioros is a ship's mast, also the bar or beam of a loom, which in Greek looms stood upright; hence, a warp or web. called because standing upright; from Gk. ιστημ, to make to stand, set, place; from \(\subset STA, to stand; see Stand. \)

HISTORY, also STORY, a narrative, account. Story (q. v.) is an abbreviated form. M. E. historie. Fabyan gave to his Chronicle (printed in 1516) the name of The Concordance of Histories. In older authors, we commonly find the form storie, which is of F. origin. Historie is Englished directly from Lat. historia, a history. - Gk. loropla, a learning by enquiry, information, history. -Gk. lovop-, stem of lovop or lovop, knowing, learned; standing for 18-τωρ, from the base 18- of elδέναι, to know. — \(\psi \) WID, to know; see Wit. Der. histori-an, formerly historien, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 11 (R.); histori-c-al, Tyndal's Works, p. 266, col. 2; histori-c-al-ly: histori-c; histori-g-grapher, a writer of history (from Gk. γράσμεν το write) Geographes Steel Class (28. 1 histori-c-al-ly).

φειν, to write), Gascoigne's Steel Glas, 981; histori-o-graphy.

HISTRIONICAL, relating to the stage. (L.) In Minsheu.

And is a histrionical contempt; Ben Jonson, Magnetic Lady, A. iii. sc. 4. Coined, with suffix -al, from Lat. histrionicus, of or belonging to a player. - Lat. histrioni-, crude form of histrio, a player, actor. B. The orig. sense was probably 'one who makes others laugh;' cf.

Skt. has, to laugh, hasra, a fool.

HIT, to light upon, to strike, to attain to, succeed. (Scand.)

M. E. hitten, P. Plowman, B. xii. 108; xvi. 87; Layamon, 1. 1550.— Icel. hitta, to hit upon, meet with. + Swed. hitta, to find, discover, light upon. + Dan. hitte, to hit upon.

B. Prob. allied to Goth. hinthan, to catch, occurring in the compound frahinthan, to take captive; and to E. hent, hint. See Hint. Cf. also Lat. cadere, to fall, happen. Der. hit, sb.

HITCH, to move by jerks, catch slightly, suddenly. (E.) M. E. hicchen. Hytchyn, hychyn, hytchen, or remevyn, Amoveo, moveo, removeo; Prompt. Parv. p. 239; where the word should have been printed as hycchyn or hycchen. We also find: 'Hatchyd [read hacchyd], or remevyd, hichid, hychyd, Amotus, remotus;' ibid. Cf. Lowland Scotch hatch, hotch, to move by jerks; Jameson. B. The M.E. hicken hatch, hotch, to move by jerks; Jamieson. B. The M.E. hicehen can only be a weakened form from an older hikken, used to denote convulsive movement; see Hiccough. ¶ I see no evidence for connecting hitch with hook; though the notion of hooking seems to have crept into the word in modern use. It is rather connected with HITHE, HYTHE, a small haven. (E.) M. E. hithe; as in Chaucer, Book of the Duchesse, 347.—A. S. hds, Grein, ii. 14. + Garlik-hithe, P. Plowman, B. v. 324; and see Prompt. Parv., p. 242, note 1.—A. S. hds, a haven; Grein, ii. 126. Allied to the verb to B. All from a Teutonic type HAISA; Fick, iii. 57. Root unknown.

note 1.—A. S. hýb, a haven; Grein, ii. 126. Allied to the verb to hide, and to hide, a skin, covering; with the same sense of protecting or shielding; from \(\sqrt{kU}, \) kottened form of \(\sqrt{SKU}, \) to protect, cover. See Hide (1) and Hide (2).

HITHER, to this place. (E.) M. E. hider, hither, Chaucer, C. T. 674; the right form in Chaucer being probably hider, since he rimes thider with slider; C. T. 1265. [So also M. E. fader, moder are now father, mother; the difference being probably one of dialect.]—A. S. hider (common); also hider; Grein, ii. 71. + Icel. hédra. + Dan. hid. + Swed. hit. + Goth. hidre. + Lat. citra, on this side. \(\beta \). From the Teutonic pronominal base HI, answering to Aryan KA; wither-to; comparative suffix, as in af-ter, whe-ther. See He. Der. hither-to; comparative suffix, as in aj-ter, une-ther. See He. Der. hither-to; hither-ward, M. E. hiderward, P. Plowman, B. vi. 323.

HIVE, a basket for bees. (E.) The old sense is 'house.' M. E. hiwe (with u for v), Chaucer, C.T. 15398. Spelt hyfe, Wright's Vocab. i. 223, col. 2. From the A. S. hiw*, a house; preserved only in the comp. hiwréden, a family, household (Lat. domus), Matt. x. 6; hiwise, a household, Luke, xiii. 25; &c. Cf. Northumbrian higo, used to translate Lat. familia; Luke, ii. 4. The word is also to be traced in A. S. himms she pl domestics. Grain ii 78. Leel him a household. A. S. hiwan, sb. pl. domestics, Grein, ii. 78; Icel. hjú, a household, A. S. Mada, so. P. Guissics, Cell, ii. γς, Icel., ημ, a house, hat, hibbli, a homestead; Goth. heivafrauja, the master of a house, Mark, xiv. 14; and (probably) in M. H. G. hirát, G. heirath, marriage. β. All from a Teutonic base HI, equivalent to Aryan √ KI, to lie, rest; whence Skt. çi, to lie, repose, Gk. κείμαι, I lie. From the same root are also Lat. ciuis, a citizen; E. civic, civil, city, cemetery, quiet, &c. And see Hide (4), Hind (2), Hire, Home. HO, HOA, a call to excite attention. (E.) a.

a. 'And cried ho!' Chaucer, C. T. 1706. Merely a natural exclamation; cf. Icel. ho, interj. ho!, also Icel. hóa, to shout out ho! β. In some cases, it seems to have been considered as a shortened form of hold; so that we even find 'withouten ho' = without intermission, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 1083. Cf. Du. hou, hold! stop! from houden, to hold.

HOAR, white, grayish white. (E.) M.E. hor, hoor; Chaucer, C.T. 3876, 7764; P. Plowman, B. vi. 85.—A. S. hár, Grein, ii. 14. 4 Icel. hárr, hoar, hoary. β. Fick (iii. 67) suggests comparison with Skt. gára, variegated in colour, also used of hair mixed with gray and white; Benfey, p. 942. To be kept distinct from Icel. hár, which is the E. high (the r being merely the sign of the nom. case); and also from E. hair. Der. hoar-y, occurring in the comp. horitocket, having hoary locks, Layamon, 25845; hoar-i-ness; also hoar-frost, M. E. hoorfrost, Wyclif, Exod. xvi. 14; also hoar-hound, q. v. HOARD, a store, a treasure. (E.) M. E. hord, Chaucer, C. T. 3262; Gower, C. A. iii. 155.—A. S. hord, Grein, ii. 96. + Icel. hodd. + G. hort. + Goth. huzd, a treasure.

B. The Teutonic type is the control of the HUS-DA (Fick, iii. 79); from the same source as house; a hoard is 'a thing housed.' See House. Der. hoard, verb. A. S. hordian, in Sweet's A. S. Reader; cf. Goth. huzdjan, to hoard; hoard-er, A. S.

horders (Bosworth).

HOARDING, HOARD, a fence enclosing a house while builders are at work. (F., -Du.; or Du.) Rare in books; it is difficult to say how long it may have existed in E. as a builders term. Either taken directly from Du. horde, a hurdle; or from O. F. horde, a palissade, barrier (Burguy), which is the same word. The suffix -ing is, of course, English. The true E. word is Hurdle, q. v. HOARHOUND, HOREHOUND, the name of a plant. (E.)

The true hoarhound is the white, Marrubium vulgare; the first part of the word is hoar, and the plant is so called because its bushy stems are covered with white woolly down; Johns, Flowers of the Field. It is also 'aromatic;' whence the latter part of the name, as will appear. The final d is excrescent; the M. E. form being horehune. 'Marubium, horehune;' Wright's Vocab. i. 139.—A. S. harhune; or simply hune; for numerous examples of which see Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 334; where we also find: 'the syllable hâr, hoary, describes the aspect, so that "black horehound" shews how we have forgotten our own language.' The words are also found separate; ba hâran hûnan. We also find hwite hâre hûnan, white horehound, pa háran húnan. We also find hwite háre húnan, white horehound, an early indication of the black horehound, Ballota nigra, a very strong-smelling plant. B. The first syllable is obvious; see Hoar. The second syllable means 'strong-scented;' cf. Lat. cunila, a species of origanum, Pliny, xix. 8. 50; Gk. kovian, a species of origanum, Pliny, xix. 8. 50; Gk. kovian, a species of origanum; so named, in all probability, from its strong scent; cf. Skt. knúy, to stink; Benfey, p. 224. It thus appears that the right names should have been koar houn and black hour, white hoar-hound involves a reduplication; and black hoarhound, a contradiction. HOARSE, having a rough, harsh voice. (E.) The r in this word is wholly intrusive, and is (generally) not sounded; still, it was inserted at an early period. M. E. koos, kos, kors; all three spellings becur in P. Plowman, B. xvii. 324 (and various readings); horse, to place;' Cot. See Hobby (1).

Der. hoarse-ly, hoarse-ness

HOARY, white; see Hoar.

HOAX, to trick, to play a practical joke. (Low Lat.) In Todd's Johnson; not found in early writers. The late appearance of the word shews that it is a mere corruption of hoeus, used in just the same sense. 'Legerdemain, with which these jugglers hocus the vulgar;' Nalson in Todd. 'This gift of hocus-pocussing;' L'Estrange (Todd). See Hocus-Pocus.

Not from the A. S. hux, huse, a taunt, occurring in Layamon; as has been too cleverly suggested. There is no bridge to connect the words chronologically; and they have different vowels. Der. knaz, sb.

HOB (1), HUB, the nave of a wheel, part of a grate. (E.) The true sense is 'projection.' Hence hub, 'the nave of a wheel (Oxfordshire); a small stack of hay, the mark to be thrown at in quoits, the hilt of a weapon; we to the hub, as far as possible;' Halliwell. The mark for quoits is the same word as hob, 'a small piece of wood of a cylindrical form, used by boys to set on end, to put half-pence on to chuck or pitch at; Halliwell. Hob also means the shoe (projecting edge) of a sledge. The hob of a fire-place is explained by Wedgwood as 'the raised stone on either side of the hearth between which the embers were confirmed. which the embers were confined.' β. Though not easily traced in early English, the sense is well preserved in the related word hump, which is the same word with a nasalised termination. Thus the true orig. base was hup, easily corrupted to hub, hob. From the Teutonic base HUP, to go up and down (Fick, iii, 77), whence also E. hop, hump. See Hop (1), Hump. Der. hob-nail, a nail with a projecting head, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 398; 2 Hen. VI, iv. 10. 63; hob-

HOB (2), a clown, a rustic, a fairy. (F., -O. H. G.) The hobbes as wise as grauest men; 'Drant's tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry (R.) 'From elves, hobs, and fairies That trouble our dairies; 'Beaumont and Fletcher, Monsieur Thomas, iv. 6. See Nares; also Hob in Atkinson's Cleveland Glossary, where, however, the suggestion of identification of hob with elf is to be rejected. It is quite certain that Hob was a common personal name, and in early use. 'To beg of Hob and Dick;' Cor. ii. 3. 123. That it was in early use is clear from its numerous derivatives, as Hobbs, Hobbins, Hobson, Hopkins, Hopkinson. β. That Hob, strange as it may seem, was a popular corruption of Robin is clearly borne out by the equally strange corruption of Hodge from Roger, as well as by the name of Robin Good-fellow for the hob-goblin Puck; (Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 34, 40). Y. The name Robin is French, and, like Robert, is of O. H. G. origin; Littré considers it as a mere pet corruption from Robert, a name early known in England, as being that of the eldest son of Will. I. Der. kob-

HOBBLE, to limp, walk with a limp. (E.) M. E. hobelen (with one b), P. Plowman, A. i. 113; P. Plowman's Crede, 106; and see Barbour's Bruce, iv. 447. The frequentative of hop; so that the lit. sense is 'to hop often.' + Du. hobbelen, to toss, ride on a hobby-horse, stammer, stutter (all with the notion of repetition of uneven motion). + Prov. G. hoppeln, to hop, hobble (Flügel). See Hop (1). Der. hobble, sb.

HOBBY (1), HOBBY-HORSE, an ambling nag, a toy like a horse, a favourite pursuit. (F., - O. Low G.) See Hobby in Trench, Select Glossary. A hobby is now a favourite pursuit, but formerly a toy in imitation of a prancing nag, the orig, sense being a kind of prancing horse. In Hamlet, ii. 2. 142. 'They have likewise excellent good horses, we term the hobbies;' Holland, Camden's Ireland, Skeat, xiv. 68, 500.—O. F. hobin, a nag; Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xiv. 68, 500.—O. F. hobin, 'a hobby, a little ambling and shortmaned horse;' Cot. [Said in Littré to be a Scotch word; but it was merely a F. word in use in Scotland in the fourteenth century; the suffix in (= Lat. -inus) being wholly French. Cf. Ital. ubino, a Shetland pony.]—O.F. hober, 'to stirre, move, remove from place to place, a rustic word;' Cot.

3. Of O. Du. or Scand. origin.— O. Du. kobben, to toss, move up and down; Du. kobben, to toss; a firmed by noting that the O. F. verb kober was sometimes spelt of an ox, (2) a hogshead; O. Swed. oxhufuud, a hogshead, lit. 'oxaber (Cot.); corresponding to which latter form, the hobby was also head' (line); G. oxhoft, a hogshead, borrowed directly from the called aubereau. Note also M. E. hobeler, a man mounted on a hobby

Dutch unchanged.

Y. Origin of the name unknown; the most contained to the called authorized to the called authorized. or small horse; Barbour's Bruce, xi. 110.

HOBGOBLIN, a kind of fairy. In Minsheu, ed. 1627; and in Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 40. Compounded of hob and goblin. See Hob (2) and Goblin.

HOBNAIL, a kind of nail. See Hob (1).

HOBNOB, HABNAB, with free leave, in any case, at random. Compounded of hab and nab, derived respectively from A. S. habban, to have, and nabban, not to have. 1. In one aspect it means 'take it or leave it;' implying free choice, and hence a familiar invitation to drink, originating the phrase 'to hob-nob together.' 'Hob-nob is his word; give't or take't;' Twelfth Night, iii. 4. 262. 2. In another aspect, it means hit or miss, at random; also, in any case. 'Philantus determined, hab, nab, to sende his letters;' i. e. whatever might happen; Lyly's Euphues, ed. Arber, p. 354. 'Although set down hab-nab, at random; Butler's Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 990. β. Hab is from A. S. habban; see Have. Nab is from A. S. nabban, a contracted form of ne habban, not to have.

HOCK (1), the hough; see Hough.
HOCK (2), the name of a wine. (G.) 'What wine is it? Hock;' Beaum. and Fletcher, The Chances, A. v. sc. 3. A familiar corruption of Hochkeim, the name of a place in Germany, on the river Main, whence the wine came. It means 'high home;' see High and Home.

HOCKEY, the name of a game. (E.) Also called hookey; so named because played with a hooked stick; see Hook. places called bandy, the ball being bandied backwards and forwards.

HOCUS-POCUS, a juggler's trick, a juggler. (Low Lat.) Hokos-Pokos is the name of the juggler in Ben Jonson, Magnetic Lady, Chorus at end of Act i. In Butler's Hudibras, it means a trick; 'As easily as hocus-pocus;' pt. iii. c. 3. 1. 708. If the word may be said to belong to any language at all, it is bad Latin, as shewn by the termination -us. The reduplicated word was a mere invention, used by jugglers in playing tricks. 'At the playing of every trick, he used to say "hocus pocus, tontus, talontus, vade celeriter, jubco; Ady's Candle in the Dark, Treat. of Witches, &c. p. 29; cited in Todd. See the whole article in Todd. ¶ The 'derivations' sometimes assigned are ridiculous; the word no more needs to be traced than its companions tontus and talontus. Der. hocus, to cheat; see Todd. Hence, perhaps, hoax, q. v.

HOD, a kind of trough for carrying bricks on the shoulder. (F., -G.) 'A lath-hammer, trowel, a hod, or a traie: 'Tusser, Five Hundred Points of Husbandry, sect. 16, st. 16 (E. D. S. edition, p. 37, last line). Corrupted from hot, prob. by confusion with prov. E. hod, a box (lit. a hold, receptacle); Whitby Glossary. — F. hotte, 'a scuttle, dorser, basket to carry on the back; the right hotte is wide at the top and narrow at the bottom;' Cot. Of Teutonic origin; O. Du. hotte, a pedler's box or basket, carried on the back (Oudemans); provin. G. hotte, a wooden vessel, tub, a vintager's dorser (Flügel). 3. Root uncertain; but the word is probably related to hut; thus the Skt. kutí not only means 'a hut,' but also 'a vessel serving for fumigation; Benfey, p. 191. See Hut. Der. hod-man. HODGE-PODGE, a mixture; see Hotchpot.

HOE, an instrument for cutting up weeds, &c. (F., -G.) 'How, pronounced as [i. e. to rime with] mow and throw; a narrow iron rake without teeth, to cleanse gardens from weeds; rastrum Gallicum [a French rake]; Ray's Collection of South-Country Words, ed. 1691. Written haugh by Evelyn (R.) = F. hone, 'an instrument of husbandry, which hath a crooked handle, or helve of wood, some two foot long, and a broad and in-bending head of iron; 'Cot. - Q. H. G. houwa, G. haue, a hoe. - O. H. G. houwan, to hew; cognate with E. hew. See Hew. Der. hoe, vb.

HOG, the name of an animal, a pig. (C.) M. E. hog; Wyclif, Luke, xv. 16; King Alisaunder, 1885. – W. hwch, a sow. + Bret. houch, hoch, a hog. + Corn. hoch, a pig, hog. β. Since a Welsh initial h answers to an Aryan s, we may doubtless consider these words as cognate with Irish suig, a pig, and A. S. sugu, a sow; cf. also Lat. sus, Gk. Se. See Sow. Der. hogg-ish, hogg-ish-ly, hogg-ish-ness; hog-ring-er; hog's-lard. Doublet, sow.

HOGSHEAD, a measure containing about 521 gallons; a half-pipe. (O. Du.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 252; L. L. L. iv. 2. 88; &c. Also in Cotgrave, to translate F. tonneau; it seems to have meant a large cask. Minsheu, ed. 1627, refers us to 'An. 1 Rich, III, cap. 13.' The E. word is a sort of attempt at a translation or accommodation of the O. Du. word, which was imported into other languages as well as English.—O. Du. obskoofd, oxhoofd, a hogshead; see Sewel's Du. Dict. and Bremen Wörterbuch.

β. This word was certainly understood to mean 'ox-head,' though the mod. Du. form for 'ox' is os. We may, however, compare Dan. oxhousd, meaning (1) head

iv. 2. 46, that the cask may have been named from the device of an 'ox-head' having been branded upon it. In any case, the first syllable, in English, is a corruption. ¶ Numerous guesses, mostly silly, have been made. The word is found in Dutch as early as 1550 (Tiedeman).

HOIDEN, HOYDEN, a romping girl. (O. Du.) See hoyden in Trench, Select Glossary; in old authors, it is usually applied to the male sex, and means a clown, a lout, a rustic. 'Badault, a fool, dolt, sot, . . . gaping hoydon; Cot. 'Falourdin, a luske, lowte, . . . lumpish hoydon; id. 'Hilts. You mean to make a hoiden or a hare Of me, to hunt counter thus, and make these doubles; 'Ben Jonson, Tale of a Tub, A. ii. sc. 1.-O. Du. heyden (mod. Du. heiden), a heathen, gentile; also a gipsy, vagabond; Sewel.—O. Du. heyde, a heath. See Heathen, Heath. ¶ The Du. ey being sounded nearly as English long i, the vowel-change is slight; precisely the same change occurs in hoise; see Hoist. The W. hoeden, having only the modern E. meaning of 'coquette,' must have been borrowed from English, and is not the original, as supposed in Webster.

HOIST, to heave, raise with tackle. (O. Du.) crescent, and due to confusion with the pp. The verb is properly hoise, with pp. hoist = hoised. 'Hoised up the main-sail;' Acts, xxvii. hoise, with pp. hoist = hoised. 'Hoised up the main-sail;' Acts, xxvii. 40. Shak. has both hoise and hoist, and (in the pp.) both hoist and hoisted; Rich. III, iv. 4. 529; Temp. i. 2. 148; Hamlet, iii. 4. 207; Antony, iii. 10. 15, iv. 12. 34, v. 2. 55. 'We hoyse up mast and sayle;' Sackville's Induction, st. 71 (A.D. 1563).—O. Du. hyssen, to hoise (Sewel); mod. Du. hijschen. [The O. Du. y (mod. ij) being sounded like English long i, the vowel-change is slight, and much like that in hoyden, q. v.] + Dan. heise, hisse, to hoist. + Swed. hissa, to hoist; hissa upp, to hoist up. Cf. F. hisser, to hoist a sail, borrowed from the Scandinavian; quite distinct from F. houser to evalt which from the Scandinavian; quite distinct from F. hausser, to exalt, which is from Lat. altus, high (F. haut). Root unknown; cf. Lithuan.

is from Lat. denne, hiszti, to place.

HOLD (1), to keep, retain, defend, restrain. (E.) M. E. holden, Chaucer, C. T. 12116. — A. S. healdan, haldan, Grein, ii. 50. + Du. houden. + Icel. halda. + Swed. hålla. + Dan. holde. + Goth. haldan. + G. halten.

B. The general Teutonic form is haldan (Fick, iii. to raise; see Hill, Haulm, Holm. Der. hold, sh., Chaucer, C. T.

to raise; see Hill, Haulin, Hollin. Der. now, sh., Chauser, C. 10481; hold-fast, hold-ing.

HOLD (2), the 'hold' of a ship. (Du.) 'A hulk better stuffed in the hold;' 2 Hen. IV, iv. 2, 70. Not named, as might be supposed, from what it holds; but a nautical term, borrowed (like most other such) from the Dutch. The d is really excrescent, and due to a natural confusion with the E. verb. The right sense is 'hole.' Du. hol, a hole, cave, den, cavity; Sewel gives also 'het hol van een schip, the ship's hold or hull.' Cognate with E. Hole, q.v.

the ship's hold or hull.' Cognate with E. Hole, q.v.

C. T. 3440, 3442; Havelok, 1813.—A. S. hol, a cave; Grein, ii. 92.

+ Du. hol. + Icel. hol, hola. + Dan. hul. + Swed. hdl. + G. hohl;
O. H. G. hol. Cf. also Goth. hulundi, a hollow, cave; us-hulon, to hollow out, Matt. xxvii. 60. β. The root is not quite certain; Fick (iii. 70, i. 527) refers it to Teutonic base HAL, to cover, hide; from KAL, to hide; see Hell.

y. But it seems far better to connect E. hole. hollow with Gk goldes hellow from Ch discour. from KAL, to hide; see Hell. Y. But it seems far better to connect E. hole, hollow with Gk. notices, hallow; from Gk. never, to take in, whence also wiap, wires, a cavity; all from VKU, to contain, take in, be hollow; Fick, i. 551. The latter view is that taken by Curtius, i. 192; in this case, the -I is merely suffixed. See Hollow and Hold (2).

HOLIBUT, a fish. (E.) See Halibut. HOLIDAY, a holy day, festival, day of amusement. (E.) For holy day. Spelt holy day; Chaucer, C.T. 3309; haliday, P. Plowman, B. v. 409. See Holy and Day.

B. v. 400. See Holy and Day.

HOLINESS, a being holy. (E.) See Holy.

HOLLA, HOLLO, stop, wait! (F.) Not the same word as kalloo, q. v., but somewhat differently used in old authors. The true sense is stop! wait! and it was at first used as an interjection simply, though easily confused with halloo, and thus acquiring the sense of to shout. 'Holla, stand there;' Othello, i. 2. 56. 'Cry holla [stop!] to thy tongue;' As You Like It, iii. 2. 257.—F. hold, 'an interjection, hoe there, enough; . . also, hear you me, or come hither; 'Cot. - F. ho, interjection; and là, there. B. The F. là is an abbreviation from Lat. illac, that way, there, orig. fem. ablative from illie, pron. he yonder, which is a compound of ille, he, and the enclitic ce, meaning 'there.' Der. holla, hollo, verb; K. Lear, iii. 1. 55; Twelfth Night, i. 5. 291. But note that there is properly a distinction between kolla (with final a), the French form, and kollo (with final o), a variant of kalloo, the English form. Confusion was

β. The Gk. δλοε is related to inevitable; yet it is worth noting that the F. 12 accounts for the final and sales (fut. sales w), to burn. a, just as A.S. 1d accounts for the final o or 00; since A.S. a becomes Lat. solidus; sales is from AK

HOLLAND, Dutch linen. (Du.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, iii. 3. 82. From the name of the country; Du. Holland. It means hollow (i.e. low-lying) land. Der. from the same source, hollands, i. e. gin made in Holland.

HOLLOW, vacant, concave; as sb., a hole, cavity. (E.) M. F. kolwe, Chaucer, C. T. 291, 1365.—A. S. kolk, only as a sb., signiholwe, Chaucer, C.T. 291, 1305.—A.S. holk, only as a sb., signifying a hollow place, vacant space; also spelt holg, healoe; see Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, iii. 365; Gregory's Pastoral, ed. Sweet, p. 218, ll. 1, 3, 4, 9; p. 241, l. 7. An extended form from A.S. hol, a hole; see Hole. Der. hollow, verb; 'hollow your body more, sir, thus;' Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, ed. Wheatley, i, 5. 136; hollow-ly, Temp. iii. 1. 70; hollow-ness, M. E. holowness, Chaucer, Troil. v. 1821; hollow-eyed, Com. Errors, v. 240; hollow-hearted, Rich. III, iv. 4. 435.

HOLLY, the name of a prickly shrub. (E.) The word has lost a final m. M. E. holis hollow.

final n. M. E. holin, holyn. The F. hous [holly] is glossed by holyn in Wright's Vocab. i. 163, l. 17; the spellings holin, holis both occur in the Ancren Riwle, p. 418, note 1. - A.S. holen, holegn; Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 332. + W. celyn; Corn. celin; Bret. kelen, holly. + Gael. cuilionn; Irish cuileann, holly. β. The change from A. S. h to Celtic c shews that the words are cognate; the base of the A. S. word is also preserved in Du. hulst, G. hülse, holly; and from the older form (said to be huliz) of the G. word the F. hour is derived. y. Thus the form of the base appears as KUL (= Teutonic HUL); possibly connected with Lat. culmen, a peak, culmus, a stalk; perhaps because the leaves are 'pointed.' Der. holm-oak, q. v.

HOLLYHOCK, a kind of mallow. (Hybrid; E. and C.) It should be spelt with one l, like holiday. M. E. holihoe, to translate Lat. althea and O. F. ymalue, in a list of plants; Wright's Vocab. i. 140, col. 1, 1, 6. [Here the O. F. ymalue = mod. F. guimauve, the marsh mallow (Cot.)] Also spelt holihocce, holihoke; see Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 332, col. 1, bottom. Compounded from M. E. holi, holy; and hocce, hoke, hoc, a mallow, from A. S. hoc, a mallow; id. Minsheu, ed. 1627, gives 'Holie hocke, i. e. malua sacra.' B. The mallow was also called in A. S. hocleuf, which at first sight seems to mean 'hook-leaf;' but we should rather keep to the orig sense of mallow for hoc, as the word seems to have been borrowed from Celtic; cf. W. hocys, mallows; hocys bendigaid, hollyhock, lit. 'blessed mallow' (where bendigaid is equivalent to Lat. benedictus).

Y. 'The hollyhock was doubtless so called from being brought from the Holy Land, where it is indigenous; Wedgwood.

HOLM, an islet in a river; flat land near a river. (E.) 'Holm, a river-island; Coles, ed. 1684. 'Holm, in old records, an hill, island, or fenny ground, encompassed with little brooks; Phillips, ed. 1706. The true sense is 'a mound,' or any slightly rising ground; and, as such ground often has water round it, it came to mean an island. Again, as a rising slope is often situate beside a river, it came to mean a bank, wharf, or dockyard, as in German. The most curious use is in A.S., where the main sea itself is often called kolm, from its convex shape, just as we use 'The Downs' (lit. hills) to signify the open sea. M. E. holm. 'Holm, place besydone a water, Hulmus; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 243; see Way's note, which is full of information about the word. [The Low Lat. hulmus is nothing but the Teutonic word Latinised.]—A. S. holm, a mound, a billow, the open sea; Grein, ii. 94. + Icel. hólmr, hólmi, holmr, an islet; 'even meadows on the shore with ditches behind them are in Icelandic called holms.' + Dan. holm, a holm, quay, dockyard. + Swed. kolme, a small island. + G. holm, a hill, island, dockyard, wharf (Flügel). + Russ. kholm, a hill. + Lat. columen, culmen, a mountaintop; cf. Lat. collis, a hill. See Culminate, Column.

HOLM-OAK, the evergreen oak. (E.) Cotgrave translates O. F. yeuse by 'the holme oake, barren scarlet oak, French oak.' The tree is the Quercus Ilex, or common evergreen oak, 'a most variable plant, . . with leaves varying from being as prickly as a holly to being as even at the edge as an olive; Eng. Cyclop. s.v. Quercus. Whether because it is an ever-green, or because its leaves are sometimes prickly, we at any rate know that it is so called from its resemblance β. The M. E. name for holly was holin, sometimes corrupted to holm or holy. 'Holme, or holy;' Prompt. Parv. p. 244; and see Way's note. 'Hollie, or Holm:ree;' Minsheu. The form holm is in Chaucer, C. T. 2923. Thus holm-oak = holly-oak. See Holly.

HOLOCAUST, an entire burnt sacrifice. (L., -Gk.) So called because the victim offered was burnt entire. It occurs early, in the Story of Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1319, 1326, where it is plainly taken from the Vulgate version of Gen. xxii. 8. - Lat. holocaustum; Gen. xxii. 8. – Gk. δλόκαυστον, neut. of δλόκαυστον, δλό- sympathy. – Gk. δμοιο-, crude form of δμοιοε, like, similar; and wasseauros, burnt whole. – Gk. δλο-, crude form of δλοε, whole, entire; τεν, acrist infin. of πάσχειν, to suffer. The Gk. δμοιοε is from δμός.

Lat. solidus; sales is from KU, to burn. See Solid and Calm. HOLSTER, a leathern case for a pistol. (Du.) Merely 'a case,' though now restricted to a peculiar use. In Buller, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1. l. 391.—Du. kolster, a pistol-case, holster; also, a soldier's knapsack (Sewel).

B. The word is not orig. E., though we find knapsack (Sewel).

B. The word is not orig. E., though we find kulstred = covered, Rom. of the Rose, 6146; but the Du. word is cognate with A. S. keol. tor, a hiding-place, cave, covering, Grein, ii. 67; as well as with Icel. hulstr, a case, sheath; Goth. hulistr, a veil, 2 Cor. iii. 13. y. Derived from Du. kullen, to cover, mask, disguise; similarly the Icel. hulstr is from Icel. hylja, to cover; and the Goth. hulistr is from Goth. huljan, to cover. The A.S. verb corresponding to the weak verbs Du. hullen, Icel. hyl,a, Goth. huljan, to cover, does not appear in MSS. but is preserved in the prov. Eng. hull, to cover up = M. E. hulen, to cover (Stratmann).

8. This verb is closely related to Goth. hulandi, a hollow, A.S. hol, a hole, and E. hole; and all these words are to be referred back to the Teutonic base HAL, to cover = \(\subseteq \text{KAL}, \) to cover, whence A. S. helan, Lat. celare, to cover; also Lat. occulere, to cover over. See Hole, Conceal, Occult. ' e. Fick gives the European form as HULISTRA = hul-is-tra, with double suffix, denoting the agent, so that the word means 'coverer;' cf. Lat. mag-is-ter, min-is-ter. Thus the suffix is not simply -ster, but -s-ter; where the -s- answers to Aryan suffix -as-, which mostly is used to form neuter nouns of action, seldom for nouns denoting an agent; Schleicher, Compendium, § 230. The suffix -ter is common, and occurs in Lat. pa-ter, ma-ter; and commonly denotes the agent. See also Hull, a related word.

HOLT, a wood, woody hill. (E.) 'Holt, a small wood, or grove;'
Kersey, ed. 1715. M. E. holt, Chaucer, C. T. 6. 'Hoc virgultum, a holt;' Wright's Vocab. i. 270, col. 1.—A.S. holt, a wood, grove; Grein, ii. 95. + Du. hout (for holt), wood, timber. + Icel. holt, a coper. + G. holz, a wood, grove; also wood, timber. B. Cf. also, wood, a coper shelter; from selve to hile. Also Irish coll. (so W. cell, a covert, shelter; from cell, to hide. Also Irish coill (pl. coillee), a wood; coillteach, woody; ceilt, concealment. orig. sense was 'covert' or 'shelter;' from & KAL, to hide. See Holster, Hole.

HOLY, sacred, pure, sainted. (E.) This word is nothing but M.E. hool (now spelt whole) with suffix -y. M.E. holi, holy; Chaucer, C. T. 178, 5095. - A. S. hálig; Grein, ii. 7. - A. S. hál, whole; with suffix -ig (= mod. E. ·y); so the orig. sense is 'perfect,' or excellent. + Du. heilig; from heel, whole. + Icel. heilagr, often contracted to helgr; from heil, hale, whole. + Dan. hellig; from heel. + Swed. helig; from hel. + G. heilig; from heil. See Whole, Hale. Der.

holi-ly; holi-ness, A. S. hálignes; holi-day, q. v.; holly hock (for holy hock), q. v.; hali-but (= holy but), q. v.

HOMAGE, the submission of a vassal to a lord. (F., = L.) In early use. In Rob. of Glouc. p. 46, l. 5; p. 134, l. 17; P. Plowman, B. xii. 155. = O. F. homage, later hommage, the service of a vassal. = Low Lat. homaticum (also hominium), the service of a vassal or 'man.'

- Lat. homo (stem homin-), a man; hence, a servant, vassal; lit. 'a β. From the creature of earth.'-Lat. humus, earth, the ground. base GHAMA, earth; whence also Russ. zemlia, earth, land; Gk. The A. S. guma, a χαμαί, on the ground. And see Human. man, is cognate with Lat. homo; see Bridegroom.

HOME, native place, place of residence. (E.) M. E. hoom, home; Chaucer, C. T. 2367; P. Plowman, B. v. 365; vi. 203; commonly in the phrase 'to go home.'—A. S. hám, home, a dwelling; Grein, ii. o. The acc. case is used adverbially, as in him e, a weeking; of the home; cf. Lat. ire domum. + Du. heim, in the comp. heimelijk, private, secret. + Icel. heimr, an abode, village; heima, home. + Dan. hiem, home; also used adverbially, as in E. + Swed. hem, home; and used as adv. + G. heim. + Goth. haims, a village. + Lithuanian këmas, a village (Fick, iii. 75). + Gk. κώμη, a village. β. All from KI. to rest; cf. Gk. κείμαι, I lie, κοῖτοι, sleep, κοίτη, a bed; Skt. ci, to lie down, repose. From the same root is Lat. ciuis, a villager, hence a citizen, and E. kive. See Hive, City, Cometery, Quiet.

Thus the orig serme in treating place. Deer home bred Rich II. i. Thus the orig. serne is 'resting-place.' Der. home-bred, Rich. II, i. 3. 187; home-fam; home-felt; home-keeping, Two Gent. of Verona, i. 1. 2; home-less, A. S. hamleds (Grein); home-less-ness; home-ly, Chaucer, C. T. 330; home-li-ness, M. E. homlinesse, Chaucer, C. T. 8305; home-made; home-sick; home-sick-ness; home-spun, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 79; home-stall; home-stead (see Stead); home-ward, A. S.

hamweard, Gen. xxiv. 61; home-wards.

HOMEOPATHY, HOMŒOPATHY, a particular treatment of disease. (Gk.) The system is an attempt to cure a disease by the use of small doses of drugs such as would produce the symptoms of the disease in a sound person. Hence the name, signifying 'similar feeling.' Proposed by Dr. Hahnemann, of Leipsic (died 1843). Englished from Gk. δμοιοπάθεια, likeness in feeling or condition.

HOMER, a large Hebrew measure. (Heb.) As a liquid measure, it has been computed at from 44 to 86 gallons. Also used as a dry measure. — Heb. chomer, a homer, also a mound (with initial cheth); from the root chamar, to undulate, surge up, swell up.

HOMESTEAD, a dwelling-place, mansion-house, with its enclosures. (E.) In Bp. Hall, Contemplations, New Test. b. ii. cont. 3. § 6 (Todd). Both house and komestead into seas are borne; Dryden (qu. in Todd, without a reference). Compounded of home and stead.

HOMICIDE, man-slaughter; also, a man-slayer.

1. Chaucer has homicide in the sense of manslaughter; C. T. 12591. - F. homicide, 'manslaughter;' Cot. - Lat. homicidium, manslaughter. - Lat. homi-, short for homin- or homini-, stem or crude form of homo, a man (see Homage); and -cidere, for cadere, to cut, to kill, from & SKID, to cut (see Scissors). 2. Chaucer also has: 'He that hateth his brother is an homicide;' Pers. Tale, De Ira, § 4.—F. homicide, 'an homicide, man-killer; 'Cot. - Lat. homicida, a man-slayer; similarly formed from homi- and -cidere. Der. homicid-al.

HOMILY, a plain sermon, discourse. (L., - Gk.) In As You Like It, iii. 2. 164. And see Pref. to the Book of Homilies. Englished from Lat. homilia, a homily; in partial imitation of O. F. homelie, of which Littré says that it was a form due to a dislike of having the same vowel recurring in two consecutive syllables, as would have been the case if the form homilie had been retained. - Gk. ouila, a living together, intercourse, converse, instruction, homily. - Gk. δμιλοε, an assembly, throng, concourse. - Gk. $\delta\mu$ -, short for $\delta\mu$ 0-, crude form of δμός, like, same, cognate with E. Same; and ίλη, είλη, a crowd, band, from είλειν, to press or crowd together, compress, shut in; which from WAR, to surround. Cf. Skt. vri, vri, to cover, surround. See Curtius, ii. 169, 170. [The Gk. είλειν is not to be connected with Lat. uoluere.] Der. homiletic, from Gk. δμιλητικόs, sociable, the adj. formed from δμλία, used in E. as the adj. belonging to homily; hence homiletic-al, homiletic-s. Also homil-ist (= homily-ist). HOMINY, maize prepared for food. (West Indian.) 'From Indian authiminea, parched corn;' Webster.

HOMMOCK, a hillock; see Hummock.

HOMOGENEOUS, of the same kind or nature throughout.

(Gk.) 'Homogeneal, of one or the same kind, congenerous;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Of homogeneous things;' State Trials, Earl of Strafford, an. 1640 (R.) Englished from Gk. δμογενής, of the same race. – Gk. δμο-, for δμός, cognate with E. same; and γένος, cognate with E. kin. See Same and Kin. Der. homogeneous-ness.

HOMOLOGOUS, agreeing, corresponding. (Gk.) 'Homologous having the same reason or proportion; Phillips, ed. 1706. Englished from Gk. δμόλογος, agreeing, lit. saying the same. - Gk. δμο., crude form of δμός, cognate with E. same; and λόγος, a saying, from λέγειν, to say. See Same and Logic. Der. so also homology, agreement, from Gk. δμολογία.

HOMONYMOUS, like in sound, but different in sense. (L., - Gk.) Applied to words. In Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. - Lat. homonymus, of the same name. - Gk. δμώνυμος, having the same name. -Gk. δμο-, crude form of δμόε, cognate with E. same; and δνυμα, Æolic form of ὅνομα, a name, cognate with E. name. See Same and Name. The Gk. w is due to the double o. Der. homonymous-ly; also homonym, sb., from F. homonyme, 'a word of divers significations; Cot. Hence homonym-y. ¶ Similarly w homo-phonous, like-sounding; from Ck. φωνή, a voice, sound. ¶ Similarly we have HONE, a stone for sharponing various implements. (E.) Hoone, barbarys instrument, cos; Prompt. Parv. p. 245. - A. S. hán, a hone; in Bosworth's smaller A.S. Dict., without authority; but see references in Leo; it can also be inferred with certainty from the M. E. and Icel. forms; and, still more clearly, from the derived verb hanan, to stone, John, x. 32. + Icel. hein, a hone. + Swed. hen, a hone (Widegren). + Skt. cina, a grind-stone; from 60, to sharpen, allied to ci, to sharpen. Cf. Gk. κῶνος, a cone, peak; which is the same word. See Cone.

HONEST, honourable, frank, just. (F., -L.) M. E. honest, frequently in the sense of 'honourable;' Chaucer, C. T. 246, 8302. — O. F. honeste (Burguy); later honneste, 'honest, good, virtuous,' Cot.; mod. F. honnête. Lat. honestus, honourable; put for honas-tus, from Lat. konos (konas), honour. See Honour. Der. konest-ty; konest-y, M. E. konestee, Chaucer, C. T. 6849, from O. F. konestet (Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 5, 1, 7) = Lat. acc. konestatem,

HONEY, a fluid collected by bees from plants. (E.) M. E. hony, Rob. of Glouc., p. 43; P. Plowman, B. xv. 56; huni, Ancren Riwle, p. 404.—A. S. hung, Mark, i. 6. + Du. honig. + Icel. hunang. + Dan. honning. + Swed. haning. + G. honig. M. H. G. honec, O. H. G. honong.

B. The European type is HUNANGA or HONANGA, Fick, iii. 78. Perhaps allied to Skt. hana, grain, broken rice, the cf. Goth. hunopan, to beast; Romans, xi. 18. Doublet, whoop, same, like, cognate with E. same. See Same and Pathos. Der. Fine red powder which adheres to the rice-berry beneath the husk. The suffix is probably adjectival, so that the sense may have been 'grain-like,' or 'like broken rice.' Der. koney-bag, Mid. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 171; koney-bee, Hen. V, i. 2. 187; koney-comb, q. v.; koney-dew, Titus, iii. 1. 112; koney-ed, Hen. V, i. 1. 50; koney-moon, 'the first sweet month of matrimony,' Kersey, ed. 1715; koney-mouthed, Wint. Ta. ii. 2. 33; koney-suckle, q. v.; koney-tongued, L. L. L. v. 2. 334. HONEYCOMB, a mass of cells in which bees store honey. (E.)

M. E. honycomb, Chaucer, C. T. 3698.—A. S. hunig-camb; Bosworth, Lye.—A. S. hunig, honey; and camb, a comb. See Honey and Comb.

The likeness to a comb is fanciful, but there is no doubt about the word. It seems peculiar to E.; cf. G. honig-scheibe = a 'shive' or slice of honey, a honey-comb; Swed. honingskaka, Dan. honningkage (honey-cake); Icel. hunangsseimr, Du. honigzeem (honey-string). Der. honeycomb-ed.

HONEYSUCKLE, the name of a plant. (E.) So named because honey can be easily suckled or sucked from it. M. E. honysoele, Prompt. Parv. p. 245. – A. S. hunigsucle* (Lye); an unauthorised word. We find, however, A. S. huni-suge, privet, Wright's Vocab. i.

33, col. 1; named for a similar reason. See Honey and Suckle.

In early use. M. E. honour, Chaucer, C. T. 46; carlier honure, Layamon, 6084 (later text). The verb honouren is in Rob. of Glouc., p.

14, l. 16. - O. F. homer, honeur. - Lat. honorem, acc. of honos, honor, honour. Root uncertain; the word seems to be ho-nos, with suffix -nos (=-nas). Der. honour, v., honour-able, Chaucer, C. T. 12574; honour-abl-y, honour-able-ness, honour-ed, honour-less; honor-ar-y, used by Addison (Todd), from Lat. honorarius; also honest, q. v. The spelling honor assumes that the word is from the Lat. nominative; which is not the case.

HOOD, a covering, esp. for the head. (E.) M. E. hood, Chaucer, C. T. 195; P. Plowman, B. v. 329; hod, Ancren Riwle, p. 56.—A. S. hód, a hood; in a gloss (Leo, Lye). + Du. hoed, a hat. + G. hut, O. H. G. huat, hót, a hat.

β. Allied to E. heed; cf. G. hüten, to protect. Cf. also Gk. κοτύλη, a hollow vessel. Perhaps from γKAT, to hide. See Cotyledon and Heed.

Der. hood-ed; hood-man-blind, Hamlet, iii. 4. 77; hood-wink, Romeo, i. 4. 4, lit. to make one wink or close his eyes, by covering him with a hood.

-HOOD, -HEAD, suffix. (E.) A. S. kild, state, quality; cognate with Goth. haidus, manner, way, and Skt. ketu, a sign by which a thing is known. - KIT, to know; Skt. kit, to perceive, know (Vedic).

HOOF, the horny substance covering the feet of horses, &c. (E.) M. E. hoof, huf; dat. sing. hufe, Prick of Conscience, 4179; pl. hoves, Gawayn and the Green Knight, 459. - A. S. hof, to translate Lat. ungula; Wright's Vocab. i. 43. col. 2, 71. col. 2. + Du. hoef. + Icel. hofr. + Dan. hov. + Swed. hof. + G. huf. + Russ. kopuito, a hoof. + Skt. gapha, a hoof, esp. a horse's hoof. Root uncertain. Der. hoof-ed, hoof-less.

HOOK, a bent piece of metal. (E.) M. E. hok, Havelok, 1102; pl. hokes, P. Plowman, B. v. 603. – A. S. hoc, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 362; also hooc; 'Arpago, vel palum, hooc;' Wright's Vocab., i. 16, col. 2. + Du. haak. + Icel. haki. + Dan. hage. + Swed. hake, a hook, clasp, hinge. + G. haken, a hook, clasp. Cf. Skt. chakra, a wheel. β. Cf. also Gk. κύκλος, a circle, whence E. cycle; Skt. kuch, to bend. B. Cf. also GK. kukhos, a circle, whence E. cycle; Skt. kuch, to bend, y. Perhaps from the KAK. to surround, Fick, i. 515; the Skt. kuch being from a variant KWAK of the same root. See Hatch (1), Hucklebone. Der. hook, v.; hook-ed, P. Plowman, B. prol. 53; hook-er; hook-nosed, 2 Hen. IV, iv. 3. 35; also arquebus, q. v.

Hence 'by hook or by crook;' Spenser, F. Q. v. 2. 27.

HOOKAH, HOOKA, a kind of pipe for smoking. (Arab.) Best spelt hooka. 'Divine in hookas, glorious in a pipe;' Byron, The Island of ii st 10.—Arab hyang a casket a pipe for smoking.

Hest speit hooka. Divine in hookas, glorious in a pripe; Byron, The Island, c. ii. st. 19.—Arab. huqqa, a casket, a pipe for smoking. Cf. Arab. huqq, a hollow place. Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 201; Rich. Dict. p. 574. The initial letter is hú; the third letter, káf. HOOP (1), a pliant strip of wood or metal bent into a band. (E.) M. E. hoop, hope, hope. 'Hoope, hope, cuneus, circulus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 245. 'Hic circulus, a hope;' Wright's Vocab. i. 276, col. 1. Doubtless an E. word, but the supposed A. S. hóp is quite unauthorised, and due to Somner. + Du. hoep, a hoop. B. Cf. also Icel hád. Lowland Sc. hote a haven a hav. named from its riper. Icel. hop, Lowland Sc. hope, a haven, a bay; named from its ringike form; also prov. E. hope, meaning (1) a hollow, (2) a mound, according as the flexure is concave or convex.

γ. Connected with Gk. κάμπτειν, to bend (Fick, iii. 62). The Icel. hóp well answers to Skt. chápa, a bow; from the KAP (nasalised form KAMP), to vibrate, undulate, bend; Fick, i. 39. See Hump, and hird was honge of more, as in the state of the form; from F. Auppe, O. F. Auppe, huppe; spelt huppe in Philip de Thaun, Livre des Creatures, l. 1238, pr. in Wright's Popular Treatises on Science, p. 119.

B. Both E. hooppe and F. huppe Treatises on Science, p. 119. β. Both E. hoopee and F. huppe are from Lat. upupa, a hoopee; the initial k in the mod. E. form being borrowed from the h in the F. form. γ. Called έποψ in Greek; both Lat. up-up-a and Gk. $(\pi - o\psi) = ap-ap-s$ are words of onomatopoetic origin, due to an imitation of the bird's cry. The bird has a remarkable tust on its head; hence F. huppe, a tuft of feathers. But the tuft is named from the bird; not vice verså.

HOOT, to shout in derision. (Scand.) M. E. houten, whence the pp. yhouted, yhowted = hooted at; P. Plowman, B. ii. 218; also huten, Ormulum, 2034. Of Scand. origin; the original being preserved in O. Swed. huta, in the phrase huta ut en, lit. to hoot one out, to cast out with contempt, as one would a dog (Ihre); Swed. huta ut, to take one up sharply. B. Formed from the Swed. interj. hut, begone! a word prob. of onomatopoetic origin, and perhaps Celtic; to the pursuit, from the interjection hiu (mod. G. hui), hallo! So also Dan. hie, to shout, hoot, halloo, from hui, hallo! The loss of t in the Danish form well illustrates the O. F. huer, to shout. Der. hoot, in the Danish form well illustrates the O. F. huer, to shout. Der. hoot, sb.; hue, in the phrase hue and cry; see Hue (2).

HOP (1), to leap on one leg. (E.) Formerly used of dancing on both legs. M. E. hoppen, huppen. 'At every bridal wolde he singe and happe,' i. e. dance; Chaucer, C. T. 4373. 'To huppe abowte' = to dance about, P. Plowman, C. xviii. 279.—A. S. hoppian, to leap, dance; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 202, l. 22. + Du. happen, to hop. + Icel. hoppa, to hop, skip. +Swed. hoppa, to leap, jump, hop. + Dan. hoppe (the same). +G. hüpfen (the same). β. All from the Teutonic base HUP, to hop, go up and down; Fick, iii. 77.—

KUP, to go up and down; whence Skt. kup, to be excited, and Lat. cupido, strong desire; see Cupidity. Der. hop, sb. (we still contains the high senses field denses for desire). sometimes use hop in the old sense of 'a dance'); hopp-er (of a mill), M. E. hoper or hopper, Chaucer, C. T. 4034, 4037; hop-cotch, a game in which children hop over lines scotched or traced on the ground (see Scotch); hopp-le, a fetter for horses, causing them to hop or progress slowly, a frequentative form. Also hobb-le (=hopp-le); see Hobble. Also grass-hopper, q. v. And see Hip (1), Heap, Hump, Hoop (1); all from the same root.

HOP (2), the name of a plant. (Du.) In Cotgrave, to translate O. F. houbelon (= F. houblon). Also in Minsheu's Dict., ed. 1627. 'Hoppe, humulus, lupulus;' Levins, ed. 1570. 'Hoppes in byere' [bccr]; Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 21. 'Introduced from the Netherlands into England about 1524, and used in brewing; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. — Du. hop, the hop-plant. + G. hopfen, the hop. A. We also find Icel. humall, Swed. and Dan. humle, O. Du. hommel, the hop (Kilian); whence was formed the late Lat. humulus, now used as the botanical name. [The F. houblon is of Walloon origin, and ultimately from the Dutch.] γ. These forms must be connected, and point back to a base hump (see Hump) and to the γ KAMP, to bend; cf. Gk. καμπύλοs, bent, crooked, curved; in allusion to the twining nature of the plant. See Hoop (1). 8. This is made clearer by noting that the Gk. κοῦφο, light, Skt. chapala, trembling, 8. This is made unsteady, giddy, wanton, are from the same \checkmark KAMP; and that the Skt. kamp also means to tremble, vibrate. These words illustrate the loss of m, and further give to the hop the notion of slenderness and lightness as well as of twining.

We may also note that the \checkmark KAP, KAMP is probably related to the \checkmark KUP, producing a sort of connection with the verb to hop above. Der. hop-vine, hopbind (corruptly hop-bine).

HOPE (1), expectation; as a verb, to expect. (E.) weak, and seems to be derived from the sb. M. E. hope, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 88. M. E. hope, verb, sometimes in the sense 'to expect;' as, 'Our manciple, I hope he wol be deed' = I fear he will be dead; Chaucer, C. T. 4027. See P. Plowman, C. xviii, 313, and the note. - A. S. hopa, sb., only used in the comp. tohopa. hope, Grein, ii. 545; hopian, v. to hope, Grein, ii. 96. + Du. hoop, sb., hopen, v. + Dan. haab, sb., haabe, v. + Swed. hopp, sb.; whence the reflexive verb hoppas, to hope. + M. H. G. hoffe, sb., represented by mod. G. hoffmang; G. hoffen, to hope.

B. Perhaps allied to Lat. cupere, to desire; see Cupidity.

Der. hope-ful, hope-ful-ly, hope-ful-ness;

hope-less, -ly, -ness.

HOPE (2), a troop. (Du.) Only in the phr. forlorn hope, North's Plutarch, ed. 1631, p. 372; from Du. verloren hoop; See Forlorn.

which is the true E. form; see Whoop. Der. hoop-ing-cough, a Here hoop = band, troop as in 'een hoop krijgks-volck, a troupe or a cough, accompanied with a hoop or convulsive noisy catching of the breath; formerly called the chincough. See Chincough. Also spelt whooping-cough, but this makes no real difference.

HOOPOE, the name of a bird. (L.)

a. The old name for the bird was hoope or hoofe, as in Minsheu's Dict., ed. 1627. This is the bird was hoope or hoofe, as in Minsheu's Dict., ed. 1627. This is the lift camp, horde of Tartars; 'also urdú, a camp. a party; Rich. Pers. This is the lift camp. The lift is the lif camp, horde of lartars; also urdi, a camp, an army; Rich. Pers. Dict., pp. 56, 201. First applied to the Tatar tribes. HOREHOUND, a plant; see Hoarhound. HORIZON, the circle bounding the view where earth and sky seem to meet. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Shak. 3 Hen. VI, iv. 7. 81. [But we also find M. E. orizonte, Chaucer, Treatise on the Astrolabe, prol. 1. 7. This is (through the O. F.) from the Lat. acc. horizontem.] -F. horizon, 'a horizon;' Cot. - Lat. horizon (stem horizon'-). - Gk. opicar, the bounding or limiting circle; orig. the pres. pt. of the vb. δρίζειν, to bound, limit. - Gk. δρος, a boundary, limit; of which the Ionic form is object = bpfos, from the base op; Curtius, ii. 350. — AR, perhaps in the sense of 'reach;' cf. Skt. ri, to go, to go to; Fick assigns the meaning 'to separate;' i. 21. Der. horizont-al, horizont-al-ly.

HORN, the hard substance projecting from the heads of some animals. (E.) M. E. horn, Chaucer, C. T. 116.—A. S. horn, Grein, ii. 98. + 1cel., Dan., and Swed. horn. + Du. horen [for horn, the e being due to the trilling of the r.] + G. Acrn. + Goth. Acurn. + W., Gael., and Irish corn. + Lat. cornu.

B. All from a base kar-na, 8. All from a base kar-na, a horn, the -na being a suffix which does not appear in the Gk. nép-as, a horn (base kar-wa). Probably from KAR, to be hard; see Curtius, i. 177, 180. Der. horn-beam, a tree; horn-bill, a bird; horn-blende, a mineral term, wholly borrowed from G. horn-blende, where -blende is from blenden, to dazzle, lit. to make blind; horn-book, L. L. L. v. 1. 49; horn-ed, Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 243, spelt hornyd in Prompt. Parv. p. 247; horn-owl or horn-ed owl; horn-pipe, Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 47, a dance so called because danced to an instrument with that name, mentioned in the Rom. of the Rose, 4250; horn-stone; horn-work, a term in fortification, named from its projections; hornless; horn-y, Milton, P. R. ii. 267; also horn-et, q. v. From the same

From the same source are corn (2), corn-er, corn-et, &c.

HORNET, a kind of large wasp. (E). So called from its antennæ or horns. In Holland's Pliny, b. xi. c. 21.—A.S. hyrnet, hyrnyt; the pl. hyrnytta occurs in Exod. xxiii. 28. 'Crabro, hyrnet;' Ælfric's Gloss., De Nominibus Insectorum. Formed, with dimin. suffix -et, from horn, a horn, by regular vowel-change; cf. hyrned == horned, Grein, ii. 133. The vowel has, however, reverted in mod. E.

horned, Grein, il. 133. The vower has, nowever, reverted in mod. 2. to the original o, for clearness. See Horn.

HOROLOGE, an instrument for telling the hours, a clock.

(F., = Lat., = Gk.) In Shak, Oth. ii. 3. 135. Perhaps obsolete.

M. E. orologe, Chaucer, C. T. 14860. = O. F. horologe, later horloge; 'Horloge, a clock or dyall;' Cot. = Lat. horologium, a sun-dial, a water-clock. = Gk. ἀρολύγιον, the same. = Gk. ἀρο., for ἄρα, a season, when the same and λομον forward from λίνειν to tell. See Hour period, hour; and -λογιον, formed from λέγειν, to tell. See Hour and Logic. Der. horolog-y, horolog-i-c-al.

HOROSCOPE, an observation of the sky at a person's nativity. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) A term in astrology. In Cotgrave. [Chaucer uses the Lat. term horoscopum; Treatise on the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, pt. ii. § 4. 8. 36.] - F. horoscope, 'the horoscope, or ascendant at a nativity;' Cot. - Lat. horoscopus, a horoscope; from horoscopus, adj., that shews the hour. - Gk. ωροσκόποι, a horoscope; from the adj. ώροσκόπος, observing the hour. - Gk. ώρο-, for ώρα, season, hour; and σκοπείν, to consider, related to σκέπτομαι, I consider. See Hour and Spy. Der. horoscop-y, horoscop-i-c, horoscop-ist.

HORRIBLE, dreadful, fearful, (F., -L.) M. E. horrible, also written orrible, Chaucer, C. T. 4893. - O. F. horrible, 'horrible, terrible;' Cot. - Lat. horriblis, terrible, lit. to be trembled at; formed with suffix -bilis from horrere, to tremble, shake. See Horror. Der. horribl-y, Chaucer, C. T. 15435; horrible-ness.

HORRID, dreadful. (Lat.) Directly from Latin. Spenser uses it in the Lat. sense of 'rough.' 'His haughty helmet, horrid all with gold;' F.Q. i. 7, 31,—Lat. horridus, rough, bristly, &c.—Lat. horrere, to be rough. See Horror. Der. horrid-ly, horrid-ness.

HORRIFY, to make afraid, scare. (Lat.) A late word; not in Johnson. Coined, by analogy with words in -/y (mostly of F. origin), from Lat. horrificare, to cause terror. - Lat. horrificus, causing terror. -Lat. horri-, from horrere, to dread; and ficare, for facere, to make. Der. From Lat. horrificus has also been coined the adj. horrific;

Thomson's Seasons, Autumn, 782. See Horror.

HORROR, dread, terror. (Lat.) Formerly also spelt horrour (Minsheu), as if taken from the French; yet such does not seem to have been the case. We find sad horror' in Spenser, F. Q. ii, 7. 23; and horrors in Hamlet, ii. 1. 84, in the first folio edition. Cf. F horreur, 'horror,' Cot. - Lat. horror, terror, dread. - Lat. horrere, to bristle, be rough; also, to dread, with reference to the bristling of the hair through terror. Cf. Skt. hrich, to bristle, said of the hair,

Sagar By

(cf. Lat. hirsulus, rough, shaggy); from & GHARS, to be rough (Fick, i. 589); probably related to & GHAR, to grind; see Grind. Der. From Lat. horrere we have horrent (from the stem of the pres. part.); also horri-ble, q. v., horri-d, q. v.; horri-fy, q. v.; and horri-fic. HORSE, a well-known quadruped. (E.) The final e merely marks that the s is hard, and is not to be pronounced as z. M. E. hors; pl. hors (unchanged), also hors-es, as now. Chaucer, C. T. 74, 10504. 'They sellen bothe here hors and here harneys' = they sell both their horses and their harness; Mandeville's Travels, p. 38. - A. S. hors, neut.; pl. hors, Grein, ii. 98. + Icel. hross; also hors. + Du. ros. + G. ross, M. H. G. ros, ors, O. H. G. hros.

B. It is usual to compare ross, M. H. G. ros, ors, O. H. G. hros. B. It is usual to compare these words with the Skt. hresh, to neigh; Benfey's Dict., p. 1126. But the comparison, obvious as it may look, is unlikely, since the E. A and Skt. A are not corresponding letters. Indeed, Fick takes the Teutonic type to be HORSA, as if the A.S. were the older form, and ingeniously refers it to a Teutonic root HAR (HOR), to run, cognate with Lat. currers, to run, whence also E. courser with the sense of 'horse.' See Courser.

Y. This supposition is made sense of 'horse.' See Courser. Y. This supposition is made more probable by the fact that the same base will account for A.S. horse, swift, Grein, ii. 98; cf. M. H. G. rosch, swift; and see Rash. Der. horse, verb, Wint. Ta. i. 2. 288; horse-back, M. E. hors-bak, Gower, C. A. iii. 256; horse-block, horse-breaker, horse-fly, horse-guards; horse-hair, Cymb. ii. 3. 33; horse-leech. Hen. V, iii. 3. 57; horse-man, Wint. Ta. iv. 3. 67; horse-man-ship, Hen. V, iii. 7. 58; horse-power, horse-race, horse-racing; horse-shoe, Merry Wives, iii. 5. 123; horse-tail, horse-trainer, horse-whip, sb. and vb. Also numerous other companying the power hand head head and the horse-tond all readily understood pounds, as horse-bread, horse-flesh, horse-pond, all readily understood. Also horse-chesnut, said to be so called because the nuts were ground and given to horses; the word also occurs in several plant-names, as horse-foot, horse-knop, horse-radich, horse-tail, horse-thistle, horse-tongue, vetch. Also wal-rus.

HORTATORY, full of encouragement. (L.) 'He animated his soldiers with many hortatorie orations; 'Holland, Ammianus, p. 202 (R.) Formed as if from Lat. hortatorius*, a coined word from hortator, an encourager. - Lat. hortatum, supine of hortari, to encourage; prob. connected with hori (pres. tense horior), to urge, incite. Root uncertain. Der. So also hortative (Minsheu), a better form, from Lat. hortations, encouraging; also ex-hort, q. v.

HORTICULTURE, the art of cultivating gardens, gardening. (L.) A modern word. Coined from horti- = horto-, crude form of Aortus, a garden; and culture, Englished form of Lat. cultura, cultivation. See Culture. β. Lat. hortus is cognate with Gk. vation. See Culture. β. Lat. hortus is cognate with Gk. χόρτος, a yard; also with E. garth and yard. See Cohort. Der. horticultur-al, horticultur-ist.

HOSANNA, an expression of praise. (Gk., - Heb.) In Matt. xxi. 9, 15; &c. It is rather a form of prayer, as it signifies 'save, we pray.' - Gk. &varvá, Matt. xxi. 9. - Heb. hoshiáhnná, save, we pray (or save, I pray); I's. cxviii. 25. - Heb. hóshi'a, to save, Hiphil of HOSE, a covering for the legs and feet; stockings. (E.) M. E. hose, pl. hosen; Chaucer, C. T. 458; Ancren Riwle, p. 420. – A. S. hose, pl. hosen; 'Caliga vel ocrea, hosa;' Wright's Vocab. i. 81, col. 2. + Du. hoss, hose, stocking, spout, water-spout. + Icel. hosa, the hose covering the leg between the knee and ankle, a kind of gaiter. + Dan. hose, pl. hoser, hose, stockings. + G. hose, breeches. Root unknown. Cf. Russ. hoshulia, a fur jacket. Der. hos-i-er, where the inserted i answers to the y in law-y-er, bow-y-er; hos-i-er-y.

HOSPICE, a house for the reception of travellers as guests. (F.,-L.) Modern; chiefly used of such houses in the Alps.-F. hospice. a hospice. - Lat. hospitium, a hospice. - Lat. hospiti-, crude form of hospes, a guest; also, a host. See Host (1), Hospital.

HOSPITABLE, shewing kindness to strangers. (F.,-L.) In K. John, ii. 244; Cor. i. 10. 26.-F. hospitable, 'hospitable;' Cot. Coined, with suffix -able, from Low Lat. hospitare, to receive as a guest; Ducange. - Lat. hospit, stem of hospes, a guest, host. See guest; Ducange.—Lat. hospit-, stem of hospes, a guest, host. See Host (1). Der. hospitabl-y, hospitable-ness.

HOSPITAL, a building for receiving guests; hence, one for receiving sick people. (F.,—L.) M.E. hospital, hospitalle; Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 81; hospital, Eng. Gilds, ed. T. Smith, p. 350, l. 25. – O. F. hospital, 'an hospitall, a spittle;' Cot. – Low Lat. hospitale, a large house, palace, which occurs A. D. 1243 (Brachet); a sing. formed from Lat. pl. hospitalia, apartments for strangers. Lat. hospita, stem of hospies; see Host (1). Der. hospitall-er, M. E. hospitaler. Chaucer, C. T. Persones Tale, De Luxuria; hospital-i-iy, As You Like It, ii. 4. 82. Doublets, hostel, hotel, spital.

HOST (1), one who entertains guests. (F., -L.) M. E. host, hoste, Chaucer, C. T. 749, 753, &c. -O. F. hoste, 'an hoste, inn-keeper;'

Cot. Cf. Port. hospede, a host, a guest. - Lat. hospitem, acc. of hospes, (1) a host, entertainer of guests, (2) a guest. B. The base esp. as a token of fear or of pleasure. Thus horrers is for horsers crude form of hossis, a guest, an enemy; see Host (2). Again, the (cf. Lat. hirsutus, rough, shaggy); from GHARS, to be rough suffix -pit- is supposed to be from Lat. posts, powerful, the old sense of the word being 'a lord;' cf. Skt. pati, a master, governor, lord; see Possible.

y. Thus hospes = hosti-pets = guest-master, guest-lord, a master of a house who receives guests. Cf. Russ. gospode, the Lord, gospodare, governor, prince; from goste, a guest, and -pode = Skt. pati, a lord. Der. host-ess, from O. F. hostesse, 'an hostesse,' Cot.; also host-el, q. v., host-ler, q. v., hotel, q. v.; and from the same

Cot.; also howes, q. v., host-ter, q. v., hoste, q. v.; and from the same source, hostital, q. v., hospice, q. v., hospicable, q. v.

HOST* (2), an army. (F., -L.) The orig. sense is 'enemy' or 'foreigner.' M. E. host, Chaucer, C. T. 1028; frequently spelt ost, Will. of Palerne, 1127, 1197, 3767. - O. F. host, 'an host, or army, a troop; 'Cot. - Lat. hostem, acc. of hostis, a stranger, an enemy; hence, a hostile army, host. + Russ. goste, a guest, visitor, stranger, alien. + A. S. gost; see Guest. Der. host-ile, Cor. iii. 3. 97, from F. hostile, which from Lat. hostilis; host-ile-ly; host-il-i-ty, K. John, iv. 2. 247. from F. hostilité. which from Lat. acc. hostiliatem. iv. 2. 247, from F. hostilité, which from Lat. acc. hostilitatem. Doublet, guest.

¶ Further remarks are made in Wedgwood.

Doublet, guest. ¶ Further remarks are made in Wedgwood.

HOST (3), the consecrated bread of the eucharist. (L.) 'In as many hoosies as be consecrate;' Bp. Gardner, Of the Presence in the Sacrament, fol. 35 (R.) And in Holland's Plutarch, p. 1097 (R.) Coined by dropping the final syllables of Lat. hostia, a victim in a sacrifice; afterwards applied to the host in the eucharist. B. The old form of hostia was fostia (Festus), and it signified 'that which is struck or slain.' - Lat. hostire (old form fostire), to strike.

y. Probably from a of GHAS, to strike (Fick, i. 582); whence also E. gad, goad, and Lat. hasta, a spear; cf. Skt. hims, to strike, an anomalous desiderative form from han. to strike HOSTAGE, a person delivered to the enemy as a pledge for the performance of the conditions of a treaty. (F., -L.) In early use. M.E. hostage, Layamon, 4793, 8905 (later text only). - O. F. hostage, an hostage, pawne, surety, Cot.; mod. F. otage. Cf. Ital. ostaggio; Prov. ostatje, Bartsch, Chrestomathie Prov. col. 173, l. 18. - Low Lat. obsidaticum*, acc. of obsidaticus*, not found, yet preserved also in Ital. statico, a hostage, and regularly formed from late Lat. obsidatus, the condition of a hostage, hostage-ship. Obsidatus is formed (by analogy with principatus from princip-, stem of princeps) from Lat. obsid-, stem of obses, a hostage, one who remains behind with the enemy.

Grene Knight, 805.—O. F. hostel, an inn. Regularly contracted from Low Lat. hospitale; see Hospital. Doublets, hotel, hosfrom Low Lat. hospitale; see Hospital. Doublets, hotel, hospital, spital. Der. hostel-ry, M. E. hostelrie, Chaucer, C. T. 23;

HOSTLER, OSTLER, a man who takes care of horses at an inn. (F., -L.) 'Hostler, the horse-groom, but properly the keeper of an hostelry;' Coles, ed. 1684. Orig. the inn-keeper himself, so hostelier, 'an inn-keeper;' Cot. = O. F. hostel; see Hostel.

HOT, very warm, fiery, ardent. (E.)

The vowel was formerly long. M. E. hot, hoot, hote, hote, Chaucer, C. T. 396, 1739. 'Nether cold, nether hoot;' Wyclif, Rev. iii. 16. - A. S. hat, hot; Grein, ii. 15. + Du. heet. + Icel. heitr. + Swed. het. + Dan. hed. + G. heiss, O. H. G. heiz. β. The common Teut. type is HAITA (Fick, iii. 75). from the base HIT, to be hot, to burn (cf. Icel. hiti, heat, G. hitze); extended from the base HI, to burn, whence Goth. hais, a torch. kaitra, heat. Der. hot-bed; hot-blooded, Merry Wives, v. 5. 2; hot-headed; hot-house, Meas. ii. 1. 66; hot-ly, hot-spur. Also heat, q.v.

HOTCH-POT, HODGE-PODGE, a farrago, confused mass. (F., - Du.) Hodge-podge is a mere corruption; the old term is hotchpot. The intermediate form hotch-potch is in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 336. 'A hotchpot, or mingle-mangle;' Minsheu. hotchpotte, incisium; Levins. - F. hochepot, 'a hotch-pot, or gallimaufrey, a confused mingle-mangle of divers things jumbled or put together; Cot. Cf. F. hocher, 'to shake, wag, jog, nob, nod;' id. O. Du. hutspot, 'hodge-podge, beef or mutton cut into small pieces;' Sewel. So called from shaking or jumbling pieces of meat in a pot. = O. Du. huts-, base of hutsen, to shake, jolt (Oudemans); and Du. pot, a pot. From hutsen was also formed the frequentative verb huiselen, 'to shake up and down, either in a tub, bowl, or basket;' Sewel. The verb hutsen was also spelt hotsen (Sewel), which comes still closer to the French. See Hustle and Pot.

HOTEL, an inn, esp. of a large kind. (F., -L.) A modern word; borrowed from mod. F. hôtel = O. F. hostel. See Hostel.

HOTTENTOT, a native of the Cape of Good Hope. (Du.) The word is traced in Wedgwood, who shews that the Dutch gave the hospit- is commonly taken to be short for hosti-pit-; where hosti- is the natives this name in ridicule of their peculiar speech, which sounded to them like stuttering. He cites the word from Schouten (1653). with house, but probably often supposed to be related to it; the old En is Dutch for 'and; hence hot en tot = 'hot' and 'tot; where form was house, the addition ings being English. HOUDAH, HOWDAH, a seat to be fixed upon an elephant's back. (Arab.) Used in works of travel; and in The Surgeon's Daughter, c. xiv. by Sir W. Scott.—Arab. hawdaj, a litter carried by a camel, in which Arabian ladies travel; a seat to place on an elephant's back; Rich. Dict. p. 1694, col. 2; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col.

700. (Initial letter, kú, the 27th letter.)
HOUGH, HOCK, the joint in the hind-leg of a quadruped, between the knee and fetlock, corresponding to the ancie-joint in man; in man, the back part of the knee-joint. (E.) Now generally spelt hock; but formerly hough. 'Unto the camel's hough;' 2 Esdras, xv. 36. (A. V.) Cotgrave translates F. jarret by 'the hamme, the hough.' M. E. houch, Wallace, ed. Jamieson, i. 322. The pl. hojes occurs in Sir Gawayn and the Grene Knight, l. 1357.—A. S. hoh, the heel; Grein, ii. 92. + Icel. há, in the comp. hásinn = hock-sinew. + Dan. ha, in the comp. hase, corruption of hasen = hock-sinew. + Du. hak, the heel; also, a hoe. β. Probably allied to Lat. coxa, the hip. The E. heel may perhaps also be related; see Heel. Fick (iii. 59) also compares the Lithuanian kinka, a knee-joint; and the Skt. kakska, an arm-pit. Der. h nigh, verb, to cut the hamstring of a horse, Josh. xi. 6, 2 Sam. viii. 4; often corrupted to hox, sometimes spelt hocks; see Shak. Wint. Ta. i. 2. 244; Wyclif, Josh. xi. 6 (later version); and examples in Richardson, s. v. hock.

HOUND, a dog. (E.) M.E. hound, hund; P. Plowman, B. v. 261; Havelok, 1994. – A. S. hund, Matt. vii. 6. + Du. hond. + Icel. hundr. + Dan, and Swed. hund. + G. hund. + Goth, hunds. B. All from a Teutonic type HUN-DA, extended from HUN = HWAN; a form β. All from cognate with the base of Lat. can-is, a dog. Gk. κυών (genitive κυν-ύs), Skt. çvan, a dog; the Aryan base being KWAN, a dog. Hence also Irishru, Gael. cu, W. ci, a dog; Russ. suka, a bitch. Root uncertain. Der. hound, verb, in Otway, Caius Marius, Act iv. sc. 2 (R.); houndfish, Chaucer, C. T. 9699; hound's-tongue.

HOUR, a certain definite space of time. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. houre, Chaucer, C.T. 14733. - O. F. hore, heure (mod. F. heure). -Lat. hora. = Gk. ωρα, a season, hour; cf. ωρος, a season, a year; probably cognate with E. year. = 4 YÅ, to go, an extension of 4 I, to go; cf. Skt. yan, time. See Year. Der. hour-ly, adj. Temp. iv. 108, adv. Temp. i. 2. 402; hour-glass, Merch. of Ven. i. 1. 25; hourplace. Also (from Lat. hora) hor-ar-y, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; hor-al, Prior, Alma, c. 3 (R.) Also horo-loge, horo-scope, which see. HOURI, a nymph of Paradise. (Pers.) With Paradise within my view And all his houris beckoning through; Byron, The Giaour; see note 39 to that poem. - Pers. huri, one virgin of Paradise; huri, húr, a virgin of Paradise, a black-eyed nymph; so called from their fine black eyes. Cf. Arab. hawra, fem. of ahwar, having fine black eyes; Rich. Arab. Dict. pp. 585, 33; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 206. (The initial letter is $h \hat{a}$, the 6th letter of the Arab. alphabet).

HOUSE, a dwelling-place; a family. (E.) M. E. hous, Chaucer, C. T. 252.—A. S. hús, Matt. xii. 25. + Du. huis. + Icel. hús. + Dan. huus. + Swed. hus. + Goth. hus*, in the comp. gud-hus, a house of God. + G. haus, O. H. G. hús.

B. Probably cognate with Skt. kosha or koga, a coop, a sheath, a shell, an egg, an abode, a storcroom. The form of the root is KUS, of uncertain meaning; perhaps related to \(\sqrt{KU}\), to cover, and further to \(\sqrt{SKU}\), to cover; Fick, i. 537. See Hide (2) and Sky. Der. house, verb, now 'to provide a house for,' as in Gower, C. A. iii. 18, but the M. E. housen also meant 'to build a house,' as in Rob. of Glouc. p. 21, l. 13 (cf. 'howsyn, or puttyn yn a howse, domifero; 'howsyn, or makyn howsys, domifig.; Prompt. Parv. p. 251); house-breaker, house-breaking; house-hold, M. E. houshold, Chaucer, C. T. 5681, so called because held together in one house; house-hold-er, M. E. housholder, Chaucer, C. T. 341; house-keeper, Cor. i. 3. 55, Macb. iii. 1. 97; house-keeping, L. L. L. ii. 104; house-leek, M. E. hows-leke, Prompt. Parv. p. 251; house-less, K. Lear, iii. 4. 26; house-maid, house-steward, house-warming, housewife, spell husewif, Ancren Riwle, p. 416, also hosewijf or huswijf, Wyclif, 3 Kings, xvii. 17, and frequently huswife, as in Shak. Cor. i. 3. 76, Romeo, iv. 2. 43; house-wife-ry or hus-wife-ry. Oth. ii. 1. 113, with which cf. huswyfery, yconomia; Prompt. Parv. See also Husband, Hussy, Hustings, Hoard.
HOUSEL, the eucharist or sacrament of the Lord's Supper. (E.)

The orig. sense is 'sacrifice.' M. E. housel, Rom. of the Rose, 6386; P. Plowman, C. xxii. 394.—A. S. Aússel (for hunsel), the eucharist; Grein, ii. 112. + Goth, hunsl, a sacrifice, Matt. ix. 13. β. No doubt derived from a root signifying 'to kill;' and perhaps connected with Gk. καίνειν, κτείνειν, to kill, Skt. kskan, to wound, kshin, to hurt, kill, kshi, to destroy, hurt. Der. housel, verb, M. E. hoselen, Rouselen, P. Plowman, C. xxii. 3; unhousel'd, Hamlet, i. 5. 77. HOUSINGS, trappings of a horse. (F., = G.) Unconnected form was house, the addition ings being English. The cattle used for draught . . . are covered with housings of linnen; Evelyn, Diary, end of May, 1645. 'A velvet bed of state drawn by six horses, houss d with the same;' Evelyn, Diary, Oct. 22, 1658. 'Spread on his back, the houss and trappings of a beast;' Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metam. b. xii. 582. 'Housse, the cloth which the king's horseguards wear behind the saddle; 'Coles' Dict., ed. 1684. - F. housse, 'a short mantle of course cloth (and all of a peece) worn in ill weather by country women about their head and shoulders; also a footcloth for a horse: also a coverlet; Cot. Cf. Low Lat. hueia, a long tunic; housia, a long tunic, coverlet for a horse, also spelt husia, hussia. Ducange dates hucia in A.D. 1326, and husia in A.D. 1259, so that the word is of some antiquity.

The sense is clearly 'covering.'

B. Of Teutonic origin; Benecke, in his M. H. G. Dict., gives the forms hulst, hulft, a covering, and cites hulft = Low Lat. hulcitum, hulcia, from a gloss; he also gives hulche, a husk; cf. G. hillse, a husk, shell; Du. hulse, a husk, hullel, a woman's head-attire (Sewel).

O. H. G. hullen, to cover. See Holster, Husk.

The W.

— O. H. G. hullen, to cover. See Holster, Husk. ¶ The W. hus, a covering, may be merely borrowed from E. houss.

HOVEL, a small hut. (E.) M. E. hovel, hovil. 'Hovylle, lytylle howse, Teges;' Prompt. Parv. p. 250. 'Hovyl for swyne, or oper beestys;' ibid. A diminutive, with suffix -el, from A.S. hof, a house; Grein, ii. 92; also spelt hofa. 'Ædes, hofa; Ædicula, lytel hof;' Wright's Vocab. i. 57, col. 2. + Icel. hof, a temple, a hall. + G. hof, a yard, court. The common Teutonic type is HOFA; Fick, iii. 62. B. Perhans related to A. S. hullbur. to have contain. iii. 63. β. Perhaps related to A. S. habban, to have, contain; cf. l.at. capax, capable of holding. See Have. ¶ Some connect it with A.S. hebban, to heave, a temple being built up; this does not so well suit the G. sense of 'yard.' Cf. Gk. κῆπου, a garden.

HOVER, to fluctuate, hang about, move to and fro. (E.?) Mach. i. 1. 12. 'Hover, to stay, wait for. "Will you hover till I come?" E. D. S. Gloss. B. 22, p. 96. A frequentative, with suffix -er, of M. E. houen (= hoven), sometimes used in precisely the same sense, and once a common word. 'O night! alas! why nilt thou [will thou not] over us hove; Chaucer, Troil. iii. 1433; also in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 83 (on which see the note); 'Where that she hoved and abode; Gower, C. A. iii. 63; 'He hivede and abode;' Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 2825; 'He houde' = he waited, Rob. of Glouc. p. 172, l. 12.

β. The orig. sense seems to have been to 'abide' or 'dwell;' and the verb was probably formed from A. S. hof, a house; on which see Hovel above. This is made more probable by the fact, that, though the A.S. verb hofian does not occur, we nevertheless find the closely related O. Friesic hovia, to receive into one's house, entertain, whence the sense of merely lodging or abiding one's nouse, einertain, whence the sense of merety origing of aboung easily flows. Similarly, the O. Du. hoven meant to entertain in a house; as, 'Men mag hem huyzen noch hoven' = one may neither lodge nor entertain him (Sewel). the word is the existence of W. hofian, hofio, to hover, to fluctuate, to suspend; but possibly the W. word may have been borrowed from the English. Then all is clear.

HOW (1), in what way. (E.) M. E. how, hou, hu; spelt hu, Ancren Riwle, p. 182, l. 20; also hun, id., p. 256, l. 10; also whow, P. Plowman's Crede, l. 141.—A. S. hú; Grein, ii. 110. + O. Fries. hu, ho, how. + Du. hos. + Goth. hwaiwa.

B. The Goth. form shows that the word is undoubtedly formed from the interrogative pronoun who, which is Goth. hwas, A. S. hwá. And if the Goth. pronoun who, which is Goth. hwas, A. S. hwa. And if the Goth. hwaiwa is to be resolved into hwe aiwa = why ever, then how only differs from why by the added aye. See Who, Why, Aye. Or perhaps Goth. -iwa = Skt. -iva, like, in some way. Der. how-be-it, Hen. V, i. 2. 91, Cor. i. 9. 70; how-ever, K. John, i. 173; how-so-ever, Haml. i. 5. 84.

HOW (2), a hill. (Scand.) Chiefly in place-names; as Silver How, near Grasmere. M. E. hogh; 'bath ouer hil and hogh' = both over hill and how, Cursor Mundi, 15836 (Göttingen MS.) = Icel. hower, a how mound: Swed him a heap nile, mound: Dan hill. a haugr, a how, mound; Swed. hög, a heap, pile, mound; Dan. höi, a hill. See Fick, iii. 77; where it is well remarked that the orig. Teutonic type is HAUGA, which is nothing but the substantive form of the Teutonic adj. HAUHA, high. Cf. Icel. hör. Swed. hög, Dan. höi, high. cleo I ishawa hail.

Dan. hii, high; also Lithuan. kaukaras, a hill. See High.

HOWDAH, the same as Houdah, q.v.

HOWITZER, a short light cannon. (G., = Rohemian.) Sometimes spelt kiwitz; a mod. word, in Todd's Johnson. Borrowed from G. haubitze, a howitzer; a word formerly spelt haufinitz. = Bohemian haufiniee, orig. a sling for casting a stone. (Webster, E. Müller.)

HOWL, to yell, cry out. (F., = L.) M. E. houlen. Chaucer, C. T.
2819; Gower, C. A. ii. 265. = O. F. huller, 'to howle or yell;' Cot. = Lat. ululare, to shriek, howl. - Lat. ulula, an owl. + Gk. than, to howl; bhohyf, a wailing cry. + G. heulen, to howl, hoot as an owl; M. H. G. hiuweln, hiulen, hulen; from G. eule, M. H. G. hiuwel, O. H. G. hiuweld, also uwila (without the aspirate), an owl. See Owl.

huka, in the phrase huka sig, to squat down; Icel. huka, to sit on one's hams. It appears again in the O. Du. huycken, huken, to crouch, G. hocken, to crouch, squat, Skt. kuch, to bend.

Y. Fick refers these to the KUK, KWAK, to bend; related to KAK, to surround; i. 36. Closely related words are Hucklebone, Hook, Hunch. &c.

HUGE, very great, vast. (F.) M. E. kuge, Chaucer, C. T. 2953; P. Plowman, B. xi. 242; Will. of Palerne, 2569. Oddly spelt kogge; en kogge geaunt; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 31, l. 17. The etymology is much disguised by the loss of an initial a, mistaken for the E. indef. article; the right word is aluge. (The same loss occurs in M. E. avow, now always vow, though this is not quite a parallel case, since vow has a sense of its own.) - O. F. ahuge, huge, wast; a 12th-century word. In the account of Goliath, in Les Livres des Rois, we find: 'E le fer de la lance sis cenz, e la hanste fud grosse e akuge cume le suble as teissures' = and the iron of his lance weighed six hundred (shekels), and the shaft (of it) was great and huge as a weaver's beam; Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 45, l. 36. The word is spelt ahugue in Roquefort, who cites this passage, and points out that it corresponds with the E. word.

(B. Of unknown origin; but not improbably from the old form of mod. G. erhöhen, to exalt, heighten, increase, from the adj. hock, M. H. G. houck, high, cognate with E. High, q. v. Der. huge-ly; huge-ness, Cymb. i. 4. 157.

HUGUENOT, a French protestant. (F., -G.) 'Huguenots, Calvinists, Reformists, French Protestants;' Blount's Gloss., ed.

1674. And in Minsheu. - F. huguenots, s. pl. 'Huguenots, Calvinists, Reformists;' Cot. Named from some person of the name of Huguenot, who was at some time conspicuous as a reformer. Such was Mahn's conjecture, who added that the name was probably a diminutive of F. Hugues, Hugh, and was nothing but a Christian name.

B. The conjecture is perfectly verified by Littre's discovery, that Huguenot was in use as a Christian name two centuries before the time of the Reformation. 'Le 7 octobre, 1387, Pascal Huguenot de Saint Junien en Limousin, docteur en decret;' Hist. Litt. de la France, t. xxiv. p. 307. Cf. Jeannot as a dimin. of Jean. y. The F. Hugues is of German origin. — M. H. G. Húg, Húc, Hugh; lit. a man of intelligence, a thoughtful man. — O. H. G. hugu, thought; huggen, to think; the verb being cognate with Lat. cogitare, to think. See Cogitate.

T Scheler enumerates 15 false etymologies of this word; the favourite one (from G. eidgenossen) being one of the worst, as it involves incredible phonetic changes.

HULK, a heavy ship. (Low Lat., -Gk.) Sometimes applied to the body of a ship, by confusion with hull; but it is quite a different word, meaning a heavy ship of clumsy make; Shak. Troil. ii. 3. 277. The hulks were old ships used as prisons. M. E. hulke. 'Hulke, shyppe, Hulcus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 252. 'Hulke, a shyppe, hevreque;' Palsgrave. 'Orque, a hulk or huge ship;' Cot. — Low Lat. hulka, a heavy merchantship, a word used by Walsingham; see quotation in Way's note to Prompt. Parv.; also spelt hulcus, as quoted above. Also spelt (more correctly) holeas; Ducange. —Gk. δλκάs, a ship which is towed, a ship of burden; merchantman. —Gk. $\tilde{\epsilon}\lambda\kappa\epsilon\iota\nu$, to draw, drag; whence also $\delta\lambda\kappa\dot{\eta}$, a dragging, $\delta\lambda\kappa\dot{\phi}$ s, a machine for dragging ships on land; from the base $F\epsilon\lambda\kappa$. + Russ. vleche, vleshch', to trail, drag, draw. + Lithuan welku, I pull. β. The form of the root is WALK, for WARK; the sense is perhaps 'to pull.' See Curtius, i. 167. Der. hulk-ing, hulk-y, i.e. bulky or unwieldy. Our Not the same word as M. E. hulke, a hovel, Wyclif, Isaiah, i. 8; which is from A. S. hulc, a hut; Wright's Vocab. i. 58.

HULL (1), the husk or outer shell of grain or of nuts. (£.) M. E.

HULL(1), the husk or outer shell of grain or of nuts. (E.) M. E. hule, hole, hoole. 'Hoole, hole, holl, or huske, Siliqua;' Prompt. Parv. Pese, hole of a tree, escoree; 'Palsgrave; and see Way's note in Prompt. Parv. Pese hole (or pese hule) = pea-shell; P. Plowman, B. vii. 194, in two MSS.; see the footnote.—A. S. hulu, a husk; in two glosses (Leo). Connected with the causal verb hulian *, to hide, cover, not found in A. S., but appearing at a very early period, and spelt hulen in the Ancren Riwle, p. 150, note a; so also 'hule and huide' = cover up and hide, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 279, l. 4. Cognate words are O. Saxon bihulean, to cover, Heliand, 1406 (Cotton MS.); Du. hullen, to put a cap on, mask, disguise; Goth. huljan, to hide, cover; G. ver-hüllen, to wrap up; Icel. hylja, to hide, cover; Swed. hölja, to cover, veil; Dan. hylle, to wrap.

B. All from & KAL, to hide; see further under Holster. Der. see hush, housings.

HULLI(2), the body of a ship. (E.) Not in very early use. 'She alver saw above one voyage, Luce, And, credit me, after another, her kull Will serve again;' Beaumont and Fletch. Wit Without Money, i. 2. 17. The kull is, literally, the 'shell' of the ship, being the same word with the above; see Hull (1). $\beta$. But it is probable that its use with respect to a ship was due to some contains on with Du. kol, the hold of a ship; see Hold (2). Der. kull, to float about, as a ship does when the sails are taken down. humbugg-er.

Shak. Iw. Nt. i. 5. 217; Rich. III, iv. 4. 438; Hen. VIII, ii. 4. 199. So in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, we find: 'Hull, the body of a ship, without rigging. Hulling is when a ship at sea takes in all her sails in a calm.'

HUM (1), to make a low buzzing or droning sound. (E.) M. L. hummen; Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1199; Palladius on Husbandry, ed. Lodge, vii. 124. Of imitative origin. + G. hummen, to hum. Cf. also Du. hommelen, to hum; the frequentative form. Der. hum (2), q. v., hum-bug, q. v., hum-drum, q. v., humble-bee, q. v.; also humm-ing-bird, Pope's Danciad, iv. 46, called a hum-bird, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. vi. c. 8. § 10.

HUM (a). to trick, to cajole. (E) A particular use of the word above. In Shak. hum not only means to utter a low sound, as in Temp. ii. 1. 317, but also to utter a sound expressive of indignation, as in 'turns me his back And hums,' Macb. iii. 6. 42; 'to bite his lip and hum At good Cominius,' Cor. v. 1. 49. See Richardson and Todd, where it further appears that applause was formerly expressed by humming, and that to hum was to applaud; from applause to flattery, and then to cajolery, is not a long step. See the passage in Ben Jonson, The Alchemist, Act i. sc. 1, where Subtle directs his dupe to 'cry hum Thrice, and then buz as often;' shewing that the word was used in a jesting sense.

B. Wedgwood well points out a similar usage in Port. zumbir, to buzz, to hum, zombar, to joke, to jest; to which add Span. zumbar, to hum, resound, joke, jest, make one's self merry, zumbon, waggish. Der. hum, sb. a hoax (Todd); humbug, q.v. Cf. humh! interj., Beaum. and Fletcher, Mons. Thomas, i. 2.

HUMAN, pertaining to mankind. (F., =L.) Formerly humaine, but now conformed to the Lat. spelling. 'All humaine thought;' Spenser, F. Q. vi. 3. 51. 'I meruayle not of the inhumanities that the humain people committeth;' Golden Book, lett. 11 (R.) = O. F. humain, 'gentle, . . . humane, manly;' Cot. = Lat. humanus, human. = Lat. hom-o, a man. See Homage. Der. human-ly, human-ise, human-is-at-ion, human-ist, human-kind; also human-i-ty, M. E. humanitee, Chaucer, C. T. 7968, from O'F. humaniteit, which from Lat. acc. humanitetm, nom. humanitas; hence humanit-ar-i-an. And see Humane.

HUMANE, gentle, kind. (Lat.) In Shak., humane (so spelt) does duty both for human and humane, the accent being always on the former syllable; see Schmitz, Shak. Lexicon. Hence it has the sense of 'kind;' Temp. i. 2. 346. We have now differentiated the words, keeping the accent on the latter syllable in humaine, to make it more like the Lat. humanus. We may therefore consider this as the Lat. form. Both Lat. humanus and F. humain have the double sense (1) human, and (2) kind. See Human. Der. humane-ly, humane-ness.

HUMBLE, lowly, rheek, modest. (F.,-L.) M.E. humble, Chaucer, C. T. 8700.—O. F. (and F.) humble, 'humble;' Cot. (With excresent b.)—Lat. humilis, humble; lit. near the ground.—Lat. humus, the ground; humi, on the ground; whence also E. human and homage. See Human, Homage. Der. humble, bumble, resserting formerly humblesse, Chaucer, C. T. 1783). Also, from Lat. humilis, humili-19, q. v., humili-ate, q. v. Also, from Lat. humus, ex-hume, q. v. And see Chameleon.

HUMBLE-BEE, a humming bee. (E.) To humble is to hum; or more literally, to hum often, as it is the frequentative form, standing for humm-le; the b being excrescent. 'To humble like a bee;' Minsheu. M. E. humbelen, for hummelen. 'Or elles lyk the humbeling [old texts, humbling] After the clappe of a thundring;' Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, ii. 531. Hence hombel-be or hombul-be; Reliquiæ Antiquæ, ed. Wright and Halliwell, i. 81. 'Hic tabanus, a humbly-bee;' Wright's Vocab: i. 255. + Du. hommelen, to hum, a frequentative form; hommel, a humble-bee, a drone. + G. hummel, a humble-bee: hummen, to hum. See Hum (1).

HUMBUG, a hoar, a piece of trickery, an imposition under fair pretences. (E.) 'Humbug, a false alarm, a bugbear;' Dean Milles MS. (written about 1760), cited in Halliwell. The word occurs in a long passage in The Student, vol. ii. p. 41, ed. 1741, cited in Todd. The earliest trace of the word is on the title-page of an old jest-book, viz. 'The Universal Jester, or a pocket companion for the wits; being a choice collection of merry conceits, drolleries, ... bon-mots, and humbugs,' by Ferdinando Killigrew, London, about 1735-40. See the Slang Dictionary, which contains a very good article on this word. It is a mere compound of hum, to cajole, to hoax, and the old word bug, a spectre, bugbear, ghost; the sense being 'sham bugbear' or 'false alarm,' exactly as given by Dean Milles. The word has changed its meaning from 'false alarm' or 'sham scare' to 'false pretence' or 'specious cheat;' an easy change. See Hum (2) and Bug. Der. humbug, verb; humbug, sh., improperly used for 2155; also hundreth, Pricke of Conscience, 4524.—A. S. hundred, still hum-drum? Isludibras, pt. i. c. 3. l. 112. But it is properly an adj., signifying monotonous, droning, tedious, as in 'an old humdrum. fellow; Addison, Whig Examiner (1710), No. 3 (Todd). Merely compounded of hum, a humming noise, and drum, a droning sound. See Hum (1) and Drum.

HUMDRUM, dull, droning. (E.)

Used as an adv., with the HUNDRED, ten times ten. (E.) M. E. hundred, Chaucer, C. T.

Sense of 'idly' or 'listlessly' in Butler. 'Shall we, quoth she, stand'

HUMERAL, belonging to the shoulder. (Lat.) "Humeral muscle, the muscle that moves the arm at the upper end;" Kersey. ed. 1715.-Low Lat. humeralis, belonging to the shoulder; cf. Lat. Aumerale, a cape for the shoulders.—Lat. humeras, better umerus, the shoulder. + Gk. äμου, the shoulder + Goth. amsa, the shoulder. + Skt. amsa, the shoulder.

β. All from

meaning; perhaps 'to be strong.'

HUMID, moist. (F.,-L.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 151; and in Cotgrave.-F. humide, 'humid, moist;' Cot.-Lat. humidus, better umidus, moist. - Lat. humēre, better umēre, to be moist; from a base UG, whence also unens, moist, unidus, udus, moist. + Gk. υγ-ρόε, moist. β. From VUG, earlier form WAG, to moisten, wet; whence also Skt. uksh, to wet, sprinkle; also (from the earlier form) Icel. vökr, moist, prov. E. wokey, moist (Halliwell), and M. E. wokien, to moisten, P. Plowman, C. xv. 25. See Curtius, i. 229; Fick, i. 287.

Der. humid-ness, humid-i-ty, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 43; and see humour.

HUMILIATE, to make humble. (Lat.) A late word, really suggested by the sb. humilation, used in Milton, P. L. iii. 313, x. 1092. Both words are formed from Lat. humiliatus, pp. of humiliare, to humble. - Lat. humili-, crude form of humilis, humble. See Humble. Der. humiliat-ion (formed by analogy with other words in -ation) from Lat. acc. humiliationem, nom. humiliatio.

HUMILITY, humbleness, meekness. (F.,-L.) M. E. humilitee, Chaucer, C. T. 13405. - O. F. humeliteit, later humilité. - Lat. acc. humili atem, from nom. humilitas, humility. - Lat. humili-, crude form of humilis, humble. See Humble.

HUMOUR, moisture, temperament, disposition of mind, caprice. (F., -L.) See Trench, Select Glossary, and Study of Words. 'He knew the cause of enery maladye, And wher engendred, and of what humour;' Chaucer, C. T. 422, 423. [The four humours, according to Galen, caused the four temperaments of mind, viz. choleric, melancholy, phlegmatic, and sanguine.] = O. F. humor (Littré), later humer, 'humour, moisture;' Cot. - Lat. humorem, acc. of humor, moisture. - Lat. humere, better umere, to be moist. See Humid, Der. humour, verb, humor-ous, humor-ous-ly, humor-ous-ness, humourless. humor-ist; from the same source, hum ect-ant, moistening (rare). HUMMOCK, HOMMOCK, a mound, hillock, mass. (E.)
'Common among our voyagers,' Rich.; who refers to Anson, Voyage round the World, b. ii. c. 9; Cook, Second Voyage, b. ii. c. 4. It appears to be merely the diminutive of hump, which again is merely a nasalised form of heap. Cf. Du. homp, a hump, hunch; 'een homp kaas, a lunch [i. e. hunch] of cheese; 'Sewel. 'Hompelig, rugged, cragged; id. So too Low G. himpel, a little heap or mound; Bremen Wörterb. ii. 669. Hummock is formed with dimin. -ock, as in hill-ock; whilst the Low G. hump-el is formed with the dimin. -el. See Hump, Hunch.

HUMP, a lump, bunch, esp. on the back. (E.) 'Hump, a hunch, or lump, Westmoreland;' Halliwell. Of O. Low G. origin, and may be claimed as E., though not in early use. Only a natural hump con his back]; Addison, Spectator, no. 558. 'The poor hump-backed gentleman;' id. no. 559. + Du. homp, a hump, lump; cf. Low G. hümpel, a small heap, Bremen Wörterbuch, ii. 669. β. A nasalised form of heap, and from the same source, viz. the Teut. base HUP, to go up and down, preserved in E. hop; see Heap, Hop (1).

Y. The Aryan root is KUP, KUBH, to go up and down, bend about (Fick, iii. 77); whence also Gk. κῦφος, a hump, κυφώμα, a hump on the back, κυφόνωτος, hump-backed; Lithuan. kumpas, hunched; also Skt. kubja, hump-backed; and see Benfey's note on Skt. kumbha, a pot. Der. hump-backed; humm-ock, q.v.; hunch, q.v. HUNCH, a hump, bump, a round or ill-shaped mass. (E.) Used as nearly a parallel form to hump, but the likeness in sense is due to the similar sense of the roots of the words. It is really the nasalised form of hook; see Hook. Hunch-backed occurs in the later quarto edd. of Shak. Rich. III, iv. 4. 81 (Schmidt). 'Thy crooked mind within hunch'd out thy back;' Dryden, qu. in Todd (no reference). B. Without the nasal, we find E. hook and hug, Icel. hokra, to go bent, crouch, huka, to sit on one's hams, O. Du. huycken, huken, to stoop down, crouch (Oudemans), O. Low G. huken, to bend one's self together, squat down (Bremen Wörterb. ii. 665); G. hucke, the See Hug. v. In Skt. we have both forms, with and without the nasal; kuich, to bend, dkuichita, contracted; kuch, to bend, sam kuch, to contract one's self.

8. All from KUK, for KWAK, to bend; Fick, i. 36. Der. hunch, vb., hunch-backed.

Grein, ii. 111. A compound word. - A. S. hund, a hundred, Grein, ii. 111; and red, usually red, speech, discourse, but here used in the early sense of reckoning or rate; cf. Goth. garathjan, to reckon, number, Matt. x. 30; and see Rate, Read.

B. The same suffix occurs not only in Icel. hund-rab, O. H. G. hunt-e-rit, but also in Icel. átt-ræðr, eighty, ní-ræðr, ninety, tí-ræðr, a hundred, and tolfraor, a hundred and twenty. And as Icel. att-, ni-, ti-, and tolf- mean eight, nine, ten, and twelve respectively, it is seen that the 'rate' of numbering was originally by tens; moreover, hundred = tenth-red, as will appear.

7. We easily conclude that the word grew up by the unnecessary addition of -red (denoting the rate of counting) to the old word hund, used by itself in earlier times. 8. Dismissing the suffix, we have the cognate O. H. G. hunt (also once used alone), Goth. hund, W. cant, Gael. ciad, Irish cead, Lat. centum, Gk. έ-κατ-όν, Skt. cata, all meaning a hundred. Skt. cata, all meaning a hundred.

6. All from an Aryan form KANTA, a hundred. It is known (from Gothic) that KANTA stands for DAKANTA, tenth, from DAKAN, ten, and originally meant the tenth ten, i.e. the hundred; the Gothic (in speaking of a single hundred) has the full form taihun-taihund, a hundred (= dakandakanta), i. e. ten-tenth. Hence hund = t-enth without the t, just as The M. E. hundreth is a Scand. form; centum = de-centum, &c. from the Icel. hundrad. Der. hundred-th, hundred-fold, hundred-weight, often written eut., where c = Lat. centum, and wt = Eng. weight.

14738.—A.S. hunger, Grein, ii. 111. + Icel. hunger. + Swed. and Dan.
hunger. + Du. konger. + G. hunger. + Goh. huhrus, hunger; whence huggrjan (= hungrian), to hunger. β. Probably allied to Skt. kunich, to make narrow, contract, kunchana, shrinking; so that hunger denotes the feeling of being shrunk together, like the expressive prov. E. clemmed, lit. pinched, used in the phr. 'clemm'd wi' hunger." See Hunch and Hug. Der. hunger, verb = A.S. hyngran (with vowel-change of u to y); hungry = A.S. hungrig (Grein); hungri-ly; hunger-bitten, Job, xviii. 12.

HUNT, to chase wild animals. (E.) M. E. hunten, honten, Chaucer, C. T. 1640. - A. S. huntian; see Alfric's Colloquy, in Thorpe's Analecta, p. 21. Properly 'to capture;' a secondary verb formed from a supposed verb hindan *, pp. hunden *; only found in Gothic. We find however another A.S. derivative from the same source, viz. hentan, to seize, also a weak verb; Grein, ii. 34.

B. So also we find Goth.

hunths, captivity, Eph. iv. 8; formed from the pp. hunthans of the verb hinthan (pt. t. hanth), to seize, take captive, only used in the comp.

fra-hinthan, with pp. fra-hunthans, a captive, Luke, iv. 19.

The base HANTH is a nasalised form of HATH, equivalent to Aryan a causal from Skt. cad, to fall (= Lat. cadere), from \(KAD, to fall. \) Fick, i. 56. Der. hunt, sb.; hunt-er, later form for M. E. hunte, Chaucer, C. T. 1638, from A. S. hunta, a hunter, in Ælfric's Colloquy; hunt-ress, with F. suffix -ess, As You Like It, iii. 2. 4; hunt-ing, sb., hunt-ing-box, hunt-ing-seat; hunt-s-man (= hunt's man), Mid. Nt. Dr. iv. 1. 143; hunts-man-ship; hunts-up (= the hunt is up, i. e. beginning), Rom. iii. 5. 34, replaced by the hunt is up, Tit Andron. ii. 2. 1.

HURDLE, a frame of twigs interlaced or twined together, a frame of wooden bars. (E.) M. E. hurdel; pl. hurdles, K. Alisaunder, 6104.—A. S. hyrdel; 'cleta, cratis, hyrdel; 'crates, i. e. flecta, hyrdel;' Wright's Vocab. i. 26. col. 2, 34. col. 1. A dimin. from an A. S. base hurd*, not found, but having several cognates, as seen below. + Du. korde, a hurdle. + Iccl. kurb. + G. kürde, M. H. G. kurt. + Goth. kaurds, a door, i.e. one made of wicker-work, Matt. vi. 6. y. All from a Teut. base HORDI, from a Teut. verb HARD, to weave. Cognate with Lat. crates, cratis, a hurdle, Gk. κάρταλοε, a (woven) basket, from \(KART, \) to weave; whence also Skt. krit, to woven) basket, from V KAR1, to weave; whence also Skt. Fit, to spin, chrit, to connect together. See Fick, i. 525, iii. 68. Der. hurdle, verb, pp. hurdled, Milton, P. L. iv. 186. Doublet, crate, q.v. HURDY-GURDY, a kind of violin, but played by turning a wheel. (E.) 'Hum! plays, I see, upon the hurdy-gurdy;' Foote's play of Midas (Todd). Foote died A.D. 1777. It is in vain to seek far for the etymology, as it was doubtless coined in contempt, to express the discrepable sound of the interpret and its of much in interior. the disagreeable sound of the instrument, and is of purely imitative origin. Cf. Lowland Sc. hur, to snarl; gurr, to snarl, growl, purr; Jamieson. 'R is the dog's letter, and hurreth in the sound;' Ben Jonson, Eng. Grammar. The word seems to have been fashioned on the model of hurry-burly. See Hurry.

on the model of kurly-burly. See HUFFY.

HURL, to throw rapidly and forcibly, to push forcibly, drive.

(F.,-C.; with E. suffix.) 'And hurlest [Tyrwhitt has hurllest] all from east to west; Chaucer,

C. T. Group B, 297=1. 4717. 'Into which the flood was hurlid;'

Wyclif, Luke, vi. 49, in six MSS.; but seventeen MSS. have hurlid.

So again, in Luke, vi. 48, most MSS. have hurlid, but eight have hurlid. In the Ancren Riwle, p. 166, we find 'mid a lutel hurlunge' = with a slight collision; where another reading is hurtlinge. is plain that hurl is, in fact, a contraction of hurtle; for the M. E. hurlen and hurtlen are equivalent words, used in the sense of to push violently, jostle, strike with a forcible collision. For those who wish to make the comparison, further references are (1) for hurlen: wish to make the comparison, further references are (1) for hurlen: Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 211; Poems and Lives of Saints, ed. Furnivall, xxiii. 25; Will. of Palerne, 1243; Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 140; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 44, 223, 376, 413, 874, 1204, 1211; Destruction of Troy, 1365; Rob. of Glouc. p. 487, 537; Fabyan's Chron., an. 1380-1 (R.); Spenser, F. Q. i. 5, 2, &cc.; (2) for hurlen, Wyclif, Jerem. xlviii. 12; Prompt. Parv. p. 253; Will. of Palerne, 5013; Pricke of Conscience, 4787; Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, Cleopatra, 59; &c.

Y. The equal value of these words is best seen in passages where they are followed by together, and express 'collision.' Thus, we have: 'thet hurleo togederes' = that come into collision, Ancren Riwle. p. 166: and again: 'bat that come into collision, Ancren Riwle, p. 166; and again: 'pat heuen hastili and erpe schuld hurtel togader's that quickly heaven and earth should come into collision; Will. of Palerne, 5013. Both hurl and hurtle are frequentatives of hurt. See further under HURLY-BURLY, a tumult. (F. and E.) In Mach. i. 1. 3; as adj., 1 Hen. IV, v. 1. 78. A reduplicated word, the second syllable being an echo of the first, to give more fulness. The simple form hurly is the original; see K. John, iii. 4. 169; 2 Hen. IV, iii. 1. 25. - F. hurler, 'to howle, to yell;' Cot. Cf. Ital. urlare, to howl, yell. Both these forms are corrupt, and contain an inserted r. The O.F. form was orig. huller, to howl, also in Cot.; cf. Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 354, l. 24; and the correct Ital. form is ululare, to shriek, also to howl or yell as a wolf (Florio).—Lat. ululare, to howl.—Lat. ulula, an owl. See Howl, Owl.

¶ The mod. F. hurluburlu was probably borrowed from Shakespeare; it is a later word than the English; see Littré. The mod. E. hullabaloo seems to be a corruption.

HURRAH, an exclamation of joy. (Scand.) The older form is Huzzah, q. v.

HURRICANE, a whirlwind, violent storm of wind. (Span., -Caribbean.) Formerly hurricano. 'The dreadful spout, Which shipmen do the hurricano call; Shak. Troilus, v. 2. 172. - Span. huracan, a hurricane (of which another form was probably huracano). -Caribbean huracan, as written by Littré, who refers to Ovicdo, Hist. des Indes. See also Washington Irving's Life of Columbus, b. viii. c. 9 (Trench); Rich. quotes from Dampier's Voyages, v. ii. pt. ii. c. 6, that hurricanes are 'violent storms, raging chiefly among the Caribbee islands.'

HURRY, to hasten, urge on. (Scand.) Quite different from harry, with which Richardson confuses it. In Shak. Romeo, v. 1. 65; Temp. i. 2. 131. Extended by the addition of y from an older form hurr, just as scurry is from shirr. It is probably the same word with the rare M. E. horien, to hurry. 'And by the hondes hym hent and horyed hym withinne' = and they [the angels] caught him [Lot] by the hand, and hurried him within; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B 883. - O. Swed. hurra, to swing or whirl round (Ihre); Swed. dial. hurra, to whirl round, to whiz; Swed. dial. hurr, great haste, hurry (Rietz). + Dan. hurre, to buzz, to hum. + Icel. hurr, a noise. β. Of purely imitative origin, and the same word with the more expressive and fuller form whir; see Whir, Whiz. Ben Jonson says of the letter R that it is 'the dog's letter, and hurreth in the sound.' Der. hurry, sb.

HURST, a wood. (E.) In Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 2: 'that, from each rising hurst.' M. E. hurst (Stratmann). Very common in place-names in Kent, e.g. Pens-hurst. – A.S. hyrst, i.e. Hurst in Kent; Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 65. + M. H. G. hurst, a shrub, thicket. Lit. 'interwoven thicket;' allied to Hurdle.

HURT, to strike or dash against, to injure, harm. (F., -C.) early use. M. E. hurten, hirten, used in both senses (1) to dash against, push; and (2) to injure. Ex. (1) 'And he him hurteth [pusheth] with his hors adoun,' Chaucer, C. T. 2618 (Six-text, A. 2616), according to 4 MSS.; 'heo hurten heora hafden' = they dashed their heads together, Layamon, 1878. (2) 'That no man hurte other' = that none injure other; P. Plowman, B. x. 366. In the Ancren Riwle, it has both senses; see the glossary.—O. F. hurter, later heurter, 'to knock, push, jur, joult, strike, dash, or hit violently against;' Cot. 'Se heurter à une pierre, to stumble at a stone,' id.; which explains the sense 'to stumble' in the quotation from Wyclif given under Hurtle.

3. Of Celtic origin; best shewn by W. hyrddu, to ram, push, impel, butt, make an assault, hurdd, a push, thrust, butt, hurdd, a push, hurdd, a kurdd, pl. kyrddod, a ram; corroborated by Corn. kordh, a ram, spelt kor in late Cornish (Williams); and cf. Manx keurin, a he-goat (Williams). Thus the orig. sense was 'to butt as a ram;' from which the other senses easily flow.
We find also Prov. urtar, Aurtar (Gloss. to Bartsch, Chrest. Provençale), Ital. urtars, to knock,

B. It hit, dash against; also from the Celtic source. Also Du. horten, to jolt, shake, M. H. G. kurten. to dash against; but these (according to Diez) are not very old words, and must have been simply borrowed from the Romance languages. The alleged A S. Ayrt, wounded, is unauthorised. Der. hurt, sb., Ancren Riwle, p. 112, Chaucer, C. T. 10785; hurt-ful, hurt-ful-ly, hurt-ful-ness; hurt-less, hurt-less-ly, hurt-

HURTLE, to come into collision with, to dash against, to rattle. (F., - C.; with E. suffix.) Nearly obsolete, but used in Gray's Fatal Sisters, st. 1; imitated from Shak. Jul. Cresar, ii. 2. 22. M. E. hurden, to jostle against, dash against, push; see references under Hurl. To these add: 'And he him hurdeth with his hors adoun;' Chaucer, these actions the sense of heart in the sense of dash.' And this hart is the M. E.

C. T. 2618 (Six-text, A. 2616), in the Ellesmere MS., where most other MSS. have hurteth.

B. In fact, hurt-le is merely the frequentative of hurt in the sense 'to dash.' And this hurt is the M. E. hurten, to dash, also to dash one's foot against a thing, to stumble. 'If ony man wandre in the dai, he hirith not,' i. e. stumbles not; Wyclif, John, xi. 9. Hurten, to dash, is the same with the mod. E. word. See further under Hurt.

HUSBAND, the master of a house, the male head of a household, a married man. (Scand.) The old sense is 'master of a house.' M. E. husbonde, husebonde. 'The husebonde... warned his hus pus' the master of the house guardeth his house thus; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 246. 'Till a vast husbandis houss'=to an empty [waste] house of a farmer; Barbour's Bruce, vii. 151. - A.S. hisbonda; 'æt hira húsbondum' = from their fellow-dwellers in the same house; Exod. iii. 22. Not a true A.S. word, but borrowed from Scandinavian. – Icel. kúsbúndi, the master or 'goodman' of a house; a contracted form from húsbúandi or húsbúandi. – Icel. hús, a house; and buandi, dwelling, inhabiting, pres. part. of bua, to abide, dwell. See Busk, Bondman. Der. husband-man, M. E. housbonde-man, a householder, Wyclif, Matt. xx. I, spelt husbond-man, Chaucer, C. T. 7350; husband-ry, M. E. housbonderye, P. Plowman, B. i. 57, spelt husbondrie, Chaucer, C. T. 9173. HUSH, to enjoin silence. (E.) Chiefly used in the imp, mood and in the pp. M. E. hushen, hussen; and hucht was al the place, Chaucer, C. T. 2983, ed. Tyrwhitt; spelt hust, huyst in Six-text, A. 2981. 'Tho weren the cruel clariouns ful whist [Camb. MS. hust] 2981. 'Tho weren the cruel charlouns has well and full stille;' Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. met. 5, l. 1340. 'After langlyng wordes cometh huishte, peace and be still;' Test, of Love, ed. 1561, fol. 290 a, col. 1.

3. The word is purely imitative, from the use of the word huish to signify silence; and it is seen that whist is but another expression of the same thing. See Whist. Cf. Low G. husse bussee, an expression used in singing children to sleep; Bremen Wörterb. ii. 678. So also G. husch, hush! quick! And see Hist. Der. hush-money, Guardian, no. 26, April 10, In the form hushed or husht, the t was often regarded as HUSK, the dry covering of some fruits, &c. (E.) M. E. huske.

Huske of fruit or oper lyke;' Prompt. Parv. p. 254. The word has lost an I, which is preserved in other languages; the right form is hulsk. [The A.S. has only the closely related word hule, a hut, as in 'tugurium, hule;' Wright's Vocab. i. 58, col. I. This is a totally different word from the mod. E. hulk, but is closely allied to holster (a Dutch word) and to the A.S. heolster, a cave, covering, and to Icel. hulstr, a case, sheath.] The orig. sense is 'covering' or sheath; and hul-sk is derived (with suffixed -sk) from M. E. hulen, to cover, mod. prov. E. hull, to cover, cognate with Goth. huljan, to cover. hode, prov. E. Mill., to cover, cognate with Goth. Majan, to See further under Hull (1). + Du. hulse, 'a husk' (Sewel). + Swed. hylsa, 'a cod, pod' (Widegren). + Low G. hulse, a husk; Bremen Wörterb. ii. 668. + M. H. G. hulsche, a husk (Benecke); G. hülse, a husk, shell. Der. husk, verb, to take off the shells; husk-ed. HUSKY, hoarse, as applied to the voice. (E.) Not connected with husk, but confused with it. In Todd's Johnson; but a rare word with huss, but contused with it. In food 3 Johnson; but a rare wold in literature. A corruption of husty or hausty, i. e. inclined to cough. Formed from 'haust, a dry cough;' Coles' Eng. Dict. ed. 1684. M. E. hoost, host, a cough; Prompt. Parv. p. 248. – A. S. hwósta, a cough; which occurs to translate tussis in Ælfric's Grammar (Bosworth, Lye). +Du. hoest, a cough. + Icel. hósti. +Dan. hoste. + Swed. hosta. + G. husten, a cough; also, to cough. + Russ. kashele, a cough.

Auster, a cough; also, to cough. + Russ. Rashet, a cough. + Lithuan. Rosulys, a cough; kósti, to cough. + Skt. Kása, a cough. All from * KÅS, to cough; Skt. kás, to cough. Der. husk-i-ness. HUSSAR, a cavalry soldier. (Hungarian.) 'Hussars, Husares, Hungarian horsemen; 'Coles' Dict. ed. 1684. 'After the manner of the Hussars;' Spectator, no. 576. 'Hussars, light cavalry in Poland and Hungary, about 1600 [rather, 1460]. The British Hussars, the twentieth: from husz twenty. So called because Mathias Core the twentieth; from Ausz, twenty. So called because Mathias Corvinus, king of Hungary and Bohemia (1458-1490), raised a corps of horse-soldiers in 1458 by commanding that one man should be chosen out of every twenty in each village; see Littré, Scheler, and Mahn. than the name. Der. hyacinth ine, i.e. curling like the hyacinth, Milton, P. L. iv. 301. Doublet, jacinth. Hungarian group of languages, and is of an agglutinative character; it belongs to the Turanian family; see Max Müller's Lect. on Language vol. i. App. no. iii.

HUSSIF, a case containing thread, needles, and other articles for sewing. (Scand.) 'Hussif, that is, house wife; a roll of flannel with a pin-cushion attached, used for the purpose of holding pins, needles, and thread; 'Peacock. Gloss. of words used in Manley and Corringham, co. Lincoln. And in common use elsewhere. the word has long been confused with hussy, huswife, or house-wife, and hence obtained its final f, is certain.

Y. It is equally certain that this is an error; it is of Scand. origin.—Icel. húsi, a case; skærishúsi, a scissors-case.—Icel. hús, a house. See House.

Thus the connection with house is correct; but the latter syllable has been immediated. misunderstood.

HUSSY, a pert girl. (E.) 'The young husseys;' Spectator, no. 242. Hussy is a corruption of husswife; cf. Doth Fortune play the husswife with me now?' Hen. V, v. 1. 85. And again, husswife stands for house-wife = woman who minds a house; from house and wife in the general sense of woman; cf. 'the good housewife Fortune,' As

You Like It, i. 2. 33: 'Let housewives make a skillet of my helm;' Oth. i. 3. 273. See House and Wife. And see Hussif.

HUSTINGS, a platform used by candidates for election to parliament. (Scand.) The modern use is incorrect; it means rather a 'council,' or assembly for the choice of such a candidate; and it should rather be used in the singular husting. Minsheu has hustings, and refers to 11 Hen. VII. cap. 21. M. E. husting, a council; 'hulden muchel husting' = they held a great council; Layamon, 2324. A. S. hústing, a council (of Danes); A. S. Chron. an. 1012; see gloss. to Sweet's A. S. Reader. Not an A. S. word, but used in speaking of Danes. - Icel, húsping, 'a council or meeting, to which a king, earl, or captain summoned his people or guardsmen.' - Icel. king, eari, or captain summoned his people or guardsmen.'—Icel. hus, a house; and hing, (1) a thing, (2) as a law term, 'an assembly, meeting, a general term for any public meeting, esp. for purposes of legislation; a parliament, including courts of law.' Cf. Swed. ting, a thing, an assize; hålla ting, to hold assizes; Dan. ting, a thing, court, assize.

β. The Icel. hus is cognate with E. house; and hing with E. thing. See House and Thing.

HISTLE to push about jostla in a count.

HUSTLE, to push about, jostle in a crowd. (Du.) It should have been hutsle, but the change to hustle was inevitable, to make it easier of pronunciation. In Johnson's Dict., but scarce in literature. - Du. hutselen, to shake up and down, either in a tub, bowl, or basket; onder malkanderen hutselen, to huddle together [lit. to hustle one another]; Sewel. A frequentative form of O. Du. hutsen, Du. hotsen, to shake, jog, jolt. Cf. Lowland Sc. hotch, hott, to move by jerks, hotter, to jolt. See Hitch, Hotchpot. Der. hodgepodge.

HUT, a cottage, hovel. (F., -O. H. G.) M. E. hotte. 'For scattered er hi Scottis, and hodred in per hottes' - for scattered are thy Scots, and huddled in their huts; Rob. Manning, tr. of Langtoft, ed. Hearne, p. 273. - F. hutte, 'a cote [cot] or cottage;' Cot. - O. H. G. hutta, G. hütte, a hut, cottage; whence also Span. huta, a hut; and probably Du. hut, Dan. hytte (since these words have not the Low G. d for H. G. t). + Swed hydda, a hut. + Skt. huti, a hut; from kut, to bend (hence, to cover). See Cotyledon.

HUTCH, a box, chest, for keeping things in. (F.,-Low L.) Chiefly used now in the comp. rabbit-hutch. Shak, has bolting-hutch, a hutch for bolted (or boulted) flour; 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 495. Milton has Mutch d= stored up; Comus, 719. M. E. huche, hucche, P. Plowman, B. iv. 116; pl. huches, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 850.—O. F. (and F.) huche, 'a hutch or binne;' Cot.—Low Lat. hutica; 'quadam cista, vulgo hutica dicta; Ducange. B. Of unknown origin; but almost certainly Teutonic; and prob. from O. H. G. huatan, M. H. G. huatan, to take care of, from Q. H. G. huota, heed, care, cista, vulgo hutica dicta;' Ducange. cognate with E. heed. See Heed.

HUZZAH (G.), HURRAH (Scand.), a shout of approbation. Huzzak is the older form, and was also written huzza. 'Loud huzzas; Pope, Essay on Man, iv. 256. 'They made a great huzza, or shout, at our approch, three times;' Evelyn's Diary, June 30, 1665. It appears to be one of the very few words of German origin. - G. hussa, huzza; hussa rufen, to shout huzza. β. Probably of merely interjectional origin. We find also Dan. hurra, hurrah! Swed. hurra, hurrah! hurrarop, a cheer (rop = a shout); hurra, v., to salute with cheers. Cf. Dan. hurre, to hum, to buzz. See Hurry.

HYACINTH, a kind of flower. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) In Cotgrave and Minsheu; and in Milton, P. L. 701.-F. hyacinthe, 'the blew or purple jacint, or hyacinth flower; we call it also crow-toes; Cot. -Lat. hyacinthus. - Gk. bannos, an iris or larkspur (not what is now

A. ii so a (Harring and a hybride). hybride; Ben Jonson, New Inn, A. ii. sc. 2 (Host); also spelt hybride in Minsheu. - Lat. hibrida, hybrida, a mongrel, hybrid. 3. Usually derived from Gk. υβριδ-, stem of υβριε, insult, wantonness, violation. y. See this word discussed in Curtius, ii. 155; he takes the to be formative, whilst $b\beta_{P}$ is compared with Lat. super-us, above (cf. Lat. super-bia, pride) and Skt. upari, over, above. See Superior and Over.

The Greek origin of the Latin word is somewhat doubtful.

HYDRA, a many-headed water-snake. (L., = Gk.) In Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 93. = Lat. hydra. = Gk. νόρα, a water-snake; also written otter. + Lithuan. udru, an otter. + A. S. oter, an otter. See Otter and Water. Der. hydra-headed, Hen. V, i. I. 35.

HYDRANGEA, a kind of flower. (Gk.) A coined name, referring to the cup-form of the capsule, or seed-vessel; Johnson's Gardeners' Dict., 1877. Made from Gk. Εδωρ, water; and ἀγγείον.

HYDRAULIC, relating to water in motion, conveying or acting by water. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) 'Hydraulick, pertaining to organs, or to an instrument to draw water, or to the sound of running waters (Bacon); Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Bacon has hydraulicks, Nat. Hist. § 102.— F. hydraulique, 'the sound of running waters, or music made thereby;' Cot.—Lat. hydraulicus.—Gk. υδραυλικόε, belonging to a water-organ. - Gk. υδραυλιε, an organ worked by water. - Gk. υδρ-, for υδωρ, water; and αὐλύ, a tube, pipe; from the base af, to blow.

¶ For a descript on of what the hydraulic organ really was, see Chappell's Hist. of Music.

HYDRODYNAMICS, the science relating to the force of water in motion. (Gk.) A scientific term; coined from Gk. υδρο-, from υδωρ, water; and E. dynamics, a word of Gk. origin. See Water and Dynamic.

HYDROGEN, a very light gas. (Gk.) A scientific term; coined from hydro-, standing for Gk. ΰδρο-, from ΰδωρ, water; and gen, for Gk. root γέν-, to produce, generate. The name means gen, for Gk. root γέν-, to produce, generate. The name means generator of water. See Water and Generate.

HYDROPATHY, the water cure. (Gk.) Coined from kydro-, standing for Gk. ΰδρο-, from ΰδωρ, water; and Gk. πάθοε, suffering, hence, endurance of treatment. See Water and Pathos. Der. hydropath-ic, hydropath-ist.

HYDROPHOBIA, fear of water. (L.,-Gk.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715; spelt hydrophobie, a French form, in Minsheu. A symptom of the disease due to a mad dog's bite. ICE, any frozen fluid, esp. water. (E.) M. E. vs. iis; spelt ijs Letter, any nozem mand, esp. water. (E.) in E. vs. its; spect ys (=iis), P. Ploughman's Crede, 436; yse (dat. case), Rob. of Glouc. p. 463, l. 4.—A. S. 4s, ice; Grein, ii. 147. + Du. ijs. + Icel. 4ss. + Dan. iis. + Swed. is. + G. eis; O. H. G. 4s. β. Apparently from a γ IS, to glide, go swiftly; cf. Skt. 4sh, to go, hasten, fly; Icel. eisa, to go swiftly, as in ganga eisandi, to go dashing through the waves, said of a ship. See Fick. i. 29, 30; iii. 31, 32. See Iron. Der. ice-berg, quite a modern word, not in Todd's Johnson, in which the latter element is the Du. and Swed. berg, Dan. bierg, G. berg, a mountain, hill; whence Du. ijsberg, Swed. isberg, Dan. iisbierg, G. eisberg, an iceberg. [It is not at all clear in which of these languages iceberg first arose; it does not seem to be an old word in Danish or Swedish, yet it is probable that we borrowed it (together with ice-blink) from one of these languages. It is certainly a sailor's word.] Also ice-blink, from Dan. iisblink, Swed. isblink, a field of ice extending into the interior of Greenland; so named from its shining appearance; from Dan. blinks, to gleam; see Blink. Also ice-boat, ice-bound, ice-cream (abbreviated from iced-cream), ice-field, ice-float, ice-floe, ice-house, ice-island, Ice-land, ice-man, ice-pack, ice-plant. Also ice, vb., ic-ing. Also ic-y = A.S. isig; Grein, ii. 147; ic-i-ly, ic-i-ness. And see Icicle.

ICHNEUMON, an Egyptian carnivorous animal. (L.,-Gk.) In Holland's Pliny, b. viii, c. 24. – Lat. ichneumon (Pliny). – Gk. Ιχνεύμον, an ichneumon; lit. 'a tracker;' so called because it tracks out the eggs of the crocodile, which it devours. See Aristotle, Hist. Animals, 9. 6. 5. – Gk. lxvebesv, to track, trace, hunt after. – Gk. lxvos, a track, footstep.

B. The origin of Gk. 1/200 is not clear; it appears to be related to Gk. 4/200, to go back, to yield, from /WIK, perhaps to separate. Cf. Skt. vich, to separate. See Curtius, i. 166. Der. From the same source is ichno-graphy, a design traced out, ground-plan, a term in architecture (Vitruvius).

TOHOR, the juice in the veins of gods. (Gk.) 'The sacred ichor;' Pope, tr. of Homer, II. v. 216.—Gk. $l\chi\omega\rho$, juice, the blood of gods; related to Gk. $l\kappa\mu\dot{a}s$, moisture, $l\kappa\mu\dot{a}s\nu\nu$, to wet.— \sqrt{SIK} , to moisten, sprinkle; cf. Skt. sich, to sprinkle, to wet. G. seihen, to strain, to the series of the se

ICHTHYOGRAPHY, a description of fishes. (Gk.) scientific term. Coined from Gk. 1x000-, crude form of 1x00s, a fish; β. So also ichthyology, spelt icthyology and γράφειν, to describe. by Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 24. § 1; from Gk. lxθvs, Dy Sir I. Browne, Vang. Entois, B. Int. c. 24. 3 1; noin Ga. 1,200, a fish, and λόγος, a discourse, from λέγειν, to speak of.

ICICLE, a hanging point of ice. (E.; parily C.) M. E. isikel; spelt yiekel, iseyokel, isykle, isechel, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 227; C. xx. 193. Compounded of M. E. ys, ice (see Ice); and ikyl, also used alone in the same sense of 'icicle,' as in Prompt. Parv., p. 250. Levins alone in the same sense of 'icicle,' as in Prompt. Parv., p. 250. also has ickles = icicles. - A. S. isgicel, compounded of is, ice, and gicel, a small piece of ice; orig. written ises gicel, where ises is in the gen. case. 'Stiria, ises gicel;' Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 21, col. 2.

B. Gicel is a dimin. form from gic-, put for IK or IAK, an old word for 'ice,' still preserved in Celtic, viz. in the Irish in the girls of the control of the aigh, Gael. eigh, W. ia (for iag), ice. Thus the word really =ice-ice-l, though the second ice is a Celtic word and not the same word with the first. + Icel. iss, ice; and jökull (used by itself), an icicle, dimin. of jaki, a piece of ice, cognate with or borrowed from the Celtic word above indicated. + Low G. is-hekel, in the Ditmarsh dialect isjäkel;

Bremen Wörterbuch, ii. 704. ¶ Observe that -ic- in ic-ic-le is totally different from -ic- in art-ic-le, part-ic-le.

ICONOCLAST, a breaker of images. (Gk.) 'Iconoclasts, or breakers of images;' Bp. Taylor, Of the Real Presence, s. 12 (R.) A coined word; from Gk. εΙκόνο-, crude form of εΙκών (Latinised as icon), an image; and κλάστης, a breaker, one who breaks, from κλάειν, to break. Der. iconoclast-ic.

ICOSAHEDRON, a solid figure, having twenty equal triangular faces. (Gk.) Spelt icosaedron in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Coined from Gk. έκοσι, twenty; and έδρα, a base, lit. a seat, from base έδ-, to sit, cognate with E. Sit. Der. icosahedr-al.

IDEA, a (mental) image, notion, opinion. (L., -Gk.) a bodilesse substance, &c.; Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 666. The fayre Idea; Spenser, Sonnet 45.—Lat. idea.—Gk. lδέα, the look or semblance of a thing, species.—Gk. lδέιν, to see.—VWID, to see; cf. Skt. vid, to perceive, know. See Wit, verb. Der. ide-al. from O. F. ideal, 'ideall' (Cot.), which from Lat. idealis; whence ide-al-ly, ide-al-ise, ide-al-ism, ide al-ist, ide-al-is-at-ion, ide-al-ist-ic, ide-al-isty (most of these terms being modern).

IDENTICAL, the very same. (L.) 'Of such propositions as in the schools are called iden'ical;' Digby, Of Man's Soul, c. 2. Coined by adding -al to the older term identic, spelt identick in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. 'The beard's th' identique beard you knew;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1. l. 149. Identic is formed as if from a Low Lat. identicus *, suggested by the older identitas; see Identity. Der.

IDENTITY, sameness. (F., -Low I.at., -L.) 'Identity and diversity; 'Holland's Plutarch, p. 54 (R.); and in Minsheu.—F. identité, 'identity, likeness, the being almost the very same; 'Cot.— Low Lat. identitatem, acc. of identitas, sameness; a word which occurs A.D. 1249; Ducange. - Lat. identi-, occurring in identi-dem, repeatedly; with suffix -tas. - Lat. idem, the same. - Lat. i-, from base I, pronominal base of the 3rd person; and dem, from base DA, likewise a pronom, base of the 3rd person. Der, From the same Lat. identiwe have identi-fy = F. identifier (Littre); whence identi-fic-al-ion; see IDES, the 15th day of March, May, July, and October, and the 13th of other months. (F., -L.) 'The ides of March;' Jul. Cæsar, i. 2. 18, 19. -F. ides, the ides of a month;' Cot. - Lat. ides, the ides. β . Of disputed origin; we can hardly derive it from a supposed iduare, as that would rather be a derivative from idus. It is prob. connected with Skt. indu, the moon.

IDIOM, a mode of expression peculiar to a language. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'The Latin and Greeke idiom;' Milton, Of Education (R.) Spelt idiome in Minsheu. - F. idiome, 'an ideom, or proper form of speech; ' Cot. - Lat. idioma. - Gk. Ιδίωμα, an idiom, peculiarity in language. – Gk. $l\partial_t(\omega)$, I make my own. – Gk. $l\partial_t(\omega)$, rough of $l\partial_t(\omega)$, one's own, peculiar to one's self. Corrupted from the stem $\sigma F \epsilon$ with suffix -yos, as explained by Curtius, ii. 272. 'In this way (he says) from the stem $\sigma F \epsilon - \dots$ came also $\sigma F \epsilon - y \circ s$, $\sigma F \epsilon - \delta y \circ s$, later $\sigma F \epsilon - \delta y \circ s$, and finally $\delta \delta y \circ s$. Cf. Skt. $s v \circ s y \circ s$, reflexive pronoun of the three persons, self; from the base SAWA, SWA, one's own, reflex. possess. pronoun, with suffix YA. Der. idiom-at-ic, from lõimματ, stem of lõimμα; idiom-at-ic-al, idiom-at-ic-il-y. Also idiomathy, a primary disease not occasioned by another, from lõio-, crude form of Bloos, and παθ-, as seen in πάθειν, to suffer (see Pathos); idio-path-ic, idio-path-ic-al-ly. And see below.

IDIOSYNOBASY, peculiarity of temperament, a characteristic.
(Gk.) 'Whether qualls, from any idiosyneracy or peculiarity of constitution, &c.; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 28, last section. -Gk. theo, crude form of thee, peculiar to one's self; and συγκρασιε, a mixing together, blending. For Gk. thee, see Idiom. The Gk.

Α σύγκρασιε is compounded of σύν, together, and κρασιε, a mingling; see Crasis.

IDIOT, a foolish person, one weak in intellect. (F., -L., -Gk.) See Trench, Study of Words. M. E. idiot, Chaucer, C. T. 1893 (not 3893). -F. idiot, 'an ideot (sic) or naturall fool;' Cot. -Lat. idiota, an ignorant, uneducated person. - Gk. iδιώτηs, a private person, hence one who is inexperienced or uneducated. (See I Cor. xiv. 16, where the Vulgate has locus idiota, and Wyclif the place of an idyot.) own. See Idiom, Der. idiot-ic. diot-ic-al, idiot-ic-al-ly, idiot-ism (=idiom); also idioe-ism Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715, formed from idiot as frequency is from frequent.

IDLE, unemployed, uscless, unimportant. (E.) M. E. idel, Chaucer, C. T. 2507, 12572; hence the phr. in idel = in vain, id. 12576. –
A. S. idel, vain, empty, useless; Grein, ii. 135. + Du. ijdel, vain, frivolous, trifling. + Dan. idel, sheer, mere. + Swed. idel, mere, pure, downright. + G. eitel, vain, conceited, trifling; O. H. G. ital, empty, useless, mere. . β. The orig. sense seems to have been 'clear' or ' bright;' hence, pure, sheer, mere, downright; and lastly, vain, unimportant. The A.S. idel exactly answers to the cognate Gk. lθαρόε, clear, pure (used of springs), a scarce word, given in Curtius, i. 310, which see. — \(\sqrt{IDH} \), to kindle; cf. Skt. indh, to kindle; whence Gk. alθειν, to burn, alθήρ, upper (clear) air, alθρα, clear sky; also A. S. ád (for aid), a burning, funeral pile, O. H. G. eit, a funeral pile, eiten, to burn, glow. See Æither. Der. idl-y; idle, verb; idl-er; idle-ness, Ormulum, 4736, from A.S. idelnes, Grein, ii. 135.

IDOL, a figure or image of a god. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. idole, Chaucer, C. T. 15753. - O. F. idole; see Sherwood's index to Cot. -Lat. idolum, I Cor. viii. 4 (Vulg.); also idolon.— Gk. είδομον, an image, likeness.— Gk. είδομαι, I appear, seem; cf. Gk. είδον, I saw, ίδειν, to see.— WID, to see; cf. Skt. vid. to perceive; and see Wit, verb. Der. ido-latry (corruption of idolo-latry), M. E. idolatrie, Chaucer, C.T. Pers. Tale, De Avaritia, § 2, from F. idolatrie = Low Lat. idolatria, shortened form of idololatria, from Gk. είδωλολατρεία, service of idols, Coloss. iii. 5; composed of είδωλο-, crude form of είδωλον, and λατρεία. service, from λάτριε, a hired servant, which from λάτρον, hire. Also idolater, from O. F. idolatre, 'an idolater' (Cot.); also ill-spelt idolastre in O. F., whence M. E. idolastre, an idolater, Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale, De Avaritia, § 3; the O. F. idolatre is developed from O. F. idolatr-ie, explained above. Hence also idolatr-ess, idolatr-ise, id ous, idolatr-ous-ly. Also idol-ise (Kersey), idol-is-er; see idyl. IDYL, iDYLL, a pastoral poem. (L.,-Gk.) 'Idyl, a little pastoral poem; Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Idyl, a poem consisting of a few verses; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. – Lat. idyllium. – Gk. εἰδύλλιον, a short descriptive pastoral poem; so called from its descriptive representations. - Gk. eldos, form, shape, figure, appearance, look. - Gk. eldoµaı, I appear, seem; see further under Idol. Der. idyll-ic. IF, a conjunction, expressive of doubt. (E.) M. E. if, Chaucer, C. T. 145; 3if, P. Plowman, B. prol. 7; giff, Barbour, Bruce, i. 12.—A. S. gif, if; Grein, i. 505. + Icel. ef, older form also if, if. + Du. of, or, if, whether, but; cf. Du. alsof = as if. + O. Fries. ief, gef, ef, of, if. + O. Sax. ef, of, if. + Goth. iba, ibai, perhaps, answering in form to E. if, Icel. ef, O. Fries. ief, gef, ef, O. Sax. ef; whence jabai, if (compounded of jah, and, also, and ibai) answering in form to Du. of, O. Fries. of, O. Sax. of, G. ob. + O. H. G. iba, condition, stipulation, whence the dat. case ibu, ipu, used in the sense of 'if,' lit. 'on the condition; also (answering to Goth. jabai) O. H. G. upi, upa, ube, oba, mod. G. ob, whether.

B. The O. H. G. ibu is the dat. case of iba, as said above; so also the Icel. ef, if, is closely related to (and once a case of) Icel. ef (older form if), doubt, hesitation, whence also the verb efa (formerly ifa), to doubt. All the forms beginning with e or i can be derived from a Teutonic type EBAI, dat. case of EBA, stipulation, doubt; see Fick, iii. 20. The other forms are evidently closely tion, doubt; see Fick, iii. 20. related. Y. The W. o, if (for op. Rhys) is also cognate; we may also compare Lat. op in op-inus, imagining, op-inur, to suppose, op-inio, an opinion; see Opinion. There is a probable further connection with Lat. apisci, to acquire, and apus, fit; see Apt. nection with Lat. apisci, to acquire, and aptus, fit; see Apt. The probable root is AP, to attain; cf. Skt. áp, to attain, obtain. Thus and thence to 'doubt.' The guess of Horne Tooke's, that A. S. gif is the imperative mood of A. S. gifan, to give, has been copied only too often. It is plainly wrong, (1) because the A. S. use of the more a while is not supported by the control of the more a while is no support of the more a while is no support of the more a while is no support of the more and a while is not considered. words exhibits no such connection, and (2) because it fails to explain the Friesic, Icelandic, German, and Gothic forms, thus ignoring the value of comparison in philology. But it will long continue to be held as indubitably true by all who prefer plausibility to research, and who regard English as an isolated language.

IGNITION, a setting on fire. (F., = L.) 'Not a total ignition;' Sir T. Browne, Works, b. ii. c. 2. § 6. = F. ignition, 'a burning, firing;' Cot. Coined (as if from Lat. ignitio *, a burning) from Lat. ignitus, pp. of ignire, to set on fire. - Lat. ignis, fire. + Skt. agni, fire.

8. 'It is not improbable that Skt. agni-s = Lat. igni-s, Lith. ugni-s, is derived from the root AG (Skt. aj) to move; Curtius, i. 134. For this root, see Agile. Der. Hence ignite, a later word, though per-late formed dispatcy from 14. (2) and Legal.

B. Prob. suggested by the sb. illegality, haps formed directly from Lat. pp. ignitus; ignit-ible. Also igneous, Englished from Lat. igneus, fiery, by the common change from Lat.
-us to E. -ous. Also, directly from the Latin, ignis fatuus, lit. 'foolish fire,' hence, a misleading moteor; see Fatuous. 'Fuller (Comment. on Ruth, p. 38) would scarcely have spoken of "a meteor of foolish fire," if ignis fatuus, which has now quite put out "firedrake," the older name for these meteors, had not been, when he wrote, still strange to the language, or quite recent to the Trench, Eng. Past and Present, lect. iv.

IGNOBLE, not noble, mean, base. (F., -L.) In Shak. Rich. III, iii. 7. 127. -F. ignoble, 'ignoble;' Sherwood's index to Cotgrave. -Lat. ignobilis. -Lat. i., short for in-, not; and gnobilis, later nobilis, noble. See I- and Noble. Der. ignobl-y, ignoble-ness. And see Ignominy

IGNOMINY, disgrace, dishonour. (F., -L.) In Shak. I Hen. IV, v. 4. 100. -F. ignominie, 'ignominy;' Cot. - Lat. ignominia, disgrace. - Lat. i-, short for in-, not; and gnomini-, crude form of gnomen, later nomen, name, renown. See Name. Der. ignomini-ous, ignomini-ous-ly, -ness. See Ignore.

IGNORE, not to know, to disregard. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. - F. ignorer, 'to ignore, or be ignorant of;' Cot. - Lat. ignorare, not to know. - Lat. i-, short for in-, not; and the base gno-, seen in gnoscere, later noscere, to know. See Know. Der. ignorant, in the Remedie of Love, st. 34, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 323 b, from F. ignorant (Cot.), which from Lat. ignorant, stem of pres. pt. of ignorane; ignorant-ly; also ignorance, in early use, Ancren Riwle, p. 278, l. 7, from F. ignorance (Cot.), which from Lat. ignorantia, ignorance. Also ignorams, formerly a law term; 'Ignorams (i. e. we are ignorant) is properly written on the bill of indictments by the grand enquest, empanelled on the inquisition of causes criminal and publick, when they mislike their evidence, as defective or too weak to make good the presentment; Blount's Law Dict., 1691; cf. Minsheu.

IGUANA, a kind of American lizard. (Span., – W. Indian.)

'The iguana' is described in a translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792, vol. ii. 263. Also called guana. - Span. iguana. B. 'Cuvier states, on the authority of Hernandes and Scaliger, that it was originally a St. Domingo word, where it was pronounced by the natives hiuana or igoana; Beeton's Dict. of Universal Information. Littré gives yuana as a Caribbean word, cited by Oviedo in 1525.

IL- (1), the form assumed by the prefix in- (= Lat. in, prep.) when followed by l. Exx.: il-lapse, il-lation, il-lision, il-lude, il-luminate, il-lusion, illustrate, illustrious. See In- (2).

III- (2), the form assumed by the prefix in-, used in a negative sense, when followed by l. Exx.: il-legal, il-legible, il-legitimate, il-liberal, il-licit, il-limitable, il-literate, il-logical. See In- (3).

ILIAC, pertaining to the smaller intestines. (F.,-L.) 'The iliacke passion is most sharpe and grieuous;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxx. c. 7.—F. iliaque, 'of or belonging to the flanks;' Cot. Formed as if from Lat. iliacus* (not given in White's Dict.), adj. regularly formed from Lat. ilia, sb. pl. the flanks, groin.

Iliad. - Gk. Ίλιάδ-, crude form of Ἰλιάs, the Iliad. - Gk. Ἰλιοs, Ilios, the city of Ilus; commonly known as Troy. - 1200, Ilus, the grandfather of Priam, and son of Tros (whence Troy).

ILL, evil, bad, wicked. (Scand.) The comp. and superl. forms are Worse, Worst, q. v. M. E. ill, ille, Ormulum, 6647; common as adv., Havelok, 1165; chiefly used in poems which contain several Scand. words.—Icel. illr, adj. ill; also (better) written illr. + Dan. ilde (for ille), adv. ill, badly. + Swed. illa, adv. ill, badly. \(\beta \). The long vowel in Icel. is a mark of contraction; illr is nothing but a contraction of the word which appears in A. S. as yfel, and in mod. E. as evil. See Evil. Der. ill, adv., ill, sb.; ill-ness, Macb. i. 5. 21 (not in early use); ill-blood, ill-bred, ill-breeding, ill-favoured, ill-natured, ill-starred, ill-will.

ILLAPSE, a gliding in, sudden entrance. (L.) illapse of some such active substance or powerful being, illapsing into matter,' &c.; Hale, Origin. of Mankind, p. 321 (R.) Coined (in imitation of lapse) from Lat. illapsus, a gliding in. See II- (1) and Lapse. Der. illapse, vb.

TILLATION, an inference, conclusion. (F., -L.) 'Illation, an inference, conclusion;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and in Cotgrave. -F. illation, 'an illation, inference;' Cot. -Lat. acc. illationem, from nom. illatio, a bringing in, inference. — Lat. il—=in-, prefix, in; and latus = tlatus, borne, carried, brought = Gk. τλητόs, borne, from TAL, to lift. See II-(1) and Tolerate. ¶ Since latus is used as the pp. of ferre, to bear, whence in-fer-latin, (respectively). and inference are much the same. Der. il-lative (rare), il-lative-ly.

From II. (2) and Legal. B. Prob. suggested by the sb. illegality, which is in earlier use, from F. illegalite, 'illegality;' Cot. Der.

illegal-ity (but see remark); illegal-ly, illegal-ise.

ILLEGIBLE, not to be read. (F., = L.) 'The secretary poured the ink-bottle all over the writings, and so defaced them that they were made altogether illegible;' Howell (in Todd; no reference). Coined from II- (2) and Legible. Der. illegible, illegible-ness;

ILLUSTRIOUS, bright, renowned. (F., -L.; ar L.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. 1. 178. A badly coined word; either from F. illustre, by adding -ous, or from the corresponding Lat. illustris, bright, renowned; the former is more likely. [Its form imitates that of industrious, which is correct.] β. The origin of Lat. illustris is disputed. According to one theory, it is from Lat. lustrum, a lustration, which is prob. to be referred to √LU, to wash; see Lustration. Or, more likely, the state of the literature of the literat it stands for illuc-s-tris, from the base luc- seen in luc-id-us, bright (shortened to lū in lu-men, light, lu-na, moon); see Lucid. 7. The (shortened to lū in lu-men, light, lu-na, moon); see Lucid.

IM- (1), prefix. (F., - L.; or E.) A. In some words, im- is a corruption of the O. French prefix em-, but is spelt im- (as sometimes in later F.) by confusion with the Latin prefix im-whence it is derived. B. And further, by a confusion arising from the double use of the prefix in- (which is both Eng. and Lat.) it was often looked upon as a fair substitute for the E. in, and is prefixed to words of purely E. origin, when the next letter is b or p. Exx.: im-bed, imbitter, im-body, im-bosom, im-bower, im-brown; and similarly im-park, IM-(2), prefix. (L.) In many words, im-in-, from the Lat. prep. IMBRUE, IMBREW, EMBREW, to moisten, drench. We in a manner were got out of God's possession; were, in respect to Him, become imbecile and lost; Barrow, Sermons, vol. ii. ser. 22 (R.) [Formerly a rare word as an adj.; but the verb to imbécill (accented on the penultimate) was rather common; see note below.] Imbecility is in Shak. Troil. i. 3. 114. - O. F. imbecille, 'weak, feeble;' Cot. - Lat. imbecillum or imbecillem, acc. of imbecillus or imbecillis, feeble. Root uncertain. Der. imbecil-i-ty. The examples in R. shew that the verb to imbécill or imbécel, to weaken, enfecble, was once tolerably well known. It also meant 'to diminish' or 'subtract from,' and this is probably the origin of our modern E. embezzle, to purloin, the etymology of which is not given in its proper place. The example from Udal, on the Revelation of St. John, c. 16, shews the intermediate stage in the sense. It runs as follows: 'The seconde plage of the ment of Rome, and this is imbeselynge and dimynishe [diminution] of their power and dominion, many landes and people fallynge from them.' The quotations (in R.) from Drant's to of the contractions of the contraction of the The quotations (in R.) from Drant's tr. of Horace, b. i. sat. 5 and sat. 6, introduce the lines: 'So tyrannous a monarchie imbecelyng freedome, than' [then]; and: 'And so imbecill all theyr strengthe that they are naught to me.' These lines completely establish the accentuation of the verb, and further illustrate its sense. See Embezzle, and the quotations in Richardson under embezzle, imbecile, and imbezzle. The old word bezzle, to squander, is still the same word, with loss of the first syllable.

IMBED, to lay, as in a bed. (E.; with F. prefix.) In Todd's Johnson. From Im-(1) and Bed.

IMBIBE, to drink in. (F., -L.; or L.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. - F. imbiber, in use in the 16th cent. - Lat. imbibere, to drink in. - Lat. im-=in, in; and bibere, to drink. IMBROWN, to make brown. (E.; with F. prefix.) From Im-(1) and Brown. In Milton, P. L. iv. 246.

L.) '[Mine eyes] With teares no more imbrus your mistresse face;' Turberville, The Lover Hoping Assuredly. 'Imbrew'd in guilty blood;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 7. 47.—O. F. embruer; Cot. gives 's'embruer, to imbrue or bedable himself with.' Allied to O. Ital. imbevere, which Florio gives as equivalent to imbuire, 'to sinke into, to wet or moisten in, to steepe into, to embrue;' cf. mod. Ital. imbevere, to imbibe. β. The O. F. embruer is formed, like mod. F. abreuver, from a causal verb -bevrer, to give to drink, turned into brever in the 16th century, and thence into bruer. See abrever in Brachet.

y. This ausal verb is founded on O. F. bevre (F. boire), to drink; from Lat. bibere, to drink.

8. Hence imbrue is the causal of to imbibe, and signifies 'to make to imbibe,' to soak, drench. See Imbibe.

Probably it has often been confounded with imbue, which is really its doublet; see Imbue. Utterly unconnected with E. brew, with which it is sometimes supposed to be allied.

IMBUE, to cause to drink, tinge deeply. (L.) 'With noysome rage imbew'd;' Spenser, Ruines of Rome, st. 24, l. 6. Cf. Milton, P. IN-(3), prefix, with negative force. (L.; or F., -L.) In numerous words, the prefix in- has a negative force; from Lat. neg. prefix in-, which is cognate with E. un- (with the same force), O. Irish an-, Skt. an- (frequently shortened to a-), Gk. dva-, dv- (often shortened to d-), Zend ana-, an., a.. B. This negative prefix is probably identical with the preposition ANA, which appears as Gk. dvá, up, Zend ana, up, Goth. ana, up, to, against. Thus the Gk. ἀνά occasionally has the sense of 'back' or 'backwards,' as in ἀνα-νεύειν, to throw the head back in token of refusal, to deny; cf. dvà poor, up stream, against the stream; whence the negative use may easily have arisen. See Curtius, i. 381. And see On, In. β. In many words, the Lat. word has reached us through the medium of French. Exx.: in-¶ In- (3) becapable, in-certainty, in-clement, in-compatible, &c. comes i- before gn, as in i-gnoble; il- before l, as in il-legal; im- before trina, learning. See In- (2) and Dootrine. Der. indoctrinat-ion. INDOLENCE, idleness. (L.) A shortened form of the older indolency. 'Indolence or Indolency;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Only indolency is given in Coles and Blount, and occurs in Holland's Plutarch, p. 480 (R.) Indolence and indolent both occur in the Spectator, no. 100. Indolency is Englished from Lat. indolentia, freedom from pain; hence, ease. Lat. in., neg. prefix; and dolent, stem of dolens, pres. part. of dolers, to grieve. See In-(3) and Dolour. Der. indolent (later than indolency); indolent-ly.

INDOMITABLE, untameable. (L.) 'It is so fierce and indomitable; 'Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 383 (R.) A coined word; from Lat. in-, not; and domitare, frequentative of domare, to tame, cognate with E. tame; see In- (3) and Tame. Der. indomitabley. INDORSE, the same as Endorse. the Low Lat. is indorsare. Der. indors-er, indors-ee, indorse-ment. INDUBITABLE, not to be doubted. (F.,-L.) 'He did not indubitably believe;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 1. § 6.

-F. indubitable, 'undoubtable:' Cot.-Lat. indubitabilis, indubitable. -Lat. in-, not; and dubitabilis, doubtful, from dubitare, to doubt. See Doubt. Der. indubitabl-y, indubitable-ness; so also in-dubious.

INDUCE, to lead to, prevail on. (L.) 'Induceth in many of them a loue to worldly things;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 880 h. - Lat. 'Induceth in many of inducere, to lead in, conduct to .- Lat. in, towards; and ducere, to lead. See In- (2) and Duct. Der. induc-er, induc-ible; induce-ment, Spenser, F. Q. vii. 6. 32; also induct, q. v.

INDUCT, to introduce, put in possession. (L.) 'Inducted and brought in thither;' Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 1029 (R.) = Lat. inductus, ' Inducted and pp. of inducere, to bring in; see above. Der. induction, from F. induction, 'an induction, entry, or leading into' (Cot.), from Lat. inductionem, acc. of inductio, an introducing; induct-ive, induct-ive-ly. Induction was formerly used for 'introduction;' as in Sackville's Induction to the Mirror for Magistrates.

INDUE (1), to invest or clothe with, supply with. (L.) 'Infinite shapes of creatures there are found . . Some fitt for reasonable sowles t'indew;' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 6. 35. 'Indu'd with robes of various hue;' Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metam. b. xi. l. 264; where the putably certain; 'Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. v. c. 12, § 1. From Lat. has 'induitive uelamina mille colorum,' Metam. xi. 589. - Lat.

viduers, to put into, put on, clothe with. water, clothes, ex-mis, spoils; the prefix is ind- rather than in-, there being no connection with Gk. arother, drobbeer, to put on. See Exuvise. Der. indus-ment (rare). And see below.

INDUE (2), a corruption of Endue, q. v. (F., -L.) This word is totally distinct from the above, but some of our best writers seem to have much confused them. For instances, see Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 105, Oth. iii. 4. 146, &c.; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 2. 6. See Todd's Johnson. The mistake chiefly arises in the phrase 'indued with,' miswritten for 'endued with,' in the sense of 'endowed with;' see Shak, Two Gent. v. 4. 153, Com. Errors, ii. 1. 22. Dryden uses 'indued with' correctly, as in the instance cited under Indue (1).

INDULGENCE, permission, licence, gratification. (F., -L.) M. E. indulgence, P. Plowman, B. vii. 193; Chaucer, C. T. 5666. -F. indulgence, 'indulgence;' Cot. - Lat. indulgentia, indulgence, gentleness. - Lat. indulgenti-, crude form of pres. part. of indulgere, to be courteous to, indulge. B. INGOT. a mass of metal poured into a mould a mass of un-INGOT, a mass of metal poured into a mould, a mass of unwrought metal. (E.) See my note to Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 2. 17. M. E. ingot, Chaucer, C. T. 16677, 16691, 16696, 16701; where it means 'a mould in which metal is cast;' see the passages. But the true sense is that which is still preserved, viz. 'that which is poured in, a mass of metal. = A, S. in, in; and goten, poured, pp. of geotan, to pour, shed water, fuse metals; Grein, i. 504. Cf. Du. ingieten, Swed. ingjúta, to pour in.

β. The A.S. geotan is cognate with Du. gieten, G. giessen, Icel. gjóta (pp. gotinn), Dan. gyde, Swed. gjuta (pp. guten), Goth. gjutan, to pour, shed, fuse; all from GHUD, to pour, seen also in Lat. fundere (pt. t. fudi, pp. fusus); which is an extension of GHU, to pour. See Fuse, Chyle. (FF A. From the E. ingot is derived the F. lingot, an ingot, which stands for l'ingot, by that incorporation of the article which is not uncommon in French; cf. lendemain (= le en demain), loriot (from Lat. aureolus), luette (from Lat. uua), lierre (from Lat. hedera). And again, from F. lingot was formed the Low Lat. lingotus, which is not an early word, but assigned by Ducange to A.D. 1440. This Low Lat. word has been by some fancifully derived from Lat. lingua, the tongue; owing to a supposed resemblance of a mass of molten metal to the shape of the tongue; much as the countryman described the size of a stone as being 'as big as a lump of chalk.'

B. Scheler hesitates to accept the derivation here given, from the notion that the A.S. verb geotan soon became obsolete. This is quite a mistake, as it is still extant; see 'Yote, to pour,' in Halliwell, and cf. Cleveland yetling, a small iron pan; and more E. dialect-words from the same source might be adduced. The M. E. verb zeten was long in use also; see examples in Stratmann, s. v. zeoten, 3rd ed., p. 262. 'His mase [mace] he toke in his honde tho, That was made of yoten bras, i. e. brass formed in a mould; Rich. Coer de Lion, ed. Weber, 371. 'The i.e. both the lazar's cup and another were east in one mould; Amis and Amiloun, ed. Weber, 2023. 'Mawmez igoten of golde'=idols cast out of gold; Juliana, ed. Cockayne, p. 38, l. 13. C. Moreover, there was a derivative sb. gote, a channel; see Prompt. Parv., p. 205, and note; it occurs in the statutes 33 Hen. VIII, c. 33, 2 and 3 Edw. VI, c. 30; still in use in the forms gote, gow, gut, got, in various parts of England; cf. Du. goot, a gutter; Low G. gute, gete, a can for pouring out, the beak of such a can; göte, a pouring out; see Bremen Wörterb. ii. 502. see Bremen Worterb. ii. 502. D. And note particularly that the whole word ingot has its exact parallel in the cognate (yet independent) G. einguss, infusion, instillation, pouring in, potion, drink (given to horses); as a technical term, jet, ingot; Flügel's G. Dict. This word, by Grimm's law, and by the usual vowel-changes, corresponds to the E. word, letter for letter, throughout. (Much more responds to the E. word, letter for letter, infoughout.

but otherwise obsolete. INKLE, a kind of tape. (F.,-L.) In Shak. L. L. L. iii. 140; Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 208.

a. In the Prompt. Parv. we find the curious entry: 'Lynyolf, or inniolf, threde to sow wythe schone or botys, lynolf, Indula, licinium.' Here the final f appears to be a corrupt addition, leaving inniol as another form of lynyol or linnel or the line of the l β. But it is certain that linniol is the same word with O. F. lignel or lignioul (Roquefort) or ligneul (Cotgrave), which also took the form lingell in English. 'Lyngell that souters sowe with, chefgros, lignier; Palsgrave. And since linniol also appears as inniol, we have good ground for supposing that lingell might appear as ingle or inkle, by an easy corruption.

\[\gamma\]. This shews that Mr. Wedgwood is probably right in deriving inkle from lingell by the loss of initial l, which might easily have been mistaken for the French definite article, and thus be dropped as being supposed to be unnecessary. There are similar cases in which an I has been prefixed owing to a similar mistake; I have met with landiron with the sense of andiron; see Andiron. For further examples of lingel, lingel, or lingle, see Halliwell and Jamieson. O. F. ligneul, 'shoomakers thread, or a tatching end,' Cot.; spelt lignel in the 13th cent. (Littré). Dimin. of

F. ligne, thread (Littré). Lat. linea, fem. of lineus, hempen, flaxen.

- Lat. linum, flax. See Linen. INKLING, a hint, intimation. (Scand.) In Shak. Hen. VIII, ii. 1. 140; Cor. i. 1. 59. 'What cause hee hadde soo to thynke, harde it is to saye, whyther hee, being toward him, anye thynge knewe that hee suche thyng purposed, or otherwyse had anye inkelynge thereof; for hee was not likelye to speake it of nonghte; Sir T. More, Works, p. 38 a. Inkling is a verbal sb. formed from the M. E. verb incle. 'To incle the truthe;' Alisaunder, ed. Skeat, 616 (in Appendix to Will. of Palerne). β. Incle or inkle is a freeuentative verb from a base ink-, to murmur, mutter. This word is now only preserved in the parallel form imt-, appearing in Icel. ymta, Dan. ymte, to murmur, mutter, an iterative verb from ymja, to whine, which from ymr, a humming sound. Y. And again, ymr is from a base um-, appearing in Icel. umla, to mutter, to mumble; cf. Swed. y. And again, ymr is from Aum, a slight sound, whence the phrase fa hum om, to get a hint of, get an inkling of.

5. Finally, the Swed. Aum, like E. Aum, is of imitative origin; see Hum. Cf. O. Dan. ymmel, a murmur, ymle, to whisper, rumour (Molbech's Dan. Dict. s. v. ymie), which is a parallel form with M.E. incle. Tobserve that the base um-changes Entente is a participial sb. formed from the vb. entendre; see Intend. Der. The adj. intent (Milton, P. L. ix. 786) is directly from Lat. intentus, pp. of intendere; intent-ly, intent-ness. Also intent-ion, Wint. Ta. i. 2. 138, (spelt intencyone in Prompt. Parv.), from F. intention, 'an intention, intent,' from Lat. intentionem, acc. of intentio, endeavour, effort, design; intent-ion-al, intent-ion-al-ly, intention-ed.

INTEER, to bury. (F., - L.) M. E. enterren. 'And with gret dule entyrit wes he;' Barbour's Bruce, xix. 224. Later, inter, K. John, v. 7. 99. — F. enterrer, 'to interre, bury;' Cot. — Low Lat. interrare, to put into the ground, bury. — Lat. in, in; and terra, the earth; see Torrace. Der. inter-ment = M. E. enterement, Gower, C. A. ii. 319, from F. enter-ement, 'an interring;' Cot.

INTER-, prefix, among, amongst, between. (L.) Lat. inter-, prefix; from inter, prep. between, among. A comparative form, answering to Skt. antar, within, and E. under, and closely connected with Lat. interus, interior. See Interior, Under. In a few cases, the final r becomes l before l following, as in intellect, intelligence. Most words with this prefix are purely Latin, but a few, as interweave, are hybrid. In some cases, inter-stands for the F, entre.

INTERACTION, mutual action. (L.; and F.,-L.) Modern;

not in Todd's Johnson. Coined from Inter- and Action.
INTERCALATE, to insert between, said of a day in a calendar. (L.) In Ralegh, Hist. of World, b. ii. c. 3. s. 6. Intercalation is explained in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. intercalatus, pp. of intercalare, to proclaim that something has been inserted. - Lat. inter. between, among; and calare, to proclaim; see Calends. Der. intercalat-ion; also intercalar = Lat. intercalaris; intercalary = Lat. intercalarius.

INTERCEDE, to go between, mediate, plead for one. (F.,-L.) Milton has intercede, P. L. xi. 21; intercession, P. L. x. 228; intercessour, P. L. iii. 219. - F. interceder; interceder pour, to intercede for; Cot. - Lat. intercedere, lit. to go between. - Lat. inter, between; and cedere, to go; see Inter- and Cede. Der. interced-ent, interced-ently; also (from pp. intercessus) intercess-ion = F. intercession, 'intercesssion,' Cot.; intercession-al; intercess-or, formerly intercessour, from F. intercesseur, 'an intercessor' (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. intercessorem; hence intercessor-i-al, intercessor-y.

INTERCEPT, to catch by the way, cut off communication, INTERCEPT, to catch by the way, cut off communication, (F.,-L.) Orig. a pp.; thus Chaucer has intercept = intercepted; On the Astrolabe, pt. ii. § 29, l. 34 (ed. Skeat). 'To intercept, intercipere;' Levins (1570).—F. intercepter, 'to intercept, forestall;' Cot.—Lat. interceptus, pp. of intercipere, lit. to catch between.—Lat. inter, between; and capere, to catch, seize. See Inter- and Capable. Der. intercepter; intercept-ion, Hen. V, ii. 2. 7.

INTERCESSION, INTERCESSOR; see Intercede.
INTERCHANGE, to change between, exchange. (F.,-L.)
Formerly enterchange. 'Full many strokes... were enterchanged with the property of the property twixt them two; 'Spenser, F. Q. iv. 3. 17.—F. entrechanger; 's entrechanger, to interchange;' Cot.—F. entre = Lat. inter, between; and changer, to change. See Inter- and Change. Der. interchange-able; interchange-abl-y, Rich. II, i. 1. 146; interchange-ment, Tw. Nt. v. 162.

INTERCOMMUNICATE, to communicate mutually. (L.) Modern; not in Todd. Coined from Inter- and Communicate; see Commune. Der. intercommunication; so also inter-INTERCOSTAL, lying between the ribs. (F., -L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -F. intercostal, 'between the ribs;' Cot. Coined from Lat. inter, between; and costa, a rib. See Inter- and Costal.

INTERCOURSE, commerce, connection by dealings, communication. (F., -L.) In Milton, P.L. ii. 1031, vii. 751. Spelt entercourse in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Modified from F. entrecours, intercourse; omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 16th century in the sense of commerce; see Littré. -Low Lat. intercursus, commerce; sense of commerce; see Littré. -Low Lat. intercursus, commerce; at interpretation. See Interc. and Course. Der So Lat. intercursus, interposition. See Inter- and Course. Der. So also inter-current, inter-currence.

INTERDICT, a prohibitory decree. (L.) A law term, from Law Latin. [The F. form entredit is in early use; Rob. of Glouc. p. 495, l. 6 (and note); enterdite, Gower, C. A. i. 259. Hence the M. E. verb entrediten, Rob. of Glouc., p. 495, l. 17.] 'An interdicte, that no man shal rede, ne syngen, ne crystene chyldren, ne barye the deede, ne receyue sacramente;' Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed.

INTEREST (1), profit, advantage, premium for use of money. (F., - L.) Differently formed from the word below. 'My well-won thrift, Which he calls interest;' Merch. Ven. i. 3, 52. - O. F. interest (mod. F. interêt), 'an interest in, a right or title to a thing; also interest, or use for money; 'Cot. - Lat. interest, it is profitable, it concerns; 3 p. s. pres. indic. of interesse, to concern, lit. to be between. -Lat. inter, between; and esse, to be. See Inter- and Essence. Littré remarks that the F. has considerably modified the use of the Lat. original; see his Dict. for the full history of the word. He also bids us observe that the Span. interes, Port. interesse, Ital. interesse, interest, are all taken from the infinitive mood of the Lat. verb, not from the 3 p. s. pres., as in French; cf. Low Lat. interesse, interest. Besides this, the use of this sb. helped to modify the verb below; q.v. Spenser has the Ital. form interesse, F. Q. vii.

INTEREST (2), to engage the attention, awaken concern in, excite in behalf of another. (F., -L.) A very curious word; formed excite in behalf of another. (F., -L.) A very curious word; formed (by partial confusion with the word above) from the pp. interess'd of the obsolete verb to interess. The very same confusion occurs in the formation of Disinterested, q.v. 'The wars so long continued between The emperor Charles and Francis, the French king, Have interess'd, in either's cause, the most Of the Italian princes;' Massinger, Duke of Milan, i. 1. 'Tib. By the Capitol, And all our gods, but that the dear republic, Our sacred laws and just authority Are interess'd therein, I should be silent; Ben Jonson, Sejanus, iii. 1. 'To interess themselves for Rome, against Carthage;' Dryden, On Poetry and Painting (R.) 'To interess or interest, to concern, to engage;' Kersey, ed. 1715.—O.F. interesse, 'interessed, or touched in;' Cot. Cf. Ital. interessare (pp. interessaro), Span. interesar (pp. interessado), to interest.—Lat. interesse, to concern; see Interest (1). esado), to interest.—Lat. interesse, to concern; see Interest (1).

Der. interest-ed (really a reduplicated pp.), a late word, added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.; interest-ing, interest-ing-ly; also dis-interest-

INTERFERE, to interpose, intermeddle. (F.,-L.) A word known in the 15th cent., but not much used. Chiefly restricted to the peculiar sense of hitting one leg against another; said of a horse. 'Entyrferyn, intermisceo;' Prompt. Parv. 'To interfeere, to hacke one foot or legge against the other, as a horse doth;' Minsheu, ed. 1627, 'To enterfeir, to rub or dash one heel against the other, to exchange some blows;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.— O. F. entreferir, 'to interchange some blows; to strike or hit, at once, one another; to interfeere, as an horse;' Cot. - F. entre, between; and ferir, to strike. - Lat. inter, between; and ferire, to strike. See Inter- and Ferule. Der. interfer-er, interfer-ence.

INTERFUSE, to pour between. (L.) Milton has interfus'd, P. L. vii. 89.—Lat. interfisses, pp. of interfundere, to pour between. See Inter- and Fuse (1). Der. interfus-ion.

INTONE, to chant. (Low Lat., - Lat. and Gk.) 'Ass intones to ass;' Pope, Dunciad, ii. 253. - Low Lat. intonare, to sing according to tone. - Lat. in tonuin, according to tone; where tonum is acc. of tonus, not a true Lat. word, but borrowed from Gk. τόνος; see Tone. Der. inton-at-ion. ¶ Note that intonation was also formerly used in the sense of 'loud noise.' Thus Minsheu (ed. 1627) has: 'Intonation, loud noise or sound, a thundering. This is from the classical Lat. intonare, to thunder forth, compounded of in (used as intensive prefix) and tonare, to thunder, which is from O. Lat. tonus, thunder. But this O. Lat. tonus is cognate with Gk. róvos (instead of being borrowed from it, like the tonus above); so that the result is much the same. See Thunder. We may also note that, in the quotation from Pope above, there is probably a play upon words; so that both Low Lat. intonare and Lat. intonare are involved in it.

INTOXICATE, to make drunk. (Low Lat., -Gk.) In Shak. Hen. V, iv. 7. 39. Used as a pp. in Fryth's Works, p. 77: 'theyrmind is so intoxicate.' - Low Lat. intoxicatus, pp. of intoxicare, to INTROSPECTION, a looking into. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. Formed, by analogy with F. sbs. in -ion, from Lat. acc. introspectionem, from nom. introspectio, a looking into. - Lat. intro-, within (see Introduce); and spectus, pp. of specers, to look; see INTRUDE, to thrust oneself into. (L.) In Hamlet, iii. 4. 31.

- Lat. intruders, to thrust into, obtrude (oneself). - Lat. in, into; and trudere, to thrust. See Thrust. Der. intrud-er; also intrus-ion, Sir T. More, Works, p. 640b=F. intrusion, 'an intrusion' (Cot.), formed from Lat. pp. intrusus; intrus-ive, Thomson, Liberty, pt. i. 1. 299; intrus-ive-ly, intrus-ive-ness.

INTRUST, to give in trust, commit to one's care. (Scand.; with E. prefix.) Sometimes entrust, but intrust is much better, as being purer English; the latter part of the word being of Scand. (not F.) origin. In Dryden, Character of a Good Parson, l. 57. Compounded of In and Trust.

INTUITION, a looking into, ready power of perception. (L.) Used by Bp. Taylor in the sense of 'looking upon;' Great Exemplar, pt. i. s. 36; and Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 2 (R.) Intuitive is in Cotgrave, and in Milton, P. L. v. 488. Formed, by analogy poison. – Lat. in, into; and toxicum, poison, a word borrowed from fif from a Low Lat. intumescentia*), from Lat. intumescenti-, crude Gk. τοξικόν, poison in which arrows were dipped. – Gk. τόξον, a bow, form of pres. pt. of intumescere, to begin to swell. – Lat. in, used intensively; and tumescere, inceptive form of tumere, to swell. See Tumid.

INTWINE, another form of Entwine, q. v. (E.) Really a better form, as being purer English.

So also in-twist; see Entwist.

INUNDATION, an overflowing of water, a flood. (L.) In Shak. K. John, v. 1. 2; v. 2. 48. [Imitated from F. inondation.]— Lat. inundationem, acc. of inundatio, an overflowing. - Lat. inundatus, pp. of inundars, to overflow, spread over in waves.—Lat. in, upon, over; and unda, a wave. See Undulate. Der. inundats, vb., really suggested by the sb., and of later date.

INURE, to habituate, accustom. (F.,-L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt.

ii. 5. 160. Also enure, as in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 2. 29; v. 9. 39; vi. 8.

14; and Sonnet 14, 1. 7.

B. On the one hand, the F. prefix en-is more consonant with the analogy of other words, as en-able, and the other the E. in is more conen-camp, en-large, &cc.; whilst, on the other, the E. in is more consistent with the origin of the word, since it arose from the old phrase 'in ure,' where ure is a sb. Y. The sb. ure is commonly explained by use, but its true sense is work or operation, or such use as is due to constant work. For examples, see ure in Nares. Thus, in Ferrex and Porrex, Act iv. sc. 2, we have: 'And wisdom willed me without protract [delay] In speedy wise to put the same in ure, i. e. in operation, not in use; see the passage in Morley's Library of Eng. Literature, Plays, p. 59, col. 1. And again, 'I wish that it should straight be put in ure;' id. Act v. sc. 1. 8. Hence was also formed the verb to ure, used in the same sense as inure. 'Ned, thou must begin Now to forget thy study and thy books, And ure thy shoulders to an armour's weight; 'Edw. III, Act i. sc. 1. 1. 159 (in the Leopold Shakspere, p. 1038). 'The Frenche souldiers whyche from their youthe have byne practysed and urede in feats of arms; Robinson's tr. of More's Utopia, ed. 1551, C 6 (inurede in ed. B. The etymology of ure is 1556, p. 40 of Arber's reprint). clearly the O. F. oure, oeure, neure, eure, work, action, operation; see oeure in Burguy, and eure in Roquefort, and mod. F. œuvre in Littré. [Mr. Wedgwood well remarks upon the similar letterchanges by which the F. man-œuvre has become the E. man-ure.] - Lat. opera, work; see Opera, Operate. Der. inure-ment (rare).
The word ure here treated of is quite distinct from M. E. ure, fate, destiny, luck, as used in Barbour's Bruce, i. 312, ii. 434, &c.; see glossary to my edition. In this case, ure is the O. F. eur, aur (mod. F. heur in bon-heur), from Lat. augurium; see Augur. There is also an O. F. ure, put for Lat. hora; see Hour.

Hamlet, i. 4. 40. See In- (1) and Urn.

INVEIGH, to attack with words, rail. (L.) In Shak. Lucrece, 1254. The close connection of inveigh with the sb. invective at once points out the etymology. In this word, the Lat. A is expressed by the guttural gh, just as the A.S. h was replaced by the same combination; see Matzner, Eng. Gram. i. 149. Cf. Span. invehir, to inveigh. - Lat. inuehere (pp. inuectus), to carry into or to, to introwith F. sbs. in -ion, from Lat. intuitives, pp. of intueri, to look upon.

sense; Milton, Comus, 537, 538. And see Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 32. The origin is unknown, it being difficult to account for the ei; the word is spelt inveagle as well as inveigle in Minsheu. some guessed to be from Ital. invogliare, to give a desire to, make one long for; cf. invogliato, loving, desirous. — Ital. in — Lat. in, in; and voglia, a desire; cf. Ital. voglio, I wish, from volere, to wish.— Lat. uelle, to wish; pres. t. volo, I wish. See Voluntary.

2. By others thought to be corrupted from O. F. aveugler, 'to blind, hudwinke' [hoodwink], Cot.; formed from the adj. aveugle, blind—Low Lat. aboculis, blind.—Lat. ab, off, away, deprived of; and oculus, an eye. (Neither origin is satisfactory; hence some have supposed that the word arose from a confusion of the Ital. and F. words. Even thus, the spelling remains unexplained.) Der. inveigle-ment (rare). INVENT, to find out, devise, feign. (F.,-L.) In Gower, C. TRIS, a rainbow. (L., -Gk.) In Shak. All's Well, i. 3. 158. - TRRECONCILABLE, that cannot be reconciled. In Min-Lat. iris, a rainbow. -Gk. Ipis, Iris, the messenger of the gods; Ipis, sheu, ed. 1627; in Cotgrave; and in Milton, P. L. i. 122. -F. irrea rainbow (Homer). Root uncertain. Der. irid-esc-ent, a coined word, as if from pres. part, of a Lat. verb irid-esc-ere, to become like a rainbow, formed with inceptive suffix -esc- from irid-, stem of iris (gen. irid-is); hence iridescence; also iridi-um (from the crude from iridi-). Iris, a flower, is the same word; and see orrice.

IRK, to weary, distress. (Scand.) Now used impersonally, as in Shak. As You Like It, ii. 1. 22. A. Formerly used personally. M. E. irken, (1) to make tired, (2) to become tired. Of these, the transitive (orig.) sense does not often appear, though preserved in the mod. phrase 'it irks me,' and in the word irksome tiring. 'Irkesum, fastidiosus; Irkesumnesse, fastidium; Irkyn, fastidior, accidior; Prompt. Parv. The intrans. sense is common. 'To preche also bow myst not yrke' = you must not grow weary of preaching; Myrc, Instructions for Parish Priests, 526. Irked = shrank back, drew back; Gawain and Grene Knight, 1573. 'Swa pat na man moght irk withalle'—so that none may grow tired withal; Pricke of Conscience, 8918. B. We also find M. E. irk=tired, oppressed. 'Oure frendis of us wille sone be irke' = our friends will soon be tired of us; Sir Isumbras, 118. 'Syr Arther was irke,' i. e. tired; Anturs of Arthur, st. vi.

C. The references in Stratmann shew that the word occurs chiefly in poems marked with strong Scandinavism peculiarities; and the original word is still found in Swedish. -Swed. yrka, 'to urge, enforce, press; yrka lagen, to enforce the law; vi yrkade på vår afresa, we pressed for our departure; yrka på någon, to urge one; yrka på en sak, to urge an affair;' Widegren's Swed. Dict. D. This word is exactly cognate with Lat. urgere, Swed. Dict. D. This word is exactly cognate with Lat. urgers, to urge; see Urge. From ΔWARG, to press; whence also Skt. wrij, to press out, exclude; Gk. εἰργειν, to press in, repress; Goth. wrikan, to persecute, and E. wreak; see Wreak. [Perhaps distinct from ΔWARG, to work, whence E. work.] E. An interesting derivative from this root WARG is the A.S. weoresum, painful, irksome (Grein, ii. 678), which clearly suggested the adj. irksome. Cf. Dan. værke, to pain (perhaps distinct from virke, to work); and North of England toothwark = tooth-ache (rather than tooth-work). Also Lithuan. wargas, need; wargus, irksome. See Curtius, i. 222; Fick, i. 773, iii. 293. F. Thus the Swed. yrka stands for wirka, weakened form of warka, from Teut. base WARK = Aryan \(\sqrt{WARG}. \) Der. irk-some, irk-some-ness, in the Prompt. Parv., as above. serve how the word may be distinguished from work, though the roots may be connected. And note that there is no connection with A.S. earg (= arg), slothful, which has a different guttural letter and is represented in English by Arch, Arrant. See further under Urge, Wreak, and Wrong. IRON, a common metal. (E.)

M. E. iren, Chaucer, C. T. 502, yren, 1994; yzen (for isen), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 139, l. 31. - A.S. iren, both adj. and sb., Grein, ii. 145; older form isen, both adj. and sb., id. 147. + Du. ijzer, formerly yzer. + Iccl. járn, contracted from the old form isarn. + Dan. and Swed. jern. + O.H.G. isarn; M.H.G. ésern, ésen; G. eisen. + Goth. eisarn, sb.; eisarnein, adj. And cf. W. haiarn, Irish iarann. Bret. houarn, iron. β. The Teut. forms are β. The Teut, forms are all from the base ISARNA, perhaps an adjectival form from ISA, ice; see Ice. This suggests that iron (=ice-en) may have been named (like crystal) from some fancied resemblance to ice; perhaps from its hard smooth surface when brightened. See Fick, iii, 32. Der. ironbound, -clad, -founder, -foundry, -grey, -handed, -hearted, -master, -mould, -ware, -work, -witted, Rich. 111, iv. 2. 28. Also iron-monger, q. v.

IRONMONGER, a dealer in iron goods. (E.) In Minsheu's Dict., 1627; Pepys' Diary, Feb. 6, 1668-9; Beaum. and Fletcher, Cupid's Revenge, iv. 3. See Iron and Monger. Der. ironmonger-y.

IBONY, dissimulation, satire. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'Ironic, a speaking by contraries, a mocke, a scoffe;' Minsheu's Dict., ed. 1627.— F. ironie (not in Cotgrave, but cited by Minsheu). - Lat. ironia. - Gk. elparvela, dissimulation, irony. — Gk. elparv, a dissembler, one who says less than he thinks or means.

$\beta$. This Gk. word is merely the less than he thinks or means. pres. part. of elpeir, to speak, say, talk; so that elpoir means 'a talker.' Thus the root is \(\psi\) WAR, to speak; see Verb, Word. Der. ironi-c-al, ironi-c-al-ly.

IRRADIATE, to throw rays of light upon, light up. (L.) Milton, P. L. iii. 53. - Lat. irradiatus, pp. of irradiare, to cast rays on. - Lat. ir-=in, on; and radius, a ray. See Ir-(1) and Ray. Der. irradiat-ion; also irradiant, from stem of pres. pt. of irradiare; irradiance, Milton, P. L. viii. 617.

IRRISION, mocking, scorn. (F., -L.) Rare; in Minsheu, ed. 1627 .- F. irrision, 'irrision, mocking;' Cot. - Lat. irrisionem, acc.

from irrisio, a deriding. — Lat. irrisus, pp. of irridere, to laugh at. —
Lat. ir- in, at; and ridere, to laugh. See Risible.

IRRITATE, to provoke. (L.) 'Irritate [provoke] the myndes of the dauncers;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 19. — Lat. irritatus, pp. of irritare, to snarl greatly (said of dogs), also to provoke, tease, irritate.

3. Of uncertain origin; but perhaps a frequentative from irrire, also spelt hirrire, to snarl as a dog, which is perhaps an imitative word. Der. irritation = F. irritation, 'an irritation' (Cot.), from Lat. acc. irritationem; irritat-ive, irritat-or-y; irrit-ant, from the stem of pres. pt. of irritare; also irrit-able, in Minsheu, ed. 1627, from Lat irritabilis; irrit-abl-y, irrit-able-ness, irrit-abili-ty.

An irruption, or violent bursting in; Minsheu, ed. 1627. -F. irruption, 'an irruption, a forcible entry; Cot. - Lat. irruptionem, acc. of irruptio, a bursting into. - Lat. ir-=in, in, upon; and ruptio, a bursting into. - Lat. ir-=in, in, upon; and ruptio, a bursting into. ing, from ruptus, pp. of rumpere, to burst. See Rupture. Der. irrupt-ive, irrupt-ive-ly, from pp. irruptus of irrumpere, to burst in.

ISINGLASS, a glutinous substance made from a fish. (Du.) 'Ising-glass, a kind of fish-glue brought from Island [Iceland], us'd in medicines; 'Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. A singular corruption (as if there were reference to icing in confectionery, and to the glassy appearance of jellies made with it) from O. Du. huyzenblas, mod. Du. huizenblas. 'İsinglass, huyzenblas';' Sewel's Eng.-Du. Dict.; 1754. The lit. sense is 'sturgeon bladder;' isinglass being obtained from the bladder of the sturgeon (Accipenser sturio). + G. hausenblase, isinglass; from hausen, a kind of sturgeon (answering to Du. huizen); and blase (= Du. blas), a bladder, from blasen, to blow, allied to E. That the word is of Du. rather than of G. origin, is The G. au (=ow in cow) could not have produced E. i; Blow. obvious. whereas the Du. ui (sometimes nearly = oy in coy) easily did so. The corruption was easily made by sailors ISLAND, an isle, land surrounded by water. (E.) The s is ignorantly inserted, owing to confusion with isle, a word of F. origin; see below. In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 11, the word is spelt island in the Globe edition, but iland in the passage as quoted in Richardson. M. E. iland, ilond, yland, ylond; spelt ylond in Octovian Imperator, M. E. iland, iland, yland, yland; spelt yland in Octovian Imperator, 1. 539 (Weber's Met. Romances, iii. 179); iland, Layamon, 1. 1133 (later text).—A. S. igland, Grein, ii. 136. β. The A. S. ig-land is compounded of ig, an island, and land, land. Grein (ii. 136) gives ig, ieg as equivalent forms, with references; the word is also written eg (id. i. 233); and in Eng. local names appears as -ea or -ey, as in Batters-ea, Aldern-ey, Angles-ey. γ. Cognate words are: Du. eiland, an island, formerly written eyland (Sewel); Icel. eyland; Swed. Bland. used as a proper name for an island in the Baltic Sea; G. öland, used as a proper name for an island in the Baltic Sea; G. 8. Dropping the syllable -land, we also find A. S. ig, ieg, eg (as above); Icel. ey, an island; Dan and Swed. ö, an island; also O. H. G. -awa, -auwa, in composition (Fick), with which cf. G. aue, a meadow near water; and see Ait, Eyot, the dimin forms. All a meadow near water; and see A1t, Riyot, the dimin. forms. All these Fick (iii. 10) deduces from an orig. Teut. form AHWIA, belonging to water or a place in water, a secondary formation from Teut. AHWA, water, which appears in Goth. ahwa, A.S. eå, O.H.G. aha, a stream, with which cf. Lat. aqua, water; see Aquatic. Thus the A.S. eå signifies 'water;' whence ieg, ig, 'a place near water,' and ig-land, an island. Der. island-er, Temp. ii. 2. 37.

while, the s was formerly dropped, thus tending still further to confound the two words. M.E. ile, yle; Rob. of Glouc, p. 1, 1, 3; Wyclif, Deeds [Acts], xxviii. 1. – O. F. isle, 'an isle;' Cot.; mod. F. ile, — Lat. insula, an island. See Insular. Der. i:l-et, in Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 24, note, from O. F. islette, 'a little island' (Cot.), a dimin. form. And see isolate.

ISOCHRONOUS, performed in equal times. (Gk.) In Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706 (s. v. Isochrone). Imitated from Gk. 100xpopose, consisting of an equal number of times (a grammatical term).—Gk. 1602,0006, consisting of an equal number of times (a grammatical term).—Gk. 160-, crude form of 1608, equal; and xpovos, time, whence also E. Chronicle.

B. The Gk. 1608 or 1608 is closely related to Skt. visku, adv. equally, with which cf. Skt. viskuva, the equinox; the Aryan form being WISWA, equal; Fick, 1. 221. Der. isochron-ism. TROLATE, to insulate, place in a detached situation. (Ital., -L.)
The word occurs in the Preface to Warburton's Divine Grace, but was censured in 1800 as being a novel and unnecessary word (Todd). And see note in Trench, Eng. Past and Present. Todd remarks, further, that isolated was at first used as a term in architecture, signifying detached. It was thus at first a translation of Ital. isolato, detached, separate, formed as an adj. (with pp. form) from isola, an island. Lat. insula, an island; also, a detached house or pile of buildings, whence insulatus, insulated, answering to Ital. isolato. See The F. isole is likewise borrowed from the Ital. Insular. isolato; the E. word was not taken from the F. (which would only have given a form isoled), but directly from the Italian. Der. isolai-Doublet, insulate.

ISOSCELES, having two sides equal, as a triangle. (L., - Gk.) In Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706.—Lat. isosceles.—Gk. Ισοσκελής, with equal legs or sides.—Gk. Ισο-, crude form of ίσος, equal (see Isochronous); and σκέλος, a leg, probably connected with σκαίρειν, to dance, and σκαληνός, halting (see Scalene).

ISOTHERMAL, having an equal degree of heat. (Gk.) Modern. A coined word. - Gk. 100-, crude form of 100s, equal; and θέρμ-η, heat; with adj. suffix -al. See Isochronous and Thermo-

ISSUE, that which proceeds from something, progeny, produce, result. (P., -L.) M. E. issue. 'To me and to myn issue;' P. Plowman, C. xix. 259. 'An issue large;' Chaucer, Troil. v. 205. -O. Der. issue, verb, merely borrowed from the sb., and in later use; 'we issued out' is in Surrey's tr. of Virgil, where the Lat. text has 'iuuat ire,' Æneid, ii. 27. [The M. E. verb was isch, common in Barbour's Bruce, and borrowed from the F. vb. issir.] Also issu-er; issue-less, Wint. Ta. v. I. 174.

ISTHMUS, a neck of land connecting a peninsula with the mainland. (L., -Gk.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627; spelt istmus in Cotgrave, to translate O. F. isthme. - Lat. isthmus. - Gk. lσθμόs, a narrow passage, neck of land; allied to 1θμα, a step; extended from \checkmark I, to go. Cf.

Skt. i, to go; Lat. ire, to go.

III, the go, Lat. 10, 10 go, 12 third, personal pronoun. (E.) Formerly also hit, P. Plowman, A. i. 85, C. ii. 83; but it in the same, B. i. 86.—A. S. hit, neuter of he; see He. + Icel. hit, neut. of hinn. + Du. het, neut. of hij.

The gen. case its was just coming into use in the lowers in Temps is a few but the use in the lowers in Temps is a few but the use in the lowers in Temps. Shakespeare's time, and occurs in Temp. i. 2. 95, &c., but the usual form in Shak. is his, as in A. S. We also find it in Shak. (with the sense of its) in the first folio, in 13 passages, Temp. ii. 1. 163, &c. See the articles in The Bible Wordbook and in Schmidt's Shak. Lexicon. Its does not once occur in the Bible, ed. 1611, which has it where mod. editions have its in Levit. xxv. 5. The use of hit for his (=its) occurs early, viz. in the Anturs of Arthur, st. viii, l. 11. The A.S. neuter form is hit, nom.; his, gen.; him, dat.; hit, acc. Der. it-self; see Self.

ITALICS, the name given to letters printed thus—in sloping type. (L.) So called because invented by Aldo Manuzio (Aldus Manutius), an Italian, about A. D. 1500. Aldo was born in 1447, and died in 1515. Letters printed in this type were called by the Italians corsivi (cursive, or running hand), but were known to other nations as Italias; see Engl. Cyclop.s.v. Manuzio.—Lat. Italiaus, Italian.—Lat.

TTCH, to have an irritating sensation in the skin. (E.) Like if (= M. E. yif, 3if= A. S. gif) this word has lost an initial M. E. y or 3=A.S. g. M. E. iken, icchen, 3ichen, 3iken; see Prompt. Parv. pp. 259, 538. The pp. occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 3684, where the Six-text (A. 3683) has the various spellings icched, yched, and 3cchid.—A. S. giccan, to itch; in A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, p. 50, 1. 33. whence A. S. giccans on itching (Rosworth), and siche ward to whence A.S. gic-enes, an itching (Bosworth), and gic-ba, used to translate Lat. pruritus (an itching) in Ælf. Gloss., pr. in Wright's

ITEM, a separate article or particular. (L.) The mod. use of item as a sb. is due to the old use of it in enumerating particulars. Properly, it is an adv. meaning 'also' or 'likewise,' as in Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 265: 'as, item, two lips, indifferent red; item, two grey eyes;' &c. = Lat. item, in like manner liberary. &c.-Lat. item, in like manner, likewise, also; closely related to ita, so. Cf. Skt. ittham, thus; itthá, thus; iti, thus. extensions from the pronominal base I of the third person; cf. Skt. i-dam, this.

ITERATE, to repeat often. (L.) Bacon has iterations and iterate in Essay 25 (Of Dispatch). Shak has iterance, Oth. v. 2. 150 (folio edd.); iteration, I Hen. IV, i. 2. 101.—Lat. iteratus, pp. of iterare, to repeat.—Lat. iterum, again; a comparative adverbial form (with suffix -tar-) from the pronom. base I of the third person; see Item. Der. iterat-ion, iterat-ive.

ITINERANT, travelling. (L.) 'And glad to turn itinerant; Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii, c. 2. l. 92.—Lat. itinerant-, stem of pres. pt. of obsolete verb itinerare, to travel.—Lat. itiner-, stem of iter, a journey. - Lat. it-um, supine of ire, to go. - 4 I, to go; cf. Skt. i, to go. Der. itinerant-ly, itineranc-y, itinerac-y. Also itinerary (Levins), from Lat. itinerarium, an account of a journey, neut. of itiner-arius, belonging to a journey, from base itiner- with suffix -arius.

IVORY, a hard white substance chiefly obtained from the tusks of elephants. (F., -L.) M. E. iuory, iuorie (with u for v), Chaucer, C.T. 7323; also spelt every, Trevisa, i. 79. - O.F. ivurie, ivory, a 12thcentury form, cited by Littre; later ivoire, 'vory;' Cot. [Cf. Provevori, Bartsch, Chrestomathie Provençale, 29. 20, whence perhaps the M. E. form every. Also Ital. avorio, avolio.]—Lat. eboreus, adj. made of ivory.—Lat. ebor-, stem of ebur, sb. ivory.

$\begin{align*} \beta \text{Supposed} \\ \beta \text{Supposed} \end{align*}. made of ivory.—Lat. ebor-, stem of ebur, sb. ivory. β. Supposed by some to be connected with Skt. ibha, an elephant. Der. ivory,

IVY, the name of a creeping evergreen. (E.) 'He mot go pipen in an ivy-leef;' Chaucer, C. T. 1840.—A. S. ifg, ivy; see Gloss, to A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne; also ifegn, an old form in the Corpus MS. glossary. [The A. S. f between two vowels was sounded as v, and the change of A. S. -ig to E. -y is regular, as in A. S. stánig = E. ston-y.] + O. H. G. ebah, ivy (cited by E. Müller).

B. There seems to be a further possible connection with the Lat actium, persless seems to be a further possible connection with the Lat. apium, parsley, The G a word borrowed from Gk. amov, (1) a pear, (2) parsley. epheu, ivy, eppich, (1) parsley, (2) ivy, seem to be due to Lat. apium, rather than to be true Teutonic words. Der. ivy-mantled, ivi-ed.

IWIS, certainly. (E.) M. E. ywis, iwis; Chaucer, C. T. 3277, 3705. Common in Shak., as in Merch. Ven. ii. 9. 68, Tam. Shrew, i. 1. 62, Rich. III, i. 3. 102.—A. S. gewis, adj. certain; gewislice, adv. certainly; Grein, i. 43. + Du. gewis, adj. and adv., certain, certainly. + G. gewiss, certainly. Cf. Icel. viss, certain, sure; vissuliga, cerβ. All these words are closely connected with E. wise, and with A.S. witan, to know; from WID, to know. It is to be particularly noted that the M. E. prefix i- (-A.S. ge-) is often written apart from the rest of the word, and with a capital letter. Hence, by the mistake of editors, it is sometimes printed I wis, and explained to mean 'I know.' Hence, further, the imaginary verb wis, to know, has found its way into our dictionaries. But it is pure fiction; the verb being wit. See Wit, verb.

JABBER, to chatter, talk indistinctly. (Scand.) Former jaber or jable. 'Whatsoeuer the Jewes would jaber or iangle agayn; 'Sir T. More, Works, p. 665 (R.) 'To iabil, multum loqui;' Levins, ed. 1570. And cf. gibber, Hamlet, i. 1. 116. Jabber, Jable are weakened forms of gabber, gabble, frequentative forms from the base gab, seen in Icel. gabba, to mock, scoff. See Gabble; and cf. Du. gabberen, 'to jabher' (Sewel). Der. jabber-er.

JACINTH, a precious stone. (F., -L., -Gk.) In the Bible, Rev. ix. 17; xxi. 20. In Rev. ix. 17, the hyacinthine, or dark purple, colour is referred to, and not the stone; as in Sidney's Arcadia (B. i. p. 59, l. 28), where mention is made of "Queene Helen, whose Iacinth haire curled by nature," &c.; Bible Wordbook, which see. [But I should explain 'iacinth haire, like 'hyacinthine locks' in Milton, P.L. iv. 301, to mean 'hair curling like the hyacinthne locks' in Milton, P.L. iv. 301, to mean 'hair curling like the hyacinth,' without reference to colour.] M. E. iacynte, Wyclif, 2 Chron. ii. 7 (earlier version), iacynte (later version). Gower has jacinctus; C.A. iii, 112.—O. F. jacinthe, 'the precious stone called a jacint;' Cot.—Lat. hyacinthus, a jacinth, Rev. xxi. 20 (Vulgate).—Gk. bānuvēos; Rev. xxi. 20. See Hyacinth.

Thus jacinth is for hyacinth, as Jerome for Hierome or Hieronymus, and Jerusalem for Hierusalem.

Vocab. i. 20, col. 1, 1. 6. + Du. jeuken, to itch; whence jeuking, & JAOK (1), a saucy fellow, sailor. (F., -L, -Gk., -Heb.) The jeukie (-A.S. gicha), an itching. + G. jucken, to itch. Root unknown.

Der. itch., sb., itch-y.

Tyrwhitt remarks: 'I know not how it has happened, that in the principal modern languages, John, or its equivalent, is a name of contempt, or at least of slight. So the Italians use Gianni, from whence Zani; the Spaniards Juan, as bobo Juan, a foolish John; the French Jean, with various additions; and in English, when we call a man a John, we do not mean it as a title of honour. Chaucer, in 1. 3708, uses Jacke fool, as the Spaniards do bobo Juan; and I suppose jack-ass has the same etymology. 'Go fro the window, Jacke fool, she said;' Chaucer, C. T. 3708. This M. E. Jacke is obviously borrowed from the F. Jaques; but it is very remarkable that this common French name is considered as an equivalent to the E. common name John, since it really answers to Jacob. - Lat. Jacobus. -Gk. Ίάκωβος. - Heb. Ya'aqób, Jacob; lit. one who seizes by the heel. - Heb. root 'áqab, to seize by the heel, supplant. B. It is difficult to tell to what extent the various senses of the word jack depend upon the name above. a. It is, however, clearly to be traced in the phrase Jack o' the clock, Rich. II, v. 5. 60, where it means a figure which, in old clocks, used to strike upon the bell. B. In a similar way, it seems to have been used to name various implements which supplied the place of a boy or attendant, as in boot-jack and in the jack which turns a spit in a kitchen, larly, it denoted the key of a virginal; Shak. Sonnet 128. γ. Simi-δ. Hence perhaps also a familiar name for the small bowl aimed at in the game of bowls; Shak. Cymb. ii. 1. 2. e. And for a small pike (fish), as distinct from a full-grown one. Der. Jack-o-lent = Jack of Lent, a puppet thrown at in Lent, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 27; Jack-a-lantern = Jack o' lantern, also called Jack-with-the-lantern, an ignis fatuus (see Todd's Johnson); Jack-pudding, Milton, Defence of the People of England, c. 1 (R.), compounded of Jack and pudding, just as a buffoon is called in French Jean-pottage (John-pottage) and in German Hans-wurst (Jack-sausage); Jack-an-apes, Tyndall's Works, p. 132, col. I. l. 11, put for Jack o' apes, with the insertion of n in imitation of the M. E. an (really equivalent to on) and for the avoiding of hiatus (see Morris, Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, p. 195), so that the word meant 'a man who exhibited performing apes Jack-by-the-hedge, 'an herb that grows by the hedge side,' Kersey, ed. 1715; jack-ass; and probably jack-daw, Pliny, b. x. c. 29 (and not a corruption of chough-daw, as it has been desperately guessed to be): cf. O. F. jaquette, 'a proper name for a woman, a piannat, or megatapy [magpie], Cot. Also (probably) jack-serew, a screw for raising heavy weights.

¶ 1. Thorpe, in his edit. of Ancient Laws, vol. i, Glossary, gives an A. S. ceac, a sort of stocks or pillory (cf. Du. kaak, a pillory (Sewel), Dan. kag, a whipping-post), and adds: our word jack, signifying several kinds of engines and instruments, is probably derived from ceac, pronounced, as in later times, chack.' In this guess I have no belief; there is no trace of 'chack,' and nothing to connect jack (not earlier than the 14th century) with A. S. times. Add to this, that the A.S. word seems to have been ceác (with long a), which would have given a later form cheek; cf. Du. kaak, a pillory, which is the cognate word. 2. There is, however, an A. S. ceac, a pitcher (Mark vii. 4), which would have given chack or jack; this might seem to account for jack (more commonly black-jack) in the sense of a sort of leathern jug; but the jug really took its name from its likeness to a jack-boot; see Jack (2).

JACK (2), a coat of mail, a military coat worn over the coat of mail. (F.) 'Iakke of defence, iak of fence, garment, Baltheus; Prompt. Parv. p. 256, and note, shewing that the word was in use as early as 1375. 'lacke, harnesse, iacq, iacque:' Palsgrave. = O. F. early as 1375. 'Iacke, harnesse, iacq, iacque:' Palsgrave. - O. F. Jaque, 'James, also a Iack, or coat of maile, and thence, a Iack for [with a wild boar]; Cot. Cf. Ital. giaco, a coat-of-mail, Span. jaco, a soldier's jacket; also Du. jak, G. jacke, Swed. jacka, a jacket, jerkin.

B. Of obscure origin; it is even somewhat doubtful whether it is of Romance or Teutonic origin, but the latter is hardly probable. Most likely Ducange is right in assigning the origin of it to the Jacquerie, or revolt of the peasantry nicknamed Jacques Bonhomms, A. D. 1358. That is, it is from the O. F. name Jacques. See Jack (1). Der. jack-et, q. v.; also jack-boots, boots worn as armour for the legs, in the Spectator (Todd); black-jack (Nares, s. v. jack).

JACKAL, a kind of wild animal. (Pers.) In Dryden, Annus

Mirabilis, st. 82, l. 347; Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 115, —Pers. shaghál; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 383. Cf. Skt. grigála, a jackal, a fox; and perhaps Heb. shú'ál, a fox, from Heb. root shá'al, to dig, hollow out.

JACKET, a short coat. (F.) 'In a blew jacket;' Spenser, Mother Hubberd's Tale, l. 205.—O.F. jaquette, 'a jackte, or short and sleevelesse country-coat;' Cot. Dimin. of O.F. jaque, 'a jack, or coat of mail;' Cot. See Jack (2). Der. jacket-ed.

JACOBIN, a friar of the order of St. Dominick. (F., -L., -Gk.

-Heb.) 'Now frere minor, now jacobin;' Rom. of the Rose, 1- 6341.—F, jacobin, 'a jacobin;' Cot.—Low Lat. Jacobinus, adj. formed from Jacobins; see Jack (1). B. Hence one of a faction in the French revolution, so called from the Jacobin club, which first met in the hall of the Jacobin friars in Paris, Oct. 1789; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates. C. Also the name of a hooded (friar-like) pigeon. Dor. Jacobin-is-al, Jacobin-is-m.

JACOBITE, an adherent of James II. (L.,—Gk.,—Heb.)

Jack (1). Der. Jacobii-ism.

JACOBITE, an old woman. (Unknown.) M. E.

JADE (1). A sorry nag. an old woman. (Unknown.) M. E.

JADE (1), a sorry nag, an old woman. (Unknown.) M. E. jade (MS. Iade), Chaucer, C. T. 14818. The same as Lowland Sc. yad, yaud, North of Eng. yaud, a jade. Of unknown origin; perhaps connected with Du. jagen, to hunt, chase, drive, ride, jagten, to herry, jagt, the chase. Cf. Low G. jagd, a chase, crowd of people, Bremen Wörterb. ii. 683; Dan. jage, G. jagen, to chase; see Yacht.

The use of Lowland Sc. y shews that the word is such that Tentumic Mr. Waldaywood's extrapology. probably Teutonic. Mr. Wedgwood's etymology, from Span. ijadear, to pant (from ijada, the flank, which is from Lat. ilia, the groin), is improbable. Der. jade, vb. to tire, spurn, Antony, iii. 1. 34.

JADE (2), a hard dark green stone. (F., - Oriental?) In Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. Cf. F. jade, Span. jade, jade. Florio's Ital. Dict.

gives the form iada. It is of unknown origin; but probably Oriental. Prof. Cowell finds yedd, a material out of which ornaments are made, in the Divyávadána; but it does not seem to be Sanskrit.

In the Divyavadana; but it does not seem to be Sanskrit.

JAG, a notch, ragged protuberance. (C.) 'Jagge, or dagge of a garment;' Prompt. Parv. p. 255. 'I iagge or cutte a garment; lagge, a cuttyng;' Palsgrave. Prob. of Celt. origin.—Irish gag, a cleft; gagaim, I split, or notch; W. gag, an aperture, cleft; gagam, a cleft, chink; Gael. gag, a cleft, chink; gag, to split, notch. Der. jagg-ed, spelt iaggde in Gascoigne, Steel Glas, 1161; whence to-iagged, Skelton, Elinour Rummyng, l. 124; jagg-ed-ness; jagg-y. The Icel. jaki, a rough piece of ice, can hardly be related; see Idiole.

JAGUAR, a S. American beast of prey. (Brazilian.) In a translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792. The word is Brazilian; see Buffon, Quadruped. t. iii. pp. 289, 293 (Littré). 'Jagua in the Guarani [Brazilian] language is the common name for tygers and dogs. The generic name for tygers in the Guarani language is Jaquarete; Clavigero, Hist. of Mexico, tr. by Cullen, ii. 318 (ed. 1787).

JAIL, another spelling of Gaol, q. v. (F., -L.)

JALAP, the root of a Mexican plant. (Mexican.) 'Jalap, the root of a kind of Indian night-shade;' Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706.

Named from Jalapa or Xalapa, in Mexico. The Span. letters jacobiants and danta a metrical sounds thus Don Owing at se are equivalent, and denote a guttural sound; thus Don Quijote is Don Quixore, the j or x being sounded something like the G. ch.

JAM (1), to press, squeeze tight. (Scand.) 'Jam. to squeeze;'
Halliwell. 'Jammed in between the rocks;' Swinburne, Travels through Spain (1779), let. 3, p. 8. 'Jam, to render firm by treading, as cattle do land they are foddered on;' Marshall's Rural Economy of Norfolk (E. D. S. Gloss, B. 3). The same word as cham, or champ. 'Cham, to chew or champ;' Palsgrave. 'Champ [with excrescent p], to tread heavily, Warwickshire; to bite or chew, Suffolk;' Halliwell. Whence also: 'Champ, hard, firm, Sussex;' id.; i.e. chammed or jammed down, as if by being trodden on. See Champ, which is of Scand. origin. ¶ For the common regular change from ch to j, see Jaw, Jowl.

JAM (2), a conserve of fruit boiled with sugar. (Scand.?) ¶ For the common and Johnson's Dict. Of uncertain origin, but most likely from Jam (1). The following quotation suggests that it may mean a soft substance, resembling what has been chewed. 'And if we have anye stronger meate, it must be chammed afore by the nurse, and so put into the babe's mouthe; 'Sir T. More, Works, p. 241 h. See Champ.

JAMB, the side-post of a door. (F., -L.) 'Jaum of the door, the side-post. The word is also in use in the South, where they say the jaum of the chimney; Ray, Collection of North-Country Words, 1691. Spelt jaumbe in Cotgrave. 'Yea, the jambes, posts, principals, and standards, all of the same mettall;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiii. c. 3. - F. jambe, 'the leg or shank, . . . the jaumbe or side-post of a door;' Cot. Cf. Ital. gamba, Span. gamba, the leg; Port. gambias, pl. the legs. — Late Lat. gamba, a hoof; Vegetius, I. 56, near the end; 3. 20. This is certainly a corruption from an older form camba, which appears in O. Spanish (Diez, whom see). — & KAM, to bend; whence Lat. camurus, crooked, camera, a vault; so that the word was orig. used of the bent leg or the knee. Cf. W. cam, crooked. And see Chamber, Gambol, Ham. Der. giamb-eux, crooked. And see Chamber, Gambol, Ham. leggings, greaves, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 29 (apparently a coined word).

JANGLE, to sound discordantly, to quarrel. (F., = O. Low G.)

'A jangling of the bells;' Shak. Per. ii. I. 45. Hence jangle=to make discordant; 'like sweet bells jangled;' Haml. iii. I. 166.

M. E. janglen, to quarrel, talk loudly. 'To jangle and to jape;' P. Tale of Melibeus, Six-text, B. 2297. Also spelt Idept's, Gower, C. Al them in Sir T. More, Works, p. 279 f. 'Jamissaries, an order of infantry in the Turkish army: originally, young prisoners trained to arms; were first organised by Orcan, about 1330, and remodelled by his son Amurath I. 1360... A firman was issued on 17 June, 1826, abolishing the Janizaries; 'Haydn, Dict. of Dates. And see Gibbon, Roman Empire, c. 64.—O. F. Jannissaires, 'the Janizaries;' Cot. Of Turkish origin; the word means 'new soldiers;' from Turk. yelli, new, and 'askari, a soldier. The R represents saghir noon, a nasal letter peculiar to Turkish. Cf. Pers. 'askari, a soldier; Arab. 'askari, an army, troops; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1008.

JANUARY, the first month of the year. (L.)

(MS. Ianuary), Chaucer, C. T. 9267 (March. Tale).

Englished from Lat. Ianuarius, January, named from the god Ianus, a name connected with Lat. ianua, a door; the doors of houses being supposed to be under his especial protection. Prob. from \(\psi\) YA, to go; cf. Skt. yá, to go.

JAPAN, a name given to certain kinds of varnished work. (Japan.) Properly 'Japan work,' where Japan is used adjectivally. Named from the country. Pope playfully alludes to 'shining altars of Japan;' Rape of the Lock, iii. 107. Der. Hence japan, verb, to varnish like Japan work, to polish; japanner, a polisher of shoes, shoe-black, Pope, Imit. of Horace, Epist. i. 186.

JAR (1), to make a discordant noise, creak, clash, quarrel. (E.) Out of al ioynt ye iar; Skelton, Duke of Albany, 1. 378. And see Shak. Tam. Shrew, iii. 1. 39, 47; v. 2. 1. a. Jar stands for an older form char, only found in the derivative charhen, to creak like a cart or barrow (Prompt. Parv.), also to creak like a door (Gower, C. A. ii. 102). B. Again, char stands for an older har, answering to the Teut. base KAR, to make a harsh sound, murmur, complain. seen in Goth. karón, to sorrow, O. Sax. karón, to lament, and in E. care, crane (=car-ane); see further under Care, Crane, Jargon. This Teut. base KAR is from \(GAR, to call, cry, whence also Lat. garrire, to prate, croak, garrulus, talkative; see Garrulous. Der. jar, sb., spelt jarre, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 3, 23.

JAR (2), an earthen pot. (F.,—Pers.) 'A great jar;' Ben Jonson, tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry; k. 28. And in Cotgrave.—O. F. jare, the interface of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of the cottent of 'a jarre,' Cot.; mod. F. jarre. [Cf. Span. jarra, a jug, pitcher; Ital. giara, giarra, 'a iarre;' Florio.] – Pers. jarrak, a jar. earthen wateryessel; cf. Pers. jurrah, a little cruise, or jar; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 504, col. 2. Probably borrowed by the Spanish from the Arabs. JARGON, a confused talk. (F., -L.?) M. E. jargon, jergon, chattering. 'And ful of jergon' - very talkative; Chaucer, C. T. 9722. Particularly used of the chattering of birds; Gower, C. A. ii. 264, 318; Rom. of the Rose, 716. F. jargon, 'gibridge, fustian language,' Cot.; jargonner, 'to speak fustian, jangle, chatter,' id: The word is old, and appears with the sense of the chattering of birds; the 12th cent. (Litter). Cf. Span general jargon, 'gregonary. in the 13th cent. (Littre). Cf. Span. gerigonza, jargon; gerigonzar, to speak a jargon; Ital. gergo, jargon. B. All perhaps from a Latbase GARG, an extension from GAR, to call, cry out, make a noise, seen in Lat. garrire; see Jar (1). This extended form GARG, answering to a Teut. base KARK, is exactly represented in English by M. E. charken, to creak as a cart, and the A. S. cearcian, to gnash the teeth (Ælfric's Homilies, i. 132). An attenuated form of charken is the M. E. chirken, to chirp, to make a harsh noise. 'Al ful of is the M. E. CHITHEN, to chirp, to make a harsh noise. 'Al ful ob-chirhing [= jargon] was that sory place;' Chaucer, C. T. 2006.

JARGONELLE, a variety of pear. (F., = Ital., = Pers.?) In Johnson's Dict. = F. jargonelle, a variety of pear, very stony (Littré). Formed (according to Littré) as a dimin. from F. jargon, a yellow diamond, a small stone. = Ital. giargone, a sort of yellow diamond. Perhaps from Pers. zargún, gold-coloured, from zar, gold; see Devic, Sunn, to Littré.

Supp. to Littré.

JASMINE, JESSAMINE, a genus of plants. (Pers.) Spelt

Milton has iessamine.

jasmin, jessemin, jelsomine, jesse, in Cotgrave. Milton has jessemine, P. L. iv. 608; Lycidas, 143. The spelling jasmin agrees with O. F. jasmin; Cot. Jessemin, jelsomine answer to the Ital. forms gesmino, gelsomino. The Span form is jazmin. All are from Pers. ydsmini, jasmine; of which snother form is ydsamin, jessamine; Rich. Pers.

iaspis, a jasper. Gk. laoris.—Arab. yasb, yasf, also spelt yashb, jasper; Pers. yashp, yash, jasper; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1707; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 719. Cf. Heb. yashpheh, a jasper. And see Diaper. JAUNDICE, a disease caused by bile. (F, -L.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 1. 85. The d is purely excrescent, as commonly in E. words after n; cf. sound from F. son. M. E. Iaunys, Pricke of Conscience, l. 700; spelt iaundys, Trevisa, ii. 113; further corrupted to science, I. 700; spelt issundys, Trevisa, ii. 113; further corrupted to issundres, in a 15th-cent. tr. of Higden, on the same page as the last reference.—O. F. (and F.) jaunisse, so spelt in the 13th cent. (Littré); but Cot. gives it as jaulnisse, 'the jaundies.' Formed with suffix-isse (—Lat. itia) from F. jaune, yellow; because the disease is characterised by yellowness of the skin and eyes. The oldest spelling of jaune is jalne (Littré).—Lat. galbins, also galbanus, greenish yellow.—Lat. galbus, yellow.

B. The origin of Lat. galbus is obscure; it is a rare word, and allied to Lat. galbus, yellow, used by The likeness of Lat galbus giluus to G. gelb and E. George iii 82. The likeness of Lat galbus giluus to G. gelb and E. Georg. iii. 83. The likeness of Lat. galbus, giluus, to G. gelb and E. yellow is so close as to suggest that they are Latinised forms of Teutonic words; the true Lat. form being heluus, answering to Gk. χλώρου. See Chlorine, Green, and Yellow. Der. jaundic-ed.

JAUNT, to ramble, make an excursion. (Scand.) It is clear from the exx. in Shak, that jaunt and jaunce are equivalent terms. Jaunt is a wild and fatiguing ramble, Romeo, ii. 5. 26; where another reading is jaunce. It also means to ramble, rove, id. ii. 5. 53, where another reading for jaunting is jauncing. A. It is easier to trace jaunce first. Shak. has: 'Spurred, galled, and tired by jauncing Bolingbroke, i e. hard-riding Bolingbroke. This jaunce is from O. F. jancer, of which Cotgrave says: 'Jancer un cheval, 'to stirre a horse in the stable till he be swart with all, or as our jaunt; an old word. This O. F. jancer, to play tricks with or tease a horse, is from the same source as jaunt, as will appear.

B. The proper sense of jaunt is to play tricks, play the fool, hence to talk wildly, and hence, to ramble, rove. This appears from Lowland Sc. jauni, to taunt, to jeer; whence the frequentative form jaunder, to talk idly, to converse seer; whence the irequentative form jaunder, to talk felly, to converse in a roving way; whence to jaunder about, to go about idly from place to place, without any object (Jamieson). Of Scand. origin.— Swed. dial. ganta, to play the buffoon, to romp, sport, jest; gantas, to jest; cf. O. Swed. gantas, to toy; see Rietz and Ihre. So also Dan. dial. gantast, to jest (Aasen). This Swed. dial. ganta is from the sb. gant, a fool, buffoon; from the adj. gan, droll (Rietz). Cf. Icel. gan, frenzy, frantic gestures.

¶ It will thus be seen that the form jaunt (also written jaun) came to us directly from the Scandinavian, whilst the form jaunce came to us mediately through through the dinavian, whilst the form jaunce came to us mediately through the French, causing the change from t to c. Der. jaunty, q. v. JAUNTY, JANTY, fastastical, finical. (Scand.) 'We owe most of our jan'y fashions now in vogue to some adept beau among [the French]; Guardian, no. 149; dated 1713. An adj. formed with suffix -y from the verb jaunt, to ramble idly about. See above. Der. jaunt-i-ness; 'that jauntyness of air I was once master of, Spectator, no. 530.

¶ Observe how the orig. sense of 'buffoonlike is preserved in jaunty.

JAVELIN, a kind of spear or dart. (F., -C.?) Used in the sense of boar-spear, Shak., Venus, 616. -O. F. javelin, m., javeline, f., a javeling, a weapon of the size between a pike and partizan;' Cot. *a javeling, a weapon of the size between a pike and partizan; Cot. Cf. O. F. javelot, 'a gleave, dart, or small javelin;' Cot. Also Span. jabalina, Ital. giavellotto, a javelin.

B. Perhaps of Celtic origin.

The orig, sense is merely a pointed weapon, and the orig, javelin was doubtless a piece of a branch of a tree with a forked head made by cutting off the sprays. The Breton gavlin and gavlod may merely be borrowed from the French, yet the Bret. also has the true Celtic word gavl (also gavl), a place where a tree forks. But the priving appears more clearly from the Irish gar gafe, a book any origin appears more clearly from the Irish gaf, gafa, a hook, any origin appears more clearly from the Irish gaf, gafa, a hook, any crooked instrument; gabhla, a spear, lance; gabhlach, forked, divided, peaked, pointed; gabhlan, a branch, a fork of a tree; gabhlog, any forked piece of timber; gabhal, a fork. Cf. Gael. gobhla, a fork; gobhlach, forked, pronged; gobhlag, a small fork, two-pronged instrument; gobhlam, a prong, small fork, weeding-hook. Also W. gaff, a fork; gaflach, a fork, a dart. See Gaff. v. Hence may also be explained the M. E. gavelok, a javelin, dart, in King Alisaunder, l. 1620; A. S. gafelue, gafeloc (Leo); also M. H. G. gabilót, a javelin. As these words are all borrowed from Celtic, the initial letter remains unchanged. letter remains unchanged.

JAW, part of the mouth. (E.) Also spelt chaw. 'I wyll put an hooke in thy chawes' an hook in thy jaws; Bible, 1551, Ezek. xxix. 4 (A. V. jaws). 'The swelling of the chaws and the nape of the necke;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 2 (end). Spelt chewes in Lord Surrey, How no age is content, l. 16 (in Tottel's Miscellany, ed. Arber, p. 31). Also jowe; 'Jowe or chekebone, Mandibula;' Prompt. Parv. '3it drow [drew] I hym out of pe Iowes, scilicet tii. 112; Iasse, id. 131.—O.F. jaspee (see Littré), arr occasional faucibus, of hem pat gapeden; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4, spelling of O.F. and F. jaspe, 'a jasper stone; 'Cot. [Thus the r is l. 323. 'De ouer jauve'—the upper jaw, Trevisa, iii. 109; with an addition, and no real part of the word.]—Lat. iaspidem, acc. of various readings, jowe, geowe. Merely formed from the verb chaw or install. chew; see Chew. There is no corresponding A.S. sb., except that which represents the dimin. josol, and that which is related to chaps; which represents the dimin. Jone, and that which is related to haps; see Jowl, Chaps; but we find Dan. kiewe, a jaw, O. Du. kause, the jaw of a fish (Hexham). The spelling jowe may have been suggested by the F. joue, a cheek; still, it is certain that this F. word is not the original, since chaw and jaw are stronger forms than joue, and could never have come out of it. Precisely parallel with E. jaw is the O. Du. kouwe, the cavity of the mouth, from O. Du. kouwen (Du. kaauwen), to chew; Kilian. Der. jaw-bone, Bible, 1551, Judg. xv. 15; jaw-teeth; jaw-fallen, Fuller, Worthies, Essex (R.); lantern-

JAY, a bird with gay plumage. (F., -O. H. G.) M. E. jay, Jay; Chaucer, C. T. 644; King Alisaunder, I. 142. -O. F. jay (older spellings gay, gai), a jay; Cot. Mod. F. geai. So also Span gayo, a jay, gaya, a magpie. β. So called from its gay colours; cf. Span. gayar, to garnish with variegated trimming; gaya, a stripe of different colours on stuffs. Of Teut. origin; see further under Gay.

JEALOUS, suspicious of rivalry, tender of honour. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. jalous, Chaucer, C. T. 1331. Earlier gelus, Ancren Riwle, p. 90, where it occurs to translate Lat. zelotes. -O. F. jalous, later jalous, 'jealous;' Cot. Cf. Ital. geloso, Span. zeloso, jealous. - Low Lat. zelosus, full of zeal; related to Lat. zelotes, one who is jealous. - Lat. zelus, zeal. -Gk. (Nos., zeal; see Zeal. Der. jealous-ly; jealous-y, M. E. jalousie, Chaucer, C. T. 12300, from F. jalousie. Doublet, zealous.

JEER, to mock, scoff. (Du.) In Shak. Com. Errors, ii. 2. 22.
'He saw her toy, and gibe, and geare;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 21.
'There you named the famous jeerer, That ever jeered in Rome or Athens;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Nice Valour, v. 1 (Song). It seems to have been regarded as a foreign word; see Ben Jonson, Staple of News, iv. 1. 5: 'Let's jeer a little. Jeer? what's that? Expect, sir,' i. e. wait a bit, and you will find out.

B. The origin of the word is very curious. From the Du. gek, a fool, and scheeren, to shear, was formed the phrase den gek scheeren (lit. to shear the fool), to mock, jeer, make a fool of one. Soon these words were run together, and the word gekscheeren was used in the sense of jeering. See Sewel's Du. Dict. which gives the above forms, as well as the sb. gekscheeren, 'a jeering, fooling, jesting: Ik laat my niet gekscheeren, I will not be trifled with.' This is still preserved in mod. Du. gekscheren, to jest, banter, and in the phrase het is geen gekscheren, it is no laughing matter.

y. The phrase was also used as scheeren den gek, to play the fool; whence simply scheeren, 'to gibe, or to jest' (Hexham). And hence the E. jeer. O. The word gek, a fool, is probably connected with gawky; scheeren is E. shear. See Gawky and Shear. Such I take to be the true explanation of this difficult word. It is hardly worth while to notice the numerous other solutions. Mahn's objection that G. sch cannot become E. j does not apply to the Du. sch. Wedgwood's remark that the word is also spelt yeer is a mistake; it is founded on the fact that Junius, in manipulating the word, chose to spell it so without authority. Der. jeer, sb., Oth. iv. 1. 83.

JEHOVAH, the chief Hebrew name of the Deity. (Heb.) Exod. vi. 3.—Heb. yahovah, or more correctly yahaveh; see the article on Jehovah in the Concise Dict. of the Bible. The etymology is uncertain, but it is perhaps from the root háváh, to be, to exist; and, if so, the sense is 'the self-existent.'

JEJUNE, hungry, meagre, empty. (L.) We discourse jejunely, and false, and unprofitably; Bp. Taylor, pref. to Great Exemplar. -Lat. ieiunus, fasting, hungry, dry, barren, trifling, poor. Of uncertain origin; perhaps connected with Skt. yam, to restrain, hence to fast; Benfey, Skt. Dict. p. 736. Der. jejune-ly, jejune-ness.

JELLY, anything gelatinous, the juice of fruit boiled with sugar. F., -L.) In Hamlet, i. 2. 105. Sometimes spelt gelly, - F. gelée, $(F_{\cdot,} - L_{\cdot})$ (F.,-L.) In Hamlet, 1. 2. 105. Sometimes speit getty,-r. getes, 'a frost, also gelly;' Cot. Properly the fem. form of gelé, frozen, pp. of geler, 'to freeze, to thicken or congeale with cold;' Cot.-Lat. gelur, to congeal.- Lat. gelu, frost. See Gelatine, Gelid, Congeal. Der. jelly-fish.

JENNET, GENNET, a small Spanish horse. (F.,-Span.,-Arab.) Jennets; Shak. Oth. i. 1. 113. 'A breeding jennet;' Shak. Venus, 260. 'We have xx. thousande of other mounted on geneties;'

Venus, 200. 'We have XX. thousande of other mounted on geneties;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 236. 'The fairest Iennet;' Lyly's Euphues, ed. Arber, p. 150.—O. F. genetie, 'a genet, or Spanish horse;' Cot.—Span. ginete, a nag; but the orig. sense was a horse-soldier, esp. a light-armed horse-soldier. Meadows gives: 'Ginete, a horse-soldier, horseman, pretty nag.' Of Moorish origin. The word is traced by Dozy (Glos. p. 276) to Arab. zenses, a trible of Barbary colaborated for its carelless. Barbary celebrated for its cavalry; see Devic, Supp. to Littre. JENNETING, a kind of early apple. (Unknown.) 'In July Contrariwise, pomgranat-trees, fig-trees, and appletrees, line a very abort time; and of these, the hastic kind or ienitings, continue nothing so large as those that bear and ripen later: Liland. Of Scand. origin continue nothing so large as those that bear and ripen later; Holland, 4; of Piny, b. xvi. c. 44. Of unknown origin. ¶ Commonly said to be a corruption of June-eating apples! It will be observed that they do not 'come' till July, as Bacon observes.

JEOPARDY, hazard, peril, danger. (F.-L.) M. E. jupartie, later isopardy or jeopardy. 'Hath lost his ewen good thurgh jupartie;' Chaucer, C. T. 16211. The various readings in this line are Iupartie, Iopardy, Iopardye, and Ispardye; Six-text, G. 743. Spelt jeopardie, Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 465; iv. 1529. The original sense was a game in which the chances are even, a game of hazard, hence was a game in which the chances are even, a game of masary, more hazard or chance; as in: 'To put that sikernes in jeopardie' = to put in hazard that which is secure (last reference).—O. F. jeu parti, lit. a divided game. 'A jeu parti is properly a game, in which the chances are exactly even. See Froissart, v. i. c. 234; Ils n'estoient pas à jeu parti contre les François [=for they were unequal in numbers to the French (Johnes' translation)]: and vol. ii. c. 9, si nous les voyons à jeu parti. From hence it signifies anything uncertain or hazardous. In the old French poetry, the discussion of a problem where much might be said on both sides, was called a jeu parti. See Poesies du Roy de Navarre, chanson xlviii.'-Tyrwhitt's note to Chaucer, C. T. 16211. - Low Lat. iocus partitus, an alternative, a phrase used when a shoice was given, of choosing one side or tive, a phrase used when a choice was given, of choosing one side or the other; see Ducange.—Lat. iocus, a joke, jest, sport, play, game; and partius, divided, pp. of partiri, to part, from part, stem of pars, a part. See Joke and Part. Der. jeopard, to hazard (coined by dropping y), Judges, v. 18, M. E. jeopardise, chaucer, Troil. iv. 1566; jeopardise, vb., suggested by M. E. jeopardise, sb., Chaucer, Book of the Duchesse, 666; also jeopardous, spelt icopardeous in Hall's Chron. Hen. VIII, an. 25 (R.); jeopardous-ly.

JERBOA, a genus of small rodent quadrupeds. (Arabic.) Mentioned in an E. translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792.

-Arab. yarbu', '(1) the flesh of the back or loins, an oblique descending muscle; (2) the jerboa, an animal much resembling the dormouse, which makes prodigious bounds by means of its long hind legs; see Nat. Hist. of Aleppo, by Russell; Rich. Pers. Dict.

p. 1705, col. 2.

JERK, to give a sudden movement, throw with a quick action. (E.) Cotgrave has: 'Fouetter, to scourge, lash, yerk, or jerke.' In Shak. as a sb., L. L. L. iv. 2. 129. 'A ierk, verber;' Levins, ed. 1570. 'With that which jerks [lashes?] the hams of every jade;' Levins, ed. 1570. With that which jerks [lashes] the name of every jack; Bp. Hall, Satires, b. iii. sat. 5, l. 26. Lowland Sc. yerk, to beat, strike smartly; sesmart blow. 'To jerke or gerke;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. Halliwell also gives: 'Girk, a rod; also, to beat.' β. Another form is jert. Cetgrawe has: 'Attainte, a reach, hit, blow, stroke, . . a gentle nip, quip, or jert, a sleight gird, or taxation. y. Moreover, the words jert and gird were regarded as equivalent; thus Sherwood has, in his index to Cotgrave: 'A jert or gird, Attainte.' The words jerk, jert, and gird are probably all connected, and all had once the same meaning, viz. to strike, esp. with a whip or rod.

8. The only one of these three forms found in M. E. is girden, to strike; see gurden, in Stratmann. The original of girden, to strike, is seen in A.S. gyrd, gierd, a rod; Grein, i, 536. See Gird (2), Gride, and Yard.

¶ It may be added that the usual meaning of jerk in old authors is to whip, to lash; as partly shewn above. Der. jerk. sb.

JERKED BEEF, dried Beef, (Peruvian:) The beef thus called is cut into thin slices and dried in the sun to preserve it. The process is explained in Capt. Basil Hall's Extracts from a Journal written on the coasts of Chiti, Peru, and Mexico, vol. i. c. 4. The name is a singular corruption of charqui, the S. American name for it, which appears to be a Peruvian word. 'The male deer and some of the coarser kind of the Peruvian sheep were slaughtered; . . . and their flesh, cut into thin slices, was distributed among the people, who converted it into charqui, the dried meat of the country; Prescott, Conquest of Pera, c. v. The term is here applied only to dried venison and mutton; the beef is prepared in Chili.

JERKIN, a jacket, short coat. (Du.) 'With Dutchkin dublets, and with Ierkins iaggde;' Gascoigne, Steel Glass, I. 1161 (in Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat). - Du. jurkken * or jurken * (not recorded), regularly formed as a diminutive from Du. jurk, a frock (Sewel). See Sewel's Du. Grammar, where we find that 'almost all Dutch nouns may be changed into diminutives' (p. 35); the termination used for this purpose being formerly -ken, now disused and supplanted by -tipe Sewel instances 'Auys, a house; whence huysje or huysken, a little house.'

JERSEY, fine wool, a woollen jacket. (Jersey.)

Island. Of Scand, origin.

JERUSALEM ARTICHORE, a kind of sunflower. (Ital., -

L.) 'There is a soup called Palestine soup. It is made, I believe, of artichokes called Jerusalem artichokes, but the Jerusalem artichoke is so called from a mere misunderstanding. The artichoke, being a kind of sun-flower, was called in Italian girasole, from the Latin gyrus, eircle, and sol, sun. Hence Jerusalem artichokes and Palestine soups! Max Müller, Lect. on Language, 8th ed. ii. 404. Ital. girasole, a sun-flower. – Ital. girare, to turn; and sole, sun. – Lat. gyrare, to turn round, from gyrus (– Gk. γῦροε), a circle; and solem, acc. of sol, sun. See Gyre and Solar.

JESSAMINE, the same as Jasmine, q. v. JESSES, straps of leather or silk, with which hawks were tied by the legs. (F., -L.) In Shak. Oth. iii. 3. 261. That like an hauke, which feeling herselfe freed From bels and jesses which did let her flight; Spenser, F. Q. vi. 4. 19. So called from their use in letting the hawk fly. A corruption of O. F. jects or gects. 'Gect, a cast or throw, as at dice; les jects d'un oyseau, a hawkes Jesses; Cot. - O. F. jecter, 'to cast, hurl;' id. - Lat. iactare, to hurl, throw, fre-

O. F. jecter, 'to cast, hurl;' id.—Lat. iactare, to hurl, throw, frequentative of iacĕre, to throw. See Jet (1). ¶ Really a double plural. Jess = O. F. jects (jets) is really a plural form; but this not being perceived, es was added. A similar double plural occurs in sixpences (esx-pen-s-es), prov. E. nesses, for nestses, nests.

JEST, a joke, fun. (F.,—L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 241. Orig. a story, tale. M. E. geste, estory, a form of composition in which tales were recited. 'Let see wher [whether] thou canst tellen ought in geste;' Chaucer, C. T. 13861. 'I cannot geste' = I cannot tell tales like a gestour, or professed tale-teller; id. 17354. Geste = a tale, a saying; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 277. = O. F. geste, an exploit, a history of exploits, romance, tale; chansons de geste, heroic poems; a saying; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 277. — O. F. geste, an exploit, a history of exploits, romance, tale; chansons de geste, heroic poems; see Burguy. — Lat. gesta, used for res gesta, a deed, exploit, lit. 'a thing performed.' — Lat. gestus, pp. of gerere, to carry on, do, perform. β. Gerere stands for gesere, as shewn by pt, t. ges-si; from GAS, to bring, extended from GA, to come; cf. Skt. gi, to come; and see Come. Der. jest, vb., jest-ing-ly; also jest-er = M. E. gestour, a reciter of tales, as in: 'And gestours for to tellen tales,' Chaucer, C. T. 13775. From Lat. gerere are also formed gest-ure, restained the conversion discret, inclined the conversions. gest-i-cu-late, con-gest-ion, di-gest, in-di-gest-ion, sug-gest, re-gist-er;

JESUIT, one of the Society of Jesus. (F., Span, L., Gk., Heb.) la Cotgrave. The order was founded in 1534 by Ignatius Loyola; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates. O. F. Jesuite, 'a Jesuite;' Cot. -Span. Jesuita (the order being of Spanish foundation). Formed with suffix -ita (= Lat. -ita as in Lat. erem-ita = Gk. -ιτης as in έρημirns, a hermit) from Lat. Jesu-, crude form of Jesus, q. v. Der. jesuit-ic, jesuit-ic-al, jesuit-ic-al-ly, jesuit-ism; all words with a sinister meaning, craft being commonly attributed to the Jesuits.

JESUS, the Saviour of mankind. (L., -Gk., - Heb.) In Wyclif's Bible. - Lat. Jesus (Vulgate). - Gk. Ίησοῦς. - Heb. Γέκμια (Jeshua, Nohem. viii. 17, another form of Joshua); contracted form of Yehio-shua (Jehoshua, Numb. xiii. 16), signifying 'help of Jehovah' or 'Saviour.'—Heb. root yasha', to be large; in the Hiphil conjugation, to save. Der. Jesuit, q. v. Doublets, Joshua, Jeshua, Jehoshua.

In M. E. commonly written in a contracted form (Ihs), which by editors is often printed Jhesus. This is really an error, the h standing for the Gk. H (long e), so that 'Hbs' = Issus. So also 'Ihū' = Issus. In Gk. capitals, it is IHC, where H = long e and C=s, being a form of the Gk. sigma; the mark above signifying that the form is contracted. In later times IHC became IHS. Lastly (the H being misunderstood) the ingenious fiction arose that IHS meant Iesus Hominum Salvator = Jesus Saviour of Men. The mark, being then unmeaning, was turned into a little cross, as on modern altar-

JET (1), to throw out, fling about, spout. (F., -L.) In Tudor-English it commonly means to fling about the body, to strut about, to stalk about proudly. 'How he jets under his advanced plumes;' Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 36. 'Then must ye stately goe, ketting vp and downe;' Ralph Roister Doister, A. iii. so. 3. l. 121 (in Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat). M. E. getten, iesten; see Prompt. Parv. pp. 192, 258, and Way's notes. 'I ieste, I make a countenance with my legges, is me iamboys; I ieste with facyon and countenance to sette forthe myselfe, is braggue; 'Palsgrave. O'. F. jetter, jetter, also getter, 'to cast, hurl, throw, fling, dart or send out violently, put or push forth; 'Cot .β. Lat. iacere Lat. iactare, to fling, frequent. of iacere, to throw. is certainly closely related to Gk. lánrew, to throw; see Lambio.

Der. jet, sb., M. E. get, in early use in the sense of 'fashion;' cf.

'Jersey, the 'al of the news get' = all in the new fashion, Chaucer, C. T. 684; this answers to O. F. iest or geet (mod. F. jet), which Cot. explains spring, and E. jump. See Jump. Y. Conversely jib is a weak-by a cast or throw, as at dice. [The mod. sense of jet is a spout of water, as in Pope, Dunciad, ii. 177.] Hence also jetteau, Spectator, no. 412, written for F. jet d'eau = a spout of water, a fountain (where F. sau = Lat. aqua, water). Also jet-sam, q. v., jett-y, q. v. jest, adject-ive, con-ject-ure, de-ject, e-ject, in-ject, inter-ject-ion, ob-ject, pro-ject, re-ject, sub-ject; also ad-jac-ent, e-jac-ulate; also amice, gist, joist, jesses.

JET (2), a black mineral, used for ornaments. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'His bill was blak, and as the jet it shon;' Chaucer, C. T. 14867. O. F. jet, jast, gayet, gagate, 'jet;' Cot. - Lat. gagatem, acc. of gagates, jet (whence the forms gagate, gayet, jast, jet in successive order of development); see Trevisa, ii. 17, where the Lat. has gagates, Trevisa has gagates, and the later E. version has iette.
Described in Pliny, xxxvi. 19, -Gk. γαγάτηε, jet; so called from pagates, Trevisa has gagates, and the later E. version has tette. Described in Pliny, xxxvi. 19. = Gk. γαγάτηε, jet; so called from Γάγαε, or Γάγγαε, a town and river in Lycia, in the S. of Asia Minor. Der. jet-black; jett-y, Chapman, tr. of Homer, II. ii. 629; jett-i-ness. JETSAM, JETRON, JETTITSON, things thrown overboard. (Hybrid; F. and Scand.) 'Jetson is a thing cast out of the ship being in danger of wreck, and beaten to the shore by the waters, or cast on the shore by mariners; Coke, vol. vi. fol. 106. a; 'Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. An old term in Law French. A hybrid word, from O. F. jetter, to throw; and the Scand. suffix -sam, signifying 'together.' for which see Flotsam. Cf. E. 'faire le iect. to throw together, for which see Flotsam. Cf. F. faire le iect, to throw the lading of a ship overboard; Cot. See Jet (1).

JETTY, a projection, a kind of pier. (F., = L.) Lit. 'thrown out.' The same as Jutty, q. v. = O. F. jettée, 'a cast, hurle, throw, fling, also a jetty or jutty; also, the bank of a ditch, or the earth cast out of it when it is made;' Cot. Properly the fem. of the pp. of O. F. jetter, to throw. See Jet (1).

JEW, a Hebrew. (F., = L., = Gk., = Heb.) M. E. Iewes, pl. Jews;

Chaucer, C. T. 12409; earlier, Giwes, Giws, Ancren Riwle, p. 106. -O. F. Juis, pl. Jews (13th cent., Littré); later Juifs, pl., Juif, sing.; Cotgrave. – Late Lat. Iudæus. – Gk. Iovôasos, an inhabitant of Judæa. Gk. Iovodia, Judea.—Heb. Yehúdáh, Judah, son of Jacob; lit. 'celebrated' or 'illustrious.'—Heb. root yúdáh, to throw; in the Hithpiel conjugation, to praise, celebrate. Der. Jew-ess (with F. auffix); Jew-ish; Jew-ry, M. E. Iewerie, Chaucer, C. T. 13419, earlier Giverie, Ancren Riwle, p. 394, signifying 'a Jew's district, from O. F. Juierie (Littré) = mod. F. Juierie. Also Jews-harp, sometimes called Jews-trump, as in Beaum. and Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, A. v. sc. 2. l. 10; a name given in derision, prob. with reference to the harp of David.

JEWEL, a precious stone, valuable ornament. (F., -L.) M. E. joiel, joel, jouel (Burguy); later joyau, 'a jewell; 'Cot. A dimin. (with suffix -el) of O. F. and F. joie, joy, pleasure; so that the sense is 'a little joy,' i. e. a toy, trinket. Cf. Span. joyel, a jewel, trinket, dimin. of joya, a jewel, present (answering in form to F. joie, though not used in same sense). Also Ital. giojello, a jewel, dimin. of gioja, (1) joy, (2) a jewel. See further under Joy. ¶ The use of Span. joya and Ital. gioja in the sense of 'jewel' leaves no doubt as to the etymology; but the word was misunderstood in the middle ages, so that 'jewel' was translated into Low Latin in the form jocale, preserving the sense of 'toy,' but missing the etymology, which was thought to be from Lat. iocus instead of from gaudium, the sense of the two words being not very different. Der jewell-er, with which of O. F. joyallier, 'a jeweller,' Cot.; jewell-er-y or jewel-ry, with which of O. F. joyallere, 'jewelling, the trade or mystery of jewelling,' Cot. JIB (1), the foremost sail of a ship. (Dan.) 'Jib, the foremost sail of a ship;' Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. JIB (2), to shift a sail from side to side. (Dan.) 'Jib, to shift the boom-sail from one side of the mast to the other;' Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. 'To jib round the sail;' Cook, Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 3 (R.) Also spelt jibe. 'Jibing, shifting the boom-sail from one side of the mast to the other (Falconer);' id. Also spelt gybe. 'Gybing, the act of shifting the boom-sail,' &c.; id.—Dan. gibbe, 'to gybe, a near term.' Farrell & Du. giben (of sails) to turn suddenly. a naut. term; 'Ferrall. + Du. gipen (of sails), to turn suddenly; Halma (cited by Wedgwood). Sewel gives: 'Gypen, 't overslaan der zeylen [the overfurning of a sail] a sail's being turned over by an eddy wind.' [The form gibe, gybe, with the long vowel, are probably due to this Du. form rather than to the Danish.] + Swed. dial. gippa, verb, used of a sudden movement or jerk; thus, if a man steads on the lower and of a slanting plank and a sudden weight. stands on the lower end of a slanting plank, and a sudden weight falls on the upper end and tips it up, he is gippad, i. e. jerked up; Rietz. Cf. Swed. guppa, to move up and down. B. A nasalised form from the same base GIP appears in M. H. C. gempela, to spring;

JIB (3), to move restively, as a horse. (F., -Scand.) 'Jib, said of a draught-horse that goes backwards instead of forwards;' Halliwell. A very early use of a compound from this verb occurs in M. E. regibben, to kick. 'Hit regibben anon, ase uet kelf and idel' = it kicks back again, like a fat and idle calf; Ancren Riwle, p. 138. -O. F. giber, 'se débattre des pieds et des mains, s'agiter, lutter,' i. e. to struggle with the hands and feet; Roquefort. Whence O. F. regiber (Roquefort), mod. F. regimber. to kick accounting for the regiber (Roquefort), mod. F. regimber, to kick; accounting for the regiber (Roquesort), mod. F. regimber, to kick; accounting for the M. E. regibben.

JIBE, the same as Gibe, q. v. (Scand.)

JIG, a lively tune or dance. (F.,=M. H. G.) As sb. in Shak. Much Ado, ii. 1. 77; Hamlet, ii. 2. 522. As vb., Hamlet, iii. 1. 150.—O. F. gige, gigue, a sort of wind instrument, a kind of dance (Roquesort); but it was rather a stringed instrument, as noted by Littre and Burguy; which may be verified by consulting Dante's use of the Ital. giga in Paradiso, xiv. 118. Cf. Span. giga, a jig, lively tune or dance; Ital. giga, 'a fiddle, a croud, a kit, a violin (Florio).—M. H. G. gige, mod. G. geige, a fiddle.

M. E. gigge, a whirling thing (cf. E. whirligig); and perhaps to Jog. Cf. 'This hous was also ful of gigges' = this house was as sult of irregular sounds; Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 852. See Gig, Giglet. Der. jig, verb, jig-maker, Hamlet, iii. 2. 131. Doublet, gig., q. v.

JILT, a flirt, inconstant woman. (L.) 'Where dilatory fortune plays the jill;' Otway, The Orphan, i. r. 66. 'And who is jilled for another's sake;' Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. 530. A contraction of jillet. 'A jillet brak his heart at last;' Burns, On a Scotch Bard, Gone to the W. Indies, st. 6. A diminutive (with suffix -et) of fill, a personal name, but used in the same sense as jilt or flirt. Hence the compounds flirt-gill, Romeo, ii. 4. 162; and flirt-Gillian, Beaum. and Fletcher, The Chances, iii. 1 (Landlady). cf. Bagasse, a baggage, queane, jyll, punke, flirt; Cot. Gill is short for Juliana; see Gill (4). Der. jill, verb. The use of jillet for Jill was probably suggested by the similar word giglot or giglet, a wanton woman (Meas. for Meas. v. 352), which is to be connected with O. F. gigues, a gay girl (Roquefort), and with Jig. The sense of jig may have affected that of jili.

JINGLE, to make a clinking sound. (E.) M. E. gingelen, ginglen; Chaucer, C. T. 170. A frequentative verb from the base jink, allied to and probably the same word as chink, a word of imitative origin; see Chink (2). A fuller form appears in jangle; see Jangle. Der. jingle, sb.

JOB (1), to peck with the beak, as a bird. (C.?) 'Becquade, a pecke, job, or bob with the beake; 'Cot. 'Iobbyn wythe the bylle' = to job with the beak; Prompt. Parv. Prob. of Celtic origin; from Irish and Gael. gob, the beak or bill of a bird; W. gwp, a bird's head and neck. Note that the connection with shake is only an ultimate one.

JOHN DORY, the name of a fish. (F., -L.) John Dory is the vulgar name of the fish also called the dory. It occurs in Todd's Johnson, spelt John Dory, dory, and doree.

1. Dory or doree is merely borrowed from the F. dorée, the vulgar F. name of the fish, 1. Dory or doree is signifying 'golden' or 'gilded,' from its yellow colour. Dorée is the fem. of the pp. of the verb dorer, to gild.—Lat. deaurare, to gild, lit. 'cover with gold.'—Lat. de, prep. of, with; and aurum, gold. See Aureate.

2. The prefix John is probably a mere sailor's expletive, and nothing but the ordinary name; cf. jack-ass. It is usually explained as a corruption of F. jaune, yellow; but there is no reason why Englishmen should have prefixed this F. epithet, nor why Frenchmen should use such a tautological expression as jaune dorée. This suggested corruption is not 'a well-known fact,' but given as a mere guess in Todd's Johnson.

JOLT, to shake violently, to jerk. (E.) Formerly also joult. Cotgrave explains F. heurtade as 'a shock, knock, jur [jar], jolt, push; and heurter as 'to knock, push, jur, joult, strike. Also found in the comp. jolt-head, a thick-headed fellow, Two Gent. iii. 1. 290; Tam. Shrew, iv. 1. 169. 'Teste de bœuf, a jouli-head, jober-noll, loger-head, one whose wit is as little as his head is great;' Cot. noll, loger-head, one whose wit is as little as his head is great; 'Cot. In North's Plutarch. p. 133 (R.), or p. 158, ed. 1631, we find some verses containing the word joll-head, as well as the expression this heavy jolling pate,' said of Jupiter, when regarded as a stupid tyrant.

B. The frequent association of joll with head or pate is the key to the history of the word. joll-head—jolled-head, one whose head has been knocked against another's, or against the wall, a punishment for stupid or sulky scholars. The shorter form joll was especially (perhaps only) used in this sense, for the plain reason that it was formed from the sh. iell or ioul, the cheek or side of the that it was formed from the sb. joll or jowl, the cheek or side of the head. y. It will be found, accordingly, that the words occur in the following chronological order, viz. (1) jell, the cheek, of A.S. origin; (2) jell, to knock the head; and (3) jelt-head and jelt. 'Iol, or heed, ielle, Caput;' Prompt. Parv. 'Ielle of a fysshe, teste;' M. S. Calig. A. ii. f. 117; cited in Halliwell. 'They may joll horns [knock heads] together;' As You Like It. i. 3. 39. 'How the knave jouls it [viz. a skull] to the ground;' Hamlet, v. 1. 84. 'Joll, the heals of a high criminal to the ground;' hamlet, v. 1. 84. 'Joll, the beak of a bird, or jaw-bone of an animal; hence, to peck; Norfolk; Halliwell. 'Joll, to job with the beak, as rooks job for worms, or for corn recently sown; 'Marshall's Rural Economy, East worms, or for corn recently sown; Matshan a State Policy, Norfolk (E. D. S. Gloss, B. 3).

8. Even if the above equation of jolt to jolt to jolt to not accepted, the facts remain (1) that jolt is an extension of jolt, to knock the head, or peck with the head (as a bird), and (2) that jolt, verb, is from jolt or jowl, sb.

a. It may be added that jolt seems to have acquired a frequentative sense, 'to knock often,' and was soon used generally of various kinds of jerky heads. 'He withough his horses, the coach iolical again;' Rambler, knock often, and was soon used generally of various kinds of jerky knocks. 'He whipped his horses, the coach jolted again; 'Rambler, no. 34 (R.) See further under Jowl. Der. jolt, sb.

JONQUIL, a kind of narcissus. (F.,-L.) In Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Accented jonguil, Thomson's Seasons, Spring, 548.—Mod. F. jonquille, a jonquil. So named from its rush-like leaves; whence it is sometimes called Narcissus juncifolius.—F. jonc, a rush.—Lat. iuncus, a rush. See Junket. So also Span. junquillo, Ital. giunchiglia, a jonquil; from Span. junco, Ital. giunco, a rush.
JORDAN, a pot, chamber-pot. (L.?—Gk.?—Arab.?) M. E. Iordan, Chaucer, C. T. 12239; see Tyrwhitt's note. Also Iurdon, Iordeyne; see Prompt. Parv., and Way's note; p. 267. Halliwell explains it as 'a kind of pot or vessel formerly used by physicians explains it as 'a kind of pot or vessel formerly used by physicians and alchemists. It was very much in the form of a soda-water bottle, only the neck was larger, not much smaller than the body of the vessel; &c.'

β. Origin uncertain; but it may very well have been named from the river Jordan (Lat. Iordanes, Gk. Ioρδάνηs, Arab. urdunn, Rich. Pers. Dict., p. 56). The explanation is simple enough, and accounts at the same time for the English use of Jordan as a surname. 'We must remember this was the time of the Crusades. It was the custom of all pilgrims who visited the Holy Land to bring back a bottle of water from the Jordan for baptismal purposes. . . . It was thus that Jordan as a surname has arisen. I need not remind students of early records how common is Jordan as a Christian name, such cognomens as 'Jordan de Abingdon' or 'Jordan le Clerc' being of the most familiar occurrence;' Bardsley, Our English Surnames; p. 53. Thus Jordan is merely short for 'Jordan-bottle.' Halliwell further explains how the later sense (as in Shakespeare) came about; the bottle being, in course of time, occasionally med for baser purposes. usually given, that jordan = earthen, from Dan. and Swed. jord, earth, is impossible. The latter syllable was originally long, as in earth, is impossible. The latter syllable was originally long, as in Chaucer's use of Iordánës, riming with Galiánës, and as shewn by the M. E. spelling Iordeyne. Besides which, there is no such word as jord-en; the Dan. and Swed. adj. is jord-ish, which, moreover, does not mean 'earthen,' but rather 'earthly' or 'terrestrial.' The suggestion is, in fact, inadmissible.

JOSTILE, JUSTILE, to strike or push against. (F.; with E. suffix.) [Not in P. Plowman, as said in R.] 'Thou justlest nowe too nigh;' Roister Doister, iii. 3. 129 (in Spec. of Eng., ed. Skeat). Formed, with E. frequentative suffix-le, from just or joust; see Joust.

Ital. giostrare, Span. justar, to tilt.] β. The orig. sense is merely 'to meet ' or ' to approach,' a sense better preserved in O. F. adjouster, to set near, to annex; see Adjust. y. The hostile sense was easily added as in other cases; cf. E. to meet (often in a hostile sense), to encounter, and M. E. assemblen, to fight, contend, so common in Barbour's Bruce. F. jubile, 'a jubilee, a year of releasing, liberty, rejoicing;' Cot. – Lat. iubilæus, the jubilee, Levit. xxv. 11; masc. of adj. iubilæus, belonging to the jubilee; Levit. xxv. 28. - Heb. yobel, a blast of a trumpet, a shout of joy. is some doubt as to the origin of the word; see Jubilee in the Concise Dict. of the Bible. Distinct from the word above.

JUDGE, an arbitrator, one who decides a cause. (F., -L.) M. E. Iuge, iuge, Chaucer, C. T. 15931.— F. juge, 'a judge;' Cot.—Lat. iudicem, acc. of iudex, a judge.

B. The stem iū-dic—ius-dic-meaning 'one who points out what is law;' from ius, law, and dic-are, to point out, make known. For ius, see Just. For dicare, aic-are, to point out, make known. For ius, see Just. For dicare, see Indicate, Token. Der. judge, verb, M.E. Iugen, iuggen, Rob. of Glouc., p. 345, l. 11; judge-ship; judg-ment, M. E. iugement (three syllables), Chaucer, C.T. 807, 820; judgment-day, judgment-seat; and see judicature, judicial, judicious. Also ad-judge, pre-judge.

JUDICATURE, judgment. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. -F. judicature, 'judicature;' Cot. - Lat. iudicatura, fem. of fut. part. of iudicare, to judge. - Lat. iudica, stem of iudex, a judge. See Judge. Der (from I at iudicare), iudicature, indicate iudicature, indicate iudicature.

Der. (from Lat. iudicare) judica-ble; (from pp. iudicatus) judicat-ive (Lat. iudicatiuus), judicat-or-y (Lat. iudicatorius).

JUDICIOUS, full of judgment, discreet. (F.,-L.) In Shak.
Macb. iv. 2. 16. – F. judicieux, 'judicious;' Cot. – Lat. iudiciosus*, not found, but regularly formed with suffix -osus from iudici-, crude form of iudex, a judge. Der. judicious-ly, judicious-ness.

JUG, a kind of pitcher. (Heb.?) 'A iugge, poculum;' Levins, ed. 1570. 'A jugge to drink in;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. Of uncertain origin. Mr. Wedgwood's suggestion is probably right; he connects it with 'Jug or Judge, formerly a familiar equivalent of Joan or Jenny.' In this case, the word is of jocular origin; which is rendered probable by the fact that a drinking-vessel was also called a jack, and that another vessel was called a jill. 'A jacke of leather to drink in;' Minshen. Jack seems to have been the earlier leather to drink in; Minshen. Jack seems to have been the earlier word, and Jill was used in a similar way to go with it. 'Be the Jacks fair within, the Jills fair without;' Tam. of Shrew, iv. 1.51; on which Steevens remarks that it is a play upon the words, which signify two drinking measures as well as men and maid-servants. B. The use of Jug for Joan appears in Cotgrave, who gives: 'Je-hannette, Jug, or Jinny,' and again: 'Jannette, Judge, Jenny, a woman's name.' How Jug came to be used for Joanna is not very obvious; but pet names are liable to strange confusion, as in the case his chaptes? (later text, choules) = and the beast opened (?) his jaws; Layamon, 6807.=A.S. ceaft, the jaw; pl. ceaftas, jaws, chaps; Grein, i. 187. 'Dauld ... his ceaftas to-ter' = David tare asunder the chaps (of the bear); Ælfric on the Old Test.; in Sweet's A.S. Reader, p. 66, l. 319. + O. Sax. haftos, pl. the jaws. Allied to Icel. hjaptr, the mouth, jaw, esp. of a beast; see further under Chaps. The l in A.S. ceaft is a mere suffix, and the word must have originated from a Teutonic form KAF, signifying jaw; this exactly corresponds to the Aryan base GAP, akin to & GABH, to gape, to yawn; cf. Skt. jabh, to gape, yawn, jambha, the jaws; Fick, i. 69. Another derivative from the Teat, base KAF appears in G. hiefern, the on the Astrolabe, calls the month Iulius, Iuyl, Iuylle; pt. i. § 10.

July is Englished from Lat. Iulius, a name given to this month (formerly called Quinctilis) in honour of Caius Julius Cæsar, who was born in this month. ¶ Quinctilis is from quintus, fifth, because this was formerly the fifth month, when the year began in March.

Quintus is from quinque, five; see Five. JUMBLE, to mix together confusedly. (Scand.) 'I jumbylle,

I make a noyse by removyng of heavy thynges. I jumble as one dothe that can [not] play upon an instrument, je brouille; Palsgrave. Here it means to make a confused noise. Chaucer uses the equivalent form jombren. 'Ne jombre eek no discordaunt thing yfere '=do not jumble discordant things together; Troilus, ii. 1037. But Sir T. More uses the word in the sense of 'to mingle harmoniously;' as in: 'Let vs . . . see how his diffinicion of the churche and hys heresies will jumper and agree together among themselfe;' Works, p. 612a. Comparing this with the phr. 'to jump together' (= to agree with) we may conclude that jumble (or jumber, or jumper) is merely the frequentative form of the verb to jump, used transitively. Thus jumble = to make to jump, i. e. to jolt or shake about, confuse; hence, to rattle, make a discord; or, on the other hand, intransitively, to jump with, agree with. See Jump (1). ¶ The frequent. suffix appears to be English, not (in this case) borrowed. Der. jumble, sb.; jumbl-ing-ly.

JUMP (1), to leap, spring, skip. (Scand.) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. 1.53. The frequentative form jumper occurs in Sir T. More, and jombren in Chaucer; see quotations s.v. Jumble. Hence the word jump may be referred at least to the 14th century, though, apparently, once a rare word. Of Low German, or Scand. origin. -Swed. dial. gumpa, to spring, jump, or wag about heavily and clumsily (Rietz); cf. Swed. guppa, to move up and down. + Dan. gumpe, to jolt. + M. H. G. gumpen, to jump; gumpeln, to play the buffoon; gempeln, to jump, dimin. form of prov. G. gampen, to jump, spring, hop, sport; see Schmeller's Bavarian Dict.; cf. M. H. G. gampelmann, a buffoon, jester, one who plays antics. + Icel. goppa, to skip. B. Fick (iii. 101) gives the Teut. base as GAMB, and connects these words with Icel. gabba, to mock; see Gab. But I would rather connect jump with jib; see Jib (2), Jib (3). Der. jump, sb., used in the sense of 'lot' or 'hazard,' Antony, iii. 8, 6. Also jumb-le, q. v., and jump (2).

JUMP (2), exactly, just, pat. (Scand.) 'Jump at this dead hour;' Hamlet, i. 1. 65; cf. v. 2. 386; Oth. ii. 3. 392. From the verb above, in the sense to agree or tally, commonly followed by ings, planets iunctures, and the elevated poule' [pole]; Warner, Albion's England, b. v. (R.) 'Juncture, a joyning or coupling together;' Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674.—Lat. iunctura, a joining; origiem, of fut. part. of iungere, to join. See Join. ¶ The sense of critical moment' is probably of astrological origin; cf. the quotation from Warner.

JUNE, the sixth month. (Lat.) Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 10, has Iunius and Iuyn; the latter answering to F. Juin. Englished from Lat. Iunius, the name of the sixth month and of a Roman gens or The word is probably from the same root as Junior, q.v.

JUNGLE, country covered with trees and brushwood. (Skt.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. — Skt. jaugala, adj. dry, desert.

Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. — Skt. jaügala, adj. dry, desert. Hence jungle = waste land.

The Skt. short a sounds like u in mud; hence the E. spelling. Der. jungl-y.

JUNIOR, younger. (Lat.) In Levins, ed. 1570.—Lat. iunior, comparative of iuuenis, young; so that iunior stands for iuuenior. Cf. Skt. yuvan, young. See Juvenile. Der. junior-skip, junior-i-ty.

JUNIPER, an evergreen shrub. (L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. Spelt junipere; Spenser, Sonnet 26. — Lat. iuniperus, a juniper-tree.

β. The sense is 'young-producing,' i. e. youth-renewing; from its evergreen appearance. From iuni = iuueni, crude form of iuuenis, young: and -perus = -parus. from parere, to produce. See Juvenile. young; and -perus -- parus, from parers, to produce. See Juvenile and Parent. Der. gin (3), q. v.

JUNK (1), a Chinese three-masted vessel. (Port., - Chinese.)

'China also, and the great Atlantis, . . . which have now but junk and canoas' [canoes]; Bacon, New Atlantis, ed. 1639, p. 12. Also in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, pp. 42, 384.—Port. JUNK (2), pieces of old cordage, used for mats and oakum. (Port.,-L.) 'Junk, pieces of old rope;' Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. 'Junk, a sea-word for any piece of an old cable;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.—Port. junco, a rush; (in a ship) the junk; Vieyra's Dict.

1715. = Port. junco, a rush; (in a ship) the junk; Vieyra's Dict. So called from rush-made ropes.] = Lat. iuncus, a rush. B. Salt meat is also facetiously termed junk by the sailors, because it is as tough as old rope. ¶ junk, a lump (Halliwell), is a different word, being put for chunk, a log of wood; see Chump.

JUNKET, a kind of sweetmeat. (Ital., = L.) Also spelt juncate; Spenser, F. Q. v. 4. 49. In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 250; Milton, L'Allegro, 102. The orig. sense was a kind of cream-cheese, served up on rushes, whence its name. Also used as a name for various delicacies made of cream. = Ital. giuncata, 'a kind of fresh cheese and creame, so called because it is brought to market upon rushes; also, a green cheese or fresh cheese made of milk thats curdled without any runnet, and served in a fraile | basket| of green curdled without any runnet, and served in a fraile [basket] of green rushes; 'Cot. Also O. F. joncade, 'a certain spoon-meat made of cream, rose-water, and sugar;' id.] Formed as a pp. from Ital. giuncare, 'to strewe with rushes;' Florio. — Ital. giunco, a rush.— Lat. iuncum, acc. of iuncus, a rush. Der. junket, vb., junket-ing, Spectator, no. 466. From the same source, jonquil, q.v., junk (2).

JUNTA, a congress, council. (Span.,—L.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. — Span. junta, a junta, congress. A fem. form of iunto: see Junto.

junto; see Junto.

JUNTO, a knot of men, combination, confederacy, faction. (Span, -L.) 'And these to be set on by plot and consultation with a junto of clergymen and licensers;' Milton, Colasterion (R.) -Span. junto, united, conjoined. - Lat. iunctus, pp. of iungere, to join. See Join and Junta.

JURIST, a lawyer. (F., - L.) 'Jurist, a lawyer;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—F. juriste, 'a lawyer;' Cot.—Low Lat. iurista, a lawyer. Formed, with suffix -ista (- Gk. -10772), from iur-, stem of ius, law. See Just.

JUROB, one of a jury. (F., -L.) In Shak. Hen. VIII, v. 3. 60. Imitated from F. jureur, 'a swearer or deposer, a juror;' Cot. -Lat. iuratorem, acc. of iurator, a swearer. - Lat. iuratus, pp. of iurare, to swear. See Jury.

JURY, a body of sworn men. (F.,-L.) 'I durst as wel trust the truth of one judge as of two iuries;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 988 d.

-F. jurée, 'a jury,' Cot.; lit. a company of sworn men. Properly the fem. pp. of F. jurer, to swear. = Lat. iurare, to swear; lit. to bind oneself by an oath. — YU, to bind; cf. Skt. yu, to bind. Der. juryman, Tw. Nt. iii. 2. 17. From same source, con-jure. And see juror. JURY-MAST, a temporary mast. (Scand.?) "Jury-mast, a yard set up instead of a mast that is broken down by a storm or shot, and fitted with sails, so as to make a poor shift to steer a while?" Kersey of very contract. S. Doubtless a β. Doubtless a ship; Kersey, ed. 1715. Of unknown origin. sailor's word, and presumably of Du. or Scand. origin. A probable source is Dan. kiöre, a driving, from kiöre, to drive; common in compounds, as in kiöre-kest, a draught-horse, kiörevei, a carriage-way. Cf. Norw. kyöre, a drive, a journey without a stoppage; Swed. köra, Li. Norw. syore, a drive, a journey without a stoppage; Swed. sora, Icel. keyra, to drive. In this view, a jury-mast is one by help of which a vessel drives along. The supposition that it is short for injury-mast is most unlikely, owing to the difference in accent.

*JUST (1), righteous, upright, true. (F., -L.) M. E. Iust, iust; Wyclif, Luke, i. 17. - F. juste, 'just;' Cot. - Lat. iustus, just. KEDGE (1), to warp a ship. (Scand.) 'Kedge, to set up the foresail, and to let a ship drive with the tide, lifting up and letting fall the kedge-anchor, as often as occasion serves; 'Kersey's Dict. ed. 1714. And see the longer description in Todd's Johnson.—Swed. dial. keka, to tug at anything tough, to work continually at anything, to drag oneself slowly forward, go softly, drive softly; Rietz. 'Hästen keka fot om fot i ofore,' the horse goes slowly, one foot before another, in the bad road; id. This well describes the tedious process of hedging, or making headway when the wind is contrary to the tide, Der. kedg-er, kedg-anchor. 'Kedg-anchors, or Kedgers, small anchors used in calm weather, and in a slow stream;' Kersey. So called because used to assist in kedging; see Todd's Johnson. pecause used to assist in kedging; see Todd's Johnson. Wedgwood identifies kedge-anchor with keg-anchor, which he supposes to be named from the keg or 'cask which is fastened to the anchor to shew where it lies.' See Keg. This seems to me to contradict the evidence, which points to the verb as being the older word; the form kedg-er is almost enough to prove this. But the prov. E. kedge-belly, a glutton, and kedge, to stuff oneself in eating, are undoubtedly derived from the notion of a round keg; cf. Norweg. kaggje, a keg, a round thick person (Aasen).

KEDGE (2), KIDGE, chcerful, lively. (Scand.) 'Kedge, brisk, the cule to the hacches vnder the cabans;' i. e. from the bottom to the is kele = keel; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, ii. 233. The etymology is due to a confusion between two words.

1. The form answers to A.S. ceol, a ship, cognate with Icel. kjöll, O. H. G. cheol, a ship, barge. These are from a Teutonic base KEULA, a ship (Fick, iii. 40), prob. These are from a Teutonic base KEULA, a snip (Fick, in. 40), proper connected with Gk. 7a0λos, a round-built Phoenician merchant vessel, 7auλôs, a round vessel, milk-pail, bucket, bee-hive, Skt. gola, a ball. 2. But the sense is that of Iccl. kjölr, Dan. kjöl, Swed. köl, the keel of a ship; answering to a Teutonic base KELA; Fick, iii. 47. The G. and Du. kiel, a keel, seem to belong to the latter base. G. and Du. kiel, a keel, seem to belong to the latter base. the change of A.S. ed to mod. E. ee, cf. wheel from A.S. kwedl. keel-ed, keel-age; also keel-son, q. v. Also keel-haul, from O. Du. kielhaalen (mod. Du. kielhalen); 'Kielhaalen, to careen a ship; eenen matros hielhaden, to pull a mariner up from under the keel, a seaman's punishment; Sewel. See Haul.

KEEL (2), to cool. (E.) 'While greasy Joan doth keel the pot;'

L. L. L. v. 2. 930. The proper sense is not to scum the pot (though it may sometimes be so used) but to keep it from boiling over by it may sometimes be so used) but to keep it from boiling over by stirring it round and round; orig. merely to cool it or keep it cool. *Keel, to keep the pot from boiling over; 'A Tour to the Caves, 1781; see Eng. Dial. Soc. Gloss. B. 1. 'Faith, Doricus, thy brain boils; keel it, keel it, or all the fat's in the fire; 'Marston, What You Will, 1607; in Anc. Drama, ii. 199 (Nares). M. E. kelen, to cool, once a common word; see Ormulum, 19884; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 141; Prompt. Parv., p. 270; Court of Love, 775; Gower, C. A. ii. 360; &c. (Stratmann).—A. S. celan, to cool.—A. S. cell, cool; see Cool.

¶ Note the regular change from 6 to d, as in fôt, foot, pl. fit feet; so also bleed from blood, feed from food &c.

rupted (1) to swine, and (2) to son.

REEN, sharp, eager, acute. (E.) M. E. kene, Chaucer, C. T. 1968; Havelok, 1832.—A. S. céne; Grein, i. 157. Here é comes from an older é; the orig. sense is 'knowing' or 'wise,' or 'able.' + Du. koen, bold, stout, daring. + Icel. kenn (for kenn), wise. + O. H. G. chuoni, huani, M. H. G. kuene, G. kühn, bold.

[S. All from a Teutonic base KONJA (KONYA), Fick, iii. 41. The orig. sense is shewn by the Icel. word, which also implies ability. From Teut. root KANN, to know; see Ken, Can. Der. keen-ly, keenness, Merch. of Ven. iv. 1. 125.

KEEP, to regard, have the care of, guard, maintain, hold, preserve. (L.) M. E. kepen, pt. t. kepte, pp. kept; Chaucer, C. T. 514 (or 512).—A. S. cépan (weak werb), another form of cépan, orig. to traffic, sell, hence also to seek after, store up, retain, keep. See Ælfric's Homilies, i. 412, where we find cypa, sb., a merchant, See Æltric's Homilies, i. 412, where we find cýpa, sb., a merchant, chapman; gecýpe, adj. for sale; also: 'gif he dysigra manna herunga cépō on árfæstum weorcum' = if he seek after the praises of men in pious works. 'Geome væs andagan cépton' = they earnestly awaited the appointed day; Ælf. Hom. ii. 172. 'Cépav heora tíman' = they observe (or keep) their times; id. ii. 324. And see cýpan, cépan, gecýpan, gecépan; Grein, i. 182, 385; also spelt geceúpian, as at the last reference. We find also cýpa as a gloss to Lat. uendo, I sell; Ælfric's Colloquy, in Wright's Vocab. i. 8, 1. 8. The A.S. cépan, cépan, cépain, are all derivatives from the she cede traffic cépan, cépan, ceapian, are all derivatives from the sb. ceap, traffic, barter, price; and it has been shewn (s. v. Cheap) that they are not true English words, but of Latin origin. In fact, keep is a mere doublet of cheapen. The vowel-changes are perfectly regular; if a word contain ea (as ceap), the derivative contains e in Early West Saxon, which passes into i, and later into j; thus the successive forms are cépan, cipan, cýpan (Sweet). Der. keep, sb., keep-er, keep-er-ship; keep-ing, As You Like It, i. 1. 9; also keep-sake, i. e. something which we keep for another's sake, apparently quite a modern word, added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.

KEG, a small cask or barrel. (Scand.) Formerly also spelt cag. 'Caeque, Caque, a eag;' Cot. And in Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave, we find: 'A kegge, caque; voyez a Cag.' - Icel. kaggi, a keg, cask; Swed. kagge, 'a cag, rundlet, runlet,' Tauchnitz, Swed. Dict.: Norwegian kagge, a keg, a round mass or heap, a big-bellied animal or man (whence prov. E. kedge-bellied, pot-bellied). β. Root uncertain; but probably named from its roundness. Cf. Gk. γογγύλος, round. And see Kalls, which is probably the dimin. form.

KELP, the calcined ashes of sea-weed. (Unknown.) Formerly kilp or kilpe. 'As for the reits [sea-weeds] kilpe, tangle, and such like sea-weeds, Nicander saith they are as good as treacle. Sundry sorts there be of these reits, going under the name of Alga; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxii. c. 6. Of unknown origin.

KELSON, the same as Keelson, q. v. (Scand.)

KEN, to know. (Scand.) Not E., but Scand. M. E. kennen, to know, discern. 'Men may hem kennen by smelle of brimstoon men may know them by smell of brimstone; Chaucer, C.T. 16353.—Icel. kenna, to know. + Swed. känna. + Dan. kiende. + Du. kennen. + G. kennen.

B. The sense 'to know' is Scand.; but it is not the original sense.

The verb is, etymologically, a causal one, signifying to make to know, to teach, shew; a sense frequently found in M. E. 'Kenne me on Crist to bileue' = teach me to believe in Christ; P. Plowman, B. i. 81. Such is also the sense of A.S. cennan, Grein, i. 156; and of Goth. kannjan, to make known, John, xvii. 26.

y. This explains the form of the word; kennan = kannian, causal of Teutonic KANN, base of KONNAN, to know, spelt cunnan in A.S. and kunnan in Gothic; see Fick, iii. 40. [The s is the regular substitute for a, when i follows in the next syllable.] For further remarks, see Can (1). Der. ken, sb., Cymb. iii. 6. 6; a coined word, not in early use.

KENNEL (1), a house for dogs, pack of hounds. (F.,-L.)

Properly 'a place for dogs; 'hence, the set of dogs themselves. M. E. kenel (with one n), Prompt. Parv.; Sir Gawayn and Grene Knight, 1140.—Norm. French kenil*, answering to O.F. chenil, a kennel. β. The Norman form is proved by the k being still preserved in English, and by the Norman F. kenet, a little dog, occurring in a Norman poem cited in Way's note in Prompt. Parv., p. 271, where the M. E. kenet also occurs. This kenet is dimin. of a Norman F. ken, answering to Picard kien, O. F. chen (Littré), mod. F. chien, a dog. So also in O. F. chen-il, the former syllable = the same O. F. chen.

Y. The termination -il is imitated from the Lat. termination -ile, occurring in ou-ile, a house or place for sheep, a sheepfold, from ou-is, a sheep. Hence chen-il = a place for dogs; Ital. canile, a kennel.

8. The O. F. chen is from Lat. canem, acc. of canis, a dog, cognate with E. Hound, q.v. Der. kennel, vb.; kennel, d. Shak, Venus, 913.

sense is given by Norweg. kjölsvill, where svill answers to G. schwelle, E. sill; see Bill. The suffix svill, not being understood, was corrupted (1) to swine, and (2) to son.

KENNEL (2), a gutter. (F., -L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iv. 3.

98. A corruption of the M. E. canel or canell, of which M. E. chanell rupted (1) to swine, and (2) to son. Roquefort). - Lat. canalis, a canal; hence, a channel or kennel. See Channel, of which kennel is a doublet; also Canal.

RERBSTONE, CURBSTONE, a stone laid so as to form part of the edging of stone or brick-work. (Hybrid; F.-L.; and E.) 'Kerbstone, a stone laid round the brim of a well;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. A phonetic spelling of curbstone; so called from its curbing the stone-work, which it retains in its place. See Curb and Stone.

KERCHIEF, a square piece of cloth used to cover the head; and later, for other purposes. (F., -L.) Better spelt curchief. In Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 3. 62, iv. 2. 74. M. E. couerchef (= coverchef), Chaucer, C. T. 6172; also spelt couerchief (= coverchief), id. 453, or Six-text, A. 453. Also kerchef, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 272. -O. F. coverchef, later couver-chef; cf. 'Couve-chef, a kerchief;' Cot. -O. F. coprir, later courrir, to cover; and chef, chief, the head, which is from Lat. caput, the head, cognate with E. head. See Cover and from Lat. caput, the head, cognate with E. head. See Cover and Chief.

¶. A word of similar formation is curfew, q.v. Der. hand-herchief, pocket-hand-herchief.

KERMES, the dried bodies of insects used in dyeing crimson. (Arab., =Skt.) See Crimson.

KERN (1), KERNE, an Irish soldier. (Irish.) In Shak. Macb. i. 2. 13, 30; v. 7. 17. 'The hearne... whom only I tooke to be the proper Irish souldiour; Spenser, View of the State of Ireland; in Clibac def Servers.

KERN (2), another spelling of Quern, q. v.

KERNEL, a grain, the substance in the shell of a nut. (E.)

M. E. kirnel (badly kirnelle), P. Plowman, B. xi. 253; better currel, id. C. xiii. 146.—A.S. cyrnel, to translate Lat. granum; Wright's Vocab., i. 80, col. 1, 1. 7. Formed (with dimin. suffix -el, and vowelchange from o to y) from A.S. corn, grain; see Corn.

S. The Icel. kjarni, Dan. kierne, kjærne, Swed. kürna, G. kern (O. H. G. cherno), all signifying 'kernel,' are closely related words, from the cherno), all signifying 'kernel,' are closely related words, from the same of GAR, to grind. See Fick, iii. 42.

413. The word is certainly English, and the same word as the personal name Kersey; perhaps named from Kersey, 3 miles from Hadleigh, in the S. of Suffolk, where a woollen trade was once carried on. A little weaving still goes on at Hadleigh.

B. The usual pretence, that the cloth came from Jersey, and was named after it, is a pure fiction; there is nothing to shew that Jersey was ever called Kersey, and the 'corruption' from j to k is, phonetically impossible. I find that the island was already called Jeresey in a charter of Edward III, cited in Falle's Account of Jersey, 1694. The place of the manufacture of kersey is now the North of England, but it was once made in the South (Phillips' Dict.). Y. The F. carizé, 'kersie' (Cot.), Du. karsaai, Swed. kersing, are mere corruptions of the E. word.

KERSEYMERE, a twilled cloth of fine wool. (Cashmere.) modern corrupt spelling of eassimere, an old name for the cloth also called Cashmere. See Cassimere, Cashmere. The corruption is clearly due to confusion with kersey, a coarse cloth of a very different KETCH, a small yacht or hoy. (Turkish.) 'Ketch, a vessel like a hoy, but of a lesser size;' Kersey, ed. 1715. The word was picked up in the Mediterranean, as would appear from the following quotation. 'We stood in for the channel: about noon we saw a sail having but one mast; judged it to be a ketch; but, drawing nearer, found it was a ship in distress, having lost her main and mizen masts; Randolph's Islands in the Archipelago, 1687, p. 103 (Todd). Corrupted from Turk. gaiq, qdiq, a boat, skiff, Zenker's Dict., p. 688; whence also Ital. eaiceo, F. caïqus. We also find F. caïche, quaiche, a ketch (Littré), borrowed from the English; so also is the Du. kits, a ketch, in the Eng.-Du. part of Sewel's Dict.

(with one t). Prompt. Parv.; Wyclif, Levit. xi. 35.—A. S. cetel, spelt cytel in Ælfric's Glossary, to translate Lat. cacabus; Wright's Vocab. i. 25, col. 1. But the spelling cetel is authorised by the occurrence of the weakened form chetel in a gloss of the 12th cent.; id. p. 93. col. 1. The Meso-Goth. form is hatils, occurring in the gen. pl. hatile in Mark, vii. 4 (Gk. χαλκίων, Lat. aramentorum, A. V. 'brazen vessels').

β. Borrowed from Lat. catillus, a small bowl, also found in the uncontracted form catinulus; dimin. form of Lat. catinus, a bowl, a deep vessel for cooking food. The Lat. catinus is a kindred word to Gk. κοτύλου, a cup, κοτύλη, a small cup; see Cotyledon.

¶ From the Lat. catillus were also borrowed Icel. ketill, Swed. kittel, Dan. kedel, Du. ketel, G. kessel, and even Russ. kotel. Den. hettls-drum, Hamlet, i. 4. 11.

KEX, hemlock; a hollow stem. (C.) Bundles of these empty kesses; Beaum. and Fletcher, Elder Brother, iii. 5. 13. M.E. kess.; P. Plowman, B. xvii. 219; Prompt. Parv.—W. cscys., sb. pl., hollow stalks, hemlock; allied to W. segid, hemlock. + Corn. csgas, hemlock. + Lat. cicuta, hemlock. Thence also prov. E. kecksies = kesses, in Shak. Hen. V, v. 2. 52; a pl., sb. of which the proper singular form is not kecksy, but kess. See Way's note in Prompt. Parv. 5, v. kys. Note also that kess really = kesses and is itself a plural. Parv., s. v. kyz. Note also that kee really = kecks, and is itself a plural; kexes being a double plural.

KEY, that which opens or shuts a lock. (E.) Formerly called kay, riming with may, Merch. of Ven. ii. 7. 59; and with survey, Shak. Sonnet 52. M. E. keye (riming with pleye, to play), Chaucer, C. T. 9918.—A. S. cag, cage, Grein, i. 156; whence M. E. keye by the usual change of g into y, as in day from A.S. dag. + O. Fries. kai, kei, a key.

B. The gen. case of the A.S. fem. sb. cage is cagan, so that the base of the word takes the form KAGAN. The remoter origin is unknown, but the form of the base renders any connection with quay extremely improbable. See Quay, a word of Celtic origin. Der. key-board, key-hole, key-note, key-stone.

KHAN, a prince, chief, emperor. (Pers., — Tatar.) Common in Mandeville's Travels, spelt Cham, Cane, Chane, Can, Chan; pp. 42, 215, 216, 224, 225. — Pers. khán, lord, prince (a title); Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 212. But the word is of Tatar origin; the well-known title Chingis Khan signifies 'great khan' or 'great lord,' a title assumed by the calental converse Tempusi who was proclaimed sumed by the celebrated conqueror Temugin, who was proclaimed Great Khan of the Moguls and Tatars, A.D. 1205. He is always known by the sole title, often also spelt Gengis Khan, corrupted (in known by the sole title, often also spelt Gengis Khan, corrupted (in Chaucer) to Cambuscan. See Introd. to Chaucer's Prioresses Tale, &c., ed. Skeat, p. xli. Der. khan-ate, where the suffix is of Lat. origin.

KIBE, a chilblain. (C.) In Hamlet, v. 1. 153. 'She halted of [owing to] a kybe;' Skelton, Elynour Rummyng, l. 493. 'He haltith often that hath a kyby hele;' id. Garland of Laurell, l. 502.—W. eibust, 'chilblains, kibes;' Spurrell.

B. Explained in Pughe's Welsh Dict. as standing for cib-gwst, from cib, a cup, seed-vessel, husk, and gwst, a humour, malady, disease. Thus the sense would appear to be 'a malady in the shape of a cup,' from the swelling or counded form. y. It is clear that E. kibe has preserved the former syllable only, rejecting the latter. 8. We may compare Gael. copan, a cup, a boss of a shield, a dimple. Probably the same word with Cup, q.v.

KICK, to strike or thrust with the foot. (C.) M.E. kiken, Chaucer, C. T. 6523; P. Plowman, C. v. 22.—W. cicio, to kick; given in the Eng.-Welsh portion of Spurrell's Dict. + Gael. ceig, to kick; ceigeadh, the act of kicking. Der. kick, sb.

KICKSHAWS, a delicacy, fantastical dish. (F.,—L.) 'Any pretty little tiny kick-haws;' 2 Hen. IV, v. 1. 29. The pl. is kickshawses. 'Art thou good at these kickshawses?' Twelfth Nt. i. 3. 122.

At a later time, kickshaws was incorrectly regarded as being a pl. At a later time, kickshaws was incorrectly regarded as being a pl. form. Kickshaws is a curious corruption of F. quelque chose, lit. something, hence, a trifle, small delicacy. This can be abundantly proved by quotations. 'Fricandeaux, short, skinlesse, and dainty puddings, or quelkchoses, made of good flesh and herbs chopped together, then rolled up into the form of liverings, &c., and so boiled; Cotgrave's F. Dict. 'I made bold to set on the board bickeskoses, and variety of strange fruits; Featley, Dippers Dipt, ed. 1645, p. 199 (Todd). 'Fresh salmon, and French kickshose; Milton, Animadversions upon Remonstrant's Defence (R.) 'Nor shall we then need the monsieurs of Paris . . . to send [our youth] over back again transformed into mimicks, apes, and kicshoes; Milton, Treatise on Education (Todd). 'As for French kickshaws, Cellery, and Champaign, Ragous, and Fricasees, in truth we've none; Rochester, Works, 1777, p. 143. 'Some foolish French quelquechose, I warrant you. Quelquechose! oh! ignorance in supreme perfection! He means a kek shose!' Dryden, Kind Keeper, A. iii. sc. 1.-F. quelrie means a wes snose! Dryden, Kind Keeper, A. iii. sc. 1.—F. quelque chose, something.—Lat. qual-is, of what kind, with suffix -quam; and eausa, a cause, thing. Qualis answers to E. which; quam is fem.
acc. of qui, answering to E. who. See Which, Who, and Cause.

KID, a young goat. (Scand.) M. E. kid, Chaucer, C. T. 3260, 238; Ormulum, 780.4.—Dan. kid, a kid; Swed. kid, in Widegren's Swed. Dict., also kidling; Icel. kiô, kiôlingr, a kid. + O. H. G. kizzi, M. H. G. and G. kitze, a kid.

B. From the Low G. root Ki, to germinate, produce, seen in Goth. keian or uskeian, to produce as a shoot.—4 GA, another form of GAN, to generate. Thus kid mean that which is produced, or 'a young one;' a sense still preserved in modern colloquial English. See Chit, Child, Kin. Der. kid, kidneris; (later version). The word nere or neere is also used alone, in the same sense. 'Neere of a beest, ren;' Prompt. Parv., p. 253; and see Way's note. Thus the latter syllable means 'kidney;' whilst the former means 'belly' or 'womb,' from the position of the glands. the former means bely or wome, from the position of the games.

1. Kid is here a corruption of quid = qui'h; cf. prov. E, kite, kyte, the belly, which is the same word.—Icel. kviôr, the womb; Swed. qued, the womb, in the Swed. tr. of Luke, xi. 27. + A. S. cwiô, the womb; used to translate Lat. matrix; Wright's Vocab. i. 45, col. I.+Goth. kwithus, the womb. All from a Teutonic base KWETHU (Fick, iii. of the conversion of Coth 54), allied to Teutonic KWETHRA, the belly, occurring in Goth. lauskwithrs, having an empty [lit. loose] stomach. The latter is further allied to the Aryan base GATARA, the belly, womb, whence Skt. jathara, the belly, womb, Gk. γαστήρ, Lat. uenter (for guenter). See Gastric, Ventral.

2. M. E. nere is also Scand. — Icel. See Gastrio, Ventral. 2. M. E. nere is also Scand.—icei. nýra, a kidney, pl. nýru; Dan. nyre, pl. nyrer; Swed. njure. + Du. nier, kidney, loin. + G. niere, pl. nieren. All from a Teutonic base NEURAN (Fick, iii. 163), allied to Gk. respós, pl. respoi, Lat. nefrones, nebrundines (see White's Dict.); words which are probably to be referred to a NIW, to be fat; cf. Skt. nív, to be fat, become corpulent; with allusion to the fat in which the kidneys are enclosed in It may be further observed that the Icel. kviðr is freely used in composition; as in kvid-slit, rupture, kvid-verkr, colic, kvid-proti, a swelling of the stomach; &c. Der. kidney-bean. The phrase of his kidney means of his size or kind; see Merry Wives, iii. 5. 116.

KILDERKIN, a liquid measure of 18 gallons. (Du.) In Levins, ed. 1570; spelt kylderkin. Take a kilderkin. of 4 gallons of beer; Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 46. The size of the measure appears to have varied. A corruption (by change of the liquid n to i) of O. Du. kindeken. Kilian gives: 'Kindeken, kinneken, the eighth part of a vat, the same as kinneije.' In mod. Du., kinnetje means 'a firkin,' which in English measure is only half a kilderkin. β. The name was obviously given because it is only a small measure as compared with barrels, vats, or tuns. The lit. sense is 'little child.' 'Kindeken, a little child;' Sewel. Formed, with dimin. suffix -ken (= E. -kin = G. -chen), from Du. kind, a child, cognate with E. child; see Child. So also kinnetje = kind-etje, with the with E. cnia; see Child. So also kinnerje=kina-etje, with the common Du. double dimin. suffix-tje.

KILL, to slay, deaden. (Scand.) M. E. killen, more commonly cullen; a weak verb. Spelt cullen, P. Plowman, A. i. 64; kullen (various reading, killen), id. B. i. 66. The old sense appears to be simply 'to hit' or 'strike.' 'We kylle of thin heued' = we strike off thy head; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 876. 'Fauh a word culle be ful herde up o bine herte' = though a word strike thee full hard upon the heart; Ancren Riwle, p. 126, l. 13; with which compare: cul of per eax' = the stroke of the axe; id. p. 128, l. 1. - Icel. kolla, to hit in the head, to harm; from kollr, top, summit, head, crown, shaven crown, pate. + Norweg. kylla, to poll, to cut the shoots off trees; from Norweg. koll, the top, head, crown; Aasen. Hence also Norweg. kolla, a beast without horns; id. Cf. also Swed. kulle, crown, top, hillock; kullig, without horns, cropped, polled; kullfälla, to fell, cut down. Also Dan. kuldet, having no horns. + Du. kollen, to knock down: Also Dan. kullet, naving no norms. + Dil. kollet, to knock down; kol, a knock on the head; whence kolbijl, a butcher's axe, lit. 'kill-bill.'

B. The verb is clearly a derivative from the sb., viz. Icel. kollr, Norweg. koll, Swed. kulle. Very likely this sb. is of Celtic origin; cf. W. col, a peak, summit, beard of corn, Irish coll, a head, perhaps Lat. collis, a hill; the root being perhaps & KAR, to project, be prominent.

This etymology was suggested by to project, be prominent. ¶ This etymology was suggested by Dr. Morris. It is usual to regard kill as a mere variant of quell, which, after all, is not impossible; but the history of the word is against this derivation. See Quell. Der. kill-er.

KILIN, a large oven for drying corn, bricks, &c.; bricks piled for burning. (L.) 'Kylne, Kyll, for malt dryynge, Ustrina;' Prompt. Parv., p. 274; and Reliquiæ Antiquæ, ii, 31.—A. S. cyln, a drying-house; 'Siccatorium, cyln, vel ast;' Wright's Vocab. i. 58 (where nouse; Siccatorium, cyth, ver ast; wrights volube. Also spelt cylene, according to Lye, who explains it by culina, fornam, ustrina. β. Merely borrowed from Lat. culina, a kitchen; whence the sense was easily transferred to that of 'drying-house.' The Icel. kylna, Swed. kölna, a kiln, are from the same source; and probably also W.

modern conoquial English. See Child, Kin. Der. kid, verb; kid-ling, with double suffix -l-ing; kid-fox, a young fox, Much Ado, ii. 3, 44; also kid-nap, q. v.

KIDNAP, to steal children. (Scand.) 'These people lie in wait for our children, and may be considered as a kind of kidnappers within the law;' Spectator (Richardson, without a reference). Compounded of kid, a child, in thieves' slang; and nap, more commonly sab, to steal. Kid is of Scand. origin; see Kid. Nap is also of North-Country Words.—Dan. kille, to truss, tuck up. † Swed. dial.

E. Child, q. v. ¶ Thus the orig. sense of kill as a sb. is 'a lap,' hence 'tucked up clothes.'

KIMBO; see this discussed under Akimbo.

KIN, relationship, affinity, genus, race. (E.) M. E. kun, kyn, kin. 'I haue no kun pere' = I have no kindred there; P. Plowman, A. vi. 118, where some MSS. have kyn; spelt kynne, id. B. v. 639. = A. S. 116, where some MSS. have kyn; spelt kynne, id. B. v. 639.—A. S. cynn; Grein, i. 177. + O. Sax. kunni. + Icel. kyn, kin, kindred, tribe; whence kynni, acquaintance. + Du. kunne, sex. + Goth. kuni, kin, race, tribe.

β. All from a Teut. base KONYA, a tribe, from the Teut. root KAN, equivalent to Aryan GAN, to generate; whence Lat. genus. See Genus, Generate.

Der. from the same source are kind, q. v., kindred, q. v., king, q. v.

Also kins-man = kin's man = man of the same kin or tribe, Much Ado, v. 4. 112; kins-woman, id. iv. I. 102: kins-fold. Luke ii.

iv. I. 103; kins-folk, Luke, ii. 44.

KIND (1), adj., natural, loving. (E.) M. E. kunde, kinde; Chaucer, C. T. 8478. 'For pe kunde folk of pe lond' = for the native people of the land; Rob. of Glouc. p. 40, l. 11. A common meaning is 'natural' or 'native.' = A.S. cynde, natural, native, in-born; more usually gecynds, where the common prefix ge- does not alter the sense; Grein, i. 178, 388. The orig. sense is 'born;' as in Goth. kwina-kunds, born as a woman, female, Gal. iii. 28. The Teut. base is KONDA (Fick, iii. 39), a past participial form from KAN = Aryan GAN, to generate. See Kin. Der. kind (2), q.v.; kind-ness, M. E. kindenesse (four syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 5533; kind-ly, adv.;

kind-hearted, Shak. Sonnet 10.

KIND (2), sb., nature, sort, character. (E.) M. E. kund, kunde, kind, kinde; Chaucer, C. T. 2453; spelt kunde, Ancren Riwle, p. 14, l. 10.—A. S. cynd, generally gecynd, Grein, i. 387, 388; the prefix gemaking no difference to the meaning; the most usual sense is 'nature.' From the adj. above. Der. kind-ly, adj, M. E. kyndeli = natural, Wyclif, Wisdom, xii. 10, and so used in the Litany in the phr. 'kindly fruits;' whence also kindli-ness.

KINDLE (1), to set fire to, inflame. (Scand., -E., -L.) M. E. kindlen; Chaucer, C.T. 12415; Havelok, 915; Ormulum, 13442. Formed from Icel. kyndill, a candle, torch. [The Icel. verb kynda, to light a fire, kindle, may be nothing else than a verb formed from the same sb., and not an original verb. According to Ihre, the Old Swed. has only the sb., occurring in the comp. kyndelmessa, Candle-B. The Icel. has also kyndill-messa, Candlemas; shewing, indubitably, that the word was borrowed from the A.S. candel, a candle (whence candel-mæsse, Candlemas), at the time of the introduction of Christianity into Iceland.

y. Again, the A.S. candel duction of Christianity into Iceland.

7. Again, the A. S. candel is merely borrowed from Lat. candela; thus explaining the close resemblance of the Icel. to the Lat. word. ¶ An original Icel. word semblance of the feet, to the Lat. Word.

corresponding to Latin words beginning with e would, by Grimm's law, begin with s. See Candle. Der. kindler.

KINDLE (2), to bring forth young. (E.) 'The cony that you

KINDLE (2), to bring forth young. (E.) 'The cony that you see dwell where she is kindled;' As You Like It, iii. 2. 358. M.E. kindlen, kundlen. 'Thet is the uttre uondunge that kundled wredde' =it is the outward temptation that produces wrath, Ancren Riwle, p. 194, l. 20: where we also find, immediately below, the sentence: thus beoff the inre uondunges the seouen heaued-sunnen and hore rule kundles' = thus the inward temptations are the seven chief sins and their foul progeny. Cf. also: 'Kyndlyn, or brynge forthe yonge kyndelyngis, Feto, effeto;' Prompt. Parv. p. 275. And in Wyclif, Luke, iii. 7, we find 'kyndlis of edderis' in the earlier, and 'kyndlis of edderis' in the earlier, and 'kyndlis of edderis' in the earlier. lyngis of eddris' in the later version, where the A.V. has 'generation of vipers.' β . The verb kindlen, to produce, and the sb. kindel, a generation, are of course due to the sb. kind; see Kind (1). We may probably regard the sb. kindel as a dimin. of kind, and the verb as formed from it. Both words refer, in general, to a numerous progeny, a litter, esp. with regard to rabbits, &c.

KINDRED, relatives, relationship. (E.) The former d is ex-crescent, the true form being kinred, which occurs occasionally in old edd. of Shakespeare. 'All the kinred of Marius;' Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 47, l. 27. M. E. kinrede, Chaucer, C. T. 2792; spelt eunreden, St. Juliana, ed. Cockayne, p. 60, l. 13. Composed of A. S. cyn, kin (see Kin), and the suffix -reden, signifying 'condition,' or more literally 'law.' The A. S. cynreden does not appear, but we find the parallel word hiwreden, a household, Matt. x. 6; and the same suffix is preserved in E. hat-red. Réden is connected with the verb Read, q. v. Der. hindred, adj., K. John, iii. 4. 14.

KINE, cows. (E.) Not merely the plural, but the double plural form; it is impossible to regard it as a contraction of cowen, as some have abaurely supposed.

a. The A. S. cú, a cow, made the pl. cú.

kills, to swathe or swaddle a child (Rictz). Cf. Icel. killing, a mice). Hence the M.E. ky (=cows), Barbour, Bruce, vl. 405, and skirt. B. The verb is derived from a sh., signifying 'lap;' occurring in Swed, dial. killa, the lap; cf. Icel. kjalla, the lap, kjöllu-barn loan;' Burns, The Twa Dogs, l. 5 from end. B. By the addition of -en, a weakened form of the A.S. plural-ending -an, was formed sh. occurs in Mosso-Goth. killhei, the womb. From the same root as E. Child, q.v. Thus the orig. sense of kill as a sh. is 'a lap,' hence 'tucked up clothes.'

Plowman, B. vi. 142, where other MSS. have hyene, hyne, hijn, hen. Hence kine in Gen. xxxii. 15; &c. See Cow. ¶ Cf. ey-ne for ey-en (A. S. edg-on), old pl. of eye (A. S. edg-o).

KING, a chief ruler, monarch. (E.) M. E. king, a contraction of an older form hining or kyning. Spelt king, Ancren Riwle, p. 138, last line; kining, Mark, xv. 2 (Hatton MS.) = A. S. cyning, also cyning, cynyng, Mark, xv. 2; Grein, i. 179. = A. S. cyn, a tribe, race, kin; with suffix -ing. The suffix -ing means 'belonging to,' and is frequently used with the sense 'son of,' as in 'Ælfred Æþel-wulfing' = Ælfred son of Æthelwulf; A. S. Chronicle, an. 871. wulfing' = Ælfred son of Æthelwulf; A. S. Chronicle, an. 871. Thus cyn-ing = son of the tribe, i. e. elected by the tribe, and hence 'chief.' +O. Sax. huning, a king; from kuni. hunni. a tribe. +O. Friesic kining, kening; from ken, a tribe. + Icel. konungr, a king; with which of. O. Icel. konr, a kind, Icel. kyn, a kind, kin, tribe. + Swed. konung. + Dan. konge. + Du. koning. + G. könig, M. H. G. künic, O. H. G. chunin, a kuninc; from M. H. G. künne, O. H. G. chunni, a race, kind. See Kin. ¶ The Skt. janaka, a father, is from the same root, but expresses a somewhat different idea. Cf. Lat. genitor. Der. king-crab, king-craft, king-cup, Spenser, Shepherd's Kalendar, April, 1. 141; king-fisher (so called from the splendour of its plumage), Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 10; king-less, Rob. of Glouc. p. 105; king-les, a double diminutive, with suffixes -l- and -et; king-like, king-ly, M. E. king-ly, Lidgate's Minor Poems, 20; king-li-ness. Also king's bench, so called because the king used to sit in court; king's wil, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xiii. c. 4, so called because it was supposed that a king's touch could cure it. And see kingdom.

KINGDOM, the realm of a king. (E.) M. E. kingdom, kyngdom; P. Plowman, B. vii. 155. Evidently regarded as a compound of king with suffix -dom. But, as a fact, it took the place of an older form kinedom; 'bene kinedom of heouene' = the kingdom of heaven, Ancren Riwle, p. 148, l. 3.—A.S. cynedóm, a kingdom; Grein, i. 179. B. Really formed (with suffix -dóm) from the adj. cyne, royal, very common in composition, but hardly used otherwise. This adj. answers nearly to Icel. kon, a man of royal or noble birth; and is related to Kin and King. Thus the alteration from kine- to king- makes little practical difference.

¶ So also, for king-iy, there

KINK, a twist in a rope; 'Brockett, Gloss. of North Country Words, ed. 1846. – Du. kink, Swed. kink, a twist in a rope.

β. From a Low G. base KIK, to bend; appearing in Icel. kikna, to sink at the knees through a heavy burden, keikr, bent backwards, keikja, to bend backwards; whence also Icel. kengr, a crook of metal, a bend, a bight, answering to Swed. kink. The base is well preserved in Norweg. kika, to writhe, keika, to bend back or aside, kinka, to writhe, twist, kink, a twist (Aasen).

There is possibly an ultimate relation to Chinoough, q.v.

KIPPER, to cure or preserve salmon. (Du.) This meaning is quite an accidental one, arising from a practice of curing kipperquite an accidental one, arising from a practice of curing nippersalmon, i. e. salmon during the spawning season. Such fish, being inferior in kind, were cured instead of being eaten fresh. 'The salmon, after spawning, become very poor and thin, and are called kipper;' Pennant, Zoology, iii. 242 (Todd). 'Kipper-time, a space of time between May 3 and Twelfth-day, during which salmon-fishing in the river Thames was forbidden;' Kersey, ed. 1715. The lit. sense of kipper is 'spawn-er.' — Du. kippen, to hatch; also to catch, seize — Norweg kipper to spatch & c. Assen — Swed dial kipper.

KIRK, a church. (Scand.,—E.,—Gk.) The North. E. form; see Burns, The Twa Dogs, l. 19. M. E. kirke, P. Plowman, B. v. 1; Ormulum, 3531.—Icel. kirkja; Dan. kirke; Swed. kyrka. Borrowed from A. S. cirice, circe, a church. Of Gk. origin. See Church.

KIRT. E. Sort of government settings: (F. or Scand.) Used.

KIRTLE, a sort of gown or petticoat. (E. or Scand.) Used rather vaguely. M. E. kirtel, Chaucer, C. T. 3321; kurtel, Ancren Riwle, p. 10.—A. S. cyrtel, to translate Lat. palla; Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab., i. 16, col. 2. Also O. Northumbrian cyrtel, to ranslate Lat. tunica; Matt. v. 40 (Lindisfarne M.S.) + Icel. kyrtill, a kirtle, tunic, gown. + Dan. kiortel, a tunic. + Swed. kjortel, a petticoat.

B. Evidently a diminutive, with suffixed -l. I have to suggest that it is probably a dimin. of Skirt, q. v. Thus the Icel. kyrtill may well be a dimin. of Icel. skyrta, a shirt, a kind of kirtle; the Dan. kiortel, of Dan. skiorte, a shirt; and the Swed. kjortel, of Swed. skjorta, a shirt. Shirt and skirt are doublets, so that these words answer to skirt also. Perhaps the A. S. cyrtel was merely have absurdly supposed.

a. The A. S. cú, a cow, made the pl. cj., borrowed from the Scandinavian.

y. The loss of s before k, comby the usual yowel change of ú to j; cf. mús (E. mouse), pl. mýs (E. mon in Latin and Greek, is unusual in Teutonic; still it actually short. The Lat. curtus, short, is from the same root, and its influence may have contributed to this loss of s. See Shirt, Short, Curt.

KISS, a salute with the lips, osculation. (E.) M. E. cos, kos, cus, kus; later kisss, biss. The vowel i is really proper only to the werb, which is formed from the sb. by vowel-change. 'And he came the contribution of the ships and the contribution of the ships and the contribution of the ships and the ships and the ships and the ships and the ships and the ships are ships and the ships are ships as the ships and the ships are ships and the ships are ships as the ships are ships and the ships are ships as the ships are ships and the ships are ships as the ships are ships and the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships are ships and ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships are ships as the ships ar to Jhesu, to hisse him; And Jhesus seide to him, Judas, with a coss thou bytrayest mannys sone; Wyclif, Luke, xxii. 47, 48. The form husse is as late as Skelton, Phylyp Sparowe, 361. KUSSA, a kiss; which is connected with Icel. kostr, choice, Goth. kustus, a proof, test, Lat. gustus, a taste. The connection is shown by Lat. gustusus, a small dish of food, a smack, relish, also a kiss; dimin. of Lat. gustus, a taste, whet, relish.

Y. The Goth. kustus is from the verb kiusan, to choose, cognate with E. choose. Hence the hissis, practically, a doublet of choice: and the sense is someab. kiss is, practically, a doublet of choice; and the sense is 'something choice' or 'a taste.' See Choice, Choose, Gust. Der.

KIT (1), a vessel of various kinds, a milk-pail, tub; hence, an outfit. (O. Low G.) 'A kit, a little vessel, Cantharus;' Levins. 'Hoc mul[c]trum, a kytt;' Wright's Vocab. i. 217, col. 2. In Barbour's Bruce, b. xviii. 1. 168, we are told that Gib Harper's head was cut off, salted, put into 'a kyt,' and sent to London. — O. Du. kitte, a tub (Kilian); Du. kit. 'a wooden can; 'Sewel. Cf. Norweg. kitte, a represe in a room shut off by a partition, a large corn-bin of the same contraction. kitte, a space in a room shut off by a partition, a large corn-bin in the wall of a house (Aasen); Swed, dial. kätte, a little space shut off by a partition (Rietz).

B. We find also A. S. cyte, a cell, which may be related; 'Cella, cyte;' Wright's Vocab. i. 85, col. 2. If so, may be related; 'Cenia, eye; wright's vocab. 1. 55, col. 2. It'so, kit may be related to Cot; see Grein, i. 181.

KIT (2), a small violin. (L., -Gk.) 'I'll have his little gut to string a kit with;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Philaster, Act v. sc. 4 (4th Citizen). Abbreviated from A.S. cytere, a cittern, or cithern; which is borrowed from Lat. cithara. See Cithern, Gittern.

KIT (3), a brood, family, quantity. (E.) See Halliwell; a variant of Kith, q.v.

KIT-CAT, KIT-KAT, the name given to portraits of a particular kind. (Personal name.) a. A portrait of about 28 by 36 in. in size is thus called, because it was the size adopted by Sir Godfrey Kneller (died 1723) for painting portraits of the members of the Kit-kat club. β. This club, founded in 1703, was so named because the members used to dine at the house of Christopher Kat, a pastry-cook in King's Street, Westminster; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Y. Kit is a familiar abbreviation of Christopher, a name of Gk. origin, from Gk. Χριστο-φόροι, lit. 'Christ-bearing.

KITCHEN, a room where food is cooked. (L.) The t is inserted. M.E. kichene, kychene, kechene, Will. of Palerne, 1681, 1707, 2171; kychyne, P. Plowman, B. v. 261. Spelt kuchene, Ancren Riwle, p. 214.—A.S. cicen (put for cycen); we find 'Coquina, vel culina, cicen;' Supp. to Ælfric's Gloss; in Wright's Vocab. i. 57, col. 2.—Lat. coquina, a kitchen.—I.at. coquere, to cook; see Cook. Der.

KITE, a voracious bird; a toy for flying in the air. (E.) M. E. kitë, kytë (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1181.—A. S. cýta; we find the entry 'Butio (sic), cyta' in Ælfric's Gloss. (Nomina Auium). The Lat. butio is properly a bittern; but doubtless buteo is meant, signitying a kind of falcon or hawk. The y must be long, as shewn by the modern sound; cf. E. mice with A. S. mys.

B. The W. name is barcuda, barcudan, a buzzard, kite; we find also cudyll, a sparrowhawk. If the A. S. cyta and W. cud are related, this points to loss hawk. If the A.S. eyia and W. cua are related, this points to loss of initial s, and the most likely root is the Teutonic SKUT, to shoot, go swiftly; cf. W. cua, celerity, flight. In this view, cyta stands for scyta, 'the shooter;' the suffix a being the mark of the agent, as in A.S. kunt-a, a hunter. See Shoot.

KITH, kindred, acquaintance, sort. (E.) Usual in the phrase kith and kin.' M. E. cubbe, kith; see Gower, C. A. ii. 26%.

KITTEN, a young cat. (E.; with F. suffix.) M. E. kyton, P. Plowman, C. i. 204, 207; kitoun, id., B. prol. 190, 202. A dimin. of cat, with vowel-change and a suffix which appears to be rather the F. on than the E. en. This suffix would be readily suggested by the new of it in the E. chatton. Chatton. a kitling or young cat.

occurs in words related to shirt, viz. in Du. kort = E. s. korf = A. S. in the old verb to kittle, to produce young as a cat does. Cf. Norsecort (with which cf. Du. schort, an apron, skirt); and in G. kurz. weg. kittling, a kitling or kitten, kitle, to kittle or kitten; Aasen. 'To kittle as a catte dothe, chatonner. Gossyppe, whan your catte kytelleth, I praye you let me haue a kytlynge (chatton);' Palsgrave, cited in Way's note in Prompt. Parv. p. 277. The Lat. catulus, though meaning a whelp, is a dimin. from catus, a cat.

KNACK, a snap, quick motion, dexterity, trick. (C.) 'The more queinte knakkes that they make '= the more clever tricks they practise; Chaucer, C. T. 4049. On which Tyrwhitt remarks: 'The word seems to have been formed from the knacking or snapping of the fingers made by jugglers.' This explanation, certainly a correct to be the instifles by references to Certain Meaning description. one, he justifies by references to Cotgrave. 'Matassiner des mains, to move, knack, or waggle the fingers, like a jugler, plaier, jeaster, &c.; Cot. 'Niquet, a knick, tlick, snap with the teeth or fingers, a trifle, nifle, bable [bauble], matter of small value; 'id. Faire la nique, to threaten or defie, by putting the thumbe naile into the mouth, and with a jerke (from the upper teeth) make it to knack; id. The word is clearly (like crack, click) of imitative origin; the form being Celtic. — Gael. cnac, a crack, crash, cnac, to crack, crash, split; Irish cnag, a crack, noise, enagaim, I knock, strike; W. cnec, a crash, snap, enecian, to crash, jar. The senses are (1) a snap, crack, (2) a snap with the finger or nail, (3) a jester's trick, piece of dexterity, (4) a joke, trifle, toy. See Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 34; Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 67; Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 360, 439. B. From the same Celtic source are Du. knak, a crack; knakken, to crack; knak, interj. crack! Dan. knage, to creak, crack, crackle; Swed. knaka, to crack. The English form is Crack, q.v. A similar succession of ideas is seen in Du. knap, a crack; knappen, to crack, snap; knap, clever, nimble; knaphandig, nimble-handed, dexterous. See Knap. Der. knick-knack, q.v., knag, q.v. The F. nique (above) is Der. knick-knack, q. v., knag, q. v. Gr The F. nique (above) is from Du. knikken, to crack slightly, an attenuated form of knakken.

Knack is merely another form of Knock, q.v.

KNACKER, a dealer in old horses. (Scand.) Now applied to a dealer in old horses and dogs' meat. But it formerly meant a saddler and harness-maker. 'Knacker, one that makes collars and other furniture for cart-horses; Ray, South and East Country Words, 1691 (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 16). — Icel. hnakkr, a man's saddle;

Words, 1091 (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 16). — Icel. knakkr, a man's saddle; cf. hnakkmarr, a saddle-horse.

KNAG, a knot in wood, a peg, branch of a deer's horn. (C.)

'I schall hyt hange on a knagg' = I shall hang it on a peg; Le Bone Florence, l. 1795; in Ritson, Metrical Romances, v. iii. 'A knagge in wood, Bosse;' Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave. We read also of the 'sharp and branching knags' of a stag's horn; Holland, tr. of Plutershy account. Plutarch, p. 1039. Of Celtic origin. — Irish enag, a knob, peg, enaig, a knot in wood; Gael. enag, a pin, peg, knob; with which cf. W. enwe, a lump, bump, enyeio, to form into knobs. B. All these appear to be derived from the verb which appears as Irish enagaim, I strike, knock, Gael. enag, to crack, snap the fingers, knock, rap, W. enocio, to knock, beat. In the same way, the E. bump denotes not only to beat or thump, but also the excrescence produced by a blow; so that the orig. sense of knag is a bump. 7. From the same Celtic source we have also Dan. knag, a wooden peg, cog, handle of a scythe; Swed. knagg, a knag, knot in wood. 8. The handle of a scythe; Swed. knagg, a knag, knot in wood. 8. The word is closely related to Knack and Knock. Der. knagg.y;

'He hathe knapped the speare in sonder;' Ps. xlvi. 9, in the Bible of 1551; still preserved in the Prayer-book version. 'As lying a gossip as ever knapped ginger;' Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 10. Not found (I think) earlier than about 1.D. 1550, and probably borrowed from Dutch; but knap, to knock (K. Lear, ii. 4. 125) preserves the sense of Gael. cnap. - Du. knappen, to crack, snap, catch, crush, eat; whence knapper, (1) hard gingerbread, (2) a lie, untruth. [This brings out the force of Shakespeare's phrase.] + Dan. kneppe, to snap, crack with the fingers; knep, a snap, crack, fillip. Cf. Swed. knep, a trick, artifice; bruka knep, to play tricks; which illustrates the use of the parallel word knack, q. v. B. Of imitative origin; and parallel to Knack; the source is Celtic,

The older senses are 'boy' and 'servant.' M. E. haue (with u for v).

'A knaue child' = a male child, bey; Chaucer, C. T. 8320, 8323, 8488. 'The kokes knaue, thet wasshe'd the dishes; '= the cook's the use of it in the F. chatton, a killing or young cat; boy, that washes the dishes; a horen Riwle, p. 380, l. 8.—A.S. cmafa.

Cot. See Cat.

The same vowel-change appears and in Ps lxxxv. 15, ed. Spelman, where another reading (in the latter.

passage) is enafa. 4 Du. knaap, a lad, servant, fellow. 4 Icel. knapi, a servant-boy. + Swed. knäfvel, a rogue (a dimin, form). + G. knabe, a boy.

B. The origin of the word is perhaps Celtic. It appears to be preserved in Gael. enapach, 'a youngster, a stout smart middlesized boy; ' Macleod. This word may safely be connected with the adj. enapach, 'knobby, hilly, lumpy, bossy, stout;' which is from the adj. enapach, 'knobby, hilly, lumpy, bossy, stout;' which is from the sb. enap, a knob. Thus the sense is 'knobby,' hence, stout or well-grown, applied to a lad. Note also Gael. enaparra, stout, strong, sturdy. See Knob. Der. knav-ish, Chaucer, C. KNEAD, to work flour into dough, mould by pressure. (E.) M. E. kneden, Chaucer, C. T. 4092; Ormulum, 1486.—A. S. enedan, to kned year rare, in the Q. Nothumbica presions of Lube will to knead, very rare; in the O. Northumbrian versions of Luke, xiii. 21, the Lat. fermentaretur is glossed by sie gedærsted vel geenoeden in the Lindisfarne MS., and by sie gedærsted vel eneden in the Rushworth MS.; hence we infer the strong verb enedan, with pt. t. enæd, and pp. enoden. We also find the form geenedan, Gen. xviii. 6; where the prefix ge- does not affect the force of the verb. The verb has become a weak one, the pp. passing from knoden to kneded in the 15th century, as shewn by the entry: 'Knodon, knedid, Pistus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 280. + Du. kneden. + Icel. knoda. + Swed. kndda. + G. kneten, O. H. G. chnetan. + Russ. gnetate, gnesti, to press, squeeze. B. The Teut. base is KNAD, to press; Fick, iii. 48. Der. knead-ingtrough, M. E. kneding-trough, Chaucer, C. T. 3548.

KNEE, the joint of the lower leg with the thigh. (E.) M.E. kne, knee; pl. knees, Chaucer, C. T. 5573; also cneo, pl. cneon (= kneen), Ancren Riwle, p. 16, last line but one. — A. S. cneo, cneow, a knee; Grein, i. 164. + Du. knie. + Ioel. kné. + Dan. knæ. + Swed. knä. + G. knie, O. H. G. chniu. + Goth. kniu. + Lat. genu. + Gk. γύνυ. + Skt. jánu.

The loss of vowel between k and n is well illustrated by the Gk. γύν-πετος, fallen upon the knees, put for conjunctor. the knees, put for γονύπετος. Der. knee-d, knee-pan; also kneel, q. v.

KNEEL, to fall on the knees. (Scand.) M. E. knelen, Havelok, 1420; Ormulum, 6138. A Scand, form; as shewn by Dan. knale, to kneel. [The A.S. verb was cneowian (Bosworth).] Formed from knee by adding -l-, to denote the action.

KNELL, KNOLL, to sound as a bell, toll. (E.) 'Where bells have knolled to church;' As You Like It, ii. 7. 114. M. E. knillen; 'And lete also the belles knille;' Myrc's Instructions for Parish Priests, ed. Peacock, 1. 779. 'Knyllynge of a belle, Tintillacio;' Prompt. Parv., p. 279. 'I knolle a belle, Ie frappe du batant;' Palsman. The pair cases is to best so as to produce a sound - As grave. The orig. sense is to beat so as to produce a sound. - A. S. enyllan, to beat noisily; in the O. Northumb. version of Luke, xi. 9, we find: 'enylla's and ontyned bis iow'=knock and it shall be opened to you (Rushworth MS.) We find also A. S. enyl, a knell, the sound of a bell (Bosworth). + Du. knallen, to give a loud report; knal, a clap, a report. + Dan. knalde (= knalle), to explode, make a report; knalde med en tidsk, to crack a whip; knald(= knall), a report, explosion, crack. + Swed. knalla, to make a noise, to thunder; report, explosion, crack. + Swed. knalla, to make a noise, to tunder; knall, a report, loud noise. + G. knallen, to make a loud noise; knall, a report, explosion. + Icel. gnella, to scream. \(\beta\). All words of imitative origin, like knack, knap, knock. \(\Pi\) We find also W. cnill, a passing-bell, cnul, a knell; but the word does not appear to be of Celtic origin. \(\text{Der. knell.} \), sb., Temp. i. 2. 402. \(\text{KNICK-KNACK,} \) a trick, trifle, toy. (C.) A reduplication of track in the scarce of trick's a formerly week, or in the scarce of knack in the sense of 'trick,' as formerly used; or in the sense of 'toy,' as generally used now. 'But if ye use these knick-knacks,' i.e. these tricks; Beaum. and Fletcher, Loyal Subject, ii. I (Theo-The reduplication is effected in the usual manner, by the attenuation of the radical vowel a to i; cf. click-clack, ding-dong, pit-a-pat. Cf. Du. knikken, to crack, snap, weakened form of knakken, to crack; also W. enic, a slight rap, weakened form of enoc, a rap, knock. Ultimately of Celtic origin. See further under Knack.

ENIFE, an instrument for cutting. (E.) M. E. knif, enif; pl. kniues (with u=v), Chaucer, C. T. 233. The sing. knif is in the Ancren Riwle, p. 282, last line but one.—A. S. enif, a knife (Lye). Ancren Riwie, p. 252, last line but one.—A. S. eng, a kniie (Lye).

+ Du. kniif. + Icel. knifr. knifr. + Dan. kniv. + Swed. knif. + G.

(provincial) kneif, a hedging-bill, clasp-knife (Flügel).

5. The sense is 'an instrument for nipping' or cutting off. The sb. is derived from the verb which appears in Du. knijpen, to pinch, nip;

G. kneipen, to pinch, kneifen, to nip, squeeze; from the Teutonic base KNIB (or KNIP), to nip, pinch; Fick, iii. 48. See Nip.

KNIGHT a vouth servent men at arms. (E.) M. E. knight:

KNIGHT, a youth, servant, man at arms. (E.) M. E. knight; see Chaucer's Knightes Tale. - A.S. cniht, a boy, servant; Grein, i. 165. + Du. knecht, a servant, waiter. + Dan. knegt, a man-servant,

-iht is adjectival, as in stan-iht = stony. Probably en-iht = cyn-iht, belonging to the 'kin' or tribe; it would thus signify one of age to be admitted among the tribe. A similar loss of vowel occurs in Gk. 71-1010s, legitimate, from yév-os = kin. Der. knight, verb, knight-ly, Wyclif, 2 Macc. viii, 9, with which cf. A. S. enihilic, boyish (Bosworth); knight-hood, M. KNIT, to form into a knot. (E.) M. E. knitten, Chaucer, C. T. 1130; P. Plowman, B. prol. 169.—A. S. enyttan, enittan; the comp. be-enittan is used in Ælfric's Homilies, i. 476, l. 5. Formed by vowel-change from A. S. enotta, a knot. + Icel. kny.a, kny.ja, to knit; from knutr, a knot. + Dan. knytte, to tie in a knot, knit; from knude. + Swed.

knyte, to knit, tie; from knut. See Knot. Der. knitt-ar, knitt-ing. KNOB, a later form of Knop, q. v. (C.) In Levins; and Chaucer, C. T. 635. Der. knobb-ed, knubb-y, knobb-i-ness.

KNOCK, to strike, rap, thump. (C.) M. E. knocken; Chaucer, C. T. 3432.—A. S. cnucian, later cnokien, Matt. vii. 7; Luke, xi. 10. Borrowed from Celtic.—Gael. cnac, to crack, crash, break, cnag, to crack span the finners brook ray. Irish cases a carely to crack, snap the fingers, knock, rap; Irish cnag, a crack, noise, cnagaim, I knock, strike; Corn. cnoucye, to knock, beat, strike. Thus knock is the same with knack, both being imitative words corresponding to E. crack; from the noise of breaking. See Knack, Der. knock, sb., knock-kneed, knock-er.

KNOLL (1), the top of a hill, a hillock, mound. (E.; perhaps C.) M. E. knol, a hill, mount; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 4129.

- A. S. cnol; 'pera munta cnollas' - the tops of the hills; Gen. viii, -A.S. cnoi; 'para munta cnotins' = the tops of the fills', Gen. vist, 5.+ Du. knol, a turnip; from its roundness. + Dan. knold, a knoll. + Swed. knöl, a bump, knob, bunch, knot. + G. knollen, a knoll. clod, lump, knot, knob, bulb (provincially, a potatoe). β. Knoll is probably a contracted word, and a guttural has been lost. It may stand for knok-el, a dimin. of a Celtic knok; the word being ultimately of Celtic origin. We find W. cnol, a knoll, hillock amineroes. Like orig. word is seen in Gael. enoc, a hill, knoll, hillock, eminence; Irish orig. word is seen in Gaet. ende, a min, annot, minota, chimiche, arisin ende, a hill, navew, nape, Brassica napus' (O'Reilly), explaining the Du. sense of 'tumip.' The parallel form Gael. enag, a peg, knob, explains the Swed. knöl.

y. I thus regard knoll, a hillock, as a dimin. of Gael. enag, a hill, and G. knollen, a knob, as a dimin. of Gael. enag. 8. Also, it is a doublet of Knuckle, q. v.

a knob. See Knag. 8. Also, it is a doublet of Knuckle, q. v. KNOLL (2), the same as Knell, q. v. (E.)
KNOP, KNOB, a protuberance, bump, round projection. (C.) Knob is a later spelling, yet occurs as early as in Chaucer, C. T. 635, where we find the pl. knobbss, from a singular knobbs (dissyllabic); Knop is in Exod. xxv. 31, 33, 36 (A. V.) The pl. knoppis is in Wyclif, Exod. xxvi. 11; spelt knoppes, Rom. of the Rose, 1083, 1685, where it means 'rose-buds.' A third form is knap, in the sense of where it lineals rose-buds. A third to his knop, in the sense of 'hill-top;' as in: 'some high knop or tuft of a mountaine;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xi. c. 10.—A. S. cnap, the top of a hill; Luke, iv. 29; Numb. xiv. 44. + Du. knop, a knob, pummel, button, bud; knoop, a knob, button, knot, tie. + Icel. knoppr, a knot, stud, button. + Dan. knop, a knob, button; knop, a knob, button. + Dan. knop, a knob, button; knop, a knob, button. + Dan. knop, a knob, button. knop, a knot. + G. knopf, a knob, button, pummel, bud. all these appear to be of Celtic origin. - Gael. cnap, a slight blow, a knob, button, lump, boss, stud, little hill; from the verb cnap, to thump, strike, beat. So also W. cnap, a knob, button; Irish cnap, a button, knob, bunch, hillock, from enapaim, I strike. Here, as in the case of bump, the original sense is to strike; whence the sb. signifying (1) a slight blow, (2) the effect of a blow, a contusion, or anything in the shape of a contusion. y. The verb cnap, to knap, strike, is of imitative origin, from the sound of a blow; cf. Gael, cnapadh, thumping, falling with a great noise; see Knap. It is a parallel form to Knock, q.v.

¶ A Celtic c answers to Teut. h; and we find a cognate, not a borrowed form, appearing in Goth. dishniupan, to tear asunder; whence dis-hnupnan, to be torn asunder. Knap, in the sense of 'to beat,' occurs in King Lear, ii. 4. 125.

Knap, in the sense of 'to beat,' occurs in King Lear, ii. 4. 125. Der. knop-weed or knap-weed.

KNOT, a tight Pastening, bond, cluster. (E.) M. E. knottë (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 10715.—A. S. enotta, a knot; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 386, l. 22. + Du. knot. + Icel. knûtr. + Dan. knude. + Swed. knut. + G. knoten. + Lat. nodus (for gnodus). Root uncertain; see Fick, iii. 49. Der. knot, verb; knit, q. v.; knott-y, knot-less, knot-grass.

KNOUT, a whip used as an instrument of punishment in Russia. (Russian.) Not in Todd's Johnson.—Russ. knute, a whip, scourge.

Der. knout, verb.

KNOW, to be assured of, recognise. (E.) M.E. knowen; pt. t. knew, Chaucer, C.T. 5474; pp. knowen, id. 5310.—A.S. cndwan, pt. t. cneow, pp. endwen; gen. used with prefix ge., which does not affect the sense; Grein, i. 386. + Icel. kna, to know how to, be able; knave (at cards). + Swed. knekt, a soldier, knave (at cards). + G. a defective verb. + O. Sax. knegan; only in the comp. bi-knegan, to hascht, a man-servant. Cf. Irish enlocht, a soldier, knight; perhaps obtain, know how to get. + O. H. G. chndan; only in the complorrowed from English.

3. Origin unknown; the A. S. suffix pounds bi-chndan, iri-chndan, iri-chndan; cited by Fick, ill. 3. 4.

JGAN, to know; whence Can (1), Ken, Keen, Noble, &c. Der know-ing, know-ing-ly; also know-ledge, q.v.

KNOWLEDGE, assured belief, information, skill. (E.; with Scand. sv.fiss.) M. E. knowlege, Chaucer, C. T. 1260; spelt know-like knowledge. liche, knowleche in Six-text ed., B. 1220. In the Cursor Mundi, 12162, the spellings are knaulage, knaulage, knaulecke, knowlecke. The d is a late insertion; and -lege is for older -lecks. For know-, see above. As to the suffix, it is a Scand., not an A. S. form; the ch is a weakened form of k as usual; and -lecke stands for -leke, borrowed from Icel. -leihr or -leihi (= Swed. -leh), occurring in words such as kar-leihr, love (= Swed. kärleh), sannleihr, truth, heilagleihi, holiness. β. This suffix is used for forming abstract nouns, much as -ness is used in English; etymologically, it is the same word with Icel. leikr (Swed. lek), a game, play, sport, hence occupation, from the verb leika, to play, cognate with A.S. lúcan, Goth. laikan, to play, and still preserved in prov. E. laik, to play, Southern E. lark, a piece of fun, where the r is inserted to preserve the length of the vowel. The A. S. sb. ldc is cognate with Icel. leikr, and is also used as a suffix, appearing in wed-ldc = mod. E. wedlock.

Y. It will now be seen that the -ledge in knowledge and the -lock in wedlock are the same suffix, the former being Northern or Scandinavian, and the latter Southern or Wessex (Anglo-Saxon). See further under Lark (2), Wedlock.

8. It may be added that the compound knáleiki actually occurs in Icelandic, but it is used in the sense of 'prowess;' we find, however, a similar compound in Icel. kunnleikr, knowledge. Der. acknowledge, a bad spelling of a-knowledge; see Acknowledge.

KNUCKLE, the projecting joint of the fingers. (C.) M. E. knokil. 'Knokyl of an honde, knokil-bone, Condilus;' Prompt. Parv. 'Knokyll-bone of a legge, Coxa;' id. Not found in A.S.; the alleged form enucl, due to Somner, appears to be a fiction. Yet some such form probably existed, though not recorded; it occurs in O. Friesic as knokele, knokle. + Du. knokkel, a knuckle (Sewel); dimin. of knoke, knake, a bone, or a knuckle (Hexham). + Dan. knokkel. + Swed. knoge, a knuckle (in which the dimin. suffix is not added). + G. knöchel, a knuckle, joint; connected with knochen, a bone. formed, with dimin. suffix -el or -il, from a primitive knok or knak, a bump, knob, projection, still preserved in the form knag, which is of Celtic origin. See Knag. ¶ Knoll(1) is probably a doublet. KNURE, KNUR, a knot in wood, wooden ball. (O. Low G.) *A knurre, bruscum, gibbus; 'Levins, 190. 16. 'Bosse, a knob, knot, or knur in a tree; Cot. M. E. knor. 'Without knot or knor, or eny signe of goute;' Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, l. 2514. Not found in A. S., but of O. Low G. origin. - O. Du. knorre, a hard swelling, knot in wood; Kilian, Oudemans. + Dan. knort, a knot, gnarl, knag. +G. knorren, a hunch, lump, protuberance, knot in reed or straw; prov. G. knorz, a knob, knot (Flügel).

β. It seems to belong to the same class of words as knob, knop, knag; cf. also Du. knorf, a knot; G. knospe, a bud, knot, button. And see Gnarled. KORAN, the sacred book of the Mohammedans. (Arab.) Also

M. E. hythen, hithen; Chaucer, C. T. 5056.—A.S. cyδan, to make known; formed by regular vowel change from εάδ, known, pp. of enaman, to know. See Uncouth, Can.

LABEL, a small slip of paper, &c. (F., - Teut.) Variously used. In heraldry, it denotes a horizontal strip with three pendants or tassels. It is also used for a strip or slip of silk, parchment, or paper. M. E. label, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 22; where it denotes a moveable slip or rule of metal, used with an astrolabe as a sort of pointer, and revolving on the front of it. [Not fitted with sights,' as said in Webster.] - O. F. label, a label in the heraldic sense, later F. lambel; see quotations in Littré. Cotgrave has: Lambel, a labell of three points. The doublet of lambel is lambeau; *Lambet, a racen or three points. The doublet of lambet is tambets; the Cotgrave has: 'Lambets, a shread, rag, or small piece of stuffe, or of a garment ready to fall from, or holding but little to the whole; and with E. tear. See Tear, sb. Der. from the same Lat. lacrima and with E. tear. See Tear, sb. Der. from the same Lat. lacrima are lackrymoss, lackrymator-y.

E. laborere, Chaucer, C. T. 1411; and see labor-i-ous, labor-at-or-y. The spelling with final -our, answering to O. F. -our, shews that the derivation is not from Lat. nom. labor, but from the acc. laborem.

LABURNUM, the name of a tree. (L.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xvi. c. 18. - Lat. laburnum; Pliny, xvi. 18. 31. Root unknown. LABYRINTH, a place full of winding passages, a maze. (F., -L.,-Gk.) In Shak. Troil. ii. 3. 2. - F. labyrinthe; Cot. - Lat. labyrinthus. - Gk. λαβύρινθος, a maze, place full of lanes or alleys. β. Put for λαΓύρινθος; from λαΓρα, usually λαύρα, a lane, alley, Homer, Od. xxii. 128.
 ¶ Cotgrave spells the E. word 'labor-Homer, Od. xxii. 128. inth; so also Low Lat. laborintus, Trevisa, i. 9; by confusion with Lat. labor. Der. labyrinth-ine, labyrinth-i-an.

LAC (1), a resinous substance. (Pers., -Skt.) A resinous substance produced mainly upon the banyan-tree by an insect called the Coccus lacca. 'Lacca, a kind of red gum;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.

—Pers. lak, luk, 'the substance commonly called gum-lac, being the nidus of an insect found deposited on certain trees in India, and from which a beautiful red lake is extracted, used in dyeing;' Richardson's Pers. Dict. p. 1272. - Skt. lákshá, lac, the animal dye; put for raktá, lac, formed from rakta, pp. of the verb ranj, to dye, to colour, to redden; cf. Skt. ranga, colour, paint (Benfey). [Skt. ksh for kt is regular.] Doublet, lake (2). Der. lacquer, gum-lac, shel-lac.

LAC (2), a hundred thousand. (Hind., Skt.) Imported from India in modern times; we speak of a lac of rupees' = 100,000 rupees. — Hind. lak. — Skt. laksha, a mark, aim; also a lac, a hundred thousand. dred thousand; prob. standing for an orig. rakta, pp. of the verb raij, to dye, colour (Benfey). See Lac (1).

LACE, a cord, tie, plaited string. (F.,-L.) M.E. las, laas, King Alisaunder, 7698; Chaucer, C. T. 394. — O. F. las, lags, a snare; cf. lags courant, a noose, running knot; Cot. - Lat. laqueus, a noose, snare, knot.

$\beta$. From the same source as Lat. lacere, to a noose, snare, knot. p. From the same source as Lat. tacere, to allure, used in the comp. allicere, to allude, elicere, to draw out, delicere, to entice, delight. See Delight. Der. lace, verb, Spenser, F. Q. v. 5. 3. Doublet, lasso. See The use of lace in the original sense of 'snare' occurs in Spenser, Muiopotmos, 427.

LACERATE, to tear. (L.) In Cotgrave, to translate F. lacerer; and in Minsheu, ed. 1627.— Lat. laceratus, pp. of lacerare, to tear, rend.

-Lat. lacer, mangled, torn. + Gk. λακερός, torn; cf. λακίε, a rent. -→ Lat. lacer, mangied, torn. → CK. Λακερος, torn; ct. Λακειο, a rent. → WRAK, to tear; cf. Skt. νταςch, to tear; whence also Gk. βάκοι, a rag; see Rag. See Curtius and Benfey. Der. lacerat-ion, lacerat-ive. LACHRYMAL, LACRIMAL, pertaining to tears. (L.) The usual spelling lachrymal is false; it should be lacrimal. In anatomy, we speak of 'the lachrymal gland.' Not an old term; but we find 'lachrymable, lamentable,' 'lachrymate, to weep,' and 'lachrymatory, a tear-bettle 'in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. `All former form the lactryman a tear better spelt lacryman or lacrima. A The Lat. lacryma, a tear, better spelt lacruma or lacrima. B. The Lables is in P. Plowman, B. z. 26z. Not found in A. S., but an Old Low G. word. Cf. Du. lak, blemish, stain; whence laken, to blame.

We also find Icel. lake, defective, lacking. β. Fick connects Icel. lake with Icel. lake, to leak (iii. 261). In this view lack is a defect is also used in the pp. laden=loaded; Ant. and Cleop, iii. 11. 5; v. lake with Icel. lake, to leak (iii. 261). In this view lack is a defect or leak; see Leak. We find A. S. lace, wounded (Grein, ii. 161), a rare word, which agrees with the Du. adj. lak, leaky, G. leck, leaky.

There is no reason for connecting E. lack with Goth. laim, to revile; for this answers to A. S. lean, to revile, which is quite a lack water, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 178, l. 19

Lable 12. Lack water lade out the water, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 178, l. 19

Lable 12. Lack water lade (2). different word. Der. lack, verb; see below.

LACK (2), to want, be destitute of. (O. Low G.) M. E. lakken, Chaucer, C. T. 758, 11498; P. Plowman, B. v. 132. The verb is formed from the sb., not vice versa; this is shewn by the O. Fries. lakia, to attack, blame, where the suffix -ia is the usual one in the case of a causal verb formed from a sb. Hence the verb is a weak one; and the pt. t. is lakkede, as in Chaucer. See therefore Lack (1) above. LACKER, another form of Lacquer, q. v.

LACREY, I.A.CQUEY, a footman, menial attendant. (F., Span.?—Arab.?) In Shak. As You Like It, iii. 2. 314; Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 66.—Q. F. laquay, 'a lackey, footboy, footman; 'Cot. Mod. F. laquais. There was also an O. F. form alacay; see Littré, who shews that, in the 15th cent., a certain class of soldiers (esp. crossbow-men) were called alagues, alacays or lacays. The prefix -a is for el, and due to the Arab. def. article. - Span. lacayo, a lackey; cf. Port. lacaio, a lackey, lacaia, a woman-servant in dramatic performances. B. The use of a- (for al) in O. F. alacays points to an Arab. origin.—Arab. luka, worthless, slavish, and, as a sb., a slave. The fem. form lak'á, mean, servile (applied to a woman) accounts for the Port. lacaia. Allied words are lakú', lakí', abject, servile, laká'i, slovenly. See Richardson, Pers. Dict. pp. 1272, 1273. y. However, this is but a guess; the etymology is quite uncertain; Diez connects it with Ital. leccare, G. lecken, to lick; see Lick. Der.

lackey, verb, Ant. and Cleop. i. 4. 46.

LACONIC, brief, pithy. (L., - Gk.) 'Laconical, that speaks briefly or pithily;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Quitting the thrifty style laconic;' Denham, A Dialogue between Sir J. Pooley and Mr. Killigrew (R.) [Denham died A. D. 1668.] — Lat. Laconicus, Laconian. — Gk. Λακωνικόs, Laconian. — Gk. Λάκων, a Laconian, an inhabitant of Lacedæmon or Sparta. These men were proverbial for their brief and pithy style of speaking. Der. laconic-al, laconic-al-ly, laconic-ism; also lacon-ism, from Gk. Λάκων.

LACQUER, LACKER, a sort of varnish. (F., -Port., -Pers., - Skt.) 'Lacker, a sort of varnish;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Lacquer'd chair;' Pope, Horace, Ep. ii. 1. 337. 'The lack of Tonround is a sort of gummy juice, which drains out of the bodies or limbs of trees. The cabinets, desks, or any sort of frames to be lackered, are made of fir or pine-tree. The work-houses where the lacker is laid on are accounted very unwholesome; Dampier, Voyages, an. 1638 (R.) = F. lacre, 'a confection or stuffe made of rosin, brimstone, and white wax mingled, and melted together,' &c.; Cot. = Port. lacre, sealing-wax. = Port. laca, gum-lac. = Pers. lak, luk, lac. = Skt. lákshá, lac. See Lac (1). Der. lacquer, verb.

LACTEAL, relating to milk, conveying chyle. (L.) 'Lacteal, Lacteous, milky;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Lactory [read lactary] or milky plants, which have a white and lacteous juice;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. vi. c. 10. § 2. Formed with suffix -al from Lat. lacteus, milky.—Lat. lact., stem of lac, milk,—Gk, yaλaur- stem of γάλα, milk. B. From a base GLAKT or GALAKT, milk; Der. lacte-ous (= Lat. lacteus); lactesc-ent, from root unknown. pres. part. of lactescere, to become milky; whence lactescence. Also lacti-c, from lacti-, crude form of lac; whence also lacti-ferous, where the suffix is from Lat. -fer, bearing, from ferre, to bear, cognate with

E. bear. Also lettuce, q. v.

LAD, a boy, youth. (C.) M. E. ladde, pl. laddes; Havelok, 1.1786; P. Plowman, B. xix. 32; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 36. Of Celtic origin; W. llawd, a youth; Irish lath, a youth, champion, which O'Reilly connects with Irish luth, nimble, active, also yearning, strength; cf. Gael. laidir, strong, stout, luth, strength. β . The word may very well be cognate with Goth. lauths, used in the comp. jugga-lauths, a young lad, young man; from Goth. liudan, to grow, spring up, Mark, iv. 29. The Goth. base LUD = Celt. base LUTH; Fick, i. 757. Der. lass, q. v. The word cannot be connected with G. lasse, a vassal of a lord, as G. ss = E. t.

LADANUM, the same as Laudanum, q. v.

LADDER, a frame with steps, for climbing up by. (E.) M. E. laddre, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 44; Rob. of Glouc. p. 333. The word has lost an initial h. — A.S. hlæder, a ladder; Grein, ii. 80. + Du. nas jos an initiat κ. — Α. δ. κικαντ, κ index γ in the initiat κ. — Α. δ. κικαντ, κ index γ, a ladder, scale. β. Perhaps allied to Lat. elathri, s. pl. a trellis, grate, set of bars, Gk. κλείθρον, κλήθρον, a bar, bolt. The latter is from Gk. κλείων, to shut. See Cloister. In this view, a ladder is a set of bars, [where lk is written for kl].—A.S. kladan, (1) to heap together, (2) to load, (3) to lade out; Grein, ii. 79. 'Hidd water' = drew water; Exod. ii. 19. The same word as Lade (1) and Load. Der.

Ladde, q. v.

LADTIE, a large spoon. (E.) So called because used for lading or dipping out water from a vessel. M. E. ladel, Chaucer, C. T. 2022; P. Plowman, B. xix. 274. Formed with suffix -el from M. E. laden or hladen, to lade; see Lade (2). [The A. S. hlædle has not been established; it is due to Somner, and may be a fiction.] B. The suffix -elain this case denotes the means or instrument, as in

E. sett-le (= A. S. set-l), a seat, a thing to sit upon.

LADY, the mistress of a house, a wife, woman of rank. (E.) M.E. lady. Chaucer, C.T. 88, 1145. Older spellings læfdi, Layamon, 1256; lefdi, leafdi, Ancren Riwle, pp. 4, 38; lheuedi (= hlevedi), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 24; lafdi3, Ormulum, 1807.—A.S. hlæfdige, a lady; Grein, ii. 81; O. Northumb. hlafdia, in the margin of John, xx. 16, in the Lindisfarne M.S. β . Of uncertain origin; the syllable hldf is known to represent the word hlaff, a loaf; see Loaf, Lord. But the suffix -dige remains uncertain; the most reasonable guess is that which identifies it with A.S. dagee, a kneader, from the root which appears in Goth. digan or deigan, to knead. This gives the sense 'bread-kneader,' or maker of bread, which is a very likely one; see Lord. The A.S. dages occurs in the accus, case in the following passage. 'Godwig ... hæfo geboht Leofgife þá dægean æt Norðstoke and hyre ofspring' – Godwig has bought Leofgifu the doughwoman at Northstoke, and her offspring; Thorpe, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, p. 641. Cf. Icel. deigja, a dairy-maid; and see further under Dairy, Dough.

The Icel. lafoi, a lady, is merely borrowed from English.

The term Lady was often used in a pecial sease to signifu the blessed Virgin Mary: hence seared special sense, to signify the blessed Virgin Mary; hence several derivatives, such as lady-bird, lady-fern, lady's-finger, lady's-mantle, lady's-slipper, lady's-smock, lady's-tresses. Cf. G. Marien-käfer (Mary's chaser), a lady-bird; Marien-blume (Mary's flower), a daisy; Marienmantel (Mary's mantle) lady's-mantle; Marien-schuh (Mary's shoe), mantet (Mary's manner) and smanter and sense), lady-love; lady-ship, M. E. ladiship, Gower, C. A. ii, 301, last line, written lefdischip (= deference). Ancren Riwle, p. 108; lady-like.

B. (in the special sense) lady-bird, &c., as above. Also lady-chapel, lady-day, which strictly speaking are not compound words at all, since lady is here in the gen. case, so that lady chapel = chapel of our Lady, and lady day = day of our Lady. The M.E. gen. case of this word was lady or ladie, rather than ladies, which was a later form; this is remarkably shewn by the phrase 'in his lady grace' = in his lady's favour, Chaucer, C. T. 88; where Tyrwhitt wrongly prints ladies, though the MSS. have lady. The contrast of Lady day with Lord's day is striking, like that of Fri-day with Thur-s-day, the absence of a marking the fem. gender; the A.S. gen. case is hlæfdig-an.

fem. gender; the A. S. gen. case is hlåfdig-an.

IAG, sluggish, coming behind. (C.) 'Came too lag [late] to see him buried;' Rich. III, ii. 1. 90. Cf. prov. E. lag, late, last, slow; lag-last, a loiterer; lag-testh, the grinders, so called because the last in growth; Halliwell.—W. llag, slack, loose, sluggish. + Gael. and Irish lag, weak, feeble, faint. + Corn. lac, adv. loose, remiss, lax, out of order, bad (Williams). + Lat. lanus, lax, loose; cf. Lat. languor, languor; languidus, languid. Cf. Icel. lakra, to lag behind.

B. The form of the root is LAG, to be slack or loose; whence also E. lax, languid; and Gk. λαγαρόs, slack; see Languid. Der. las. verb. Spenser. F. O. i. 1, 6, with which cf. Corn. guish. Der. lag, verb, Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 6, with which cf. Com. lacca, to faint away, Gk. λήγειν, to cease; also lagg-ing-ly, lagg-er, lag-end, 1 Hen. IV, v. 1. 24; lagg-ard (a late word), where the suffix ard is French (of Teut. origin) and is affixed even to English bases, as in drunk-ard.

LAGOON, LAGUNE, a shallow lake. (Ital., -L.) Modern; we may speak of 'the lagoons of Venice;'—Ital. lagons, a pool; also laguna, a pool. The former is an augmentative form of Ital. lago, a lake; the latter is from Lat. lacuna, a pool. Both are from

Lat. lacus, a lake; see Lake (1).

LAIC, LAICAL, pertaining to the people. (L., -Gk.) 'A Laicks, or Lay-man;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. - Lat. laicus; of Gk. origin.

See Lay (3), the more usual form of the word.

LAIR, the den or retreat of a wild beast. (E.) M. E. leir; the dat. case leire occurs in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, 2nd Series, p. 103, l. 11, where it means 'bed.' Spelt layere, meaning 'camp,' Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, l. 2293. — A. S. leger, a lair, couch, bed.

by analogy with gaie-ty from gay, du-ty from due; &c. See Lay (3).

LAKE (1), a pool. (L.) In very early use; and borrowed immediately from Latin; not through the French. A. S. lac, a lake; bas meres and lases' - these meres and lakes; in an interpolation in the A. S. Chron. an. 656 or 657; see Thorpe's edition, vol. i. p. 52, vol. ii. p. 27. — Lat. lacus, a lake (whence also F. lac). The lit. sense is 'a hollow' or depression. + Gk. λάκκοs, a hollow, hole, pit, Der. lag-oon, q. v.

LAKE (2), a colour, a kind of crimson. (F., -Pers., -Skt.) certain colour is called 'crimson lake.' 'Vermillian, lake, or crimson; Ben Jonson, Expostulation with Inigo Jones, I. 11 from end.—F. laque, 'sanguine, rose or rubic colour;' Cot.—Pers. lak, lake produced from lac; Rich. Dict. p. 1253.—Pers. lak, lac; see Lac (1).

LAMA (1), a high priest. (Thibetan.) We speak of the Grand Lama of Thibet. The word means 'chief' or 'high priest' (Webster).

LAMA. (2), the same as Llama, q. v.

LAMB, the young of the sheep. (E.) M. E. lamb, lomb; Chaucer, C. T. 5037.—A. S. lamb, Grein, ii. 154. + Du. lam. + Icel. lamb. +
Dan. lam. + Swed. lamm. + G. lamm. + Goth. lamb.

B. All
from Teut. base LAMBA (Fick, iii. 267); root unknown. Der. lamb, verb, lamb-like, lamb-skin; also lamb-k-in (with double dimin. suffix), Hen. V, ii. 1. 133.

LAMBENT, flickering. (L.)

'Was but a lambent flame;' Cowley, Pindaric Odes, Destiny, st. 4. – Lat. lambent-, stem of pres. part. of lambere, to lick, sometimes applied to flames; see Virgil, En. ii. 684. + Gk. λάπτειν, to lick. β. Both from a base LAB, to lick; whence also E. labial, lip, and lap, verb. See Lap (1).

LAME, disabled in the limbs, esp. in the legs. (E.) M. E. lame, Wyclif, Acts, iii. 2; Havelok, 1938. - A. S. lama, Matt. viii. 6. + Du. lam. + Icel. lami, lama. + Dan. lam, palsied. + Swed. lam. + M. H. G. lam; G. lahm.

B. The orig, sense is maimed, bruised, M. H. G. lam; G. lahm. broken; from the base LAM, to break, preserved in Russ. lomate, to break; Fick, iii. 267. Cf. Icel. lama, to bruise, prov. E. lam, to Dor. lame, verb; lame-ly, lame-ness.

LAMENT, to utter a mournful cry. (F., -L.) Though the sb. is the orig. word in Latin. the verb is the older word in English, occurring in John, xvi. 20, in Tyndal's version, A. D. 1526. – F. lamenter, 'to lament;' Cot. – Lat. lamentari, to wail. – Lat. lamentum, a mournful cry; formed with suffix -mentum from the base la-, to utter a cry, which appears again in la-trare, to bark. β. Cf. Goth. laian, to revile; Russ. laiate, to bark, snarl, scold; Gk. pafeir, to bark. All from ARA, to bark, make a noise; Fick, iii. 259. Of imitative origin; cf. Lat. raucus, hoarse. Der. lament, sb.; lament-able; lament-at-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 937, from F. lamentation.

LAMINA, a thin plate or layer. (L.)

In In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Lat. lamina, a thin plate of metal. Root uncertain. Der.

lamin-ar, lamin-at-ed, lamin-at-ion.

LAMMAS, a name for the first of August. (E.) masse; P. Plowman, B. vi. 291; see note on the line (Notes, p. 173). —A.S. Majmæsse, Grein, i. 80; A.S. Chron, an. 921; at a later period spelt Mammæsse, A.S. Chron, an. 1009.

B. The lit. sense period spelt Mammæsse, A. S. Chron. an. 1000.

B. The lit. sense is 'loaf-mass,' because a loaf was offered on this day as an offering of first-fruits; see Chambers, Book of Days, ii. 154.—A. S. hlif, a loaf; and masse, mass. See Loaf and Mass (2).

¶ Not from lamb ¶ Not from lamb and mass, as the fiction sometimes runs.

LAMP, a vessel for giving light. (F., -L., -Gk.) In early use.

M. E. lampe; St. Margaret, ed. Cockayne, p. 20, l. 21. - O. F. lampe, a lampe; Cot. - Lat. lampas. - Gk. λαμπάs, a torch, light. - Gk. λάμπειν, to shine. - Gk. and Lat. base LAP, to shine; Fick, iii. 750; whence also E. lymph, limpid. Der. lamp-black; lantern, q.v.

I.AMPOON, a personal satire. (F., -O. Low G.) In Dryden, Essay on Satire, l. 47. - F. lampon, orig. a drinking song; so called from the exclamation lampons!—let us drink, frequently introduced into such songs. (See Littré, who gives an example.)—F. lamper, to drink; a popular or provincial word; given in Littré. B. This is a nasalised form of O. F. lapper, 'to lap or lick up;' Cot. Of O. Low G. origin; see Lap (1). Der. lampoon-er.

plantain; cf. F. lancelée, 'ribwort plantaine' (Cot.)

LANCET, a surgical instrument. (F., -L.) M. E. launcet, also spelt lawnset, lawncent, Prompt. Parv., p. 290. - O. F. lancette, 'a surgeon's launcet; also, a little lance; 'Cot. Dimin. of F. lance; see Lance. LANCH, another spelling of Lance, verb, and of Launch.

LAND, earth, soil, country, district. (E.) M. E. land, lond; Chaucer, C. T. 4912, 4914.—A. S. land; Grein, ii. 154. + Du. land. + Icel., Dan., and Swed. land. + Goth. land. + G. land; M. H. G. lant. Cf. Russ. liada, a field overgrown with brushwood. Root unknown; perhaps related to Lawn (1). Der. land, verb, A. S. lendan (= landian), Grein, ii. 168; land-breeze, land-crab, land-flood, land-grave, q.v., land-holder, land-ing, land-lady; land-lord, Tyndal's Works, p. 210, col. 1; lands-man (= land-man, Ant. and Cleop. iv. 3. 11); land-mark, Bible, 1551, Job, xxiv. 2; land-rail, q.v.; land-scape, q.v.; land-slip, land-steward, land-taw, land-waiter, land-ward.

LANDAU, a kind of coach. (G.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Supposed to be named from Landau, a town in Bavaria.

Here, Land = E. land; on -au, see Island.

LAND-GRAVE, a count of a province. (Du.) 'Landgrave, or Landsgrave, the earl or count of a province, whereof in Germany there are four; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Du. landsgraaf, a landgrave. - Du. land, land, province; and graaf, a count, earl. So also G. landgraf, from land and graf. B. The word was borrowed from the Du. rather than the G., as is easily seen by the E. fem. form landgravine, which answers to Du. landgravin rather than to G. landgrafinn. See Land and Margrave. Der. landgrav-in, as above; landgravi-ate, 'that region or country which belongs to a landgrave; 'Blount, LANDRAIL, a kind of bird; see Rail (2). LANDSCAPE, the aspect of a country. (Du.) In Milton, L'Allegro, l. 70. Formerly spelt landskip; see Trench, Select Glossary. And see Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, which makes it clear that it was orig. a painter's term, to express all that part of a picture which is not of the body or argument; answering somewhat to the mod. term back-ground. It was borrowed from the Dutch painters: - Du. landschap, a landscape, province; cf. landschap schilder, a landscape painter. - Du. land, cognate with E. land; and sehap, a suffix - A.S. scipe - E. ship (in friend-ship, wor-ship), derived from the verb which in Eng. is spelt shape. See Leand and Shape.

TIANE, an open space between hedges, a narrow passage or street. (E.) M. E. lane, lone; Chaucer, C. T. 16126; P. Plowman, A. ii. 192 B. ii. 216.—A. S. láne, lone, a lane; Codex Diplomaticus, ed. Kemble, vol. i. p. 1. l. 13; vol. iii. p. 33 (no. 549). [Cf. Prov. E. lons (Cleveland), lonnin (Cumberland).] + O. Friesic lona, lana, a lane, way; North Fries. lona, lana, a narrow way between houses and gardens (Outzen). + Du. laan, an alley, lane, walk. β. Of unknown origin: perhaps allied to Icel. lin, an inlet, a sea-loch, unknown origin; perhaps allied to Icel. lin, an inlet, a sea-loch, lana, a hollow place, a vale.

LANGUAGE, speech, diction. (F.,-L.) M.E. langage, King Alisaunder, l. 68₅7; Chaucer, C. T. 4936.—F. langage, language; formed with suffix -age (= Lat. -aticum) from langue, the tongue.

LANGUID, feeble, exhausted, sluggish. (L) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—Lat. languidus, languid.—Lat. languere, to be weak. See Languish. Der. languid-ly, languid-ness.

LANGUISH, to become enfeebled, pine, become dull or torpid. (F.,-L.) M.E. languithen, Chaucer, C.T. 11262.—F. languist; stem. of pres. part. of languir, 'to languish, pine;' Cot.—Lat. languere, to be weak; whence languesere, to become weak, which lurnishes the F. stem languiss.

zoology. Ceined from Lat, lanifer, producing wool. = Lat, lanifor lana, woel; and ferre, to bear.

B. The Lat. lana (= lak-na) is cognate with Gk. haxin, down, wool; Lat. ferre is cognate with E. bear. Der, So also lam-gerous, wool-bearing, from Lat. gerere, to bear. LANK, slender, lean, thin. (E.) M. E. lank, lonk; spelt/lone, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Merris, i. 249, l. 9: 'lone he is ant leane' = he is lank and lean. = A. S. klane, slender; Grein, ii. 80. β. The orig. sense and lean.—A. S. hlane, slender; Grein, ii. 80.

B. The orig sense was probably 'bending,' weak; cf. G. lenken, to turn, bend; see further under Link(1).

Der. lank-ly, lank-ness.

LANSQUENET, a German foot-soldier; a game at cards.

I.ANSQUENET, as German foot-soldier; a game at cards. (F.,-G.) Corruptly spelt lanceknight in old authors, by a popular blunder. See Ben Jonson, Every Man, ed. Wheatley, A. ii. sc. 4. b. 21. — F. lansquenet, 'a lanceknight, or German footman; also, the name of a game at cards; 'Cot.-G. (and Du.) landsknecht, a foot-soldier. — G. lands, put. for landes, gen. case of land, land, country; and knecht, a soldier. Land = E. land; and knecht = E. knight. Thus the word is land's-knight, not lance-knight. The term means a soldier of the flat or Low Countries, as distinguished from the men who came from the highlands of Switzerland; see Passie Britannique. no. for Sept. 1866. p. 20 (Littré).

Revue Britannique, no. for Sept. 1866, p. 20 (Littré).

M. E. lanterne, Floriz and Blancheflur, ed. Lumby, l. 238. - F. lanterne. - Lat. lanterna, laterna, a lantern; the spelling lanterna occurs in the Landisfame MS., in the Lat. text of John, xviii. 3. Lanterna = lamterna = lampterna; not a true Lat. word, but borrowed from Gk. λαμπτήρ, a light, torch. - Gk. λάμπειν, to shine. See Lamp. Sometimes spelt lanthorn (Kersey), by a singular pepular etymology which took account of the horn sometimes used for the sides of lanterns.

LANYARD, LANIARD, a certain small rope in a ship. (F., -L.?) The spelling laniard is the better one, since the word has nothing to do with yard. The d is excrescent; the old spelling was lannier. 'Lanniers, Lanniards, small ship-ropes that serve to slacken or make stiff the shrowds, chains, &c.; Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Laniers, vox nautica;' Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Lanyer of lether, lasniere;' Palsgrave. - O. F. laniere, 'a long and narrow band or thong of leather; Cot.

B. Origin uncertain, but prob. Latin; yet it is not clear how it is connected either with Lat. lanarius, woollen, made of wool, or with laniarius, belonging to a lanius, or butcher.

EAP (1), to lick up with the tongue. (E.) M.E. lappen, lapen, Wyclif, Judges, vii. 7; Gower, C. A. iii. 215.—A. S. lapian, to lap; rare, but found in Ælfric's Grammar (Lye), and in Glosses to Prudentius (Leo). The derivative lapelder, a spoon, is in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 244, l. 4. + Icel. lepja, to lap like a dog. + Dan. labe, to lap. + M. H. G. laffen, O. H. G. laffan, to lap up. + V. llepio, to lap up. + Lat. lambere (with inserted m), to lick. + Gk. λάπτεν, to lap up. + Let. lambere [Fish in arx. iii] 66. All from a base IAB LAP with the tongue; Fick, i. 751, iii. 266. All from a base LAB, LAP, to lap, lick up. Der. from the same base are lab-i-al, lamb-ent, lip. LAP (2), the loose part of a coat, an apron, part of the body covered by an apron, a fold, flap. (E.) M. E. lappe (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 688; P. Plowman, B. ii. 35, xvi. 255; often in the sense of 'skirt of a garment ,' see Prompt. Parv., and Way's note.

— A.S. lappa, a loosely hanging portion; 'lifre lappan' = portions of the liver; Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vecab. i. 45, col. 2, l. 18.

+O. Fries. lappa, a piece of a garment. + Du. lap, a remnant, stred, rag, patch. + Dan. lap, a patch. + Swed. lapp, a reinant, stred, rag, patch. + Dan. lap, a patch. + Swed. lapp, a patch asked. B. The Teut. base is LAPAN, a shred, patch (Fick, iii. 266); a sb. formed from the Teut. base LAP, to hang down, occurring in Icel. lapa, to hang down (not given in Cleasby, but cited by Fick and others).

Y. This Teut. base - Aryan. RAB, to hang down, fall, glide or slip down. From this root are Skt. lamb (oldest form ramb), to hang, fall down: Lat. labb, to clide. Sc. See Tobe. Limbo. Lapse. From this root are Skt. lamb (oldest form ramb), to hang, fall down; Lat. lābi, to glide, &c. See Lobe, Limbo, Lapse, Limp (1). Dev. lap-ful; kap-el, i. e. part of a coat which laps over the facing (a mod. word, added by Todd to Johnson), formed with dimin. suffix -el; lapp-et, dimin. form with suffix -et, used by Swift (Johnson); lap-dog, Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. 853; also lab-sl, q. v. To Doubtless the verb to lap (see Lap (3)) has often been supposed to be connected with this sb.; but the two words should be kept quite distinct. In the phrase to lap over, it is probable that the verb really belongs to the present sb. Cf. lop-eared slap-eared, with hanging ears, applied to rabbits.

ILAN (3), to wrap, involve, fold. (E.) Doubtless frequently constants, whence also E. lam, q. v., also Ck. Anyroless, to stacken, lotter, Anyapós, stack; Icel. lakra, to lag. See Lag. Den Languish-ing-ly, languish-ment; and see languid, languor.

LANGEOR, duiness, listlessness. (F...L.) M. H. languor, Will. of Palerne, 1712: 'lapped in cloutes' = wrapped up in rags, P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, 1, 438. (b. This word has lost an initial w; an older form was wlappen; Lat. spelling.]—F. languare, 'languor.—Lat. languare, to be weak. See Languish.

B. The Lat. lāna (= lak-na) is the frequent change of r to 1; so that lap is a mere corruption or later form of wrap. See Wrap.

LAPIDARY, one who cuts and sets precious stones. (L.)

the latter part of the words de-velop, en-velop, q.v.

LAPIDARY, one who cuts and sets precious stones. (L.)

Cotgrave translates F. lapidaire by 'a lapidary or jeweller.' Engalished from Lat. lapidarius, a stone-mason, a jeweller. — Lat. lapida-stem of lapis, a stone. Allied to Gk. λέπας, a bare rock, λέπας, a scale, flake. From the base LAP, to scale off, peel; seen in Gk. λέπαν, to peel, Russ. lupits, to peel; see Leaf. Der. from the same source, lapida-is, lapid-see-ens, lapid-see-ens-y, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 23. § 5. Also di-lapid-ats, q.v.

LAPSE, to slip or fall into error, to fail in duty. (L.) In Shak. Cor. v. 2. 19; the sb. lapse is in All's Well, ii. 3. 170.—Lat. lapsare, to slip, frequentative of labi (pp. lapsus), to glide, slip, trip.—

Cor. v. 2. 19; the sb. lapse is in All's Well, ii. 3. 170.—Lat. lapsare, to slip, frequentative of labi (pp. lapsus), to glide, slip, trip.—

ARAB, to fall, hang down; see Lap (2). Der. lapse, sb., from Lat. lapsus, a slip. Also e-lapse.

LAPWING, the name of a bird. (E.) M. E. lappewinke (four syllables), Gower, G. A. ii. 239; later lapwinke, Prompt. Parv. p. 288; spelt lhapwynche, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 61, l. 31.—A. S. hleapewince, Wright's Vocab., i. 62, col. 1, l. 22. B. The first part is hleape, connected with hleapan, to run, spring, leap; see Leap.

Y. The second part of the word is, literally, 'winker;' but we must assign to the verb wink its original sense. This orig. sense appears in the O. H. G. winchan, M. H. G. winken, to move from side to side, a sense preserved in mod. G. wanken, to totter, from side to side, a sense preserved in mod. G. wanken, to totter, stagger, vacillate, reel, waver, &c. Thus the sense is 'one who turns about in running or flight,' which is (I believe) fairly descriptive of the habit of the male bird. The G. wanken is from the same root as Lat. uagus, wandering; see Vagrant and Wink. pular etymology explains the word as 'wing-flapper;' but lap does not really take the sense of flap; it means, rather, to droop, hang down loosely; see Lap (2). This interpretation is wrong as to both parts of the A.S. form of the word, and is too general.

LARBOARD, the left side of a ship, looking from the stern. (E. or Scand.) Cotgrave has: Babort, the larboard side of a ship. It is also spelt larboard in Minsheu, ed. 1627. The spelling is probably corrupt; the M.E. spelling appears to be laddebord, if indeed this be the same word. In Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. l. 106, some sailors are preparing to set sail, and after spreading the main-sail, 'pay layden in on ladde-bords and the lofe wynnes' - they laid in [hauled in?] on the larboard and set right the loof (see Luff). β. It is certain that board is the same as in star-board, and that the word is of E. or Scand. origin, probably the latter. The only word which answers in form to ladde is Swed. ladda, to lade, load, charge. answering to Icel. hlaba, A.S. Madan, E. lade. Ladda is pronounced laa in prov. Swed. and Norw. (Rietz, Aasen). We find Icel. hlaba saglum to take in sail. Y. Beyond this, all is uncertainty; we may conjecture that the sails, when taken down, were put on the left side of the ship, to be out of the way of the steersman, who originally stood on the starboard (=steer-board) or right side of the ship. See Starboard. (=steer-board) or right side of the ship. See Starboard. (=The F. babord = G. backbord, where back means forecastle, orig. placed on the left side (Littré).

LARCENY, theft, robbery. (F.,=L.) In Cotgrave, who explains O. F. larrecin by 'larcony, theft, robbery.' An old law term; see Blount's Nomolexicon. = O. F. larrecin, larcin (both forms are in Cotgrave), mod.

Cotgrave); mod. F. larcin. The spelling larrein occurs in the Laws of William the Conqueror, § xiv; in Thorpe's Ancient Laws of England, i. 472. [The suffix -y appears to be an E. addition, to conform the word to forger-y, burglar-y, felon-y, and the like; but it is unnecessary]. — Lat. latrocinium, freebooting, marauding, robbery? formed with suffix -cinium (occurring also in tiro-cinium) from latro, β. Curtius (i. 453) considers latro as borrowed from a robber. Gk. Attany rate it is equivalent to Gk. Adves, a hireling, used in a bad sense. The suffix -tro or -tps denotes the agent, and the a base is λaf, to get, seen in dπο-λαί-ειν, to enjoy, get; cf. ληlε, λεία; booty, spoil, lu-crum, gain. See Lucre. Der. larcemist. The words burg-lar contains a derivative from latro.

LARCH, a kind of tree like a pine. (F., = L., = Gk.) Spelt larchs in Minsheu, ed. 1627. = O. F. large, 'the larch, or larinx tree; Cot. = Lat. laricem, acc. of larin, the larch-tree. = Gk. λάριξ, tha larch-tree.

LARD, the melted fat of swine. (F.,-L.) 'Lards of flesche, lards, vel lardsne; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 288.-O. F. lard, 'lard,' Cot.

-Lat, larda, shortened form of larida (also laridum), lard, fat of of joint, jointed piece, whence Du. lasseken. bacon. Akin to Gk. Aapos, pleasant to the taste, nice, dainty, sweet, Aagards, fat. Der. lard, verb, M. E. larden (Prompt. Parv.), from F. larder, to lard (see note to Bea Jonson, Every Man, ed. Whentley, A. iii. sc. 4, l. 174); lard-er, Gower, C. A. iii. 124, with which cf. O. F. lardier, 'a tub to keep bacon in' (Cotgrave), hence applied to a room in which bacon and meat are kept; lard-y, lard-ac-s-ous; inter-lard.

LARGE, great, bulky, vast. (F., -L.) In early use. M.E. large (which usually has the sense of liberal), O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, 1. 143, 1. 32. F. large. Lat. largus, large, long. TARK (1), the name of a bird. (E.) Lark is a contraction of lavrock; see Burns, Holy Fair, st. 1. M.E. larke, Chaucer, C. T. 1493; spelt laverock, Gower, C. A. ii. 264.—A.S. lawerce, later lawerce, laferce. The spelling lawerce is in Wright's Vocab. i. 62. col. 2; laverce (for lawerce) in the same. i. 20. col. 1. i. 77. i. 62, col. 2; laverce (for lauerce) in the same, i. 29, col. 1, i. 77. col. 2. Laferce is in the comp. lafercan-beork, a place-name cited in Leo. + Icel. lavirki, a lark. + Low G. lewerke (Bremen Wörterbuch). +O.H.G. lerekha; G. lerche. + Du. leeuwrik, leeuwerik. + Swed. lärka. + Dan. larke.

B. The Icel. la-virki = skilful worker or worker β. The Icel. la-virki = skilful worker or worker of craft, from læ, craft, and virki, a worker; cf. Icel. læ-visi, craft, skill, la-viss, crafty, skilful; and (as to virki), ill-virki, a worker of ill, spell-virki, a doer of mischief. Similarly, the A. S. láwerce may be decomposed into law-werea = guile-worker; cf. lawa, a traitor, betrayer, Mark, xiv. 44; also Goth. lew, an occasion, opportunity (Rom. vii. 8, 11), whence lewjan, lewjan, to betray. The name points to some superstition which regarded the bird as of ill omen.

LARK (2), a game, sport, fun. (E.) Spelt lark in modern E., and now a slang term. But the r is intrusive, and the word is an old one; it should be laak or lahk, where aa has the sound of a in father. M.E. lak, lok; also laik, which is a Scand. form. See Will. of Palerne, 678; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 243; Ormulum, 1157, 2166; Palerne, 678; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 243; Ormulum, 1157, 2166; Ancren Riwle, p. 152, note b; &c. (Stratmann).—A.S. låc, play, contest, prey, gift, offering; Grein, ii. 148. + Icel. leikr, a game, play, sport. + Swed. lek, sport. + Dan. leg, sport. + Goth. laiks, a sport, dance.

B. All from a Teut. base LAIK, to dance, skip for joy, play; cf. Goth. laikan, to skip for joy, Luke, i. 41, 44, A.S. ldcan, Icel. leika, to play; Fick, iii. 259. Der. wed-lock, know-ledge;

IARYNX, the upper part of the windpipe. (L.-Gk.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. - Lat. larynx. - Gk. λάρυγξ, the larynx, throat, gullet; gen. case. λάρυγγου. Der. laryng-s-al, laryng-s-an, laryng-itis.

LASCAR, a native E. Indian sailor. (Pers.) Modern. – Pers. lashkar, an army; whence lashkari, a soldier, camp-follower: Rich.

Pers. Dict. p. 1265.

LASCIVIOUS, lustful. (L.) In Shak. Rich. II, ii. 1. 19. Corrupted (prob. by the influence of the F. form laseif) from Lat. lascinus, lascivious. Lengthened from an older form lascus * (not found), as fest-ium is from fest-us. Cf. Gk. λάστριε, λάσταυροε, lecherous; Russ. laskate, to caress, flatter, fawn; Skt. lask, to desire, covet, akin to las, to embrace, sport; all from the base LAS = √RAS, to desire, extended form of LA; cf. Gk. λάω, I wish, will.

Der. lascivious-ly, lascivious-ness.

LASH (1), to fasten firmly together. (Du.) 'Lask (in sea affairs), to fasten or bind up anything to the ship's sides; ' Kersey, ed. 1715. - Du. lasschen, to join, scarf together; lasch, sb., a piece, joint, seam, notch. Cf. Swed. laska, to stitch, lask, a scarf, joint; Dan. lasks, to B. The true sense is to scarf or join together scarf, lask, a scarf. two pieces that fit; hence, to bind tightly together in any way, to tie together. The verb appears to be formed from the sb., which further appears as Low G. lasks, a flap (Bremen Wörterbuch), G. lasche, a flap, scarf or groove to join timber. Y. I should propose to refer the orig. form LASKA, a flap (which would probably stand for LAKSA by the usual interchange of sk and ks, as in E. an -aks -

Der. lask, verb, to flog, scourge; cf. Lasckyn, laskyn, betyn, ligulo, verbero; Prompt. Parv.

IASB, a girl. (C.) M. E. lasse, spelt lasse in Cursor Mundi, l. 2608. Lass may be regarded as short for laddess, where, however, the suffix -ess does not represent a French, but a Welsh ending. The W. fem. suffix is -es, as in llew-es, a she-lion, from llew, a lion; Ilanc-es, a young woman, from llanc, a youth. Contracted from W. llodes, a girl, wench, fem. form of llawd, a lad. See Lad.

Not from Spanish, because the Span. z is sounded like the voiceless th. Der. lasso, verb.

LAST (1), latest, hindmost. (E.) Last is a contraction of latest, through the intermediate form latsi (= lat'st), for which see Ormulum. 1. 4168. See Late. Cf. Du. laatst, last, which is the superl. of laat, late; Icel. á lesti, at last, from latr, late.

LAST (2), a wooden mould of the foot on which shoes are made. (E.) The form is E., but the peculiar sense is rather Scand. M. E. last, leste. 'Hec formula, a last;' Wright's Vocab. i. 196; in a glossary of the 15th cent. 'Leste, sowtarys [shoemaker's] forme, formula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 298.—A. S. lást, leást, a foot-track, path, trace of feet; Grein, ii. 160. + Du. leest, a last, shape, form. + Icel. leistr, the foot below the ancle. + Swed. läst, a shoemaker's last. + Dan. læst, the same. + G. leisten, the same. + Goth. laists, a track, β. The standard Teut. form is way, footstep; 2 Cor. xii. 18. the Goth. laist, and the original sense is foot-track, trace of a man's path. Formed from Goth. lais, I know (Phil. iv. 12); the trace being that whereby a man's path is known. This word lais was orig. used in the sense 'I have experienced,' and it is the pt. t. of Goth. leisan, to find out. From Teut. base LIS, to find out; see Fick, iii.

lessan, to find out. From Feat. base 2.20, to and 272. See Learn. Der. last (3).

LAST (3), to endure, continue. (E.) M. E. lasten, Havelok, 538; also lesten, Prompt. Parv. p. 299.—A.S. léstan, to observe, perform, also lesten, Prompt. Parv. p. 299.—A.S. léstan, to observe, perform, last, remain; the orig. sense being 'to follow in the track of, from last, a foot-track; see Last (2). + Goth. laistjan, to follow, follow after; from laists, a foot-track. + G. leisten, verb, to perform, follow out, fulfil; from leisten, sb., a form, model, shoemaker's last. Der. last-ing-ly, ever-last-ing. ¶ The train of ideas in learn, last (2), and last (3) is: learn, know, trace, foot-track, follow out, fulfil, continue.

LAST (4), a load, a large weight, ship's cargo. (E.) 'A thousand last quad yere' = a thousand cargoes of bad years; Chaucer, C. T. 13368; and see Deposition of Rich. II, ed. Skeat, iv. 74.—A. S. klæst, a burden; Grein, ii. 81.—A. S. kladan, to load; see Lade, Load. + Icel. lest, a load, klass, a cart-load; from klada, to load. + Dan. last, a weight, burden, cargo, læs, a load; from lade, to load. + Swed. last, a burden, lass, a cart-load; from ladda, to load. + Swed. tast, a burden, tast, a cart-load; from sauca, to load. + Du. and G. last; from laden, to load.

LATCH, a catch, fastening. (E.) M. E. lacche, used by Walter de Biblesworth to translate O. F. cliket; Wright's Vocab. i. 170. [See cliket in Chaucer, C. T. 9920.] 'Latche, lakche, lack, or snekke, Clitorium, vel pessula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 283. From M. E. verb lacchen, to seize, catch hold of, Will. of Palerne, 666, 671; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 324.—A. S. leccan, to seize, lay hold of, Grein, ii. 161; also go-leccan, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 182, ii. 50, 90, 506.

B. A. S. also go-lacean, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 182, ii. 50, 90, 506. B. A. S. lacean is a weak verb (pt. t. lackto), of a causal form, standing for lak-ian, from a base lak-. It is just possible that it was formed from Lat. laqueus, a snare; but this is by no means certain. The assertion law to the Lat. and Gk. base LAG, to droop, appearing in Lat. laws and laws and laws and laws are the same words, is a mere guess; in fact, the history of the words, as far as we can laws and laws and laws. LAKSA, LASKA, a flap; with the extended sense origin, and lace of F. origin. Der. latch, verb, to fasten with a latch, merely formed from the sb., and not the same as M.E. laceden; $ 185r., froth, foam, soum of the sea, soap; whence landry, lödra, to ILATCHET, a little lace, a thong. (F.,-L.) In the Bible, Mark, i. 7, Isa. v. 27. The former t is intrusive. M. E. lacket, as in 'lacket of a schoo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 284. 'Lacket outher loupe' = Iatchet or loop; Sir Gawayne and the Grene Knight, l. 591. - O. F. lacet, 'the lace of a petticote, a woman's lace or lacing, also a snare or ginne; Cot. Dimin. (with suffix *et) of O. F. lags, as snare. See Lages.

Observe that latelet is the dimin. of lace, and distinct from latele.

LATE, tardy, coming behind, slow, delayed. (E.) 1. M. E. laty rare as an adj. in the positive degree. 'A lat mon' = a man slow of rare as an anti-m tile positive age. 1 at min — a man slow of belief; Joseph of Arimathie, ed. Skeat, 1. 695. The adv. is late, as in 'late ne rathe' = late nor early, P. Plowman, B. iii. 73. 2. The compar. form is later or latter, spelt lættere in Layamon, l. 5911. 3. The superl. is latest, latst, or last, the intermediate form appearing in the Ormulum, 1, 4168. – A.S. lat, slow, late; Grein, ii. 165. + Du. laat, late. + Icel. latr, slow, lazy. + Dan. lad, lazy, slothful. + Swed. lat, lazy, idle. + Goth. lats, slothful, Luke, xix. 22. + G. lass, weary. tat, 1827, 1616. 4 Goth. tass, stothul, Luke, xix, 22. 4 G. tass, weary, indolent. + Lat. lassus (= lad-tus), weary.

β. All from Teut. base LAT (= Lat. LAD), to let, let go, let alone; so that late means let alone, neglected, hence slothful, slow, coming behindhand. See Let (1). Der. late-ly, late-ness, lat-isk, latt-er, latt-er-ly, last, q. v., last-ly. Also let (2). From the same source, lassitude, q. v.

last-ly. Also let (2). From the same source, lassitude, q. v.

1.ATEEN, triangular, applied to sails, (F., - L.) In Ash's Dict. ed. 1775. Vessels in the Mediterranean frequently have laten sails, of a triangular shape. The E. spelling preserves the pronunciation of the F. word Latine, the fem. of Latin, Latin; the lit. sense being of the r. word Latine, the lett. of Latine, Latin, the lit. sense being 'Latin sails,' i.e. Roman sails. See Latine. 'Voile Latine, a mizen or smack saile;' Cot. 'Latina, the mizen saile of a ship; also, the Latine toong;' Florio, Ital. Dict. ed. 1598. So also Span. Latina sela, a lateen sail; a la Latina, of a triangular form.

LATENT, lying hid, concealed. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Lat. latent., stem of pres. pt. of latere, to lie hid. + Gk. λαθ., base of λάνθανεν, to lie hid. - RADH, to quit, leave, abandon; cf. Skt. rah (for orig. radh), to quit, leave; Benfey, p. 763. Der.

Latent-ly, latencey. And see lethe, lethargy.

705.—Lat. lateralis, belonging to the side. —Lat. later-, stem of latus, the side. Root uncertain. Der. lateral-ly.

LATH, a thin slip of wood. (E.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. iv. 2. 136.

In the North of England, the form used is lat; see Ray, Halliwell, and the Holderness Glossary (E.D.S.). This corresponds with M.E. latte, a lath. 'Hic asser, a latt;' Wright's Vocab i. 235, col. 1. - A.S. lættu, pl. lætta; 'Asseres, lætta;' Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 26, col. 2, 1, 7; also latta, pl., id. i. 58, col. 2, 1, 2, + Du. lat, a lath. + G. latte, a lath, whence F. latte is borrowed.

B. The exact correspondence of the dental sound in A.S. lattu and G. latte presents a difficulty, and raises the suspicion that the words are borrowed. Perhaps they are of Celtic origin; cf. W. llath, a rod, staff, yard, as to which, however, it is difficult to say whether the E. or the W. word is the original. Der. latt-ice, q. v., latt-en, q. v. LATHE (1), a machine for 'turning' wood and metal. (Scand.) 'Could turn his word, and oath, and faith, As many ways as in a lathe; Butler, Hudibras, b. iii. c. 2. ll. 375, 376. Cotgrave explains F. tournoir by 'a turner's wheel, a lathe or lare.' - Icel. löb (gen. sing. and nom. pl. labar), a smith's lathe. Perhaps the pl. labar accounts and nom. pl. doar), a sinitus state. Fernaps the pl. table accounts for the E. form lare. B. Pernaps löö stands for hlöö, from Alaba, to lade, load; see Lade (2). This is rendered probable by the occurrence of A. S. klæd-weogl (lit. lade-wheel), an engine or wheel of a well, to draw water (Bosworth); also of A. S. klæd-wheel of a well, to draw water (Bosworth); also of A. S. klæd-wheel of a well, to draw water (Bosworth); also of A. S. klæd-wheel of a well, to draw water (Bosworth); also of A. The transference of name from the water-wheel to the lathe was easy.

y. Some consider lathe cognate with G. lade, a chest, linen-press; this is from G. laden, to store up (E. lade), and leads to the same source.

LATHE (2), a division of a county. (E.) Kent is divided into five lather or portions; see Pegge's Alphabet of Kenticisms; E. D. S. rve tathes or portions; see regge's Alphanet of Kenticisms; E. D. S. LATITUDE, breadth, scope, distance of a place N. or S. of the equator. (F., -L.) M. E. latitude; Chaucer, C. T. 4433. -F. latitude.

- Lat. latitudo, breadth. - Lat. latus, broad; from an O. Lat. stlatus, appearing in stlata, a broad ship. Stlatus = stratus, spread out, from sterners, to spread abroad, stretch out. - STAR, to spread, strew; see Street, Strew, Star. Der. latitudin-al, from stem latitudinof the sb. latitudo; latitudin-ar-i-an, latitudin-ar-i-an-ism, latitudin-ous. LATTEN, a mixed metal, a kind of brass or bronze. (F., -G.?) This latten bilbo; 'Merry Wives, i. v. 165. M. E. latoun, laton; Chaucer, C.T. 701, 11557.—O.F. laton (13th cent., see Littré); mod. F. laiton. Cotgrave has: 'Laiton, lattin (metall).' Cf. Span. laton, latten, brass; Port. latão, brass; Ital. ottone (corrupted from lottone or lattons), latten, brass, yellow copper.

B. According to Diez, the O. F. laton is from latte, a lath (also spelt late, as in Cotgrave); because this metal was hammered into thin plates. This is rendered almost certain by the Ital. latta, tin, a thin sheet of iron tinned, answering in form to Low Lat. latta, a lath (occurring in Wright's Vocab. i. 235, col. 1, last line); so also Span. latas, laths, hoja de lata, tin-plate, tinned iron plate [where hoja = foil, leaf]; also Port. ata, tin plate, latas, laths.

y. If this be right, these words are of G. origin, viz. from G. latte, a lath; see Lath.

LATTER, another form of later; see Late. (E.)

LATTICE, a network of crossed laths. (F., -G.) Here, as in other words, the final -ce stands for s; a better form is lattis, as in Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 15. M. E. latis, latys; Wyclif, Prov. vii. 6. - F. lattis, lath-work (Hamilton). - F. latte, a lath. - G. latte, a lath;

LAVENDER, an odoriferous plant. (F., - Ital., -L.) M. E. lavendre, Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 37 (Stratmann); cf. Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 104. The r is an E. addition. - F. lavande, 'lavender;' Cot. -Ital. lavanda, lavender; we find also Ital. laventola, Span. lavandula, and (according to Mahn) Low Lat. lauendula. - Ital. lavanda, a washing; cf. Lat. lauandria, things to be washed (White). plant is so called from its use in washing, esp. from its being laid with fresh-washed linen. - Lat. lauanda, fem. of fut. pass. part. of lauare, to wash; see Lave.

LAVISH, adj., profuse, prodigal. (E.) c. The adj. is older than the verb, and the word is English; the suffix answers to A.S. -isc, not to the suffix -ish in flour-ish, which is of F, and L. origin. This is shewn by the co-existence of the North of E. lavy, lavish (Halliwell), where the suffix is the A.S. -ig (E. -y) as in ston-y. Lav-ish and lav-y mean 'profuse' or abundant, and are formed from the obsolete verb lave, to pour out. This verb being uncommon, the amples of the adj. are as follows. 'In al other thing so light and laves [are they] of theyr tong;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 250 b. Punishing with losse of life the lavesness of the toung;' Brende, Quintus Curtius, fol. 67 (R.) 'Although some lavicks linear artists. Quintus Curtius, fol. 67 (R.) 'Although some lauishe lippes, which like some other best;' Gascoigne, In Praise of Lady Sandes, 1. 7 (Poems, ed. Hazlitt, vol. i. p. 53). 'Lavish Nature; 'Spenser, Muiopotmos, l. 163. Spelt lavas in 'Romeus and Juliet,' p. 20 (Halliwell). Y. The verb lave, to pour out, lade out water, is given in Richardson; and occurs as late as in Dryden. 'A fourth, with labour, laves The intruding seas, and waves ejects on waves;' Dryden, tr. of Ovid, Metam. b. xi. 488; where the Lat. text has: *Egerit hic fluctus, sequorque refundit in sequor;' lib. xi. v. 488. 8. From M. E. laum, to draw water out of a well, to pour forth. "Examples of this rare word are as follow. 'And [Orpheus] spak and song [sang] . . . alle pat euer he had resceyued and laued oute of he noble swelles of hys modir Calliope; 'Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. section of aya modifications; Chaucer, vr. of Boethus, b. in. mer. 12, l. 3037. 'Mony ladde per forth-lep to laue & to kest' = many a lad leapt forward there to bale and cast out the water (in a description of a storm at sea); Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 154.

Note especially the following, which clearly shews the metaphorical use, and the source of the modern word. 'He lauez hys gyftez as water of dyche'—God lauistes his gifts as (freely as one would take) water out of a ditch; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 607; see the whole passage, which treats of God's profuseness of reward to the souls in heaven.

6. Not found in A. S., unless (which is very doubtful) it can be connected with the verb gelafian, to C. T. 14949.—F. lanatif, refresh, which only occurs once, vis. in Beowulf, ed. Grein, 2722; ing.—Lat. lanatus, pp. of this A.S. gelafian appearing to be the same as Du. lanen, G. Liax. Der. lanative-ness.

LAUNDRESS, a washerwoman. (F., = L.) Formerly launderess (see below), formed by adding the F. suffix -ess to the old from a Teut. base LABH; for this would answer to a Gk. base word launder or lavender, which had the same sense. M.E. launder, LAP, of which there seems to be good evidence in han-distr. to empty out, to purge, ham-afis, an emptying out, ham-reir, to lap, drain, suck out, ά-λαπ-άζειν, to exhaust. reason for connecting this word with the ordinary E. lave, to wash, though there may have been some confusion with it. Mr. Wedgwood's suggestion that lavish = O. F. lavace, an inundation (Cotgrave) does not help us; for (1) lavish is not a sb., and (2) this F. word does not at all explain the M. E. verb to lave. Der. lavish ly, lavish-ness, lavish-ment; also lavish, verb (Levins).

LAW, a rule of action, edict, statute. (E.) M.E. lawe (two syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 1167.—A.S. lagu, Grein, ii. 153; the compound forh-lagu (=loss of life, death) occurs in Beowulf, ed. Grein, 1. 2800; the simple form is not common. + O. Sax. lag (pl. Grein, 1. 2000; the simple form is not common. ← U. Sax. lag (pt. lagw), a statute, decree. + Icel. lbg (s. pl., but used in the sing, sense), a law; it is the pl. of lag, a stratum, order, due place, lit. 'that which lies' or is placed. + Swed. lag. + Dan. lov. Cf. Lat. lew (stem lēg), law; whence F. loi. β. The sense is 'that which lies' or is in due order; from Teut. base LAG, to lie; see Fick, iii. 261, i. 749. - European ✓ LAGH, to lie; see Lie (1). ¶ Not from the verb 'to lay,' since that is a longer, derivative, and more complex form as explained s. v. Law (1). Der lewful M. F. complex form, as explained s. v. Lay (1). Der. law-ful, M. E. laweful, Trevisa, iii. 193; law-ful-ly, M. E. lawefulliche, P. E. laweles, Trevisa, iii. 73; law-less-ly, lawless-ness; law-book, see Ormulum, l. 1953; law-suit; also law-yer, q. v. LAWN (1), a space of ground covered with grass in a garden. (F., -G. or C.) Properly an open space, esp. in a wood; a glade (see Glade). The spelling lawn is not old; the older spelling is invariably laund, which was still in use in the 18th century. 'Laund or Laum, in a park, plain untilled ground; 'Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.
Spelt laund in Shak. Venus, 813; 3 Hen. VI, iii. 1. 2. M. E. laund, Chaucer, C. T. 1691; (observe that Dryden substitutes laum in his Palamon and Arcite, l. 845); P. Plowman, C. i. 8.— O. F. lande, a land or laund, a wild, untilled, shrubby, or bushy plain; Cot. Cf. Ital. and Span. landa, a heath, tract of open country. disputed origin; Littré refers it to G. land, open country, the same word with E. land; see Land. Diez refers it to Bret. lann, a bushy shrub, of which the pl. lannon is only used to signify waste land, like the F. landes. Note also W. llaunt, a smooth hill, a lawn. Y. But does it not come to the same thing? The Bret. lann is also used in a variety of senses corresponding to the second and like it. variety of senses, corresponding to those of Gael. and Irish lann, and W. llan; one of these senses is land or territory, though most often used of an inclosure. Spurrell gives W. llan, 'an area, yard, church;' but the Gael. lann means 'an inclosure, a house, a church, a repository, land; and the Irish lann is 'land, a house, church, repository.' Perhaps, then, the Irish lann and E. land are cognate words.

LAWN (2), a sort of fine linen. (F.?-L.?) In Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 209, 220. In the third yeare of the raigne of Queene Elizabeth, 1562, beganne the knowledge and wearing of lawne and cambric, which was then brought into England by very small quantities; Stow, King James, an. 1604 (R.) The word is supposed to be a corruption of the F. linon (or Span. linon) which has the same sense. 'Linon, Linomple, a fine, thin, or open-waled linnen, much used in Picardie (where it is made) for womens kerchers and churchmen's surplesses; also, lawn; Cot. The F. linon is formed (with suffix -on) from F. lin, flax, linen. - Lat. linum, flax. See Linen. B. Or perhaps from Span. long, canvas, Port. long, sail-cloth (Wedgwood). Der. lawn, adj. LAWYER, one versed in the law, one who practises law. (E.) M. E. lawyer, lawier; P. Plowman, B. vii. 59. From law, with suffix yer. This suffix originated in the use of the suffix -ien in place of -en in causal verbs, and verbs derived from sbs. Thus, from the A. S. lufu, love, was formed the vb. lufigan or lufian, to love, which became lov-ien in M. E. Hence the sb. lov-ier or lov-yer, a lover, another form of lov-er or lov-ere, a lover; see the readings in the Retworth and Lansdowne MSS. in Chaucer, C.T. Group A, 1347 (or 1349, ed. Tyrwhitt). By analogy, from lawe, law, was formed law-ier or law-yer. So also bow-yer, one who uses a bow; saw-yer, one who uses a saw.

LAX, slack, loose, soft, not strict. (L.) In Milton, P. L. vii. 162. — Lat. lanus, lax, loose. — Lat. base LAG, to be weak; whence also languare, to be languid, with inserted n. From the same base is E. lag, a Celtic word. See Lag, Languid. Der. lan-ly, lanness; lan-i-ty, from F. lanité (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. lanitatem :

LAY (2), a song, lyric poem. (F., -C.) M. E. lai, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 199, l. 167; lay, P. Plowman, B. viii. 66.
O. F. lai, spelt lay in Cotgrave; cf. Prov. lais, a lay. β. The lay was regarded as specially belonging to the Bretons; Mr. Wedgwood cites from Marie de France: 'Les cunters ke jo sai verais Dunt li Breton unt fait, lor lais Vus cunterai assez briefment' - the tales which I know to be true, of which the Bretons have made their lays, I will briefly relate to you. See further in note 24 to Tyrwhitt's Introductory Discourse to the Cant. Tales; and see Chaucer, C. T. 11021, 11022. The word is not preserved in Breton, but it answers to W. llais, a voice, sound; Irish laoi, laoidh, a song, poem, hymn; Gael. laoidh, a verse, hymn, sacred poem. Gael. laoidh, a verse, hymn, sacred poem. v. These Celtic words may be akin to A. S. leóð, lióð, Icel. ljóð, O. H. G. liod, G. lied, a song; cf. Goth. liuthon, to sing, Rom. xv. 9. There is no

'A. S. ley, as pretended.

LAY (3), LAIC, pertaining to the laity. (F., -L., - Gk.)

M. E. lay; 'Lered men and lay' = learned men and laymen; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 171, last line. - O. F. lai, 'lay, secular, of Brunne, tr. of Langtott, p. 171, last line. — U. F. 1a1, lay, secular, of the laity; Got. — Lat. laieus, belonging to the people (whence the E. laie). — Gk. λαικός, belonging to the people. — Gk. λαίο (Ionic ληός, Attic λείο), the people. Root uncertain. Der. laie-al, layman; also lai-ty, used by Cotgrave (as cited above), formed with suffix -ty by analogy with words such as chasti-ty, quanti-ty, &c.

LAYER, a stratum, row, tier, bed. (E.) Layer, a bed or LAYER, a stratum, row, tier, bed. (E.) Layer, a bed or channel in a creek, where small oisters are thrown in to breed; among gardeners, it is taken for a young sprout covered with mould, in order to raise its kind; 'Kersey, ed. 1715. Lay-er = that which lays, hence a place for laying or propagating. It is extended to mean anything carefully laid in due order. See Lay (1). tinct from lair, which is from the intrans. verb to lie. Der. layer-ing.

LAZAR, a leper. (F., - L., - Gk., - Heb.) M. E. lazar, Chaucer, C. T. 242. - F. Lazare; see Littré. - Lat. Lazarus. - Gk. Aálopos, the name of the beggar in the parable; Luke, xvi. 20; contracted from the Heb. name Eleazar.—Heb. El'ázár, he whom God helps. Der. lazar-like, Hamlet, i. 5. 72; lazar-house, Milton, P. L. xi. 479; also lazar-etto, from Ital. lazzretto, a plague-hospital. LAZY, slow, sluggish, slothful. (F., -L.) In Shak. Temp. iii. 1. 28; spelt lassie in Spencer, Shep. Kal. July, 33; lazie in Minsheu, ed. 1627. We also find the verb to laze. 'S'endormir en sentinelle, to sleep when he hath most cause to watch; to laze it when he hath most need to looke about him;' Cot. Thus the suffix -y is the usual E. suffix, gen. added to sbs. (as in stan-y), but in rare instances to verbs and adjectives, as in shin-y, murk-y.

β. In the present case, laze is a corruption of the M. E. lasche, lache, lash, laish, vapid, insipid; see Prompt. Parv. p. 288, and note 1. It also meant 'slow,' as in Palsgrave, who has: 'lashe, not fast, lache.' The word has the authority of Chaucer, 'And yif he be slowe and astoned and lache, he lyueb as an asse ' = and if he be slow and stupid and lazy, he lives like an ass; tr. of Boethius, bk. iv. pr. 3, l. 3470. We also find that lazy in the North of England means 'bad, wicked;' Halliwell. This sense is noticed by Skinner, ed. 1671. All the uses of the word are explained by its F. original. — O. F. lasche (F. lache), 'slack, loose, wide, flagging, weak, faint, unlusty, languishing, remisse, lither, slow, cold, cowardly, faint-hearted, unmanly, effeminate, lewd, unworthy, base, treacherous; 'Cot. F. lâche = Ital. lasca, 'lazy, idle, sluggish, heavy;' Meadows. - Low Lat. lascus* (not found), a corrupted pronunciation of Lat. lascus (aleasus), by the interchange of se with cs or n, as in prov. E. ax = ask. See Lax.

More might be said in support of this etymology, which was suggested by Minsheu. Cf. Isle of Wight lass = lazy (Halliwell); M. E. lasken (= laschen), to relax, mitigate, Will. of Palerne, 050, Myrc's Parist Priest, 1736. The G. lässig, weary, is quite a different word, being from G. lass, weary, cognate with E. with E. late, which would have produced an E. lat-y. Of course we did not borrow words from German in the 16th century, except in very rare and peculiar instances, such as carouse. Der. lazi-ly,

LEA, LEY, LAY, a meadow. (E.) On the watry lea, i. e. plain; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 2. 16. Often spelt ley, leigh, in E. placenames, as in Brom-ley, Haw-ley, Had-leigh. Lay occurs in Beaum., and Fletcher, where it means unemployed; 'Let wife and land Lie

IAY (1), to cause to lie down, place, set. (E.) The causal of lay till I return; Love's Pilgrimage, A. iii. sc. 3 (Sanchio). M. E. lie, from which it is derived. M. (= E. fiel) is cognate with G. flok, so lee is cognate with prov. G. lok, a morass, bog, wood, forest (Flügel), which also appears in place-names, such as Hohen-loke, i. e. high leas. So also we find the Low G. loge, which in place-names near Bremen signifies a low-lying tract, a grassy plain; Bremen Wörterb. iii. 80. So also Water-loo = water-lea. Wörterb. iii. 80. So also Water-loo = water-lea. 7. The various Teut. forms furnish a primitive Teut. base LAUHA (Fick, iii. 275), from the Teut. root LUH, to shine. Further cognates occur in Lithuanian laukas, an open field (Nesselmann); Lat. lucus, a grove, glade, open space in a wood [derived a lucendo I]; and prob. Skt. loka, a shine. All are from the Aryan & RUK, to be bright, to shine; see Lucid. ¶ No connection whatever with 1-wight, to shine; space, the world, universe, from lock, to see, a derivative of ruck, to Again, this Teut. form is cognate with Russ. lepeste, a leaf, Lithuanian lápas, a leaf (Nesselmann), with which cf. Gk. Aéwos, a scale. The orig. sense of Russ. lepeste is a shred, strip, which thus furnishes also the orig. sense of E. leaf.

— A. S. hléne, lean; used of Pharaoh's lean kine; Gen. xli. 3.

β. The orig. sense was prob. leaning, bending, stooping; hence weak, thin, poor. Cf. Lat. decliuis, bending down, declining; estate decliuis, in the decline of life. See Lean (1). catate declinis, in the decline of life. See Lean (1). The occurrence of the initial a in A.S. hlæne at once connects it with the verb, and at the same time separates it from A. S. Idene, adj. transitory, which is connected with lend and loan; see Grein, ii. 163.

I.E.ARN, to acquire knowledge of. (E.) M. E. lernen, Chaucer, C. T. 310. — A. S. leornian, to learn; Grein, ii. 179. + O. Sax. linón [better linón], to learn; contracted form of lisnón. +O. H. G. lirnan, G. lernen. B. These are neuter (or passive) forms answering to a primitive Teut. form lis-n-on, in which LIS is the base, and -n- is a formative element used in certain verbs. Verbs ending in -nan have a passive or neuter signification, as in Goth. full-nan, to become full, and-bund-nan, to become unbound, af-lif-nan, to be left remaining, ga-kail-nan, to become whole, ga-wak-nan, to become awake; Skeat, Moeso-Goth. Glossary, p. 303. The change from primitive s to a later r is common; see Iron, Hare. γ . From the same base LIS was formed the causal verb LAISYAN, to make to know, to teach; appearing in Goth. laisjan, to teach, A.S. láran, Icel. læra, Du. læren, Swed. lära, Dan. lære, G. læren, to teach; of which the Icel. lara, Du. leren, and Swed. lara are also sometimes improperly used in the sense of 'learn;' cf. Dan. lare sig, to teach oneself, to learn. Similarly, the M. E. leren, to teach, was sometimes improperly used in the reflexive sense, just as the opposite mistake also perly used in the reneative sense, just as the opposite instake also occurs of the use of lears in the sense of 'teach;' see Ps. xxv. 4 (Prayer Book).

8. The base LIS probably meant 'to find out;' whence was formed the verb lifan, to permit = M. E. leuen, to perwite mit, grant (now obsolete), one of the most troublesome words in old authors, as it is frequently confounded by editors with M. E. leuen, of finding one's way; hence Goth. laists, a foot-track; see Last (2). to lend, and misprinted accordingly; see note to Chaucer's Prioress's this may have been borrowed from the English. The best-preserved from is that afforded us in Latin. Der. seven-leagued.

LEAGUER, a camp. (Du.) In All's Well, iii. 6. 27. — Du. leger, a lair; also, a camp, army. See Beleaguer. Doublet, lair.

Cf. G. ge-leiss, a track, rut; Lat. lira, a furrow. To the primitive sense we may perhaps refer A. S. leoran, to go away, depart (perhaps orig. to find one's way, go along); Grein, ii. 179. Der. learn-ed, orig. merely the pp. of the verb, learn-ed-less, learn-er, learn-ing.

LEASE (1), to let tenements for a term of years. (F., -L.) lease or let leas, locare, dimittere; the lease, letting, locatio, dimissio; Levins, ed. 1570. An O. F. law term; see Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691.—F. laisser, 'to leave, relinquish;' Cot. [Cf. Ital. lasciare, to quit.] Laisser is still used in the sense 'to part with' or 'let go' at a fixed price; see Littré. Another form of the word in O. F. was lesser, which accounts for E. less-or, less-ee; see Burguy, the (mrongly) gives lessen under lain which is really a life party. who (wrongly) gives lesser under laier, which is really a different word. Lat. laxars, to slacken, let go.—Lat. laxus, lax, slack; see Lax.

Not related to G. lassen, which—E. let; see Let(1). Der. lease-hold; also less-or (spelt leassor in Blount's Nomolexicon), signifying one who leases, with suffix or of the agent; less-ee (spelt leasses in Sone who leases, with sumx or of the agent; less-ee (spelt leases in Blount), signifying one to whom a lease is granted, with suffix -ee in place of O. F. -e (= Lat. -atus), the pp. ending with a passive sense.

LEASE(2), to glean. (E.) In Dryden, tr. of Theocritus, Idyl 3, 1. 72. M. E. lesen, P. Plowman, B. vi. 68.—A.S. lesen, to gather (Grein). + Du. lezen, to gather, read. + G. lesen. + Goth. lisan, to gather; pt. t. las. All from the base LAS, to pick out; whence also Lith lith the pick out. See Legend 4. also Lith. lesti, to pick out. See Legend.

LEASH, a thong by which a hawk or hound is held; a brace and a half. (F., = L.) 1. M. E. lees, leese, leece. 'Alle they renne in o lees' = they all run in one leash; Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale. De Septem Peccatis (Six-text, Group I, 387). And see Prompt. Parv. p. 291.—O. F. lesse (mod. F. laisse), 'a leash, to hold a dog in;' Cot. Cot. also gives: 'Laisse, the same as Lesse, also, a lease of hounds, &c.' Cf. Ital. lassio, a leash, band; also a legacy, will.—Low Lat. laxa, a lease, thong; lit. a loose rope. — Lat. laxa, fem. of laxus, loose, lax; see Lax. 2. The sense of 'three' arose from the application of the word to the number usually leashed together (Richardson); see

Shak. I Henry IV, ii. 4. 7. Der. leask, verb, Hen. V, prol. 7. LEASING, falsehood, lying. (E.) In Ps. iv. 2, v. 6; A. V. M. E. lesynge, lesinge; Chaucer, C. T. 1929.—A. S. leásing, leásung, a falsehood; Grein, ii. 179.—A. S. leás, false, orig. empty; the same word with A. S. leás, loose. Cf. Icel. lausung, falsehood; Du. loos, false; Goth. laus, empty, vain; lausa-waurds, loose-worded, speaking loose-and random words. Tit is 10. Sec. Loose-worded, speaking loose and random words, Tit. i. 10. See Loose.

LEAST; see under Less LEATHER, the prepared skin of an animal. (E.) M. E. lether, Chaucer, C. T. 3250. — A. S. lever, in comp. geweald-lever, lit. wield-leather, i. e. a bridle; Grein, i. 478. "Bulga, leper-coddas," i. e. leathern bags; Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 21, col. 2. + Du. leder. + Icel. levr. + Dan. læder. + Swed. läder. + G. leder. B. The Teut. base is LETHRA; Fick, iii. 278. Root unknown. Der. leather-n, M. E. letheren, P. Plowman, B. v. 192, formed with suffix -en, as in gold-en; also leather-y.

LEAVE (1), to quit, abandon, forsake. (E.) M. E. leuen (with u = v), pt. t. lafte, lefte, pp. laft, left; Chaucer, C. T. 8126, 14204, 10500.—A. S. láfan, Grein, ii. 162. The lit. sense is 'to leave a heritage, 'to leave behind one.—A. S. láf, a heritage, residue, remembrant A. S. láfan, to be remaining here to live the sense to live. nant. A. S. liftan, to be remaining, hence, to live; see Live. Or we may simply regard leave as the causal of live. Icel. leifa, to leave, leave a heritage; from leif, a leaving, patrimony; which from lifa, to be left, to live. + M. H. G. leiben, to leave; from M. H. G. leibe, O. H. G. leipa, that which remains; which from O. H. G. liban, lipan, only used in the comp. beliban, belipan, M. H. G. beliben, G. bleiben, to remain, be left. B. The Goth. form is laibjan, but the word is uncertain; we find, however, the sb. laiba, a remnant, from the verb liban, to live. We may also compare Swed. lemna, to leave;
Dan. levne, to leave. See further under Live. ¶ Fick (iii. 271) Dan. levns, to leave. See further under Live. ¶ Fick (iii. 271) confidently rejects the off-cited connection with Gk. Astress, to leave, and considers the similarity in form to be merely accidental. Curtius, ii. 61, thinks that he is probably right in this suggestion. The Gk. Actweev really answers to Lat. linquere, and to Goth. leihwan, G. leihen, to lend (orig. to let go). See Curtius, as cited. Der. leavings. LEAVE (2), permission, farewell. (E.) a. In the phr. to take leave, the word appears to be the same as leave, permission. The leave, the word appears to be the same as seave, permission. The origing sense was, probably, to take permission to go, hence, to take a formal farewell. Cf. to give leave. We may, then, remember that the sb. is entirely and always independent of the verb above. M.E. leue, leave (with u = v). By your leue with your permission; Chaucer, C. T. 13377. But taketh his leue; but takes his leave; id. 1219. — A. S. leaf, permission; Grein, i. 168;

Tale, ed. Skest, l. 1873. The orig. sense of leave is 'that which is times spelt ligier (see Richardson); and Howell goes so far as to acceptable or pleasing, and it is closely connected with A. S. leff, use a leger-book in the sense of a portable memorandum-book, appapleasing, lief, deep see Lief. We may further remark that the rently from thus mistaking the true sense. 'Some do use to have a pleasing, lief, dear; see I.lef. We may further remark that the A.S. getifum, (compounded of ge- and the vb. lifum just mentioned) answers to mod. E. be-lieve; see Believe. + Du. -lof, only in the comp. oor-lof, permission, ver-lof, leave. + Icel. leyfi, leave; leyfa, to permit; cf. also lefan, permission, lob (1) praise, (2) license, permission. + Dan. lov. praise, leave. + Swed. lof, praise, leave. + G. ur-laub, leave, furlough; ver-laub, leave, permission; er-lauben, to permit; lob, praise. See Furlough.

I.EAVEN, the ferment which makes dough rise. (F.,-L.) Not a good spelling; leven would be better. M. E. levain, levein (with u for v). 'He is the levein of the brede' [bread]; Gower, C. A. i. 2014. Cf. Prompt. Parv. D. 300. = F. levain, 'leaven;' Cot. = Lat.

for v). 'He is the leusin of the brede' [bread]; Gower, C. A. i. 294; cf. Prompt. Parv. p. 300. = F. levain, 'leaven;' Cot. = Lat. leuamen, an alleviation, mitigation; but also used (as here) in the orig. sense of 'that which raises.' Ducange records the sense of 'leaven' for Lat. leuamenium, a parallel form to leuamen. = Lat. leuare, to raise. See Lever. Similarly, Ital. lievito, leaven, is from Ital. lievare, to raise (= Lat. leuare). Der. leaven, verb.

LECHER, a man addicted to lewdness. (F.,=G.) In early use. M. E. lechur, lechour; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 53, l. 27; Ancren Riwle, p. 216; Rob. of Glouc. p. 119. = O. F. lecheor (Burgny). lescheur, lecheur, lecheur (Cotgrave). lit one who licks up. = O. F.

(Burguy), lescheur, lecheur (Cotgrave), lit. one who licks up. - O. F. lecher, mod. F. lecher, to lick. O. H. G. lecchon, leckin, G. lechen, to lick; cognate with E. Lick, q. v. Der. lecher-ous, P. Plowman, C. ii. 25; lecher-ous-ly, lecher-ous-ness; lecher-y, M. E. lecherie, leccherie, Holi Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 11, 1. 3.

LECTERN, LECTURN, a reading-desk. (Low Lat., - Gk.)

Leterone, lectorne, lectrone, lectrun, deske, Lectrinum; Prompt. Parv. p. 299. Spelt lecterne in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Corrupted from Low Lat. lectrinum, a reading desk, pulpit; an extension from Low Lat. lectrum, a pulpit, in Isidore of Seville. - Gk. λέκτρον, lit. a couch; hence a rest, support for a book. Akin to $\lambda \ell \chi o \epsilon$, a couch, bed; from European base LAGH (Gk. $\lambda \epsilon \chi$ -), to lie, whence also E. lie; see Lie (1). Cf. Lat. lectus, a couch. has no connection with lecture, though much resembling it in form and present use. The F. form is lutrin.

LECTION, a reading, portion to be read. (L.) 'Other copies and various lections;' Milton, A Defence of the People of England. (R.) Formed, by analogy with F. words in -ion, from Lat. lectionem, acc. of lectio, a reading. - Lat. lectus, pp. of legere, to gather, read; see Legend. Der. lection-ary; and see below. Doublet, lesson.

LECTURE, a discourse, formal reproof. (F.,-L.) 'Wherof

oure present lecture speaketh; 'Sir T. More, p. 1301 c. – F. lecture, 'a lecture, a reading;' Cot. – Lat. lectura, fem. of fut. part. of legere, to read; see Legend. Der. lecture, verb, lectur-er, lecture-ship. LEDGE, a slight shelf, ridge, small moulding. (Scand.) In Norfolk, a bar of a gate, or stile, of a chair, table, &c., is termed a lecture serving to Each. ledge, according to Forby. A door made of three or four upright boards, fastened by cross-pieces, is called a ledger-door; a ledger is a horizontal slab of stone, a horizontal bar, and is also called a ligger (Halliwell). A ligger is 'a lier,' that which lies, from A. S. liegan, to lie; and ledge is from the same source. The word is, however, rather Scand. than E. 'Ledge of a dore, barre. Ledge of a shelfe, appy [appui], estaye;' Palsgrave. [The word legge in Prompt. Parv. p. 293 is probably unrelated.]

B. Of Scand. origin; allied to Norweg. logg, the lowest part of a vessel, pl. legger, and written lagge when used in composition; Swed. lagg, the rim of a cask; Icel. logg, the ledge or rim at the bottom of a cask. We may also note Norweg. lega, a lying, couch, lair, bed, a support upon which anything rests. Both logg and lega are from Norweg. liggia = Dan. ligge, to lie; Aasen. See Lie (1).

LEDGER, a book in which a summary of accounts is preserved.

(Du.) Formerly called a ledger-book; Kersey, ed. 1715. The word had other meanings, most of them involving the sense of 'lying down.' Thus a ledger was a horizontal slab of stone (Halliwell); leger ambassadors were such as remained for some time at a foreign court; see leiger in Shak. Meas. iii. 1. 59. A ledger-bait was a bait that was 'fixed or made to rest in one certain place;' I. Walton, Angler, pt. i. c. 8. 'A rusty musket, which had lien long leger in his shop;' Fuller's Worthies, London (R.) See further in Richardson.—Du. legger, 'one that lyes down' (Sewel); hence mod. Du. legger, the nether mill-stone [answering to E. ledger, a horizontal] slab of stone]. — O. Du. leggen, to lie, once in common use, though the true form is liggen, and the proper sense of leggen is to lay. We know how these words are constantly confused in English. 'Te bed leggen, to ly a-bed. Neer leggen, to lie down. Waar legt hy t'huys, where does he ly, or lodge?' Sewel. See Lie (1). Thus a ledger-book is one that lies always ready in one place.

The etymology of the word was ill-understood, and it was confused with O. F. legier, light; see Ledger-line. Hence it was some xxiii, c. 2. A pl. sb., from a sing. lee, not used. — F. lie, 'the lees' rently from this mistaking the true sense. Some do use to nave a small leger-booke fairely bound up table-book-wise, i.e. like a memorandum-book; Howell, Forraine Travell, sect. iv, ed. Arber, p. 27.

LEDGER-LINE, the same as Leger-line, q.v. (F., -L.)

Line, a sheltered place, shelter; part of a ship away from the wind. (Scand.) M. E. lee, shelter. 'We lurked vndyr lee,' we lay hid under shelter; Mort Arthure, ed. Brock, l. 1446. A-lee = on the lee; Deposition of Rich. II., ed. Skeat, iv. 74. The word and its use are both Scand.; the true E. word is lew, a shelter, still in use use are both Scand; the true E. word is iew, a shelter, still in use provincially; see Halliwell.—Icel. hlé, lee, used (as in England) only by seamen; sigla à hlé, to stand to leeward; hlé-borð, the lee-side. + Dan. la; Swed. lä. + Du. lij. + A. S. hleó, hleow, a covering, protection, shelter; Grein, ii. 82. Hence prov. E. lew, a shelter, also, as adj., warm; see Lukewarm. + O. Sax. hleo, a protection, covering. And cf. Goth. hlija, a tent, tabernacle.

Goth. stija, a tent, tabernacie. p. Annea to A.S. hleo's, hleow's, a shelter (Grein, ii. 83); the same word as prov. E. lewis, shelter, warmth (Halliwell). With these forms we may compare Icel. hly, warmth, hlær, hlyr, warm, hlyja, to shelter, hlána, to thaw. From a Teut. base HLAWA, warm; whence also G. lew, tasw. From a lett. base the pronunciation lew-ard, for leeward. Der. lee-shore, lee-side, lee-way. Also lee-ward, allied to O. Du. lywaard, lee-ward (Sewel); the mod. Du. form being lijwaarts.

Interpolar (Sewerl); the mod. Du. form being lipwaaris.

LEBCH (1), a physician. (E.) In Shak. Timon. v. 4. 84. M. E. lecke, Chaucer, C. T. 15524.—A. S. léce, a physician; Matt. ix. 12; Lu. iv. 23. Connected with A. S. lécnian, to heal; Grein, ii. 150.+ Icel. læknir, a physician; lækna, to cure, heal. + Dan. læge, a physician; from læge, to heal. + Swed. läkare, a physician; from läka, to heal. + Goth. leikeis, lekeis, a physician, Lu. iv. 23; connected with leikinon, lekinon, to heal. + O. H. G. lákki, lácki, a physician; connected with O. H. G. lákkinon, to heal, M. H. G. láchenen, to employ remedies. M. H. G. láchenen, & We. marchy. to employ remedies, M. H. G. láchen, a remedy. β. We may further compare Irish and Gael. leigh, a physician, leigheas, a cure, Root unknown.

LEECH (2), a blood-sucking worm. (E.) M. E. lecke, Prompt. Parv. p. 291.—A.S. lece; we find 'Sanguisuga, vel hirudo, lece in Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Insectorum. Lit. 'the healer;' and the same word as the above.

LEECH (3), LEACH, the border or edge of a sail at the sides. (Scand.) 'Leech, the edge of a sail, the goring;' Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. 'The leetch of a sail, vox nautica;' Skinner, ed. 1671. - Icel. lik, a leech-line; Swed. lik, a bolt-rope, stdende liken, the leeches;

Dan. lig, a bolt-rope, staanade lien, the leeches; Dan. lig, a bolt-rope, staanade lie, a leech. + O. Du. lyken, a bolt-rope (Sewel).

LEEK, a kind of onion. (E.) M. E. leek, Chaucer, C. T. 3877;

P. Plowman, B. v. 82. - A. S. lede; in Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Herbarum. + Du. look. + Icel. laukr. + Dan. lög. + Swed. lök. + G. lauch.

β. All from Teut. base LAUKA, a leek (Fick, iii. 200). Root unknown; but answering in form to LUK, to lock. Cf. W. liviau, barbs plants.

llysiau, herbs, plants. Der. gar-lic, char-lock, hem-lock.

LEER, a sly or arch look. (E.) The verb is a later development from the sb., which is an old word. The M. E. lere means the check, also the face, complexion, mien, look. 'A loveli lady of lere' - a lady of lovely mien; P. Plowman, B. i. 3. It was orig. almost always used in a good sense, and with adjectives expressive of beauty, but in Skelton we find it otherwise in two passages. Her lothely lere Is nothing clere, But vgly of chere' = her loathsome look is not at all clear, but ugly of aspect; Elynoure Rummynge, l. 12. 'Your lothesum lere to loke on;' 2nd Poem against Garnesche, l. 5. Shakespeare has it in two senses; (1) the complexion, aspect, As You Like It, iv. 1. 67, Titus Andron. iv. 2. 119; (2) a winning look, Merry Wives, i. 3. 50. At a later period it is generally used in a sinister sense. — A. S. hleór, the cheek; hence the face, hook, Grein, ii. 85. + O. Sax. Allor, the cheek; O. Du. lier (Oudemans). + Icel. klyr, the cheek.

B. The orig. sense may have been 'slope,' from the Teut. base HLI, to lean; see Lean (1). Fick (iii. 88) supposes A. S. kleor = Teut. HLIURA = HLIWRA, so that the base would be HLI, not HLU. ¶ The Tauchnitz Du. Dict. gives loeren, 'to peep, peer, leer, lurk.' This may mislead, as I believe two verbs are here mixed together, viz. loren, 'to peep, peer, leer;' and loeren, 'to lurk.' Of these, the former may very well be cognate with E. leer; but the latter is clearly cognate with Dan. lure, Swed. lura, to lurk, and has no connection with the other word. Moreover, the former may be related to Lower (2); whilst the latter is perhaps related to Lure or Lurk. Der. leer, verb, of which an early use is in Shak. L. L. v. 2, 480, 2 Hen. IV, v. 2, 7, Troil. v. i. 97, only in the sense 'to simper,' to give a winning glance.

LEES, dregs of wine. (F.) In A. V. Isa. xxv. 6, Jer. xiviii. 11.

'Verily the less of wine are so strong;' Holland, tr. of Piiny, b.

liquor; Cot. Of unknown origin; the Low Lat. form is lia; the phr. 'fecla sive lias uini' occurs in a MS. of the 10th century (Littré).

LEFT, a term applied to the (usually) weaker hand. (E.) M. E. left, lift, luft. Spelt left. Chaucer, C. T. 2955; lift, Will. of Palerne, 2961; luft, P. Plowman, A. ii, g. 7; Layamon, 24461. The word may be considered as E., being certainly of O. Low G. origin. It can scarcely be found in A. S., which has the term winster instead; see Crein ii 216. We do however find 'inna' left' in a Gloss (Mone.) Grein, ii. 716. We do, however, find 'inanis, left,' in a Gloss (Mone, Quellen, i. 443), and the same MS. has senne for synne (sin); so that ieft may stand for lyft, with the sense of 'worthless' or 'weak.' + N. Friesic leeft, leefter kond (left hand); Outzen. + O. Du. left, left (Oudemans); Kilian also gives the form lucht, which does not, however, seem to be the original one. β . The t is a later suffix, and the base appears to be LUB, perhaps related to Lop, q. v. γ . It is difficult to trace any connection with Russ. lientil, left, lievsha, the left hand; Lat. lenus, Gk. $\lambda aubs$ (for $\lambda a_i f b_i$), left, which are from a left $\lambda a_i f b_i$. lett hand; Lat. Lauus, Gk. Lauke (for Laif-is), left, which are from a base LAIWA.

Certainly not connected with the verb to leave, of which the M. E. pp. was (usually) laft. For A. S. lyft, see lyft-idd, palsy, Cockayne's Leechdoms, ii. 338. Der. left-handed, -ness. LEG, one of the limbs by which animals walk, a slender support. (Scand.) M. E. leg (pl. legges), Chaucer, C. T. 593; Layamon, l. 1876 (later text, the earlier text has sconten = shanks). - Leel. legger, leaves the legger text has sconten = shanks).

calf of the leg. + Swed. lägg, the calf or bone of the leg. $\beta$. Referred by Fick (iii. 262) to the Europ. base LAK, to bend; this is unsatisfactory, as the Icel. word seems to involve the notion of stiffness; cf. Icel. hand-leggr (lit. hand-stem), the fore-arm, arm-leggr, the upper-arm. Der. leg-less, legg-ings.

LEGACY, a bequest of personal property. (L.) M.E. legacie.

'Her legacie and lamentationn;' Henrysoun, Complaint of Crescide, and st. from end. Cf.O.F. legal, 'a legacy;' Cot. A coined word (as if from a Lat. legatia) from Lat. legatum, a legacy, bequest; orig. neut. of pp. of Lat. legare, to appoint, bequeath. - Lat. leg-, stem of les, law. See Logal. Der. legacy-hunter; also legat-ee, a barbar-ously formed word, coined by adding the F. suffix -é (= Lat. -atus), denoting the pp., to the stem of Lat. legal-us, pp. of legare.

T.E.G.A.I., pertaining to the law. (F., -L.) In Minsheu's Dict., ed. 1627. — F. legal, 'legall, lawful;' Cot. — Lat. legalis, legal. — Lat. leg., stem of lex, law, which is cognate with E. law. B. The lit. sense is 'that which lies,' i. e. that which is settled or fixed, as in the Gk. phrases of νόμοι of κείμενοι, the established laws, κείται νόμος, the law is fixed, from κείμαι, to lie. From European base LAGH, to lie, whence also Gk. Aéxos, a bed, Lat. lec-tus, a bed. See Fick, i. 748, 749. See Law, and Lie (1). Der. legal-ly, legal-ise; legal-i-ty, from F. legalité, 'lawfulness' (Cot.), which from Low Lat. acc. legalitatem. And see legacy, legate, allege, delegate, Lat. acc. tegatitatem. And see legacy, legate, allege, delegate, relegate, college, colleague, privilege, &c.

LEGEND, a marvellous or romantic story. (F.,—L.) M. E. legande, Chaucer, C. T. 3143; P. Plowman, C. xii. 206. — O. F. legande, 'a legand, a writing, also the words that be about the edge of a piece of coyne;' Cot. — Low Lat. leganda, as in Aurea leganda — the Golden Legand. — Lat. leganda, neut. pl. of fut. pass. part. of legare (pp. lectus), to read, orig. to gather, collect. + Gk. λέγειν, to collect, gather, speak, tell.

β. From a base LAG, to gather; whence, probably, by the extension of the Teutonic form lak to laks and subsequent loss of k (producing las), we have also Goth. lisan, to collect; see Legase (2). Cf. also Lithuanian lesti, to gather, pick up grains as birds do, cited by Cartius, i. 454; whom see. Der. legand-a-ry; also (from Lat. leg-ere) leg-ible, leg-ibl-y, leg-ible-asss, leg-i-bili-ty; together with numerous other words such as legion, lecture, lesson, lection, col-lect, de-light, di-lig-ent, e-leg-ant, e-lect, e-lig-ible, intel-lect, intel-lig-ent, meg-lect, meg-lig-ent, re-col-lect, se-lect, e-lig-ible, intel-lect, intel-lig-ent, meg-lect, meg-lig-ent, re-col-lect, se-lect, LEGATEE; see under Legacy.

F. legion, a Roman legion; Cot. - Lat. legionem, acc. of legio, a Roman legion body of troops of from 100 to 6000 mm - Laters to legion, a body of troops of from 4200 to 6000 men.—Lat. legere, to gather, select, levy a body of men. See Legend. Der. legion-ar-y.

LEGISLATOR, a law-giver. (L.) In Bacon, Life of Henry VII, ed. Lumby, p. 69, l. 30. — Lat. legis-lator, lit. proposer of a law. ed. Lumby, p. 69, l. 30. — Lat. legis-lator, lit. proposer of a law.—
Lat. legis, gen. case of lex, a law; and lator, a proposer of a law, lit.
a carrier, bearer, from latum, to bear, used as supine of ferre, to bear, but from a different root. β. For Lat. lex, see Legal.
Lat..latum stands for tlatum, from √ TAL, to lift; see Tolerato.
Der. legislat-ive, legislat-ure; hence was at last developed the word to legislate; whence also legislat-ion. And see Legist.

LEGIST, one skilled in the laws. (F.,—L.) 'A great iuryst and legyst;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. sii. c. 210 (R.) = O. F. legists in use in the 12th century: mod. F. legists: Litté. = Lo.

legiste, in use in the 13th century; mod. F. legiste; Littré. - Low Lat. legista, a legist. - Lat. leg-, stem of lex, law; with (Gk.) suffix -ista. See Legal.

LEGITIMATE, lawful, lawfully begotten, genuine, authorised. (L.) In Shak. K. John, i. 116.-Low Lat. legitimatus, pp. of legitimare, to declare to be lawful. - Lat. legitimus, pertaining to law, legitimate; formed with suffix -timus (Aryan -ta-ma) from legi-, crude form of lex, a law; see Legal. Der. legitimats-ly, legitimac-y, legitim-ist (from legitim-us).

LEGUME, a. pod. (F., -L.) A botanical term. In Todd's Johnson. Formerly, the Lat. legumen was used, as in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. - F. légume, pulse; in botany, a pod. - Lat. legumen, pulse, bean-plant; applied to that which can be gathered or picked, as opposed to crops that must be cut. - Lat. legere, to gather; see Der. legumin-ous, from stem legumin- (of legumen). Legend.

LEISURE, freedom from employment, free time. (F., - L) M. E. leyser, leysere; Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 1, 172; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 229, l. 1. — O. F. leisir (Burguy), later loisir (Cot.), leisure. The O. F. leisir was orig. an infin. mood, signifying 'to be permitted;' Littré. - Lat. lieëre, to be permitted. See Licence. Der. leisure-ly. We may note the bad spelling; it Should be leiser or leiser.

LEMAN, LEMMAN, a sweetheart, of either sex. (E.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 2. 172; Tw. Nt. ii. 3. 26. M.E. lemman, Havelok, 1283; older form leofmon, Ancren Riwle, p. 90, l. 14.—A. S. leof, dear; and mann, a man or woman. See Lief and Man.

LEMMA, in mathematics, an assumption. (L., - Gk.) Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. - Lat. lemma. - Gk. λημμα, a thing taken; in logic, a premiss taken for granted. - Gk. εί-λημμαι, perf. pass. of λαμβάνειν, to take (base λαβ-). - A RABH, to take, seize; cf. Skt.

rabh, to take, seize (Vedic).

LEMING, LEMING, a kind of Norwegian rat. (Norwegian.) Described as 'the leming or Lapland marmot' in a translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792. Not in Todd's Johnson. - Norweg. lemende; also used in many various forms, as læmende, limende, lemende, lömende, lemming, lemelde, &c.; see Aasen. – Swed. lemel. There is also, according to Ihre (Lexicon Lapponicum), a Lapp form, loumek.

B. Origin obscure; Aasen thinks that the word means 'laming,' i.e. spoiling, very destructive, and connects it with Norweg. lemja, to palsy, strike, beat, Icel. lemja, to beat, thrash, maim, disable, Dan. lamme, to paralyse; cf. slang E. lam, to beat. See Lame.

Y. But perhaps it is of Lapp erigin, after all.
LEMON, an oval fruit, with acid pulp. (F., - Pers.) Formerly spelt (more correctly) limon; as in Levins, ed. 1570. — F. limon, 'a lemmon; '.Cot.—Pers. limun, limuna, a lemon, citron; Richardson's Pers. Diet., p. 1282, col. 1. Cf. Turk. limun; Arab. laimun, a lemon; Palmer's Pers. Diet. col. 517. Der. lemon-ade, from F.

LIEMUR, a nocturnal mammal. (L.) From its habit of going about at night, it has been nicknamed 'ghost' by naturalists. - Lat.

 \mathbb{N}_{i} lemur, a ghost.

LEIND, to let for hire, allow the use of for a time. (E.) The nmai a is excrescent, as in sound from F. son. M. E. lenen, pt. t. lenede, lende, lende, lende, pp. lened, lend, lent. Thus the mod. final d was final d is excrescent, as in sound from F. son. M.E. lenes Manual.

LEGER-LINE, LEDGER-LINE, in music, a short line added above or below the staff. (F.,-L.). [On the word line, see hire lends' - he lent [granted] her this land; Layamon, 1.228.—A.S.

K. Lear, iii. 4. 113.

LENGTH, extent, the quality of being long. (E.) M. E. lengthè (two syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 83, 4428. — A. S. lengti; the dat. lengue occurs in the A.S. Chron. an. 1122. Formed with suffix out. tangos occurs in the A.S. Chron. an. 1122. Formed with sumx of and vowel-change of a to e from A.S. lang, long. + Du. langte, from lang. + Dan. langde, from lang. + Swed. längde, from läng. + Icel. langde, from langr. See Long. Der. langthen, in which the final en has a causal force, though this peculiar formation is conventional and unoriginal; in the M.E. langthen, the final en merely denoted the infinitive mood, and properly produced the verb to length, as in Shak. Passionate Pilgrim, I. 210. Also length-y, length-i-ly, length-iness; length-wise, length-ways.

LENIENT, mild, merciful. (L.) In Milton, Samson, 659. - Lat.

soft, mild. See Lenity, Lithe. Der tenient-ly, leniency.

LENITY, mildness, clemency. (L.) In Shak. Hen. V, iii. 2. 26, 6. 118. Formed, by analogy with F, words in -ify (F. -ite), from Lat. lenitatem, acc. of lenitas, softness, mildness. — Lat. leni-, crude form of lenis, soft, gentle, mild; with suffix -tas. Root uncertain; but re-lent and lithe are related words. Der. lenit-ive = O. F. lenitif, a 'lenitive' (Cot.), as if from a Lat. lenitivus. And see Lenient.

LENS, a piece of glass used for optical purposes. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. So called, from the resemblance in shape to the seed of a lentil, which is like a double-convex lens. See Lentil.

Der lenticul-ar, from Lat. lenticula, a little lentil.

LENT, a fast of forty days, beginning with Ash Wednesday. (E.) The fast is in the spring of the year, and the old sense is simply 'spring.' M. E. lenten, lent; spelt lenten, P. Plowman, B. xx. 359. — A. S. lencten, the spring; Grein, ii. 167. + Du. lente, the spring. + G. lenz, spring; O. H. G. lenzin, lengizen.

$\begin{align*} \begin{align*} \begin{ to be derived from A.S., Du., and G. lang, long, because in spring the days lengthen; this is possible, but not certain. Der. lenten, adj., Hamlet, ii. 2. 329; here the suffix -en is not adjectival (as in gold-en), but the whole word is the M. E. lenten fully preserved; so also Lenten-tide = A. S. lencten-tid, spring-time, Gen. xlviii. 7.

M. E. lentil; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 1488. - O. F. lentille, 'the Jintle or lentill;' Cot. - Lat. lenticula, a little lentil; double dimin. (with suffix -cu-l-) from lenti-, crude form of lens, a lentil. See Lens. Der. lenticul-ar, resembling a lens or lentil. LENTISK, the mastic-tree. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. - F. lentisque, 'the lentiske or mastick-tree;' Cot. - Lat. lentiscum, lentiscus, a mastic-tree; named from the clamminess of the resin yielded by it. -Lat. lenti-, crude form of lentus, tenacious, sticky, pliant. See Relent and Lithe.

LEO, a lion. (L., -Gk.) As the name of a zodiacal sign; Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, i. 8. 2. We even find A.S. leo, Grein, ii. 171.—Lat. leo, a lion; see Idon.

Dev. leon-ine — F.

leonin (Cot.), from Lat. leon-in-us, from leon-, stem of leo.

LEOPARD, the lion-pard, an animal of the cat kind. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. leopard, leopart, P. Plowman, B. xv. 293. -O. F. leopard, 'a leopard, or libbard, a beast ingendred between a lion and a panther; Cot. - Lat. leopardus, a leopard. - Gk. λεόπαρδος, λεοντόπαρδος, a leopard; supposed to be a mongrel between a pard or panther and a lioness; Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. viii. c. 16. — Gk. λεό-, λεοντο-, shortened form or crude form of λέον, a lion; and πάρδος, See Lion and Pard.

LEPER, one afflicted with leprosy. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) The form of the word is founded on a mistake; the word properly means the disease itself (2 Kings, v. 11), now called leprosy; the old term for disease itsey (2 kings, v. 11), now called teprosy; the old term and the lepre of him was clensid; 'Wyclif, Matt. viii. 2, 3. This confusion first appears (perhaps) in Henrysoun's Complaint of Crescide, where we find 'after the lawe of lepers,' l. 64; 'the lepre-folk,' l. 110, 'a lepre-man,' l. 110, &c.; see Richardson. = F. lepre, 'a leprosie;' Cot. — Lat. lepra.—Gk. λέπρα, leprosy. So called because it makes the skin, scaly, = Gk. λέπρα, scaly, scabby, rough. = Gk. λέποε, a scale, back in the scale of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of the back of skin, scaly.—Gk. Airpos, scaly, scabby, rough.—Gk. Airos, a scale, husk, rind.—Gk. Airsos, to strip, peel, take off the husk or rind.

scale.+Russ. lupits, to scale, peel, bark. + Lithuanian lipti, to scale, flay; cited by Fick, i. 751.

B. All from European base LAP, to scale, strip off the rind or husk (Fick, as above). See Leaf, Lapdary, Limpet.

Der. leprous—O. F. lepreus, from Lat. leprosus, adj.; whence was coined the sb. lepros-y, Matt. viii. 3.

TEPTDOPTERA, s. pl., a certain order of insects. (Gk.)

Modern, and scientific. Used of the butterfly, and other insects.

LETHARGY, heavy slumber, great dulness. (F.,—L.,—Gk.)

Whose from wings are covered with very line season. Coince from (Gk. Aeriδo-, crude form of λενίο, a scale; and wrepó, pl. of πτερόν, a wing. Λενίο is from λένειν, to scale (see Leprosy); and πτερόν = wer-ερόν, cognate with E. feather, from √PAT, to fly; see Tractor—wer-refor, cognate with E. feather, from ✓ PAT, to fly; see Feather, Pen. Der. lepidopter-ous.

LEPORINE, pertaining to the hare. (L.) Modern, and scientific. Either from F. leporin, 'of or belonging to a hare' (Cot.), or more probably directly from Lat. leporinus, with same sense.—Lat. leporin, crude form of lepus, a hare. See Leveret.

LEPROSY; see under Leper. (F.,—L.,—Gk.)

LESION, an injury, wound. (F.,—L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—F. lesion, 'hurt, wounding, harme;' Cot.—Lat. lesionem, acc. of lesio. an injury. — Lat. lessus. DD. of lexiers, to hurt. Root unceretain. Der. (from Lat. læsus, pp. of læders, to hurt.

Root uncertain. Der. (from Lat. læders), col-lide, e-lide, il-li-sion.

LESS, smaller. (E.) Used as compar of little, but from a different root; the coincidence in the first letter is accidental. M.E. lesse. lasse, adj., les, adv. 'The lesse lune' = the less love; Ancren Riwle, p. 92, l. 7, Les as adv., id. p. 30, l. 7.—A. S. læssa, adj., læs, adv.; Grein, ii. 164. + O. Fries, læssa, less.

B. Læssa stands for læs-ra, by assimilation, or we may regard læs-sa as preserving the orig. s of the comparative suffix; see Worse. It is the compar. form from a base LAS, feeble, which appears in Goth lasius, feeble (2 Cor. x. 10), and in Icel. lasium, feeble, ailing, lasna, to become feeble, to decay.

LEAST, the superl. form, is the M. E. leste, laste, adj., P. Plowman, B. iii. 24; lest, adv., Gower, C. A. i. 153, l. 5. - A.S. læsast, læsest (whence læst by contraction), Grein, ii. 164; from the same base las-, feeble, with the usual suffix -ast or -est.+O. Fries. lerest (for lesest), leist. See Koch, Eng. Gramm. i. 448; March, A.S. Gramm. p. 65. Der. less, ab.; less-er, a double comparative, Gen. i. 16; less-en, vb., M. E. lessen, Sir Gawain and the Grene Knight, l. 1800, lessin (for lessen), Prompt. Parv., p. 298, where the suffix en appears to be merely the suffix of the M. E. infin. mood retained for greater distinctness. And see lest.
-LESS, suffix. (E.) A. S. -leás, the same word as Loose, q.v.
LESSEE, LESSOR; see under Lease.

LESSON, a reading of scripture, portion of scripture read, a task, lecture, piece of instruction. (F., -L.) M. E. lesson, Chaucer, C. T. 9069; spelt lescun, Ancren Riwle, p. 282, l. 3. - F. legen. - Lat. lectionem, acc. of lectio, a reading. - Lat. lectus, pp. of legere, to read; see Legend. Doublet, lection.

LEST, for fear that, that not. (E.) Not for least, as often errone-ously said, but due to less. It arose from the A. S. equivalent expresously said, but due to less. It arose from the A. S. equivalent expression by less be, as in the following sentence. 'Nelle we bas race na leng teon, by less be hit eow æpryt bynce' — we will not prolong this story farther, lest it seem to you tedious; Sweet's A. S. Reader, p. 94, l. 211. Here by less be literally — for the reason less that, where by (= for the reason) is the instrumental case of the def. article; les = less; and δe (= that) is the indeclinable relative. β. At a later period by was dropped, less became les, and less be, coalescing, became one word lesthe, easily corrupted to leste, and lastly to lest, for ease of pronunciation. The form leste occurs in the Ancren Riwle. p. 58, l. 12, whilst the older expression bi les be occurs in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 117, l. 2 from bottom; so that the word took its corrupted form about the beginning of the 13th century. See Nevertheless.

LET (1), to allow, permit, suffer, grant. (E.) M. E. leten (with one t), a strong verb; pt. t. lat, let, leet; pp. laten, leten, lete. In one 1), a strong vero; pt. t. tat, tes, teet; pp. taten, teten, tete. in Chaucer, C. T. 128, 510, Tyrwhitt misprints lette for leet, and in 1. 4344, letten for leten. — A. S. létan, létan, to let, allow; pt. t. lét, let, pp. létten; Grein, ii. 165. + Du. laten, pt. t. liet, pp. gelaten. + Icel. láta, pt. t. lét, pp. láten. + Dan. lade, pt. t. lod, pp. ladet. + Swed. láta, pt. t. lät, pp. låten. + Goth. letan, pt. t. lailot, pp. letans. + G. lassen, pt. t. liets, pp. gelassen.

B. The Teut. form is LATAN, from a base LAT, to let, let go, whence also E. Late, and w. Fick. iii. 262. Cf. Lith léidmi I let (hase LAT). And see q:v. Fick, iii. 263. Cf. Lith. leidmi, I let (base LAD). And see Let (2).

LET (2), to hinder, prevent, obstruct. (E.) M. E. letten (with double t), a weak verb. 'He letted nat his selawe for to see' = he hindered not his fellow from seeing; Chaucer, C. T. 1804. — A. S. lettan, to hinder; also gelettan; Grein, ii. 168. A causal verb, with the sense to make late, just as hinder is derived from the hind in behind. — A.S. lat, slow; see Late. + Du. letten, to impede; from

F. laitue, lettered, older form of laictue*, laitue*, lettered. tuce. - Lat. lactuca, lettuce; named from its juiciness; Varro, De Lingua Latina, v. 104. - Lat. lact-, stem of lac, milk. See

LEVANT, the East of the Mediterranean Sea. (Ital., - L.) Levant and Ponent, lit. rising and setting (with ref. to the sun) are old terms for East and West. Forth rush the Levant and the Ponent winds; Milton, P.L. x. 704. - Ital. levante, 'the east winde, the cuntrey lying toward or in the east; Florio. - Lat. leuant., stem of pres. part. of leuare, to raise, whence se leuare, to rise; see Lever. Der. levant-ine. Cf. slang E. levant, from Span levantar, lit, to raise, LEVEE, a morning assembly. (F.,-L.) 'The good man early to the levee goes;' Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. 1. 428. - F. levée, a levy, &c.; properly fem. of the pp. of lever, to raise; see LEVEL, an instrument by which a thing is determined to be horizontal. (F., -L.) M. E. linel, level (with u for v); P. Plowbe horizontal. (F.,-L.) M. E. linel, leuel (with u for v); P. Plowman, A. xi. 135; B. x. 179.-O. F. livel, preserved in the expression d'um livel, levell; Cot. Later spelt liveau, afterwards corrupted to niveau; both spellings are in Cotgrave, who explains it by 'a mason's or carpenter's levell or triangle. He also gives the verb niveler (corruption of liveler), 'to levell.' - Lat. libella, a level; dimin. of libra, a level, balance; see Librate.

¶ Not an A. S. word, as sometimes said. Der. level, verb, of which the pp. leaveld (=levell'd) occurs in Sir P. Sidney, Apology for Poetry, ed. Arber,

p. 55; levell-er, level-ness.

LEVER, a bar for raising weights. (F., -L.) M. E. leuour (with u=v), Rob. of Glouc. p. 126, l. 8; Romance of Partenay, ed. Skeat, l. 4177. - F. leveur, 'a raiser, lifter;' Cot. [Not quite the same word as F. levier, a lever, which differs in the suffix.] - Lat. levalorem, acc. of leuator, a lifter. — Lat. leuatus, pp. of leuare, to lift, lit. to make light. — Lat. leuis, light. See Levity. Der. leverage.

LEVERET, a young hare. (F., — L.) Spelt lyueret in Levins, ed. 1570.—O. F. levrault, a 'leveret, or young hare;' Cot.

β. The suffix -ault = Low Lat. -aldus, from O. H. G. wald, power; see Introd. to Brachet, Etym. Dict., § 105; it is here used merely with a dimin. sense. Cf. Ital. lepretta, a leveret. The base levris from Lat. lepor-, stem of lepus, a hare. Root uncertain. See Leporine.

LEVIATHAN, a huge aquatic animal. (L., -Heb.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627; and in Shak Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 174. - Late Lat. leviathan, Job, xl. 20 (Vulgate). - Heb. livyáthán, an aquatic animal, dragon, serpent; so called from its twisting itself in curves. - Heb. root lawak, to cleave; Arab. root lawa', to bend, whence laud, the twisting or coiling of a serpent; Rich. Dict. pp. 1278, LEVIGATE, to make smooth. (L.) Perhaps obsolete. [Richardson cites an example from Sir T. Elyot, where levigate = lightened, from Lat. leuigars, to lighten, which from leuis, light; see Levity. But this is quite another word.] 'When use hath levigated the organs, and made the way so smooth and easie; Barrow, vol. iii. ser. 9 (R.) - Lat. leuigatus, pp. of leuigare, to make smooth. - Lat. leur, stem of leuis, smooth; with suffix -ig- weakened from ag-ere, to drive. The Lat. leuis is cognate with Gk. Acios, smooth. Der. levigat-ion.

LEVITE, one of the tribe of Levi. (L., -Gk., - Heb.) In A. V. Lu. x. 32. - Lat. Levita, Lu. x. 32. - Gk. Asstrys, Lu. x. 32. Formed with suffix -178 from Asst, Rev. vii. 7. - Heb. Levi., one of the sons of Jacob. Der. Levit-ic-us, Levit-ic-al.

LEVITY, lightness of weight or of conduct. (L.) In Shak.

All's Well, i. 2. 35. Not a French word, but formed by analogy with words in -ty (= F, -te) from Lat. leuitatem, acc. of leuitas, light- man, E. liberal. Gower, C. A. iii. 114, l. 4. = O. F. liberal, 'liberal,' to raise. — Lat. leuare, to raise; lit. 'to make light.' — Lat. leuis, light; see Levity. Der. levy, verb, levi-able; see lev-er, lev-ant, e-lev-ate, leav-en, carnival. Doublet, levee.

LEWD, ignorant, base, licentious. (E.) Contracted for lewed.

M. E. lewed, Chaucer, C. T. 576. — A. S. lewed, adj. lay, i.e. belonging to the laity; 'pæt lewede folc' = the lay-people, Ælfric's Homilies, ed. Thorpe, ii. 74, 1. 17. The word thus originally merely meant 'the laity,' hence the untaught, ignorant, as opposed to the legacy. The phress leved and level enlarge, and levie, tempts to the clergy. The phrase lered and lewed = clergy and laity, ts untaught, is not uncommon; see P. Plowman, B. iv. 11. The phrase lered and lewed = clergy and laity, taught and form lawed is a pp., and it can only be the pp. of the verb lawas, of which one sense was to weaken, debilitate, enfeeble, so that the of which one sense was to weaken, debutiate, emetals, so may orig, sense was 'feeble;' a sense which appears again in the comp. dlewed, feeble (Lye). The word gelewed (which is merely another spelling of gelewed or lewed, the prefix ge-making no difference) is used to translate the Lat. debilitatum (enfeebled) in Exod. xxii. 10, 14; where Grein (unnecessarily and without any authority) has substiwhere Grein (unnecessarily and without any authority) has substituted gelefed in place of the reading in Thwaites' edition. Cf. lewsa = Lat. inopia, Ps. lxxxvii. 9, ed. Spelman. The change of sense from 'feeble' or 'weak' to 'ignorant, untaught,' causes no difficulty.

y. The more usual sense of lewan is to betray; see Matt. xxvi. 15, 16; and Ettmüller's A. S. Dict., p. 169. It is cognate with Goth. lewjan, to betray, Mark, xiv. 44, John, xviii. 5; which is a mere derivative of Goth. lew, an occasion, opportunity (hence opportunity to betray), used to translate the Gk decouply in Rom viii. opportunity to betray), used to translate the Gk. ἀφορμή in Rom. vii. 8, 11, 2 Cor. v. 12, Gal. v. 13. 8. Thus the train of thought can be deduced in the order following, viz. opportunity, opportunity to betray, betrayal, enseeblement, ignorance, baseness, vileness, licentiousness.

¶ It may be added that any connection with the A.S. leod, M. E. lede, people, is absolutely out of the question. lewd-ly, lewd-ness = ignorance, Acts, xviii. 14.

LEXICON, a dictionary. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—
Gk. λεξικόν (with βιβλίον, a book, understood), a lexicon; properly neut. of λεξικόε, adj., of or for words. — Gk. λέξι-ε, a saying, speech. — Gk. λέγειν, to speak; see Legend. Der. lexico-graph-y, lexicograph-i-c-al, lexico-graph-i-c-al-ly, lexico-graph-er; all from γράφειν, to write; see Graphic.

LEY, a meadow; see Lea. (E.)

LIABLE, responsible, subject. (F., -L.) In Shak. John, ii. 400; V. 2. 101. In the latter passage it means 'allied, associated, compatible; Schmidt. Formed, with the common suffix -able, from F. lier, 'to tie, bind, fasten, knit, . . . unite, oblige, or make beholden to;' Cot. - Lat. ligare, to tie, bind; see Ligament.

Der. liabil-i-ty.

LIAS, a formation of limestone, underlying the oölite. (F., - C.?) Modern in E., and only as a geological term; but old in French. Not in Todd's Johnson. - F. lias, formerly liais, liois. Liais, a very hard free-stone whereof stone-steps and tombe-stones be commonly made; Cot. Spelt liois in the 13th cent. (Littré.) Perhaps from Bret. liach, leach, a stone; of which Legonidec says that he only knows it by the Dict. of Le Pelletier, but that it seems to be the same as one of the flat stones to which the name of dolmen is commonly given in Brittany. The ch is marked as a guttural, shewing that it is a real Celtic word. Cf. Gael. leac, a flat stone, W. llech; see Cromlech. Der. liass-ic.

LIB, to castrate; obsolete. (E.) Florio, ed. 1598, has: 'Accaponare, to geld, splaie, or lib.' See Glib (3).

LIBATION, the pouring forth of wine in honour of a deity. (F., -L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. - F. libation (Cot.) - Lat. libationem, acc. of libatio, a libation. - Lat. libatus, pp. of libare, to sip, taste, drink, pour out. + Gk. λείβειν to pour out, offer a libation, let flow, shed. β. Prob. from γ R1, to distil, coze; cf. Skt. ri, to distil, coze, drop. See Liquid, River.

LIBETI. a written accusation defensions publication (L.) The TIBEIL, a written accusation, defamatory publication. (L.) The orig. sense is merely 'a little book' or 'a brief piece of writing.' Hence Wyclif has: '3yue he to hir a libel of forsakyng;' Matt. v. 31.— Lat. libellus, a little book, writing, written notice; hence 'libellum repudii' in Matt. v. 31 (Vulgate). Dimin. of liber, a book; see Library.

Evidently taken directly from the Latin; see F. libelle in Cotgrave.

Der. libel, verb, libell-er, libell-ous, li

LIBRARY, a collection of books, a room for books. (F.,-L.) M. E. librairie, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4, l. 257. - F. librairie. - Lat. librarium, a book-case; neut. of librarius, of or belonging to books. - Lat. libr-, for libro-, crude form of liber, a book, orig. the bark of a tree, which was the earliest writing material; with suffix -arius. β. Prob. connected with Gk. λέπω, a scale, rind; from Europ. LAP, to peel. See Leaf. Der. librari-an, librari-an-ship. LIBRATE, to balance, be poised, move slightly as things that balance; LIBRATION, a balancing, slight swinging motion. (L.) The verb is rare, and merely made out of the sb. 'Libration, a ballancing or poising; also, the motion of swinging in a pendulum; Kersey, ed. 1715. Formed, by analogy with F. sbs. in ion, from Lat. librationem, acc. of libratio, a poising. — Lat. libratus, pp. of librare, to poise. — Lat. libra, a balance, a level, machine for levelling, a pound of 12 ounces. + Gk. λίτρα, a pound of 12 ounces, a coin. β. Lat. li-bra = Gk. λί-τρα, the words being cognate.

Root uncertain. Der. librat-or-y; from the same source are de-liberate, equi-libri-um, level. Also F. litre, from Gk. λίτρα.

LICENCE, LICENSE, leave, permission, abuse of freedom, excess. (F., -L.) 'Leue and lycence' = leave and licence; P. Plowman, A. prol. 82. 'A lycence and a leue;' id. B. prol. 85. [The right spelling is with c; sometimes the spelling with s is reserved for the verb, to make a difference to the eye.] - F. licence, 'licence, leave; 'Cot. - Lat. licentia, freedom to act. - Lat. licent-, stem of pres. pt. of lieërs, to be allowable, to be permissible; the orig. sense being 'to be left free.' β. Connected with Lat. linquere, to leave, Gk. λείπειν, to leave, and Skt. rich, to leave, to evacuate. - RIK, to leave, leave empty, clear off. Curtius, ii. 60. ¶ The supposed connection with E. leave is probably false; see note to Leave (1). Der. licence, or more commonly license, verb, 1 Hen. LICORICE, LIQUORICE, a plant with a sweet root, used in medicine. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. licoris. In early use; Layamon, 17745; Chaucer, C. T. 3207. — O. F. licorice*, not recorded, but obviously the old form of liquerice, 'lickorice,' in Cotgrave. Littré gives also the corrupt (but old) spellings reculisse, regulisse, whence mod. F. réglisse. So also in Ital., we have the double form legorizia, regolizia. - Lat. liquiritia, liquorice, a corrupted form; the correct spelling being glycyrrhiza, which is found in Pliny, Nat. Hist. xxii. 9. 11.—Gk. γλυκύρμα, the liquorice-plant; so called from its sweet root. - Gk. γλυκύ-, crude form of γλυκύs, sweet; and βίζα, a root, cognate with E. wort. The Gk. γλυκύs is usually regarded as cognate with Lat. dulcis, sweet. See Dulcet and Wort.

LICTOR, an officer in Rome, who bore an axe and fasces. In Shak., Antony, v. 2. 214. - Lat. lictor, a lictor, so called (perhaps) from the fasces or bundles of bound rods which he bore, or from binding culprits. Connected with ligars, to bind. See Ligament.

LID, a cover. (E.) M. E. lid (rare, see exx. in Stratmann); spelt led, Sir Cleges, 1. 272, in Weber's Met. Romances, vol. i. – A. S. klid, Matt. xxvii. 60.+Du. lid, a lid; (not the same word as lid, a joint). +Icel. hiiò, a gate, gateway, gap, space, breach.+M. H. G. lit, lid, a cover (obsolete). B. Apparently from A.S. hlidan, to shut, cover, Grein, ii. 86; cf. O. Sax. hlidan, to cover. It seems to be further connected with A. S. kh's, a slope, side of a hill, Lat. climus; from the Teut. base HLI, to lean = Gk. KAI, to lean, whence Gk. κλίνειν, to lean, κλισιάε, a folding door, gate, entrance (like Icel. hlio above). - VKRI, to lean; see Lean (1). occurring as a poet's name.

lord; it is easy to see that this sense is due to a false etymology which connected the word with Lat. ligatus, bound, pp. of ligare, to bind; see Ligament. B. But the fact is, that the older phrase was 'a liege lord,' and the older sease 'a free lord,' in exact contrawas a liege lord, and the elder sease a free lord, in exact contradiction to the popular notion.

y. The popular notion even corrupted the spelling; the M. E. spelling lege or liege being sometimes altered to lige or lyge. The phrase 'my lege man' occurs twice, and 'my lege men' once, in Will. of Palerne, 1174, 2663, 3004. The expression 'oure lyge lord' occurs in Rob. of Glouc. p. 457, 1.7, and in Chancer, C. T. 12271 (Six-text, C. 337, where the MSS. have lige, lege, liege). In Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, v. 165, we find both the old spelling and the old sense. 'Bot and I lif in lege pouste' but if I survive in free and syndicated speciatory or power. — O. F. lige. 'liege.' vive in free and undisputed sovereignty or power. = O. F. lige, 'liege, leall, or loyall; Prince lige, a liege lord; Seigneur lige, the same;' Cot. Also (better) spelt liege in the 12th cent. (Littré.) - O. H. G. ledec sedic, also lidic, lidig (mod. G. ledig), free, unfettered, free from all obligations. The expression ligius homo, quod Teutonicè dicitur been a lord of a free band; and his lieges, though serving under him, were privileged men, free from all other obligations; their name being due to their freedom, not to their service.

B. Further; the O. H. G. lidic is, properly, free of one's way, free to travel where one pleases, from O. H. G. lidan, to go, depart, experience, take one's way; cognate with A.S. liban, to go, travel. Also, the cognate Icel. lidingr, ready, free, is from Icel. lidingr, ready, free, is from Icel. lidingr, ready, free, is from Icel. lidingr, ready, free, is from Icel. lidingr, ready, free, is from Icel. lidingr, ready, free, is from Icel. lidingration on this difficult ward see Dies Schelein. For further information on this difficult word, see Diez, Scheler, and Littre; and the O. Du. ledig, free, in Kilian. Some have observed that the O. Du. spelling of leec for ledig throws an additional light upon the word; to which may be further added that the M. E. spelling lege is of some importance. Diez and Scheler, who incline to the derivation given above, would (I should suppose) have been confirmed in their opinion had they known that form. Leecheyt [= ledigheid] is moeder van alle quaethede' = idleness is mother of all vices; O. Du. Proverb, cited in Oudemans. Ducange's attempt to connect the word with Low Lat. litus, a kind of vassal, is a failure; and all other attempts are worse.

LIEGER, LEIGER, an ambassador; see Ledger.

LIEN, a legal claim, a charge on property. (F., -L.) A legal word; not in Todd's Johnson; preserved as a law term from olden times. - F. lien, 'a band, or tye, . . . anything that fasteneth or fettereth;' Cot. - Lat. ligamen, a band, tie. - Lat. ligare, to tie; see

LIEU, place, stead. (F., -L.) In the phr. 'in lieu of' = in place of; Temp. i. 2. 123. - F. lieu, 'a place, roome;' Cot. Spelt liu in the 10th cent. (Littré.) - Lat. locum, acc. of locus, a place; see Locus. Der. lieu-tenant, q. v.

LIEUTENANT, a deputy, vicegerent, &c. (F.,-L.) M. E. lieutenant, Gower, C. A. i. 73; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 47. - F. lieutenant, a lieutenant, deputy; Cot. - Lat. locum-tenentem, acc. of locumtenens, one who holds another's place, a deputy. - Lat. locum, acc. of locus, a place; and tenens, pres. part. of tenere, to hold. See Locus locus, a place; and tenens, pres. part. of tenere, to hold. See LIGGUB and Tenant. Der. lieutenancy.

LIFE, animate existence. (E.) M. E. lif, lyf, gen. case lyues, dat. lyne, pl. lyues (with u = v); Chaucer, C. T. 2757, 2778, 14100. —

A.S. lif, gen. lifes, dat. life, pl. lifas; Grein, ii. 183. + Icel. lif, lift. + Dan. liv. + Swed. lif. + O. H. G. lip, leip, life; mod. G. leib, the body. Cf. Du. liff, the body.

B. All from Teut. base LIBA, life; Fick, iii. 271. This sb, is a derivative from Teut. base LIB, to remain, occurring in Icel. lifa, to be left, to remain, to live, A. S. liffan, to be remaining. to live: O. H. G. liban, liban, only used liftan, to be remaining, to live; O. H. G. liban, lipan, only used in the comp. beliban, M. H. G. beliben, G. bleiben, to remain, be left. y. Perhaps the sense 'remain' arose from that of 'to cleave;' and thus life may be connected with Lithuanian lipti, to cleave, stick, Skt. lip, to anoint, smear, Gk. dheipen, to anoint; the form of the Skt. lip, to anoint, smear, Gk. Δλειφειν, to anoint; the form of the European root being LIP; Fick, i. 754. Der. life-blood, life-boat, life-estate, life-guard, q.v., life-hold, life-insurance, &c.; also life-less, life-less-less, life-less-less, life-less-less, life-loss Also live, live-ly, live-lihood, live-long. From the same source, leave (1). And see Alive.

LIFEGUARD, a body-guard. (Hybrid; E. and F.) 'The Cherethites were a kind of lifeguard to king David; Fuller, Pisgah Sight of Palestine, ed. 1650, p. 217. From Life and Guard.

¶ See Trench, Eng. Past and Present. The word is not borrowed from the G. leibgarde, a body-guard; and it is much to the purpose to observe that, if it were so, it would make no difference; for the G. leib is the G. spelling of the word which we spell life, despite the difference in sense. The M. H. G. 14 meant 'life' as well as body.' man, B. xvii. 64.

(from the same root) love, leave (2), lib-eral, lib-erty, lib-erate, lib-square, lib-square, lib-idinous; also de-lib-erate, de-liv-er; perhaps elever.

LIEGE, faithful, subject, true, bound by feudal tenure. (F., = O. H. G.)

a. The etymology is disguised by a change both of sense and usage. We now say 'a liege vassal,' i. e. one bound to his lood, it is sensy to see that this same is due to a false atymology.

LIFT (1), to elevate, raise. (Scand.) M. E. liften, to raise; Prompt. Parv. p. 303; P. Plowman, B. v. 359; Havelok, 1028; spelt leften (leftenn), Ormulum, 2658, 2744, 2755, 6141, 7528, &c. The orig. sense is to raise aloft, to exalt into the air. — Icel. 1944 (proposed lefter) to life from bett the air. (pronounced lysta), to list; from lost, the air. + Dan. lists, to list; from lost, a lost, a cock-lost, orig. the air. + Swed. lysta, to list; from lost, a lost, garret, orig. the air. Thus list is a mere deriv. of trom loft, a loft, garret, orig. 'the air.' Thus lift is a mere deriv. of Loft, q.v. The i=y, mutation of u (0).

LIET (2), to steal. (E.) 'But if night-robbers lift [steal from] the well-stored hive;' Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 228, l. 916. The sb. lifter, a thief, occurs in Shak., Troil. i. 2. 129. This verb is unconnected with the verb above, though doubtless early confused with it. Strictly, it should be liff, the -t denoting the agent, and rightly employed in the sb. only. We still speak of 'a shop-lifter.' An E. word, but only preserved in Gothic, Gk., and Latin. Cf. Goth. hlifan, to steal, 'to liff,' Matt. vi. 19, Mk. x. mg; Lu. xviii. 20; whence the sb. hliftus (=hlif-tus). a thief. John. x. r. B. The whence the sb. hliftus (=hlif-tus), a thief, John, x. 1. Goth. hlifan is exactly equivalent to the cognate Lat. clepere, to steal; and Goth. hliftus = Gk. κλέπτης, a thief, connected with κλέπτειν (base κλεπ-), to steal; the form of the root being KLAP = KARP. LIGAMENT, a band, the membrane connecting the moveable bones. (F., -L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627; and in Cotgrave. - F. ligament, 'a ligament, or ligature;' Cot. - Lat. ligamentum, a tie, band. - Lat. liga-re, to tie; with suffix -mentum. Root uncertain. Der. ligament-al, ligament-ous. From Lat. ligare we have also ligature, liable, lictor, lien, ally, alligation.

LIGATURE, a bandage. (F., -L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627, and in Cotgrave, - F. ligature, 'a ligature, tie, band;' Cot. - Lat. ligatura, a binding, bandage; properly fem. of fut. part. of ligare, to bind; see Ligament.

LIGHT (1), illumination, (E.) M. E. light, Chaucer, C. T. 1989, 1991. — A. S. leicht, Grein, ii. 177; cf. lýhtan, lihtan, to shine, id. ii. 200. [The vowel i = A. S. i = 9, due to mutation of eb = Goth. iu.] +Du. licht.+G. licht, O. H. G. liuhta.+Goth. liuhath, light. $\text{B}$ Observe that the t is a mere suffix; A. S. leicht = O. H. G. liuh-ta = Coth. lith att. thus the before it Islands. Goth. liuk-ath; thus the base is LUH, to shine, Fick, iii. 274. γ. Neglecting the final t, we have cognate words in Icel. ljós (= liuk-sa), light, Icel. logi, a flame (whence Lowland Scotch lowe, a flame), Lat. lux (= luc-sa), light, Lat. lumen (= luc-men), light, luns (= luc-na), the moon; with numerous connected terms, such as Lat. lucubrare, lucus, lustrare, illustris, &c. So also Gk. λευκ-δε, white, bright, λύχνος (= λυκ-νος), a light, lamp, &c. δ. All from √RUK, to shine; cf. Skt. ruch, to shine, whence ruch, light, splendour, the exact equivalent of Lowland Scotch lowe. Der. light-house. Also light, verb, M. E. lighten, Chaucer, C. T. 2428, A.S. lyhtan, lihtan, Grein, ii. 200; whence light-er, sb. Also light-en (1), q. v., light-ning, q. v. Connected words are luc-id, luc-i-fer, e-lucidate, il-lu-minate, lu-nar, lu-natic, luc-ubration, lea (q. v.), lustre, il-lu-strate, il-lu-strious, lu-minous, lynx, &c.

LIGHT (2), active, not heavy, unimportant. (E.) M. E. light, Chaucer, C. T. 9087; lightly, adv., id. 1463.—A. S. leóht, adj., Grein, ii. 176. Here eo = i; and leoht = liht. + Du. ligt. + Icel. lettr. + Dan. let. + Swed. latt. + Goth. leihts, 2 Cor. i. 17. + G. leicht, M. H. G. Uhte, O. H. G. lihti, liht, β . The t is a suffix (= -ta), and the base lih appears to be equivalent to linh, the long i being due to loss of n; also, the form link is a nasalised form for lak, answering to the Gk. $\lambda a \chi$ -, appearing in ℓ - $\lambda a \chi$ - νs , light. 'Likta stands, according to rule, for link-ta, and comes from the same root as Lithuanian lengwas, light, Church Slavonic ligūkū, light [Russ. lėgkū], Gk. ε-λαχ-be and Skt. lagku, light; Fick, iii. 264. To which may be added Lat. leuis, light, usually supposed to stand for leguis, from the same base.

γ. The common ground-form is LAGHU or PACHU light. RAGHU, light, as evidenced by the preceding forms, esp. by the Gk. and Skt.; to which add Skt. ragks, the Vedic form for lagks; Benfey, p. 753.

8. All from the ARGH, to spring, run, hasten; appearing in Skt. rangh, to move swiftly, langh, to jump over, ramh, to move swiftly; Irish lingim, I spring, skip, bound. See Fick, i. 190. Thus the orig. sense is 'springy,' active, nimble; from which the other senses are easily deduced. Der. light-ly, lightfrom which the other senses are easily deduced. Der light-ingeness, light-somes, Rom. of the Rose, L. 936; light-some-ness; light-some, Rom. of the Rose, L. 936; light-some-ness; light-en (2), q. v.; light-ex, q. v. From the same root we have (from Lat. lew-is) lev-ant, lev-er, lev-ity, lev-y, al-lev-iate, &c. And see Long.

LIGHT (3), to settle, alight, descend. (E.) M. E. lighten, lihten; adun heo gunnen lihten = they alighted down from his horse, P. Plow-man B. will 64.

β. The sense is to relieve a horse of his burden.

and the word is identical with M. E. lighton in the sense of to relieve ligure, which is a precious stone unknown in modern mineralogy; of a burden. The derivation is from the adj. light, not heavy; see Bible Wordbook, by Eastwood and Wright. — Lat. ligurius. — Gk. Light (2). Y. When a man alights from a horse, he not only relieves the horse of his burden, but completes the action by descending or alighting on the earth; hence light came to be used in the sense of to descend, settle, often with the prep. on. 'New in the sense of to descend, settle, often with the prep. on. 'New lighted on a heaven-kissing hill;' Hamlet, iii. 4. 59; 'this murderous shaft Hath yet not lighted;' Macb. ii. 3. 148. Hence this verb is really a doublet of Lighten (2), q.v., as well as of Lighten (3). Der. light-er, q. v. And see Alight, verb.

LIGHTEN (1), to illuminate, flash. (E.) The force of the final—si is somewhat dubious, but appears to be due rather to the intransitive than to the transitive form.

1. Intrans. to shine as lighting a Property is a real.

lightning; 'it lightens,' Romeo, ii. 2. 120. M. E. lightenen, Prompt. Parv. p. 304; more correctly. lightnen, best shown by the derived word lightning. In this word lightnen the n gives the word a neuter sense, the sense being 'to become light;' this is clearly evidenced by the use of the same letter in Mœso Gothic, which has full-n-an, to become full, and-bund-n-an, to become unbound; see note on Goth. verbs in -nan in Skeat's Goth. Dict., p. 303.

2. Trans. The trans. use is in Shak. Hen. VIII, ii. 3. 79, Titus And., ii. 3. 227, with the sense 'to illuminate.' This is really no more than the intrans. verb incorrectly used. The correct trans. form is to light, as in: 'the eye of heaven that lights the lower world;' Rich. II, iii. 2. 38. This is the M. E. lighten, lighte (where the final -en is merely the mark of the infin. mood, often dropped); Chaucer, C. T. 2428. — A. S. leóhtan, to illuminate; Grein, ii. 178. — A. S. leóht, light; see Light (1). Der. lightn-ing.

LIGHTEN (2), to make lighter, alleviate. (E.) The final -en is merely formative, as in strength-en, length-en, short-en, weak-en. It is intended to have a causal force, though, curiously enough, its original sense was such as to make the verb intrans. or passive, as noticed under Lighten (1). The true form should rather have been to light merely, as it answers to M.E. lighten, lighte (in which the final -en is merely the mark of the infin. mood, and is often dropped). 'Lyghteyn, or make weyhtys [weights] more esy, lightyn burdens, heny weightis, Allevio;' Prompt. Parv. p. 304. 'To lihten ower heaued' = to take the weight [of hair] off your head; Ancren Riwle, p. 422. From the adj. light; see Light (2), and Light (3). So also Dan. lette, to lighten, from let, light.

LIGHTEN (3), to descend, settle, alight. (E.) 'O Lord, let thy mercy lighten upon us;' Te Deum, in the Prayer-book (Lat. 'fiat'). Here lighten is a mere extension of Light (3), q.v. LIGHTER, a boat for unlading ships. (Du.) In Skinner, ed. 1671; and in Pope, Dunciad, ii. 287. Not really E., but borrowed from Du. ligter, a lighter (Sewel); spelt lichter in Skinner. also lighter-man, from Du. ligterman, a lighter-man (Sewel). - Du. ligt, light (not heavy); see Light (2). ¶ Thus the sense is the same as if the word had been purely English; it means 'unloader;' from the use made of these vessels. Der. lighter-man (as above);

LIGHTNING, an illuminating flash. (E.) See Lighten (1). LIGHTS, lungs. (E.) M.E. lightes, Destruction of Troy, 10705; pa lihte = the lights, Layamon, 6499, answering to A. S. Sá lihtan, i.e. the light things. So called from their lightness. So also Russ.

legkoe, lights; from legkii, light. See Light (2).
LIGN-ALOES, a kind of tree. (Hybrid; L. and Gk.) In Numbers, xxiv. 6 (A. V.) 'A kind of odoriferous Indian tree, usually identified with the Aquilaria Agallochum which supplies the aloes-wood of commerce. Our word is a partial translation of the Lat. lignum aloes, Gk. funakón. The bitterness of the aloe is proverbial; Bible Wordbook, ed. Eastwood and Wright. Chaucer has: 'As bitter...as is ligne aloes, or galle;' Troilus, iv. 1137.—Lat. lignum, wood; and aloës, of the aloe, gen. case of aloë, the aloe, a word borrowed from Gk. alon, the aloe. ¶ On the complete difference between alos and alos-wood, see note to Alos. And see Ligneous.

LIGNEOUS, woody, wooden, wood-like. (L.) 'Of a more ligneous nature;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 504. Formed by mere change of Lat. -us into E. -ous (as in ingrenous, arduous, and out of the change of the ligney wooden. I generous, arduous, and of the wooden. others), from Lat. ligneus, wooden. - Lat. lignum, wood; a word of disputed origin. Der. from crude form ligni- (for ligno-) we have ligni-fer-ous = wood-producing (from ferre, to bear); ligni-fy = to turn to wood; and from the stem lign- has been formed lign-ite, coal retaining the texture of wood, where the suffix -its is Gk.

LIGULE, a strap-shaped petal. (L.) A mod. botanical term; also applied to the flat part of the leaf of a grass. — Lat. ligula, a little tongue, a tongue-shaped extremity; also spelt lingula. Dimin.

of lingua. a tongue; see Lingual.

LIGURE, a precious stone. (L.,-Gk.) In the Bible, A. V., Ex. xxviii. 19, xxxix. 12. 'Our translators have followed the Septuagint Exviii. 19, xxxix. 12. 'Our translators have followed the Septuagint the utmost border of the disk or body of the sun or moon, when arytonor and Vulgate ligarius in translating the Heb. leshem by either is in eclipse;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Kersey also gives the form

Bible Wordbook, by Eastwood and Wright. = Lat. ligurius. = Gk. λιγώρων, also spelt λιγγούρων, λιγκούρων, λυγκούρων, a sort of gem; acc. to some, a reddish amber, acc. to others, the hyacinth (Liddell). LIKE (1), similar, resembling. (E.) M. E. lyk, lik; Chaucer, C. T. 414, 1973. = A. S. lie, in comp. ge-lie, like, in which form it is common; Grein, i. 422. The prefix ge- was long retained in the weakened form i- or y-; Chaucer has yliche as an adv., C. T. 2528. + Du. ge-lijk, like; where ge- is a prefix. + Icel. like, glike, like; where g- = ge-, prefix. + Dan. lig. + Swed. lik. + Goth. galeiks, Mark, vii. 8.+G. gleich, M. H. G. ge-lich, O. H. G. ka-lik. β. All from Teut. base GA-LikA, adj., signifying 'resembling in form,' and derived from the Teut. b. LikA, a form, shape, appearing in A. S. lie, a form, body (whence Lich-gate). O. Sax. lik, Icel. lik, Goth. leik, the body, &c. Hence the form of the Teut. base is Lik, perleik, the body, &c. Hence the form of the Teut, base is LIK, perhaps with the sense 'to resemble;' Fick, iti. 268. y. A further trace of the word perhaps appears in Gk. τη-λίκ-ου, such, of such trace of the word perhaps appears in U.K. 77-Air-os, such, of such an age, Lat. ta-ki-s, such, Russ. to-lik-ii, such, Lat. qua-li-s, of what sort. Der. like-by, M. E. likly, Chaucer, C. T. 1174; like-li-hood, M. E. likliñed, id. 13536; like-li-ness, M. E. liklines, id. 8272; likeness, M. E. liklines, P. Plowman, B. i. 113, formerly i-liknes, Ancren Riwle, p. 230, from A. S. ge-licnes; like-wise, short for in like wise (see Wise, sb.); like (2), q. v.; like, sb.; lik-en, q. v. Gr All adjectives ending in -ly have adopted this ending from A. S. -lic, lit. like-i' all adverbs in -ly take this suffix from A. S. -lics the same 'like;' all adverbs in -ly take this suffix from A.S. -lice, the same word with the adverbial final -e added. The word like-ly = like-like, a reduplication.

LIKE (2), to approve, be pleased with. (E.) The mod. sense is evolved by an alteration in the construction. The M. E. verb lyken (or liken) signified 'to please,' and was used impersonally. We have, in fact, changed the phrase it likes me into I like, and so on throughout. Both senses are in Shak.; see Temp. iii. 1. 43, Hamlet, v. 2, 276. Chaucer has only the impers. verb. 'And if you liketh' = v. 2.70. Chauter has only the inipers, vero. And it you then and if it please you; C. T. 779; still preserved in the mod. phrase 'if you like.' 'That oughte liken you' = that ought to please you; id. 13866.—A. S. lician, to please, rarely lican; Grein, ii. 182. The lit. sense is to be like or suitable for.—A. S. lic, ge-lic, like; see Itt. sense is to be like or suitable for. — A. S. lic, ge-lic, like; see Like (1). + Du. lijken, to be like, resemble, seem, suit; from ge-lijk, like. + Icel. lika, to like; from like, like. + Goth. leikan, ga-leikan, to please; from ga-leiks, like. + M. H. G. lichen, ge-lichen, to be like; from ge-lich, like (G. gleich). Der. lik-ing, M. E. likinge, P. Plowman, B. xi. 20, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 271. Also well-liking = well-pleasing, Ps. xcii. 13, Prayer-book.

I.I.K. English to corrider as similar to compare (Seend). M. F.

LIKEN, to consider as similar, to compare. (Scand.) M. E. liknen. 'The water is likned to the worlde;' P. Plowman, B. viii. 39, A. ix. 34. 'And lyknez hit to heuen lyste' = and likens it to the light of heaven; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 500. But the true sense is probably intransitive, as in the case of Goth. verbs in -nan, and several Swed. verbs in -na; and the peculiar use and form of the word is Scand., not E. It appears to be intrans. in Allit. Poems, B. 1064. — Swed. likna, (1) to resemble, (2) to liken; from lik, like. +Dan. ligns, (1) to resemble, (2) to liken; from lig, like. See Like (1).

LILAC, a flowering shrub. (Span., - Turkish, - Pers.) Spelt lilach in Kersey, ed. 1715. - Span. lilac, lila, a lilac. Of Oriental origin. - Turk. leilaq, a lilac; Zenker's Turk. Dict. p. 797, col. 3. Borrowed from the Pers. lilaj, lilanj, or lilang, of which the proper sense is the indigo-plant; Rich Pers. Dict. p. 1282. Here the initial I stands for n, and the above forms are connected with Pers. nil, the indigo-plant; whence nilak (dimin. form), blueish; Rich. Dict. pp. 1619, 1620. Cf. Skt. nila, dark-blue, nili, the indigo-plant. LILLY, a bulbous plant. (L., -Gk.) M. E. lilie; Chaucer, C. T. 15555, 15559. - A. S. lilie, pl. tilian; Matt. vi. 28; Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Herbarum. - Lat. lilium; Matt. vi. 28. - Gk. λείριον, a iliy; the change of Gk. ρ to Lat. l being quite in accordance with usual laws. ¶ The more usual Gk. name is κρίνον, as in Matt. vi. 28. Der. lili-ac-e-out - Lat. liliaceus.

LIMB (1), a jointed part of the body, member, branch of a tree.

(E.) M. E. lim, pl. limmes; Chaucer, C. T. 4881, 9332.—A. S. lim, pl. leomu; Grein, ii. 188. + Icel. limr. + Dan. and Swed. lem. We also find Icel. lim, foliage of a tree, pl. limar, boughs; limi, a rod; Dan. lime, a twig.

β. The orig. sense seems to have been a twig, a branch broken off, fragment; from A. S. lemian or lemman, to propersy orig. to breek Gain ii store, of Icel lemia to heat breek. oppress, orig. to break, Grein, ii. 167; cf. Icel. lemja, to beat, break (=slang E. lam, to thrash); Russ. lomate, lomite, to break, whence lom', fragments, debris. From Teut. base LAM, to break; see Lame. See Fick, iii. 267. Der. limber (2), strong-limbed, &c. LIMB (2), the edge or border of a sextant, &c. (L.) 'Limb, in mathematics, the outermost border of an astrolabe; . . in astronomy,

Limber vows; 'Wint. Tale, i. 2. 47. Richardson quotes an earlier and better example. 'Ne yet the bargeman, that doth rowe With long and limber oare;' Turbervile, A Myrrour of the Fall of Closely allied to limb flow and similar and better example. Pride. Closely allied to limp, flexible, and similarly formed from the same Teut. base LAP, to hang loosely down; the p being weakened to b for ease of pronunciation. The suffix -er is adjectival, as in bitt-er, fai-r (= A.S. fag-er), &c.; see Mätzner, Engl. Gramm. i. 435; it answers to the Aryan suffix -ra. See Limp (1).

LIMBER (2), part of a gun-carriage consisting of two wheels and a shaft to which horses are attached. (Scand.) Taken up from prov. E. 'Limbers, thills or shafts (Berkshire); Limmers, a pair of shafts (North); Grose's Prov. Eng. Glossary, ed. 1790. It is obvious that b is excrescent, and the form limmers is the older one. B. Further, limmer-s is a double plural, like child-ren (= child-er-en). The true orig. singular is limm, a shaft or thill of a cart, preserved only in the old sb. limmer, a thill-er, a thill-horse, given in Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave; he translates it into F. by limonier, but the resemblance between the words is purely accidental; see F. limon in Littré. [That is, it is accidental unless the F. limon, a word of somewhat doubtful origin, be orig. Scandinavian.] The pl. form limmer is explained by the etymology. — Icel. limar, boughs, branches, pl. of lim, foliage, a word closely related to limr, a limb. The latter word is cognate with A.S. lim, a limb, also used in the sense of a 'branch of a tree' at the earliest period; see Beowulf, ed. Grein, 1. 97. See Limb (1). ¶ We may conclude that the original cart-shafts were merely rough branches. Der. limber, veb.

LIMBO, LIMBUS, the borders of hell. (L.) In Shak. All's

Well, v. 3. 261. The orig. phrase was in limbo, Com. Errors, iv. 2. 32; or more fully, in limbo patrum, Hen. VIII, v. 4. 67.—Lat. limbo (governed by the prep. in), abl. case of limbus, a border; see Limb (2). 'The limbus patrum, in the language of churchmen, was the place bordering on hell, where the saints of the Old Testament remained till Christ's descent into hell; Schmidt.

B. The word limbo came to be used as a nominative all the more readily, because the Ital. word is limbo, derived (not from the ablative, but) from the acc, limbum of the same Lat. word. Hence Milton's 'limbo large and broad; P. L. iii. 495. But it began its career in E. as a Latin word. Doublet, limb (2).

LIME (1), viscous substance, bird-lime, mortar, oxide of calcium. (E.) The orig. sense is 'viscous substance.' M. E. lym, liim, lyme. 'Lyme, to take with byrdys [to catch birds with], viscus; Lyme, or mortare, Cala;' Prompt. Parv. p. 305. And see Chaucer, C. T. 16274.—A. S. lim, bitumen, cement; Grein, ii. 188. + Du. lijm, glue, lime. + Icel. lim, glue, lime, chalk. + Dan liim, glue. + Swed. lim, glue. + G. leim, glue; M. H. G. lim, bird-lime. + Lat. limus, mud, glue. + G. leim, glue; M.H. G. lim, bird-lime. + Lat. limus, mud, slime. + G. leim, glue; M.H. G. lim, bird-lime. + Lat. limus, mud, slime.

B. Formed with suffixed -m (= Aryan -ma) from the base LI, to pour, smear, appearing in Lat. li-nere, to smear, daub, Russ. lite, to pour, flow, Skt. li, to melt, to adhere; allied to Skt. ri, to distil. - A RI, to pour, distil. Fick, i. 412; iii. 268. See Liquid, River. Der. lime, verb, Ancren Riwle, p. 226, Hamlet, iii. 3. 68; lime-y; lime-kilm, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 86; lime-stone; lime-twig, Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 189; lime-rod, Chaucer, C. T. 14694.

LIME (2), the linden-tree. (E.) In Pope, Autumn, 25. A corruption of the earlier spelling line. 'Linden-tree or Line-tree;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'In the line-grove' (modern edd. lime-grove); Shak. Temp. v. 10. The change from line to lime does not seem to be older than about A.D. 1700. The form lime is in Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731.

B. Again, line is a corruption of lind, the older name, by loss of final d. See Linden. Der. lime-tree.

LIME (3), a kind of citron. (F.,—Pers.) 'Lime, a sort of small lemmon;' Phillips, ed. 1706.—F. lime, a lime; Hamilton.—Pers. limá, a lemon, citron; Rich. Dict. p. 1282. Also called limán; see limi, a lemon, citron; Rich. Dict. p. 1282. Also called limin; see Lemon. Dozy gives Arab. limah, a lime; made from a collective form lim.

LIMIT, to assign a boundary; a boundary. (F., -L.) The verb is in older use in E. than the sb. limit, though really the younger word. M. E. limiten, to limit. 'To lymyte or assigne us;' Chaucer, word. M. E. limites, to himit. '10 lymyle or assigne us;' Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus, Six-text, B. 2956. [Hence the sb. limit-or, Chaucer, C. T. 209, 6460.] — F. limiter, 'to limit;' Cot. — F. limite, a limit; id. — Lat. limitem, acc. of limes, a boundary; akin to Lat. limen, a threshold. Etym. doubtful; see Curtius, i. 456; but prob. allied to Lat. limus, transverse. Der. limit-ed, limit-ed-ly, limit-ed-ness, limit-less, limit-ses, limit-tess, li (Cot.), from Lat. acc. limitationem.

LIMN, to illuminate, paint. (F., -L.) M. E. limnen, a contracted limbus. — Lat. limbus, a border, edging, edge. Cf. Skt. lamb, to fall, & form of luminen. 'Lymnyd, or lumynid, as bookys;' Prompt. Parv. p. to hang downwards; from the same root as lap (2), lobe, lip; see 317. 'Lymnore, luminour, Alluminator;' id. B. Again, Lap (2), Lobe. Cotgrave gives O. F. limbe de bouteille, 'the luminen is short for enluminen, by loss of the prefix. Chaucer has 317. 'Lymnore, luminour, Alluminator, illuminator;' id. $\beta$. Again, luminen is short for enluminen, by loss of the prefix. Chaucer has enlumined—enlightened; C. T. 7909.—O. F. enluminer, 'to illuminate, inlighten; . also to sleek, burnish; also, to limn;' Cot.—

Lat illuminates to enlighten and Thuminate. LIMP (1), flaccid, flexible, pliant, weak. (E.) 'Limp, limber, supple;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Scarce in books, but known to our mod. E. dialects, and doubtless an old E. word. A nasalised form from the base LIP, which is a weakened form of Teut. LAP, to hang loosely down, whence the sb. lap, a flap; see Lap (2).

β. Allied words are Icel. limpa, limpness, weakness; Icel. Dict. Appendix, p. 776; 'Swiss. lampig, lampelig, faded, loose, flabby, hanging,' and similar words, cited in Wedgwood. Also Bavarian lampecht, flaccid, lampende Ohren, hanging ears (answering to E. lop-ears, as in 'a lopsared rabbit'); from the verb lampen, to hang loosely down; Schmeller, Bav. Dict. 1474. Also Skt. lamba, depending, lambana, falling; from the verb lamb, to fall, hang downwards. Y. Without the nasal we find W. Heipr, flaccid, flabby, Hibin, limber, soft, drooping, Hipa, limp, flabby. Thus the base is (as was said) the Teut. LAP, to hang down. —

RAB, RAMB, to hang down; cf. Skt. ramb, to hang down, Vedic form of lamb cited above; Fick, i.

192. Der. limp-ness; cf. limber (1).

LIMP (2), to walk lamely. (E.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. iii. 2. 130. Not easily traced earlier, and the orig. form is uncertain. Probably the same as A.S. lemp-healt, limp-halting, halting, lame, given in Lye, with a reference that I cannot verify; the word wants confirmation. β. Such confirmation appears to some extent in M. H. G. limphin, to limp; whence lempel, hastening in a limping manner. Possibly connected with Limp (1), rather than (as some think) with Lame. ¶ We also find Low G. lumpen, hunschen, to limp (Bremen Wörterbuch); Dan. dial. lumsa, to limp, hobble (Aasen); Swed. dial. loma, lomma, to walk with heavy steps, lumra, to limp. Note also prov. E. lumper, lumber, to stumble, lummack, to tumble (Suffolk); Halliwell. These words can hardly be connected with limp, on account of the difference of the vowel. They seem rather to go with Lump, q. v.

LIMPET, a small shell-fish, which cleaves to rocks. (F., -L., -Gk.) Cotgrave explains O. F. berdin by 'the shellfish called a Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxii. c. 9, translates lympyne or a lempet.' Lat. mituli by 'limpins.' There is a missing link here, but there can be small doubt that the word came to us, through a F. form lempette* or lempine* (not recorded); from the Lat. lepad-, crude form of lepas, a limpet. Cf. Span. lepada, a limpet. [The insertion of m causes no difficulty; cf. F. lambruche, the wild vine, from Lat. labrusca.] - Gk. λεπάε, a shell-fish, limpet; allied to λεπίε, a scale; see Leper, Leaf.

LIMPID, pure, clear, shining. (F., -L.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. - F. limpide, 'clear, bright;' Cot. - Lat. limpides, limpid, clear. Allied to Lat. lympha, pure water; see Lymph. β. Further allied to Gk. λαμπρόε, bright, λάμπειν, to shine. From a base LAP, to shine; cf. Lithuanian lepsna, flame, Old Prussian lopis, flame, cited by Fick, i. 750. Der. limpid-i-ty, limpid-ness.

LINCH-PIN, a pin to fasten the wheel on to the axle. (E.) Formerly also spelt lins-pin; see Kersey, ed. 1715; Coles, ed. 1684; Skinner, ed. 1671. [Linck appears to be a corrupted form, obviously by confusion with link.] The pl. linese in Will. of Shoreham's Poems, p. 109, seems to mean 'axles.'—A. S. lynis, an axle-tree, in a gloss (Bosworth, Lye). + Du. luns, a linch-pin; whence lunzare, to the stable lines in Paragraphy. put the linch-pin to a wheel + Low G. lunse, a linch-pin; Bremen Wörterbuch. + G. lünse, a linch-pin.

β. Cf. also Dan. lundstikke, lunstikke, luntestik, a linch-pin; O. Swed. lunta, luntsticka, a linch-pin (Ihre); M. H. G. lun, lune, O. H. G. lund, a linch pin. y. The orig. sense of line (lineh) was perhaps a rounded bar, hence, an axle; cf. Gael. lunn, the handle of an oar, a staff; Irish lung, the handle of an oar; and perhaps Icel. Munn, a wooden roller for launching ships.

LIND, LINDEN, the lime-tree. (E.) Here (as in the case of asp-en) the true sb. is lind, whence lind-en was formed as an adjective, with the suffix en as in gold-en, birch-en, beech-en. The true name is lind, or, in longer phrase, linden tree. Lind was in time corname is tina, or, in longer parase, tinden tree. Lind was in time corrupted to line, and later to lime; see Linne (2). M. E. lind, lynd; Chaucer, C. T. 2924. — A. S. lind, Grein, ii. 128. 'Seno vel'tilia, lind;' Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Arborum. Hence the adj. linden (Grein, ii. 189), as in linden bord — the linden shield, shield made of lind. + Du. linde, linde-borm. + Icel. lind. + Dan. lind, lind-træ. + Swed. lind. + G. linde. B. The wood is white and smooth, and much used for carved work; indeed the most usual meaning of A. S. lind is 'a shield,' i. e. one made of linden wood. The word is to be connected accordingly with G. wellind solitinden. The word is to be connected, accordingly, with G. gelind, gelinde, smooth, Icel. linr, smooth, soft, Lat. lentus, pliant, A.S. 1186 [=

linos), gentle, pliant; see Lithe.

LINE, a thread, thin cord, stroke, row, rank, verse. (L.; or F., L.) In all senses, the word is of Lat. origin; the only difference is that, in some senses, the word was borrowed from Lat. directly, in other senses through the French. We may take them separately, as follows.

1. Line = a thin cord or rope, a thread, rope of a ship.

M. E. lyne; P. Plowman, B. v. 355. — A.S. line, a cord; Grein, it. 189. - Lat. linea, a string of hemp or flax, hempen cord; properly the fem. of adj. lineus, made of hemp or flax. - Lat. linum, flax. Prob. rather cognate with than borrowed from Gk. λίνον, flax. Root unknown. [The G. lein, &c. are probably borrowed from Latin.] 2. Line = a verse, rank, row; Chaucer, C. T. 1553; P. Plowman, B. vii. 110. -F. ligne, a line. - Lat. linea, a line, stroke, mark, line of descent; the same word as the above. Der. line, verb, in various senses; to line garments is properly to put linen inside them (see Linen); also lin-ing; lineal, q.v., linear, q.v., lineage, q.v., lineament, q.v. And see linnet, linseed, linsey-woolsey, lint, de-lineate.

LINEAGE, race, family, descent. (F., - L.) M. E. linage (without the medial e), Chaucer, C. T. 1552; Romance of Partenay, 5033; lignage, Gower, C. A. i. 344. - F. lignage, 'a lineage;' Cot. [Here E. ne = F. gn.] Made with suffix -age (= Lat. -aticum) from F. ligna, a line. - Lat. linea, a line; see Line.

F. ligne, a line.—Lat. linea, a line; see Line.

LINEAL, belonging to a line. (L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 11. 12.

'Lineally hir kinred by degrees;' Lidgate, Story of Thebes, pt. iii.
ed. 1561, p. 373, col. 1.—Lat. linealis, belonging to a line.—Lat.
linea, a line: see Line. Der. lineal-ly. Doublet, linear.

LINEAMENT, a feature. (F.,—L.) 'In the liniamentes and fanor of his visage;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 61 b.—F. lineament, 'a lineament or feature;' Cot.—Lat. lineamentum, a drawing, delineation footure.—Lat. lineamentum, with suffix amentum, delineation footure.—Lat. lineamentum, with suffix amentum.

lineation, feature. - Lat. lineare, to draw a line; with suffix -mentum - Lat. linea, a line; see Line.

LINEAR, consisting of lines. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. linearis, belonging to a line. - Lat. linea; see Line. Doublet, lineal, which is an older word. Der. linear-ly.

Doublet, lineal, which is an older word. Der. linear-ly.

LINEN, cloth made of flax. (L.) Used as a sb., but really an adj., with adj. suffix -en as in wooll-en, gold-en; the orig. sb. was lin, preserved in lin-seed. M. E. lin, sb., linen, adj. The sb. is rare. The bondes . . . That weren of ful strong line' = the bonds that were of very strong flax; Havelok, 539. The adj. is common. Clothid with lynnun cloth . . . he lefte the lynnyn clothing; Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 51, 52. It was also used as a sb., as now. 'In lynnen and the left of the lynnyn clothing is the lynnen as a sch., as now.' In lynnen are left of the lynnyn clothing is the left of the lynnyn clothing.' Mark, xiv. 51, 52. It was also used as a sb., as now. 'In lynnen yelothed' = clothed in linen; P. Plowman, B. i. 3. = A. S. lin, flax, linen; in comp. lin-wedd, a linen garment; John, xiii. 5. Thence was formed the adj. linen, as in linen hrægle a linen cloth, John, xiii. 4. — Lat. linum, flax; cognate with Gk. λ (rov, flax. See Line. And see linseed, linnet.

LING (1), a kind of fish. (E.) 'Lynge, fysshe;' Palsgrave. Spelt lenge in Prompt. Parv. p. 296; and see Way's note. Spelt lenge, Havelok, l. 832. Not found in A.S., but answering to A.S. lenga, weakened form of langa, i. e. 'the long one,' definite form of lang, long; see Long. So called from its slender shape. +Du. leng, a ling; from lang, long. + Icel. langa, a ling; from langr, long. + Norweg. langa, longa (Aasen). +Swed. långa. +G. långe, a ling; also called längsisch, i. e. long fish.

LING (2), heath. (Scand.) 'Lynge, or heth;' Prompt. Parv. p. 305; and see Way's note. 'Dede in the lyng' = lying dead on the heath; Sir Degrevant, l. 336, in Thornton Romances, ed. Halliwell.

(Not. A. S.) Leaf lyng ling heather: Dan lyng + Swed. lings.

ling, heather; Swed. dial. ling (Rietz). Root unknown.

LINGER, to loiter, tarry, hesitate. (E.) 'Of lingring doutes such hope is sprong, perdie;' Surrey, Bonum est mini, I. 10; in Tottell's Miscellany, ed. Arber, p. 31. Formed by adding the frequentative suffix -er or -r to the M. E. lengen, to tarry; with further thinning of e to i. This M. E. verb is by no means rare. 'I may no lenger lenge' = I may no longer linger; P. Plowman, B. i. 207. Cf. Will. of Palerne, 5421; Havelok, 1734. = A. S. lengan, to prolong, put off; Grein, i. 168; formed by the usual vowel-change (of a to e) from A. S. lang, long; see Long. Cf. Icel. lengia, to lengthen, from langr, long; G. verlängern, to prolong, from lang, long; Du. lengen, to lengthen, verlengen, to prolong.

LINGUAL, pertaining to the tongue. (L.) A late word, not in Todd's Johnson. Coined, as if from an adj. lingualis, from Lat. lingua, the tongue, of which the O. Lat. form was dingua (see lingua, the tongue, of which the O. Lat. form was dingua (see White's Dict.); cognate with E. Tongue, q. v. Der. (from Lat.

LINIMENT, a salve, soft ointment, (F.,-L.) The word occurs 3 or 4 times in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxii. c. 21. - F. liniment, a liniment, a thin ointment; Cot. - Lat. linimentum, smearman, 'a liniment, a thin outment;' Cot. — Lat. linimentum, smearing-stuff, ointment. Formed, with suffix -mentum, from linere, to smear. Cf. Gk. λείβειν, to pour forth, λιβρός, dripping; Skt. ri, to distil, ooze; drop; li, to melt, adhere. — Al, to distil, ooze; see Libation, Liquid, River.

LINING, a covering on the inner surface of a garment. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 791. Formed, with E. suffix -ing, from the verb to line, meaning to cover the inside of a garment with line, i. c.

LINT.

linen; see Line, Linen.

LINK (1), a ring of a chain, joint. (E.) In Shak. Cor. i. 1. 73. Cf. Trouth [truth] and mercy linked in a chain; Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. ii (How trouth is preferred). — A. S. klence or klenca, an uncertain word in the passage cited by Grein, ii. 82; but one meaning was 'link,' as appears from the derived verb gehlencian in Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, ii. 343, also from the comp. sb. wæl-hlence, a slaughter-link, i.e. linked coat of mail, Grein, ii. 646. + Icel. hlekkr (by assimilation for hlenkr), a link. + Dan. lanke, a chain, fetter. + Swed. lank, a link. + G. gelenk, a joint, link, ring; cf. G. lenken, to turn, bend. β. Closely connected with A. S. hline, a hill, but esp. a balk or boundary, a sense still preserved in mod. provincial E. linch (see Halliwell); with which cf. O. Lat. clingere, to surround. 7. The A.S. kline may well be connected with A.S. kring, a ring; and similarly clingere may be connected with Gk. кріков and Lat. circus, words cognate with A.S. hring. See Ring, Circus; of which link is little else than a third form. hardly connect it with Lithuan. lenkii, to bend, linkus, pliant, because the A.S. & requires an initial k in Lithuanian. Der. link, verb.

LINK (2), a torch. (Du.) 'A link or torch;' Minsheu's Dict., ed. 1627. 'Links and torches;' Shak. 1 Hen. IV, iii. 3. 48. A corruption of lint, as it appears in lint-stock, old form of lin-stock; see β. And again, lint is a corruption of lunt, by con-Linstock. fusion with lint in the sense of scraped linen. A lunt is a torch, a match, a rag for lighting a fire; see Jamieson's Scot. Dict. The word (like linstock) is borrowed from Dutch. - Du. lont, a match for a gun; whence lont-stok, 'a lint-stock;' Sewel. + Dan. lunte, a a gun; whence lost-stok, 'a lint-stock;' Sewel. + Dan. tunte, a match; whence lunte-stok, a linstock. + Swed. lunta, a match, an old bad book (fit to be burnt); whence luntstake, a linstock; O. Swed. lunta, 'funis igniarius,' Ihre. Der. lin-stock.

LINNET, a small singing-bird. (F., - L.) M. E. lynet, Court of Love, ed. 1561, 5th stanza from end. - F. linotte, 'a linnet;' Cot. [So called from feeding on the seed of flax and hemp, as is clearly shewn by similar names in other languages, e.g. G. hunfling, a linnet, from hanf, hemp, G. lein-finke, a linnet (cited by Wedgwood), lit. a lin-finch, flax-finch.] - F. lin, flax. - Lat. linum, flax; see Linen, Line. The E. name is lintwhite, Scotch lintquhit; see Complaint of Scotland, ed. Murray, p. 39, l. 24. From A. S. linetwige, a linnet; Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Avium. This name is also (probably) from Lat. linum, flax. So also W. llinos, a linnet; from llin, flax.

LINSEED, flax-seed. (Hybrid; L. and E.) M. E. lin-seed; spelt lynne-seed in P. Plowman, C. xiii. 190; linseed (to translate O. F. lynois) in Walter de Biblesworth; Wright's Vocab. i. 156. From M. E. lin = A. S. lin, flax, borrowed from Lat. linum, flax; and E. seed. See Line, Linen, and Seed. Der. linseed-oil, linseed-cake. LINSEY-WOOLSEY, made of linen and wool mixed. (Hybrid; L. and E.) Used facetiously in Shak. All's Well, iv. 1. 13; Minsheu (ed. 1627) has: 'linsis-woolsis, i. e. of linnen and woollen.' Made up from M. E. lin, linen; and E. wool; with -ssy as a suffix twice over. See Linen and Wool.

LINSTOCK, LINTSTOCK, a stick to hold a lighted match.

(Du.) In Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 188. 'Lint-stock, a carved stick (about half a yard) with a cock at one end to hold the gunner's match, and a sharp pike at the other, to stick it anywhere; 'Coles' Dict., ed. 1684. — Du. lontstok, 'a lint-stock; 'Sewel. — Du. lont, a match; and stok, a stick, for which see Stock. — Dan. lunte-stok, a lint-stock; from lunte, a match, and stok, a stick. + Swed. lunt-stake; from lunta, a match, an old bad book (fit to be burnt), and stake, a stick, candlestick. B. The derivation of Du. loni, Swed. lunta, is uncertain; but it would appear from Kilian that Du. lomp, a rag, tatter, O. Du. lompe, was also used in the same sense as loni, O. Du. lonts. And, as we find in the Teutonic languages the occasional interchange of mp with nk, nt (cf. E. kunch = kunk with kump, and link (2) with lint in lint-stock) we may perhaps suppose that O. Du. lonte, a match, rag = O. Du. lompe, a rag, tatter; and that Swed. lunta, a match = Swed. lumpor, rags (only used in the plural). See Ihre, s. v. lunia.

y. If so, we may further regard Du. lompe, a tatter, as a nasalised form of Du. lap, a remnant, shred, rag, tatter, which is cognate with E. lap; see Lap (2).

LINT, scraped linen. (L.) 'Lynt, schauynge of lynen clothe, Carpea;' Prompt. Parv. p. 306. Lye gives a A.S. linet, flax; but, without a reference. However, it is easily concluded that linet is an lintellus, a lintel; which (as Diez suggests) stands for limitellus*, dimin. of Lat. limes (stem limit-), a boundary, hence a border; see A similar contraction is found in Span. linde = Lat. limitem, a boundary.

LION, a large and fierce quadruped. (F., -L., -Gk.) In early use. In Layamon, 1463, we find leon in the earlier text, lion in the later. A still earlier form was leo, but this was borrowed from the Latin directly; see Leo. - O. F. leon, lion. - Lat. leonem, acc. of leo, a lion. [Hardly a Lat. word, but borrowed from Gk.] = Gk. λέων, a lion. Roet unknown; we also find G. löwe, O. H. G. leo, lewo; Russ. lev'; Lithuanian levas, lavas; Du. leeuw; &c. Cf. Heb. labi' a lion. Der. lion-ess, As You Like It, v. 3. 115, from F. lionnesse; lion-hearted; also lion-ise, orig. to show strangers the lions which used to be kept in the Tower of London.

LIP, the muscular part forming the upper and lower parts of the mouth. (E.) M. E. lippe, Chaucer, C. T. 128, 133. — A. S. lippe, Nppe. 'Labium, ufeweard lippa' = upper lip; Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 42, col. 1. 'Labrum, nivera lippe' = nether lip; id. + Du. lip. + Dan. libbe. + Swed. läpp. + G. lippe, lefze; O. H. G. lefs, leffur. Further allied to Lat. lab-rum, lab-ium, the lip; Irish lab, Gsel. liob, the lip; Lithuan. lupa; Pers. lab, the lip, Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 511. \(\beta \). The orig. sense is 'lapper,' or that which laps or sucks up; from the Teut. base LAP, to lap = Lat. base LAB, seen in lambers, to lick. See Lap (1). Der. lipp-ed; from the same root are lab-ial, lab-iate, lamb-ent.

LIQUEFY, to become liquid. (F., -L.) Also to make liquid, but this is prob. a later sense. 'The disposition not to liquefie' = to become liquid; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 840. - F. liquefier; but only found in Cot. as a pp.; he gives 'liquefie', dissolved, melted, made liquid.' B. The E. liquefy is formed by analogy with other words in -fy, which answers properly to F. -fier = Lat. -ficare, used in place of facere, to make. But in sense the word really corresponds to Lat. liquefieri, to become liquid, used as pass. of liquefacere, to make liquid.

— Lat. lique, from liquere, to be fluid; and facere, to make. See Liquid and Fact. Der. lique-fact-ion, Minsheu, ed. 1627; formed from liquefactus, pp. of liquefacere.

LIQUESCENT, melting. (L.) Modern; in Todd's Johnson. —

Lat. liquescent., stem of pres. pt. of liquescere, to become liquid; inceptive form of liquere, to be liquid. See Liquid. Der. liquescenc-y, de-liquescent.

LIQUEUR, a cordial. (F., -L.) A modern F. version of the older term Liquor, q. v.

LIQUID, fluid, moist, soft, clear. (F., -L.) 'The playne [flat] and liquide water; 'Tyndal, Works, p. 265, col. 2. - F. liquide, 'liquid, moist, wet;' Cot. - I.at. liquidus, liquid, moist. - Lat. liquere, to be liquid or moist. The base is LIK, an extension of LI, to flow, melt. — ARI, to distil; cf. Skt. ri, to distil, ooze, drop, ii, to melt, dissolve, liquefy. See River. Der. liquid, sb., liquid-i-ty, liquidness; also liquid-ate, q. v.; liquor, q. v., lique-fy, q. v.

LIQUIDATE, to make clear, clear or pay off an account. (L.) Bailey has liquidated, vol. ii. ed. 1731. - Low Lat. liquidatus, pp. of liquidare, to clarify, make clear. - Lat. liquidus, liquid, clear; see Liquid. Der. liquid-at-ion = F. liquidation; liquidat-or.

LIQUOR, anything liquid, moisture, strong drink. (F., -L.) The word is really F., but has been accommodated to the orig. Lat. spelling; yet we retain somewhat of the F. pronunciation, the qu spelling; yet we retain somewhat of the F. pronunciation, the qubeing sounded as c (k). M.E. licour, Chaucer, C.T. l. 3; spelt licur, Ancren Riwle, p. 164, l. 13.—O. F. liquer (Burguy), later liqueur, 'liquor, humor;' Cot.—Lat. liquorem, acc. of liquor, moisture.—Lat. liquorem, to be liquid; see Liquid. Doublet, liqueur.

LIQUORICE, the same as Licorice, q. v.

LIBP, to pronounce imperfectly, utter feebly, in speaking. (E.)

M. E. lispen, lipsen; Chaucer, C. T. 266 (Six-text, A. 264, where 5

MSS. have lipsed for lisped). - A.S. wlispian *, to lisp; not found, but regularly formed from the sdj. wlisp, imperfect in utterance, lisping. Blesus, wlisp; Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 45, col. 2. + Du. lispen, to lisp. + Dan. læspe, to lisp. + Swed. läspa. + G. lispeln, to lisp, whisper.

B. An imitative word, allied to Whisper, q.v. A somewhat similar word is Lat. blasus, lisping. Der. lisp, sb.; lisp-ing-ly.

LIST (1), a stripe or border of cloth, selvage. (E.) M. E. list, liste. 'With a brode liste' = with a broad strip of cloth; P. Plowman, B. v. 524. — A. S. Itst; Lye gives 'list, a list of cloth, limbur panni, fimbria;' from a gloss. + Du. lijst, list, a border. + Icel. lista, listi, list, selvage, border of cloth. + Dan. liste, list, fillet. + Swed. list, list, cornice. + G. leiste, list, border; O. H. G. lista. Root uncertain; see Fick, iii. 272. Der. list (2).

extension from M. E. lin, A. S. lin, flax, linen, which was borrowed from Lat. linum, flax. See Line, Linen.

LINTEL, the head-piece of a door or casement. (F., = L.) M. E. lintel, lyntel; Wyclif, Exod. xii. 22. = O. F. lintel (see Littré), later F. lintely, the lintel, or head-piece, over a door; Cot. Low Lat. lintely, a lintel, which (see Diece, over a door; Cot. Low Lat. lintely, a lintel, which (see Diece, over a door; Cot. Low Lat. lintely, a lintel, which (see Diece, over a door; Cot. Der. list, verb, en-list.

LIST (3), gen. used in the pl. Lists, q.v.
LIST (4), to choose, to desire, have pleasure in. (E.) In Shak.
1 Hen. VI, i. 5. 22. Often used as an impers. verb in older authors. M. E. listen, lusten; 'if thee lust' or 'if thee list' = if it pleases thee; Chaucer, C. T. 1185; cf. l. 1054. - A. S. lystan, to desire, used im-Chaucer, C. 1. 1185; ct. 1. 1054. — A. S. lystan, to desire, used impersonally; Grein, ii. 200. Formed (by regular vowel-change from u to y) from A. S. lust, pleasure; see Lust. + Du. lusten, to like; from lust, delight. + Icel. lysta, to desire; from losti, lust. + Dan. lyste; from lyst. + Swed. lysta, from lust. + Goth. luston; from lustus. + G. gelüsten; from lust. Der. list, sb., Oth. iii. 1. 105. And see list-less. LIST (5), to listen. (E.) In Hamlet, i. 5. 22. See Listen.

LISTEN, to hearken, give ear. (E.) In Shak. Macb. iv. 1. 89; ii. 22. Wagles field list on shore. So, wagles field beth. M.

ii. 2. 29. We also find list, as above. So we also find both M. E. lustnen or listnen, and lusten or listnen.

P. Plowman, B. xiv. 307; where the Trinity MS. has listneth, ed. Wright, 1. 9534. Here list(e)neth stands for the elder listneth, the e being inserted for greater case of pronunciation, and still retained in mod. E. spelling, though seldom sounded. We further find the pt. t. lustnede, Layamon, 26357; and the pp. lustned, id. 25128. The form lust-n-en is derived from lust-en by the insertion of n, not uncommonly thus introduced into verbs to give them a passive or neuter sense; this most clearly appears in Mœso-Gothic verbs in -nan, such as full-n-an, to become full, &c.; see Skeat's Meso-Goth. Glossary, p. 303. 2. The form lusten is in Layamon, 919; and is derived from A. S. hlystan, hlistan, ge-hlystan, to hear, listen to; Grein, ii. 90. — A. S. hlyst, hearing, the sense of hearing; id. 4 Icel. hlusta, to listen; from hlust, the ear. Cf. W. clust, the ear. β. The sb. hlyst (= hlust) is formed with the usual formative suffix -t (=Aryan -ta) from the base HLUS, to hear; cf. A. S. hlos-nian, O. H. G. hlos-én, to hearken, Grein, ii. 88. y. Again, HLU-S is an extension of Teut. base HLU, to hear, appearing in Goth. hliu-ma, hearing, A. S. hlú-d, loud, Icel. hlera or hlöra, to listen; and HLU = Lat. and Gk. KLU, appearing in Lat. cluere, to hear, Gk. κλύειν, to hear. - ΚΚU, to hear; cf. Skt. gru, to hear. See Loud.

Der. listen-er. Doublet, lurk, q. v.

LISTLESS, careless, uninterested. (E.) The lit. sense is 'devoid of desire.' Not really derived from the verb to list (see List (4)), but put in place of the older form lustless. We find lystles in Prompt. Parv. p. 307; but lustles in Gower, C. A. ii. 111. Formed from lust with the suffix -less. See Lust and -less. Cf. Icel. lystarlauss, having no appetite, from lyst = losti, lust. Der. list-less-ly, list-less-ness.

LISTS, the ground enclosed for a tournament. (F., = L.) Scarcely used in the singular. Used to translate O.F. lices in the Rom. of the Rose, 4199. M. E. listes, pl. sb., the lists, Chaucer, C. T. 63, 1861. The t is excrescent; the correct form would be lisses, but we often find t added after s in E. words; cf. whils-t, amongs-t, letwix-t. The sing, form would be lisse, in old spelling. - O. F. lisse, lice (mod. F. lice), 'a list or tiltyard;' Cot. Cf. Ital. liccia, a barrier, palisade, list; Span. liza, a list for tilting; Port. lica, licada, list, enclosed ground in which combats are fought. - Low Lat. licia, s. pl., barriers, palisades; licia duelli, the lists.

B. Etym. disputed; in spite of the difference in sense, it seems best to suppose a connection with F. lies, 'the woofe or thread of the shittle [shuttle] in weaving' (Cot.), Ital. liecio, woof, texture, cloth, yarn, Span. lizo, a skein of silk; all due to Lat. licium, a thread, a small girdle. There seems to have been an O. Lat. phrase illicium uocare, put for in licium uocare, to call together into an enclosure; which may account for the peculiar use of the word. Root uncertain.

LITANY, a form of prayer. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. letanie, Ancren Riwle, p. 20, l. 4; altered to litanie, litany, to bring it nearer to the Lat. spelling. — O. F. letanie, a litany; so spelt in the 13th century (Littré); mod. F. litania. - Lat. litania. - Gk. λιτανεία, a prayer. - Gk. λιταίνειν, to pray. - Gk. λίτομαι, λίσσομαι, I beg, pray, prayer.—G.K. Attauren, to pray.—G.K. Attomai, According, 1 beg, pray, beseech; cf. Attos, praying; Atth, prayer, entresty.

LITERAL, according to the letter. (F.,—L) 'It hath but one simple litterall sense;' Tyndal, Works, p. 1, col. 2:— O. F. literal, F. literal, "literall;' Cot.—Lat. literalis, literal.—Lat. litera, a letter; see Letter. Der. literal-ly, -ness; also liter-ar-y, a late word, Englished from Lat. literarius, belonging to learning; and see Literature.

LITERATURE, the science of letters, literary productions.

(F,-L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. — F. literature, 'literature, learning;' Cot.—Lat. literatura, scholarship; properly fem. of fut. part. corresponding to the pp. form literatus, learned. — Lat. litera; a

Der. literate = Lat. literatus; literatur-ed, letter; see Letter. Der. literate = Lat. literatus; literatur-ed, Hen. V, iv. 7. 157.

LITHARGE, protoxide of lead. (F., = L., = Gk.) Lit. 'stonesilver.' M. E. litarge, Chaucer, C. T. 631, 16243. = F. litharge, 'litargie, white lead;' Cot. = Lat. lithargyrus. = Gk. λιθάργυρος, litharge. = Gk. λιθ., stem of λίθος, a stone (root unknown); and flowers silver (see Argent) άργυρος, silver (see Argent).

LITHE, pliant, flexible, active. (Ε.) M. E. lithe, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, i. 118. - A. S. live (for linve), gentle, soft; Grein, ii. 183; live, gentle, id. 182.+G. ge-lind, ge-linde, O. H. G. lindi, soft, tender. + Lat. lentus, pliant. β. Shorter forms appear in Icel. linr, soft, Lat. lenis, gentle; see Lenient. Der. lind (the linden-tree); litheness; lissom = lithe-some. And see lenity, lentisk, re-lent.

LITHOGRAPHY, writing on stone. (Gk.) Modern. Coined from Gk. λίθο-, crude form of λίθοs, a stone; and γράφειν, to write.

Der. lithograph-er, lithograph-ic; lithograph.

LITHOTOMY, the operation of cutting for stone. (L., -Gk.)

Englished from Lat. lithotomia, the form given in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. – Gk. λιθοτομία. – Gk. λίθο-, crude form of λίθοε, a stone; and τομ-, for ταμ-, base of τέμνειν, to cut; see Tome. Der. litholom-ist. LITIGATION, a contest in law. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -ion, from Lat. litigatio, a disputing. - Lat. litigatus, pp. of litigare, to dispute. - Lat. lit-, stem of lis, strife; and ig, weakened form of ag-ere, to drive, conduct (see Agent).

β. The Lat. lis was in O. Lat. stlis (Festus), cognate with E. Strife, q.v. Der. litigate, a late verb, really due to the sb.; litigant = Lat. litigant-, stem. of pres. pt. of litigare; also litigious, q. v.

LITIGIOUS, contentious. (F.,-L.) In old authors it also means debatable or doubtful; see Trench, Select Glossary. Litigious = precarious; Shak. Pericles, iii. 3. 3. - F. litigieux, 'litigious, debatefull;' Cot. - Lat. litigiosus, (1) contentious, (2) doubtful. -Lat. litigium, strife. - Lat. litigare, to dispute; see Litigation.

Der. litigious-ly, litigious-ness.

LITMUS, a kind of dyc. (Du.) Spelt litmose-blew in Phillips. ed. 1706. Put for lakmose. - Du. lakmoss, a blue dye-stuff (Sewel). - Du. lak, lac; and moes, pulp. So also G. lackmuss, litmus; from lack, lac, Cf. Gk. λέκτρον, a bed, λέχος, a couch. - Lat. and Gk. base LAGH, to lie; see Lie (1). Allied to Lectern.

LITTER (2), materials for a bed, a heap of straw for animals to lie on, a confused mass of objects scattered about; &c. (F., -L.) Really the same word as the above; with allusion to beds of straw for animals, and hence a confused heap. Thus Cotgrave has: Litiere, a horse-litter, also litter for cattell, also old dung or manure.

See Litter (1). Der. litter, verb, Temp. i. 2. 282.

LITTER (3), a brood. (Scand.) In Shak., Merry Wives, iii. 5.12. Confused in form with the words above, but really derived from Icel. látr, láttr, a place where animals produce their young, whence látrask, to litter; all derivatives of lag, a layer, from leggia, to lay, or liggia, to lie. See Lie (1). Cf. prov. E. lafter, lawter, eggs laid by a hen. LITTLE, small. (E.) M. E. litel, lutel (with one t); Chaucer, C. T. 492; Havelok, 481; Layamon, 9124. – A. S. lytel, litel; Grein, ii. 201. A lengthened form from A. S. lyt, sb. a little; lyt, adv. little; id. 200.+Du. luttel, little, few; cf. lutje, a little, a bit. + Icel. litil, little; cf. litt, adv. little. + Dan, liden, little; also found as lille (=litle). + Swed. liten. + Goth. leitils. + M. H. G. lützel; O. H. G. luzil; also M. H. G. luzic, luzig (base luz).

β. All from a base LUT, to deceive, in connection with which we also find A.S. lytig, deceitful, Ælfric's Colloquy, in Wright's Vocab. i. 12, l. 14; also A.S. lot, deceit, Grein, i. 194; and the Goth. liuts, deceitful, liuta, dissembler, luton, to betray. Thus the old sense of little is liuta, dissembler, luton, to betray. 'deceitful' or 'mean;' a sense still retained. γ. Further, the Teut. base LUT meant orig. to stoop, to bow down (hence to creep, or sneak), as in A. S. lútan, to stoop, 'lout,' incline to; see Lout. See Fick, iii. 276. Der. little-ness. The forms less, least, are See Fick, iii. 276. Der. little-ness. from a different source. But see Loiter.

LITTORAL, belonging to the sea-shore. (L.) Spelt littoral in Kersey; literal in Blount, ed. 1674. Mere Latin. — Lat. littoralis, better literalis, belonging to the sea-shore.—Lat. liter., stem of litus, the sea-shore. Root uncertain.

LITURGY, public worship, established form of prayer. (F., -Low Lat., - Gk.) Spelt litturgie in Minsheu, ed. 1627. - O. F. lyturgie, 'a liturgy, or form of service;' Cot. - Low Lat. liturgia. -GK. λειτουργία, public service. – Gk. λειτουργόε, performing public service or duties. – Gk. λείτοι, crude form of λείτοι, public; and έργον, work, cognate with E. Work.

β. Λείτοι, λέϊτοι, λάϊτοι, λάϊτοι, public, is derived from Auds, Aeds, the people; whence E. Laic, Lasty. Der. liturgi-c, liturgi-cal, liturg-ist.

LIVE (1), to continue in life, exist, dwell. (E.) M.E. litten, liture (with u for v); Chaucer, C. T. 508; Havelok, 355.—A. S. liftan, lyfian; Grein, ii. 185; also libban, lybban, id. 179; where bb stands for ff, due to fi.+Du. leven; also used as sb., with sense of 'life.' + Icel. lifa, to be left, to remain behind; also to live. + Dan. leve. + Swed. lefva. + Goth. liban. +G. leben, to live (whence leben, sb. life), M. H. G. leben, lepen, to live (also spelt libjan, lipjan); allied to b-leiben, M. H. G. beliben, O. H. G. beliban, to remain, be left. B. The sense of 'live' is unoriginal; the older sense is to remain, to be left behind. See further under Life. Der. liver, liveing; and see live (2).

LIVE (2), adj. alive, having life, active, burning. (E.) 'Upon the next live creature that it sees;' Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 172. 'The use of this adj. is really due to a mistake; it is merely short for alive, which is not a true adj., but a phrase consisting of a prep. and a dat. case; see Alive.

B. The use as an adj. arose the more easily owing to the currency of the words live-ly and liv-isk. The former is still in use, but the latter is obsolete; it occurs in Gower,

C. A. iii. 93. Der. live-stock.

LIVELLIHOOD, means of subsistence. (E.) a. Cotgrave translates F. patrimoine by 'patrimony, birthright, inheritance, livelihood.' And Drayton speaks of a man 'Of so fair livelihood, and so large rent;' The Owl (R.) The metre shows that the word was then, as now, trisyllabic.

β. But it is a singular corruption of the M. E.

life-leading means of living; due to confusion livelode, livelode, i. e. life-leading, means of living; due to confusion with livelihood in the sense of 'liveliness,' as used (quite correctly) in Shak. Venus, 26; All's Well, i. 1. 58. Again livelode is better spelt liftode, as in P. Plowman, B. prol. 30. Cf. Lyftode, liyflode, lyuelode, or warysome, Donativum; Prompt. Parv. p. 308; indeed, we find livelode as late as in Levins, ed. 1570. An older spelling is in St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 20, l. 16, where we find liftade, meaning 'way of life,' lit. leading of life.

8. Compounded of life = A. S. lif, life; and lade = A. S. lid, a leading, way, also provisions to live by, Grein, ii. 150.

Another sense of A. S. lid is a course, as preserved in mod. E. lode.

See Life and Lode.

LIVELONG, long-lasting, long as it is. (E.) 'The livelong night;' Macb. ii. 3. 65. Put for life-long, as live-ly is for life-ly. See Life and Long.

B. The use of life-long has, in modern times, been revived, but only in the strict sense of 'lasting through life;' whereas the sense of live-long (really the same word) is much wider.

LIVELY, vigorous, active. (E.) A corruption of lifely. 'Lyvely, liyfly, or qwyk, or fulle of lyyf, Vivax;' Prompt. l'arv. p. 308. Chaucer uses lifly in the sense of 'in a life-like manner,' C. T. 2089. Compounded of Life and Like. Der. liveli-ness, in Holinshed, Conquest of Ireland, c. 9 (R.) Cf. lively, adv., in a life-like manner, Two Gent. iv. 4. 174.

TIVER, an organ of the body, secreting bile. (E.) M. E. liuer (with u=v); Chaucer, C. T. 7421.—A.S. lifer, Grein ii. 184.+Du. lever. +Iccl. lifr.+Dan. lever. + Swed. lefver. +G. leber, M. H. G. lebere, O. H. G. lépara, lipara. Cf. Russ. liver', the pluck (of animals). β. The apparent form of the base is LIP; but the origin is uncertain; see Fick, iii. 271. Der. liver-coloured; also liver-wort, Prompt. Parv.

LIVERY, a thing delivered, as e.g. a uniform worn by servants; a delivery. (F., - L.) M. E. liuerd (with u for v, and trisyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 365. - F. liurde, a delivery of a thing that's given, the thing so given, hence, a livery; Cot. Properly the fem. of the pp. of livrer, to deliver, give. Cf. Ital. liberare, to deliver. - Low Lat. liberare, to give, give freely; a particular use of Lat. liberare, to set free; see Liberate. Der. livery-man; livery-stable, a stable where horses are kept at livery, i.e. at a certain rate or on a certain allowance; liveried. The word is fully explained in Spenser, View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 623, col. 2; and Prompt. Parv. p. 308. LIVID, black and blue, discoloured. (F., -L.) Purple or livid spots; Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 12, l. 21. - F. livide Spots; Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 12, l. 21. - F. livide leader coloured. blinks - Let livere to be (Cot.) - Lat. liuidus, leaden-coloured, bluish. - Lat. liuere, to be bluish. Root uncertain. Der. livid-ness.

LIZARD, a kind of four-footed reptile. (F.,-L.) M. E. lesarde, Prompt. Parv. p. 298; lusarde, P. Plowman, B. xviii 335. - F. lesard, lezard, 'a lizard;' Cot. - Lat. lacerta, a lizard; also lacertus. Root LLAMA, a Peruvian quadruped. (Peruvian.) See Prescott, Conquest of Peru, c. v. 'Llama, according to Garcilasso de la Vega, is a Peruvian word signifying flock; see Garcilasso, Com. Real. parte i. lib. viii. c. xvi;' note in Prescott.

LO, interj. see, behold. (E.) M. E. io, Chaucer, C. T. 3019.—A. S. id, lo! Grein, ii. 148.

B. Lo is gen. considered as equivalent to lá, lo ! Grein, ii. 148. look; but the A. S. lá, lo! and lócian, to look, have nothing in comβ. Λείτοε, λέιτοε, λάιτοε, mon but the initial letter. The fact is, rather, that is a natural to utter a war-cry, Lat. la-trare, to bark; &c.

LOACH, LOCHE, a small river-fish. (F.) M. E. loche;

Prompt. Parv. p. 310.— F. loche, 'the loach;' Cot. Cf. Span. loja, a loach; also spelt locha, loche. Origin unknown.

LOAD, to lade, heap on a burden. (E.) A doublet of lade. Load is common in Shak. both as sb. and verb, but in M. E. it seems to be a sb. only, the verb being lade, which is a still older word. [The A. S. word for the sb. is klast, a burden; see Last (4).] M. E. lode, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 2020; Gower, C. A. ii. 203. l. 24. The pp. laden occurs in Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1800; Rich. Cuer de Lion, 1389. — A. S. kladan, to lade, load, heap up, Grein, ii. 79. [It also means to draw water; see Lade (2).] + Du. laden, to lade, load. + Icel. hlaba. + Dan. lade. + Swed. ladda. + Goth. hlathan ouly in comp. af hlathan. + G. be-laden, O. H. G. hladan. β. All from Teut. base HLATH, to load; Fick, iii, 87. Cf. Russ. klade, a load. Der. load, sb. (see above); load-ing. Doublet, lade (1).

LOAD-STAR, LOAD-STONE, the same as Lode-star,

Lode-stone.

LOAF, a mass of bread; also of sugar. (E.) M.E. lof, loof. 'A pese-lof' = a loaf made of peas; P. Plowman, B. vi. 181; pl. looses (=loves), Wyclif, Matt. iv. 3. - A. S. hlif, a loaf; Grein, ii. 79. + Icel. hleifr. + Goth. hlaifs, or hlaibs. + G. laib, M. H. G. leip. Cf. also Lithuanian hlepas, Lettish klaipas, bread; cited by Fick, iii. 86. Also Russ. khlieb', bread. Der. loaf-sugar.

LOAM, a mixed soil of clay, sand, &c. (E.) M. E. lam, dat. lame; Cursor Mundi, 11985; where one MS. has cley (clay). — A. S. lám; Grein, ii. 153.+Du. leem.+G. lehm, O. H. G. leim. A. S. lám (= laim) is a strengthened form of lim, lime, to which loam is closely allied. See Lime (1). Der. loam-y, M. E. lami, Holi Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 47, l. 28.

LOAN, a lending, money lent. (E.) M. E. lone, Chaucer, C. T.

7443; P. Plowman, B. xx. 284. This would correspond to an A. S. form liin, but we only find lién, Grein, ii. 163; Ælfrie's Homilies, ii. 176, last line. There was, no doubt, also a form lán. [We find a similar duplication of forms in dole and deal, answering to A. S. dál and dal respectively; see those words. And of the Icel forms given below.] + Du. leen, a fief; lit. 'a grant.' + Icel. lán, a loan; lén, a fief. + Dan. laan, a loan. + Swed. lân. + G. lehn, lehen, a fief; O. H. G. léhan, a thing granted. β. These words answer to a O. H. G. léhan, a thing granted. Teut. form LAIHNA, i.e. a thing lent or granted; from the base LIHW (LIII), to grant or lend; appearing in Goth. leihwan, to lend (Luke, vi. 34), A. S. lihan, to lend, give (Grein, ii. 187), Icel. ljá, to lend, G. leihen, O. H. G. lihan.

Y. This base exactly answers to lend, G. leihen, O. H. G. lihan. v. This base exactly answers to the base 1.1QU (LIK), of the Lat. linquere (pt. t. liqu-i), to leave; which is closely related to Gk. λείπειν, Skt. rich, to leave. - VRIK, to leave, empty; whence also Lat. licere and E. licence. distinct from A.S. leún, Icel. laun, G. lohn, a reward; for which see Lucre. Der. len-d, q. v.

LOATH, disliking, reluctant, unwilling. (E.) M.E. loth (opposed liked. + Dan. led, loathsome. + Swed. led, odious. + O. II. G. leit, odious.

A. All from a Teut. form LAITHA, painful; from the Teut. base LITH, to go, pass, move on, hence to go through, undergo, experience, suffer. This base appears in A. S. ltoan, to go, travel, Icel. lida, to go, pass, move on, also to suffer, O. H. G. lidan, to go, experience, suffer, mod. G. leiden, to suffer. From the notion of experience the sense passed on to that of painful experience, suffering, pain, &c. From the same base is Lead (1), q. v. Der, loath-ly = A. S. liblic, Grein, ii. 151; loathe, verb = A. S. liblic, Grein, ii. 151; loathe, verb = A. S. liblic, Elfric's Hom. ii. 506, l. 24; loath-ing, sb., Prompt. Parv. p. 316; loath-some, Prompt. Parv. p. 314, where the suffix -some = A. S. -sum as in win-some; also loath-some-ness.

LOBBY, a small hall, waiting room, passage. (F. or Low Lat.,—G.) In Hamlet, ii. 2, 161, iv. 3. 39. [We can hardly suppose that the word was taken up into E. directly from the Low Lat.; it must have come to us through an O. F. lobie *, not recorded.] - Low Lat. lobia, a portico, gallery, covered way, Ducange; also spelt lobium. -M. H. G. loube, an arbour, a bower, also an open way up to the upper story of a house (Wackernagel). The latter sense will be at once intelligible to any one who has seen a Swiss châlet; and we can thus see also how it easily passed into the sense of a gallery to lounge or wait in. The same word as mod. G. laube, a bower. So called from being formed orig, with branches and foliage. — M. H. G. loub, loup, O. H. G. laup, mod. G. laub, a leaf; cognate with E. Leaf, q. v. Doublet, lodge. LOBE, the flap or lower part of the ear, a division of the lungs or brain. (F., -Low Lat., -Gk.) In Cotgrave. -F. lobe, 'the lap or lowest part of the ear, also a lobe or lappet of the liver; 'Cot. - Late Lat. lobus, not given in Ducange, but it may (I suppose) be found in old works on medicine as a transliteration of the Gk. word.

interjection, to call attention. Cf. Gk. dλαλή, a loud cry, dλαλάζειν, to utter a war-cry, Lat. la-trare, to bark; &c.

ARA, to hang down; whence also Skt. ramb, to hang down. Scr Gk. $\lambda O \lambda s_i$ a different word, and connected with $\lambda \epsilon user. lob-als, mod. and scientific; lob-ed.

LOBSTER, a kind of shell-fish. (L.) M. E. lopstere, loppester, loppister. 'A loppyster or a crabbe;' Wright's Vocab. i. 176, l. 21. 'Hic polipus, lopstere;' id. i. 189, col. 2.—A. S. loppester; Wright's Vocab. i. 56, col. 1, l. 2; i. 77, col. 2; better spelt lopystre, as in Ælfric's Colloquy, id. p. 6, l. 11.

B. The sense of the word is said to be 'leaper' in Richardson, but this can hardly have been the case, since the A. S. for 'leap' is hleapan: the fact is rather that the case, since the A. S. for 'leap' is hleapan; the fact is rather that the word had no sense in A.S., lopystre being a mere corruption of Lat. locusta, meaning (1) lobster, (2) locust; see Locust. [Prov. E. lop, A.S. loppe, a flea, is a Scand. form; cf. Dan. loppe, a flea.] interchange of k and p is well shown in Schleicher, Compend. § 123; thus the root KAK, to cook, becomes pach in Skt., coquere in Lat., πέπτειν in Gk., &c. The Skt. ap = Lat. aqua; Gk. ιπποε = Lat. equus. So here, the c turns to p the more readily because the vowel u fol-The A.S. y represents a modified u, as usual.

LOCAL, belonging to a place. (F., -L.) Spelt local! in Frith, Works, p. 139, last line. - F. local, 'locall;' Cot. - Lat. localis, local. - Lat. locus, a place; see Locus. Der. local-ly, local-ise, localis-at-ion, local-i-ty, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; also loc-ate, q. v.

LOCATE, to place. (L.) A late word, added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. - Lat. locatus, pp. of locare, to place. - Lat. locus, a place; see Local. Der. locat-ion; locat-ive.

LOCH, a lake. (Gaelic.) In place-names, as Loch Lomond, Lock Ness. - Gael, and Irish loch, a lake, arm of the sea. + W. llwch (Spurrell, p. 183). + Corn. lo. + Manx logh. + Bret. louch (with guttural ch). + Lat. lacus; see Lake. Doublets, lake, lough.

LOCK (1), an instrument to fasten doors, an enclosure in a canal; &c. (E.) M. E. loke, Prompt. Parv. p. 311; pl. loken, also locum, Layamon, 5926. - A. S. loca, pl. locan; Grein, ii. 191. + Icel. loka, alock latch: loke a cover lid of a cheet. + Sund lock a lid. a lock, latch; lok, a cover, lid of a chest. + Swed. lock, a lid. + G. lock, a dungeon, hole; orig. a locked-up place. B. The Teut. form is LUKA (Fick, iii. 274) from the Teut. base LUK, to lock, enclose, appearing in the strong verb lúcan, to enclose, Grein, ii. 194; also in Icel. lika, to shut, finish (strong verb); M. H. G. likehen, to shut; Goth. galukan, to shut, shut up. Remoter relations doubtful; see suggestions in Fick, as above. Der. lock, verb, M. E. lokken, locken, Chaucer, C. T. 5899 (observe that this verb is a secondary formation from the sb., and not to be confused with the old strong verb luken, louken = A. S. lúcan, now obsolete, of which the pp. loken occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 14881); also lock-er, a closed place that locks = M. E. lokere, Prompt. Parv. p. 311, answering to O. Flemish loker, a chest (Kilian); also lock-jaw, put for locked-jaw; lock-keeper; lock-smith; lock-up. And see lock-et.

LOCK (2), a tuft of hair, flock of wool. (E.) M. E. lok; pl. lokkes, lockes, Chaucer, C. T. 81. - A. S. locc, loc, Grein, ii. 191; pl. loccas. + Du. lok, a lock, tress, curl. + Icel. lokkr. + Dan. lok. + Swed. lock. + O. H. G. lock, G. locke.

B. The form of the Teut. word is LUKKA (Fick, iii. 274); from a Teut. base LUK, to bend, which perhaps appears in Icel. lykkr, a loop, bend, crook.

γ. The corresponding Aryan base is LUG; whence Gk. λύγος, a pliant twig, withy; λυγίζειν, to bend. But this does not seem to be quite certain.

LOCKET, a little gold case worn as an ornament. (F., - Scand. or E.) The old sense is a small lock, something that fastens. 'With wooden lockets 'bout their wrists,' with reference to the pillory; Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1. l. 808. - F. loquet, 'the latch of a door;' Cot. Dimin. of O. F. loc, a lock; Burguy. Borrowed title in the from Icel. loka, a lock, latch; or from English.

LOCKRAM, a cheap kind of linen. (F., - Breton.) In Shak.

Cor. ii. 1. 225; see Nares and Halliwell. - F. locrenan, the name given to a sort of unbleached linen; named from the place in Brittany where it is manufactured; Dict. de Trévoux. - F. Loc-renan, also called S. Renan, the name of a place in Basse Bretagne, a few miles N. by W. from Quimper. - Bret. Lok-ronan, the Bret. name for the same place. The sense of the name is 'St. Ronan's cell;' from Bret. 16k, a cell, and Ronan. St. Ronan; see Legonidec's Bret. Dict., where this very name is cited as an instance of the use of Lok- as LOCOMOTION, motion from place to place. (L.) 'Progression or animal locomotion;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 1. § 2. Coined from Lat. loco., crude form of locus, a place; and motion. See Locus and Motion. Der. locomot-ive, adj., Kersey's stlocus, a place. Of uncertain origin; apparently the same word noticed by Sewel, who translates E. log-line by Du. minuit-lyn or with E. stall (Fick, i. 821); but Corssen rejects this, and connects it with the STAR, to strew; cf. G. strecke, a tract, extent. See Stall, Stretch.

Der. loc-al, q.v., loc-ate, al-locate, col-locate, dis-Stall, Stretch. locate, lieu, lieu-tenant, loco-motive; also couch.

LOCUST, a winged insect. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715, it also means 'a fish like a lobster, called a long-oister; see Lobster. M. E. locust, Cursor Mundi, 6041; Wyclif, Rev. ix. 3.—Lat. locusta, a shell-fish; also a locust. Root uncertain. Doublet, lobster, q. v. LODE, a vein of ore. (E.) In Halliwell. Also spelt load, as in Carew's Survey of Cornwall, p. 10 (R.) An old mining term. The lit, sense is 'course.'—A. S. lad, a way, course, journey; on lade in the way. Boowniff of Green 1, 1087. —A. S. liken to contravel. the way, Beowulf, ed. Grein, l. 1987. - A. S. liban, to go, travel. + Icel. leid, a lode, way, course; from lida, to go, pass, move. + Dan. led, a gate; from lide, to glide on. +Swed. led, a way, course; from lide, to pass on. β. The Teut. base is LAITHA, a course, from Teut. verb LITHAN, to go, pass on; Fick, iii. 270. See Load (1).

Der. lode-star, lode-stone; also lead (1).

LODESTAR, LOADSTAR, the pole star. (E.) Lit. 'way-star;' i. e. the star that shews the way, or that leads. M. E. lodesterre, Chaucer, C. T. 2061. Compounded of lode, a way, course; and star. See Lode and Star. + Icel. leidar-stjarna; from leidar, gen. case of leid, a way, and stjarna, a star. + Swed. led-stjerna. + G. leit-stern. ¶ Not to be derived from the verb to lead, because that word is a mere derivative of lode, as shewn by the vowel-change; but the words are, of course, connected.

LODESTONE, LOADSTONE, an ore that attracts pieces of iron. (E.) 'For lyke as the lodestone draweth unto it yron;' Udall, on S. Mark, c. 5. And see Robinson's tr. of More's Utopia (1556), ed. Arber, p. 32. Spelt lodestone, loadstone, in Minsheu, cd. 1627. Compounded of lode and stone, in imitation of the older word lodestar; see above. ¶ It may be remarked that it is an incorrect formation; it is intended to mean 'a leading or drawing stone,' whereas the lit. sense is 'way-stone.' The same remark applies to the cognate Icel. leidarsteinn.

LODGE, a small house, cottage, cell, place to rest in. (F., -Low Lat., = G.) M. E. loge, logge; Chaucer, C. T. 14859; Seven Sages, ed. Weber, 2603. = O. F. loge, 'a lodge, cote, shed, small house;' Cot. [Cf. Ital. loggia, a gallery, a lodge.] — Low Lat. laubia, a porch; cf. lobia, a gallery. LOG (1), a block, piece of wood. (Scand.) 'A long log of timbre;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 54 g.—Icel. lig, a felled tree, a log. + Swed. dial. låga, a felled tree, a tree that has been blown down, a wind-fall (Rietz). Cf. O. Swed. ldge, broken branches (Ihre); also prov. E. lag-wood (= log-wood), the larger sticks from the head of an oak-tree when felled; Dorsetshire (Halliwell). β. So called from its lying flat on the ground, as distinguished from the living tree. Formed from the Teut. base LAG, to lie; see Lie (1). Der. log-cabin, log-hut; log-man, Temp. iii. 1. 67; logg-et, a small log (with dimin. suffix -et, of F. origin), Ben Jonson, Tale of a Tub, A. iv. sc. 5, Puppy's 5th speech; logg-ats, another spelling of logg-ets, the knoop lyn. See Log (1). Der. log-board, book, line, -reel. LOG (3), a Hebrew liquid measure. (Heb.) The twelfth part of a kin. In Levit. xiv. 10.— Heb. tog, a word which orig. signified 'a basin;' Smith, Dict. of the Bible.

LOGARITHM, the exponent of the power to which a given number or base must be raised in order to produce another given number of base must be fusied in order to produce another given number. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Logarithms were invented by Napier, who published his work in 1614; Haydn. Coined from Gk. λογ., stem of λόγοs, a word, a proportion; and dριθμόs, a number; the sense being 'ratio-number.' See Logic and Arithments. metic. Der. logarithm-ic, -ic-al, -ic-al-ly.

LOGGER-HEAD, a dunce, a piece of round timber (in a metic.

whale-boat) over which a line is passed to make it run more slowly. (Hybrid; Scand. and E.) In Shak. it means a blockhead; L. L. L. iv. 3. 204. The word evidently means log-head, and is a similar formation to block-head; the only difficulty is to account for the syllable -er. Webster gives: 'logger, one engaged in getting timber.'

See Log (1) and Head.

LOGIC, the science of reasoning correctly. (F., = L., = Gk.)

M. E. logike, Chaucer, C. T. 288. = O. F. logique, 'logick;' Cot. =

Lat. logica (= ars logica), logic; properly from of logicus, logical. =

(b) logica (= ars logical, logic; properly from of logicus, logical. = Gk. λογική (=λογική τέκνη), logic; properly fem of λογικόs, belonging to speaking, reasonable. = Gk. λόγος, a speech. = Gk. λέγεν, to collect, gather, select, tell, speak. + Lat. legere, to collect, select, read.

β. See Curtius, i. 454; he suggests LAK as the form of the European base, which by extension to LAKS and subsequent loss of k, prob. gave rise to Goth lisan, to collect, Lithuanian les-ti, to gather up, Lettish lasz-it, to collect; with which cf. prov. E. lease, to glean. Der. logic-al, logic-al-ly, logic-i-an (Levins). Also (from Gk. λογιστής, a calculator, λογιστικός, skilled in calculating), logistic, logistical. Also logo-macky, a strife about words = Gk. λογο-μαχία, I Tim. vi. 4, from Gk. λόγο-, crude form of λογός, and μάχ-ομαι, I fight or contend. From the same Gk. source we have numerous words, as ana-logue, apo-logue, cata-logue, deca-logue, dialogue, ec-logue, epi-logue, mono-logue, pro-logue; also syl-log-ism; also log-arithm; also ana-logy, apo-logy, etymo-logy, eu-logy; also all scientific terms in -logy, such as bio-logy, concho-logy, &c.

M. E. loine, loyne; Prompt. Parv. p. 312; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 191, in a song written temp. Edw. II.—O. F. logne (Burguy), also longe, 'the loyne or flank;' Cot. — Low Lat. lumbus, the loin. See Lumbago.

We may note that the A. S. lendenu, pl. sb., the loins, is probably cognate with the Lat. word; hence came M. E. lendis, leendis, the loins, in Wyclif, Matt. iii. 4, &c.

Lumbar.

LOITER, to delay, linger. (Du.) 'Loyter and goe a-begging;' Tyndall's Works, p. 217, col. 1; see Trench, Select Glossary, where Tyndal's Works, p. 217, col. 1; see Trench, Select Glossary, where the orig. bad sense of the word is noted. M. E. loitren. 'Loytron, or byn ydyl, Oeior;' Prompt. Parv. p. 311. — Du. (and O. Du.) leuteren, to linger, loiter, triffe, waver; also O. Du. loteren, to delay, linger, act negligently, deceive, waver, vacillate (Kilian, Oudemans); cf. O. Flemish lutsen, with the same senses (Kilian). β. The true sense is 'to stoop,' and figuratively to sneak; and the word is formed with the frequential surface of the Tout have I. U. I. formed with the frequentative suffix -er from the Teut. base LUT, to stoop, appearing in A. S. lútan, Icel. lúta, to stoop, give way, lútr, stooping, and in E. Lout, q. v. Thus to loiter is 'to act like a lout.' The Dan. form is weakened to lude, to stoop, with which perhaps cf. Icel. loddari, a loiterer, a tramp, O. Du. lodderen, 'to lie lazie in bedd, Hexham; &c.

[Loiter comes also very near to A. S. gelutian, to crouch (Grein), whence M. E. lotien, to creep about, lurk, lie hid, Chaucer, C. T. 15654 (Six-text, G. 186), P. Plowman, B. xvii. 102; this is another word (without the frequentative -er-) from the same base. Der. loiter-er.

LOLL, to lounge about lazily. (O. Low G.) M. E. loilen; 'And wel loselyche he lolleth there' = and very idly he lounges there; P. Plowman, B. xii. 23. 'He that lolleth is lame, other his leg out of ioynte, Other meymed in som membre' = he who lounges is lame, this leg is out of ioint or he is mained in some member; id. C. x. or his leg is out of joint, or he is maimed in some member; id. C. x. sc. 5, Puppy's 5th speech; logg-ats, another spelling of logg-ets, the name of a game, Hamlet, v. 1. 100; log-wood, so called because imported in logs, for which reason it was also called block-wood as appears from Kersey's Dict. and the Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 9, cited in Wedgwood; also log (2), q.v.; logger-head, q.v.

LOG (2), a piece of wood with a line, for measuring the rate of a ship. (Scand.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. Rather Scand. than Dutch, and ultimately of Scand. origin, being identical with Log (1).—Swed. logg, a log (as a sea-term), whence log-lina, a log-line, log-bok, a log-book, logga, to heave the log (Widegren); so also Dan. log, log-line, log-bog, logge. We also find Du. log, log-linin, log-line, log-book, logges; but these do not seem to be old words, being un-book, logges; but these do not seem to be old words, being un-book, logges; but these do not seem to be old words, being un-book, logges; but these do not seem to be old words, being un-book, logges; but these do not seem to be old words, being un-book, logges; but these do not seem to be old words, being un-book, logges; but these do not seem to be old words, being un-book, logges; but these do not seem to be old words, being un-book, logges; but these do not seem to be old words, being un-book, logges; but these do not seem to be old words, being un-book are Icel. lulla, to loll (thought to be borrowed from Logges).

English); O. Icel. 'lolla, to move or act slowly, lolla, sloth, 'and v. Also long, verb (see below); length, q. v.; ling (1), q. v.; words cited by Wedgwood, but not in Cleasby's Dict.; Icel. lalla, | ling-er. q. v., lunge, q. v. Also lumber (1). to toddle (as a child); Swed. and Dan. dial. lulla, a cradle (Rietz, Outzen). Der. loll-er; and see Lollard.

LOLLARD, a name given to the followers of Wyclif. (O. Du.) The history of the word is a little difficult, because it is certain that several words have been purposely mixed up with it. 1. In the first place, the M. E. word most commonly in use was not lollard, but lollar one who lolls, a lounger, an idle vagabond. 'I smelle a loller in the wind, quod he;' Chaucer, C. T. 12914. That 'lounger' is the true sense of this form of the word, is clear from a passage in P. Plowman, C. x. 188-218, the whole of which may be consulted. The most material lines are: 'Now kyndeliche, by Crist, beth suche called lolleres, As by englisch of oure eldres of olde mennes techynge; He that lolleth is lame other his leg out of ioynte Other maymed in som membre,' i. e. such fellows are naturally called lollers in the English of our forefathers; he that lolls about is lame, or broken-jointed, or 2. At the same time, the name lollard was maimed; see Loll. also in use as a term of reproach; and this was an O. Du. term, Latinised as Lollardus. It had been in use before Wyclif. Ducange quotes from Johannes Hocsemius, who says, under the date 1309: *Eodem anno quidam hypocritae gyrovagi, qui Lollardi sive Deum laudantes vocabantur, per Hannoniam et Brabantiam quasdam mu-lieres nobiles deceperunt; ' i. e. In this year certain vagabond hypocrites, called Lollards or God-praisers, deceived certain noblewomen in Hainault and Brabant. He adds that Trithemius says in his Chronicle, under the date 1315: 'ita appellatos a Gualtero Lollard, Germano quodam.' This latter statement makes no difference to the etymology, since Lolhard as a surname (like our surnames Fisher, Baker, or Butcher) is precisely the same word as when used in the sense of 'God-praiser.' The lit. sense is 'a singer,' one who chants. -O. Du. lollaerd (1) a mumbler of prayers or hymns (Lat. mussitator), one who hums; (2) a Lollard; Kilian, Oudemans. This is a mere dialectical variation of a form lull-ard, formed regularly from the O. Du. Iulien (also lollen), to sing, hum, with the suffix -ard as in E. drunk-ard, slugg-ard, &c., denoting the agent. This O. Du. lullen is our E. word Lull, q.v.

8. Besides the confusion thus introduced, it was common to compare the Lollards to tares, by help of a bad pun on the Lat. lolia, tares; this has, however, nothing to do with the etymology. See my note on Chaucer, C. T. Group B. 1173, in the Prioresses Tale, &c. (Clarendon Press). ¶ Since loll and lull are allied words, it makes no very great difference to which verb we refer loller and Lollard; still loller = loll-er, and Lollard =

LONE, solitary, retired, away from company. (E.) Not in early use; the word does not appear in Minsheu or Levins, and I find no example much earlier than Shakespeare, who has: 'a poor lone woman; '2 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 35. It probably was at first a colloquial or vulgar word, recommended by its brevity for more extended use. It seems to be a mere corruption of alone, as has generally been explained by lexicographers; even Shakespeare brings it in as a pun: 'a long loan for a poor lone woman to bear.'

Like to a lonely dragon; 'Cor. iv. 1. 30. Todd cites a slightly earlier instance. 'Moreover this Glycerie is a lone woman;' Kyffin, transl. of Terence, ed. 1588. See Alone.

B. Other examples of loss of initial a occur in the words mend, purtenance, limbeck, vanguard. The Icel. laun, secrecy, has nothing to do with lone; the Icel. á laun properly means 'secretly,' rather than 'alone.' Alone is for al-one, as is proved in its due place. Der. lone-ly, Cor. iv. 1. 30; Ione-li-ness, Hamlet, iii. 1. 46; also lone-some, spelt lonesom in Skinner, ed. 1671; lone-some-ness; also lone-ness: One that doth wear himself away in lone-ness,' Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, A. i. sc. 2

(Amarillis).

LONG (1), extended, not short, tedious. (E.) M. E. long,

1. 2021: Pricke of Conscience, 1. 632. Northern lang; Chaucer, C. T. 3021; Pricke of Conscience, 1. 632. -A. S. lang, long; Grein, ii. 156.+Du. lang.+Icel. langr. + Dan. lang. + Swed. lang. + Goth. laggrs (= langrs). + G. lang. + Lat. longus.

B. Further allied to M. H. G. lingen, to go hastily, G. er-langen, to attain, reach; and to Skt. langh, to jump over, surpass. The orig. signification of langh was prob. to overtake by jumping, then, to attain; Benfey, p. 786.

Y. The orig. notion seems to have had reference to the stride taken in jumping or fast running; and, as an active runner commonly moves lightly over the ground, we get Skt. laghu, Gk. exaxis, E. light, Lat. leuis, from the same root; with the singular result that the Gk. ἐλαχύs also means short. δ. An older Skt. spelling appears in the verb rangh, to move swiftly; giving ARAGH, to run, hasten, as the common source appearing without the nasal in Skt. and Gk., but nasalised to RANGH for other languages. See Light (2), Levity. Der. long, adv.; long-boat. long-measure, long-rum, long-sight-ed, long-stop, long-suffering. Also (from Lat. longus) long-evity, q. v., long-itude, of v. Also long, verb (see Delow); length, q. v.; ling (1), q. v.; ling-er, q. v., lunge, q. v. Also lumber (1).

LONG (2), to desire, yearn; to belong. (E.) Often used with for or after. Very common in Shak. Long = wish for, and long = belong (Hen. V, ii. 4.80) are the same word. M. E. longen, longien. 'Than longen folk to gon on pilgrimages' = then people desire, &c.; Chaucer, C. T. 12. 'That to the sacrifice longen shal' = that are to the sacrifice.' id 2280. — A. S. longian. longian. belong to the sacrifice; id. 2280. — A. S. langian, longian, to lengthen, also to long after, crave. 'ponne se dæg langað' — when the day lengthens; Popular Treatises on Science, ed. Wright, p. 9. 'Hæleo langode' = the hero longed; Grein, ii. 157. The orig. sense is to become long, hence to stretch the mind after, to crave; also to apply, belong. - A. S. lang, long, long; see Long (1). Der. long-apply, belong. — A. S. tang, tong, long; see Liong (1).

ing, sb.; long-ing, adj., long-ing-ly.

LONGEVITY, length of life. (L.) 'In longevity by many considered to attain unto hundreds' [of years]; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 9. § 1. Spelt longæuitie in Minsheu, ed. 1627.

Coined, by analogy with F. words in -ité (= E. -ity), from Lat. longæuitas, long life. — Lat. long., stem of longus, long; and œuitas, long is the wood commonly written etcs. see. See Long and full form of the word commonly written ætas, age. See Long and Age.

LONGITUDE, lit. length; distance in degrees from a given meridian. (F., -L.) 'Longitudes and latitudes;' Chaucer, On the Astrolabie, Prol. 1. 53. - F. longitude. - Lat. longitudo (gen. longitudin-is), length, long duration; in late Lat., longitude. - Lat. longit-elongo-, crude form of longus, long; with suffix -tudo. See Long. Der. longitudin-al (from stem longitudin-); longitudinal-ly.

LOO, a game at cards. (F.) Spelt lu in Pope, Rape of the Lock, c. iii. 1. 62 (l. 350). Formerly called Lanterloo (Engl. Cycl. Supp.) - F. lanturelu or lanturlu, interj. nonsense 1 fiddlestick! fudge! (Hamilton): also a game at cards. jeu de la bête (i. e. 100): see (Hamilton); also a game at cards, jeu de la bête (i. e. loo); see Littré and Hamilton. [The more usual F. name for loo is mouche.] \(\beta\). The expression was orig. the refrain of a famous vaudeville in the time of Cardinal Richelieu (died 1642); hence used in order to give an evasive answer. As the expression is merely nonsensical, it admits, accordingly, of no further etymology.

LOOF, another spelling of Luff, q.v.

LOOK, to behold, see. (E.) M. E. loken, lokien; Chaucer, C. T. 1697. - A. S. lócian, to look, see, Grein, ii. 192. + O. H. G. luogén, M. H. G. luogen, to mark, behold. B. The O. H. G. verb is said to mean 'to peep through a hole,' mark; and to be derived from O. H. G. loor, M. H. G. luor, G. loch, a hole. If so, the A. S. lócian is to be connected with A. S. loca, a prison, enclosure, and loc, a lock; see Lock.

The resemblance to Skt. lok, to see, is perhaps Der. look, sb., M. E. loke, Chaucer, C. T. 3342; look! accidental. interj.; look-er, look-out, look-ing, look-ing-glass.

LOOM (1), a machine for weaving cloth. (E.) In Spenser, Muiopotmos, l. 272. M. E. lome, a tool, instrument; P. Plowman, C. vi. 45; and see Prompt. Parv., p. 312. The pl. lomen = implements for tilling the soil, occurs in the Ancren Riwle, p. 384. - A.S. gelóma, a tool, implement, Ælfred, tr. of Beda, iv. 28, ed. Whelock, p. 351; cf. A.S. and-loma, a tool, implement, utensil, in a gloss (Lye). Root uncertain.

LOOM (2), to appear faintly or at a distance. (Scand.) The original sense is to glimmer or shine faintly. Rare; and usually used of a ship. 'Looming of a ship, is her prospective [appearance] or shew. Hence it is said, such a ship looms a great sail, i. e. she appears or seems to be a great ship; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. So also Skinner, ed. 1671, who adds: 'she looms but small,' i. e. looks small. M. E. lumen, to shine. 'Hire lure lumes liht, Ase a launterne a nyht'= her face looms brightly, like a lantern in the night; Spec. of Lyric tace fooms originity, like a limitern in the light; spec. of Lyste Poetry, ed. Wright, p. 52.—Iccl. ljóma, to gleam, shine, dawn as the day does; from the sb. ljómi, a beam, ray.

β. The sb. is cognate with A. S. leóma, a beam, ray (Grein, ii. 178); whence M. E. leme, Chaucer, ed. Tyrwhitt, C. T. 14936. This would have given a later form leem or leam, but it became obsolete. A similar substitution of a Scand, for an E. form occurs in the case of Boon, q. v. y. Both Icel. and A. S. sbs. are from a Teut. form LEUHMAN (Fick, iii. 275), due to the Teut. base LUH, to shine; see Light (1). There does not appear to be any real connection with gloom or gleam, which are from a different root. Der. loom-ing, sb.

LOON (1), LOWN, a base fellow. (O. Low G.) Spelt loon in Macbeth, v, 3. 11; lown in Oth. ii. 3. 95. The latter passage is he called the tailor lown, cited from an old ballad. In the Percy Folio MS., ed. Hales and Furnivall, ii. 324, 1.52, the line appears as: therfore he called the taylor clowne. Jamieson gives loun, loon, lown, and says that the word is used by Dunbar.

3. Just as in the case of Loon (2), the form lown stands for an older lown or house. This is shewn by M. E. loumyske, old spelling of loumyske, Prompt. Parv., p. 316, and by the etymology. Cf. Scot. loamy, dull, slow; Jamieson.

Y. Of O. Low G. origin; as appears from Kilian also gives O. Du. lome, slow, inactive; noted by him as an old word. That m is the older letter is to be seen from the derived word. That m is the older letter is to be seen from the derived words, viz. Du. lummel, Dan. lömmel, Swed. lymmel, G. lümmel, a lown, lubber.

8. An older form appears in O. H. G. luomi (only used in compounds), yielding, mild; and all the forms are from a Teut, base which appears in M. H. G. luomen, lömen, to droop, be connected with E. Lame, q. v. And see weary; which is prob. connected with E. Lame, q.v. And see Loon (2)

LOON (2), a water-bird, diver. (Scand.) A corruption of the Shetland name loom; see Gloss. of Shetland Words by T. Edmondston; Phil. Soc. 1866. - Icel. lomr, a loon. + Swed. and Dan. lom. Root unknown; but not improbably the same word as Loon (1), from the awkward motion of such birds on land. For derogatory use of the names of birds, cf. booby, gull, goose, owl, &c.

LOOP, a bend, a bend in a cord leaving an opening, noose. (C.) Spelt loupe in the Bible of 1551, Exod. xxvi. 4, 5. The M. E. loupe is only used in the sense of 'loop-hole,' but it is prob. the same word, denoting a small hole in a wall shaped like a loop in a piece of string. In this sense it occurs in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 288; and Romance of Partenay, l. 1175. - Irish and Gael. lub, a loop, bow, staple, fold, noose; the orig. sense being a bend or curve.—Irish and Gael. lub, to bend, incline. Cf. Skt. ropa, a hole. Der. loop, verb; loop-ed, full of holes, K. Lear, iii. 4. 31; loop-hole, Shak. Lucr. 1383, the older term being M. E. loupe, as above; loop-hol-ed.

LOOSE, free, slack, unfastened, unconfined. (E.) loose, Chaucer, C. T. 4062; where the Camb. MS. has los, and the Petworth MS. has louse. Spelt louse, lousse, in the Ancren Riwle, p. 228, note d.

a. It is difficult to account for the vowel-sound p. 228, note d. of the word; it is a dialectal variety of M. E. lees, false; see Prompt. Parv. p. 298. The latter is from A. S. leás, (1) loose, (2) false; cognate with Icel. lauss, loose, vacant, Dan. and Swed. lös, loose. β. The E. loose is better represented by O. Sax. lös, O. Du. loos, (1) loose, (2) false (Oudemans); the mod. Du. separates the two senses, having los, loose, and loos, false. Further cognate words appear in Goth. laws, empty, vain; G. los, loose. \(\gamma\). All are from a Teut. adj. LAUSA, loose (Fick, iii. 273); from Teut. base LUS, to lose; see Lose. \(\Pi\) We may, however, fairly assume that the vowel-sound in loose was due to the influence of the verb to loosen, which was in much commoner use than the adj., and naturally affected it; see Loosen. Der. loose-ly, loose-ness. Note that loose is the commonest suffix in E., but is always spelt -less; see -less. And see Leasing.

LOOSE, LOOSEN, to make loose, set free. (E.) The suffix -en is due to analogy with words like lengthen, strengthen, and is less common in early than in later times. M. E. losen, lousen, lowsen; where the final n is very commonly dropped, and merely marks the infinitive mood, without having the causal force which is implied by the final n at present. 'The boundis of alle weren lousid' = the bonds of all were loosed; Wyclif, Acts, xvi. 26. - A. S. losian, to lose, to become void, almost always used in a neut. sense, Grein, ii. 194. We find, however, losade = Lat. dissipauit, Luke, ix. 26; and the cognate O. Sax. lósian is transitive, and signifies 'to make free.' So also Du. lossen, to loosen, release; Icel. leysa, to loosen; Swed. lösa; Dan. löse; G. lösen; Goth. lausjan; all active.

β. In every language but E. the verb is derived from the adj. signifying 'loose;' thus O. Sax. lósian is from lós; Du. lossen, from los; Icel. leysa, from lauss; Swed. lösa, from lös; Dan. löse, from lös; G. lösen, from los; and Goth. lausjan, from laus. γ . In E., the verb losian (= E. loose) has affected the vowel of the adjective; the A.S. for 'loose' being leas, which should have given a mod. E. adj. lees. The verb losian itself is from A.S. los, destruction, Ælfred, tr. of Beda, lib. v. c. 9 (or c. 10, ed. Whelock); see Loss, Loose, adj., and Lose. LOOT, plunder, booty. (Hindi. – Skt.) A modern term, imported from India. - Hindí lút (with cerebral t), loot, plunder. The cerebral t shews that an r is elided [Prof. Cowell so informs me]. - Skt. lotra, shorter form of loptra, booty, spoil. = Skt. lup, to break, spoil; the pp. lupta is also used in the sense of 'booty,' like the deriv. loptra; see Benfey, p. 798. = \(\times \text{RUP}, \text{to break}; \text{ whence Lat. rumpere, } \) G. rauben, and E. rob. See Rob, Rupture. \(\text{Thus loot} = \text{that} \) which is robbed. Der. loot, verb.

LOP, to maim, to cut branches off trees. (O. Du.) In Levins, ed. 1570; and in Shak. Cymb. v. 4. 141. = O. Du. luppen, to maim, castrate (Oudemans); whence mod. Du. lubben, with the same sense; cf. obsol. E. lib, used by Massinger, City Madam, A. ii. sc. 2 (see Nares). Cf. Lithuan. lùp-ti, to peel; see Leaf. Der. lop, sb., small branches cut off, Henry VIII, i. 2. 96. And see glib (3), left.

coined word, formed by adding -ious to Lat. loquac-, stem of loquax, talkative. [Prob. suggested by the sb. loquacity, which had previ-

O. Du. loen, a lown (Kilian, Oudemans), whence mod. Du. loen. & Cot. Loquacity occurs in Minsheu, ed. 1627.] - Lat. loqui, to speak. Kilian also gives O. Du. lome, slow, inactive; noted by him as an old word. That m is the older letter is to be seen from the derived words, viz. Du. lummel, Dan. lömmel, Swed. lymmel, G. lümmel, a quaci-ty, from F. loquacité, which from Lat. acc. loquacitatem. From the server was the lower of the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacity and the server of loquacit the same root are col-loqu-ial, e-loqu-ence, ob-loqu-y, soli-loqu-y, ventrilogu-ist; also (from Lat. pp. locut-us) al-locut-ion, circum-locut-ion, e-locut-ion, inter-locut-ion.

LORD, a master, ruler, peer. (E.) M.E. lourd (- loverd), Havelok, l. 96; gen. contracted to lord, Chaucer, C. T. 47. — A.S. hláford, a lord; Grein, ii. 80. β. It is certain that the word is a compound, and that the former syllable is A. S. hlaf. a loaf. It is extremely likely that -ord stands for weard, a warden, keeper, master; whence hlaf-weard = loaf-keeper, i.e. the master of the house, father of the family. See Loaf and Ward. etym. sometimes given, from ord, a beginning, is impossible, the proper sense of ord being 'point;' loaf-point could only mean the corner of a crust; and loaf-beginning could only refer to flour or grain. The simple word weard, however, is used nearly synonymously with the comp. hláf-weard; and cf. hord-weard, a treasurekeeper, lord (Grein). Der. lord, verb (gen. used with it), 2 Hen. VI, iv. 8. 47; lord-ed, Temp. i. 2. 97; lord-ing (with dimin. suffix -ing), Wint. Ta. i. 2. 62 = M. E. lauerd-ing, Layamon, 27394; lord-l-ing (with double dimin.), Bp. Hall's Satires, b. ii. sat. 2, 1. 12 = M. E. louerd-ling, Layamon, 12664, later text; lord-ly = M. E. lordlick, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 302; lord-li-ness, Shak. Ant. v. 2. 161; lord-ship = M. E. lord-schip, P. Plowman, B. iii. 206.

LORE, learning, doctrine. (E.) M. E. lore, Chaucer, C. T. 529, 4424, 12202. [The final e is unessential, and due to the frequent use of the dat. case.] - A. S. lár, lore; Grein, ii. 158. Here lár stands for laisa*, from Teut. base LIS, to find out; so that laisa* = lar means 'what is found out,' knowledge, learning. + Du. leer, doctrine. + Swed. lära. + Dan. läre. + G. lehre, M. H. G. lére, O. H. G. léra. And cf. Goth. laisjan, to teach; laiseins, doctrine. See further under Learn.

LORIOT, the golden aureole. (F., -L.) 'Loriot, a bird otherwise called a witwall; Kersey, ed. 1715. - F. toriot, 'the bird called a witwall, yellowpeake, hickway;' Cot. Corruptly written for Poriot, Porion, the prefixed P being the def. article (= Lat. ille). Cotgrave has: 'Oriot, a heighaw, or witwall;' also spelt Oriol, id.

The latter form is the same as E. Oriole, q. v.

LORN, old pp. of the verb to lose. (E.) See Lose, Forlorn.

LORY, a small bird of the parrot kind. (Malay.) In Webster. Also called lury. — Malay luri, a bird of the parrot kind, also called nuri; Marsden's Malay Dict., p. 311. Nuri, the lury, a beautiful bird of the parrot kind, brought from the Moluccas; id. p. 350.

LOSE, to part with, be separated from. (E.) The mod. E. lose appears to be due to confusion between two M.E. forms, viz. (1) losien, (2) leosen. 1. Losien is recorded in Stratmann, 3rd ed., at p. 372; it commonly means 'to loose' or 'loosen,' but we also find it in the sense 'to be lost,' or 'to perish,' as in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 117, ll. 28, 35; and in Layamon, 20538, it is used exactly in the sense of 'lose.' = A. S. losian, to become loose, to escape, Grein, ii. 194. See Loosen. 2. The M. E. leosen, more commonly lesen, is in Stratmann, at p. 360. This is the verb which invariably has the force of 'lose,' but it should rather have produced a mod E. leese. It is a strong verb, with pt. t. lees, and pp. loren, lorn; see Chaucer, C. T. 1217, 3536; P. Plowman, B. v. 499.—A.S. lessan, to lose; pt. t. leás, pp. loren; perhaps only used in comp. for-lessan, to lose entirely, Luke, xv. 4, 9, Grein, i. 328.+ Du. liezen, only in comp. ver-liezen, to lose; pt. t. verloor, pp. verloren. + G. lieren, only in comp. ver-lieren, pt. t. verlor, pp. verloren. + Goth. liusan, only in comp. fra-liusan, to loose, Luke, xv. 8, with which cf. fra-lusan, to perish, 1 Cor. i. 18.

B. Both A. S. losian and lessan are from the Teut base IIIS to love become loose (Firk. iii. 272). lusnan, to perish, 1 Cor. i. 18. B. Both A. S. losian and ledsan are from the Teut. base LUS, to lose, become loose (Fick, iii. 273). This base is an extension of the older base LU, to set free, appearing in Gk. Abeir, to set free, release; Lat. luere, to set free. older sense, 'to set free by cutting a bond,' is suggested by Skt. lú, form of the pp., viz., lost, lorn; of which lost (= los-ed) is formed from M. E. losien: but lorn (= lor-en) is the regular strong pp. of leosen = A. S. leosan. Der. los-en, los-ing; from the same Tetul. base are loose, vb., also spelt loosen, q. v., loose, adj.; leasing, q. v.; lorn, for-lorn; loss, q. v.; louse, q. v. From the base LU we also have solve, solution, ana-ly-sis, para-ly-sis, palsy.

LOSS, a losing, damage, waste. (E.) M. E. los, Chaucer, C. T. 4447, 4448. — A. S. los, destruction; to lose wurdon, i. e. perished, Ælfred, tr. of Beda, lib. iv. c. 9 (or c. 10). O. Northumb. los, Matt. vii. 13 (Lindisfarne MS.). — A. S. leosan, to lose; see Loss.

LOT, a portion, share, fate. (E.) M.E. lot, a share; Rich. Cuer de Lion, 4262, in Weber's Met. Romances. — A. S. hlot; Matt. xxvii. ously been introduced into the language from F. loquacité, 'loquacity;' 35, Luke, xxiii. 34; more usually (and better) spelt hlyt, Grein, ii. 90.

The A. S. hlyt (= hluti) is formed by vowel-change from hlut., the stem from the old verb lout, to stoop, bow: 'he humbly louted;' Spenser, of the pt. pl. of hlectan, to cast lots, a strong verb. + Du. lot, a lot; loten, F. Q. i. 10. 44. M. E. louten, to stoop, bow down; Chaucer, C. T. to cast lots. + Icel. hluti, a part, share, hlutr, a lot; from the strong verb hljúta, to obtain by lot. + Dan. lod, a lot. + Swed. lott, a lot; lotta, to cast lots. + G. loos, a lot; loosen, to cast lots. + Goth. hlauts, a lot: Mark, xv. 24.

B. All the sbs. answer to Teut. HLUTA or HLUTI, a lot; from the Teut. base HLUT, to obtain by lot; Fick, iii. 90. Der. lot, vb.; lott-er-y, q. v.; al-lot, q. v.

LOTH, reluctant; the same as Loath, q. v.

LOTION, a washing, external medicinal application. (L.) 'Lotion, a washing or rinsing; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -ion, from Lat. lotio, a washing. - Lat.

lotus, pp. of lauare, to wash; see Lave.

LOTO, LOTTO, the name of a game. (Ital., - Tcut.) Modern; the spelling lotto is the correct Ital. spelling; loto is a F. form of the Ital. word.—Ital. lotto, a lot, lottery. Of Teut. origin; cf. O. H. G.

hldz (G. loos), a lot; see Lot.

LOTTERY, a distribution by lot or chance. (E., with F. suffix.) In Levins, ed. 1570; and in Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 2. 32, ii. 1. 15 Formed, by analogy with words like brew-ery, fish-ery, scull-ery, and others, directly from E. lot; the suffix -ery is of F. origin, answering to Lat. -arium, -erium. The F. loterie is plainly borrowed from E.; it is in much later use; thus it is omitted by Cotgrave, and Sherwood's index to Cotgrave only gives balotage, sort, as equivalent words to E. lottery. The words brew, fish, are E. words, just as lot See Lot.

LOTUS, the Egyptian water-lily. (L., -Gk.) 'Lotos, or Lotus, the lote-tree;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Minsheu, ed. 1627, speaks of the lothe-tree or lote-tree. It is spelt lote by Chapman, tr. of Odyssey, ix. 163. - Lat. lotus, lotos. - Gk. λωτόs, a name given to several shrubs; (1) the Greek lotus; (2) the Cyrenean lotus, an African shrub, the eaters of which were called Loto-phagi - Lotus-eaters, from Gk. φαγείν, to eat; (3) the lily of the Nile; see Liddell and Scott. Der. Lots-phagi; lotus-eater.

LOUD, making a great sound, noisy. (E.) M. E. loud; more common in the adv. form loude = loudly; Chaucer, C. T. 674, 15339. -A. S. hlúd, loud, Grein, ii. 88. + Du. luid. + G. laut, O. II. G. hlút. β. Cf. Lat. -elutus, in comp. in-elutus, renowned. + Gk. κλυτός, renowned. + Skt. eruta, heard.
 γ. The Teut. form is HLUDA, a pp. form from IILU, to hear, answering to Skt. cru, to hear, Gk. κλύειν. -

KRU, to hear; later form KLU; Fick, i. 62, 552. Der. loud-ly, loud-ness; from the same root are cli-ent, glo-ry, slave, and prob. laud, al-low (2).

LOUGH, a lake. (Irish.) The Irish spelling of lake. - Irish loch, a lake, lough, arm of the sea; see Loch.

LOUNGE, to loll about, move about listlessly. (F.,-L.) In Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671. Not an early word. 'A very flourishing society of people called loungers, gentlemen whose observations are mostly itinerant;' The Guardian, no. 124, dated Aug. 3, 1713. The verb is formed from a sb., being a corruption of the term lungis, defined in Minsheu, ed. 1627, as meaning 'a slimme, a tall and dull slangam, that hath no making to his height;' and even as late as in Kersey, ed. 1715, we find lungis explained as 'a drowsy or dreaming fellow.' It was once a well-known term, and occurs in Decker's Satiromastix; Beaum. and Fletcher, Knight of the Burning Pestle, Act ii. sc. 3, speech 1; Lyly's Euphues and his England, ed. Arber, p. 325; and the Play of Misogonus, written about 1560; see Narcs and Halliwell. - F. longis, 'a lungis; a slimme, slow-back, dreaming luske [idle fellow], drowsie gangrill; a tall and dull slangam, that hath no making to his height, nor wit to his making; also, one that being sent on an errand is long in returning; Cot.

6. Littré supposes that the sense of F. longis was due to a pun, having reference to Lat. longus, long; see Long. For, strictly, Longis was a proper name, being the O. F. form of Lat. Longius, or Longinus, the name of the centurion who pierced the body of Christ. This name Longinus centurion who pierced the body of Christ. This name Longinus first appears in the Apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus, and was doubtless suggested by the Gk. $\lambda \delta \gamma \chi \eta$, a lance, the word used in John, xix. 34. See my note to P. Plowman. C. xxi. 82. See the word Lunge, which is certainly due to Lat. longus. Der.

LOUSE, the name of an insect. (E.) M. E. lous, pl. lys or lis; P. Plowman, B. v. 197, 198. — A. S. lús, as a gloss to Lat. pediculus; P. Plowman, B. v. 197, 198. — A. S. lús, as a gloss to Lat. pediculus; Elfric's Gloss., Nomina Insectorum; the pl. form was lýs. + Du. luis. + Dan. luus, pl. luss. + Swed. lus, pl. löss. + Icel. lús, pl. lýss. + G. laus, pl. läuse.

B. All from Teut. form LUSI, a louse; named from its destroying; from Teut. base LUS, to set free, also to cause to perish; cf. Goth. lausjan, to make of none effect, 1 Cor.

14168; P. Plowman, B. iii. 115. — A. S. lútan, to stoop, Grein, ii. 197. + Icel. lúta, to bow down; whence lútr, adj. bent down, stooping, which may have suggested our modern lout. + Swed. luta, to lean. + Dan. lude, to stoop. B. All from Teut. base LUT, to stoop; whence also Little, q. v. Der. lout-ish, lout-ish-ness, loit-er. LOUVER, LOOVER, an opening in the roofs of ancient houses. (F.,-L.) M.E. lover, Prompt. Parv. p. 315; see Way's note. He cites: 'A loover, or tunnell in the roofs, or top of a great hall, to avoid smoke, fumarium, spiramentum;' Baret. Also in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 288; Romance of Partenay, 1175. In the latter passage we find: 'At louers, lowpes, archers had plente, To cast, draw, and shete, the diffence to be'=it (the town) had plenty of archers at openings and loop-holes, to cast, draw (bow), and shoot. It is translated from a French text, which has: Murdrieres il a a louvert Pour lancier, traire, et deffendre' = it had murderers [soldiers] at each loop-hole to cast lances, &c. - O. F. louvert (written louvert in the 15th cent. MS. just cited), put for l'ouvert = the open (space), opening; from le, def. art., and ouvert, open. The older spelling louer (lover) is due to the old F. spelling l'overt, which is still preserved in E. Overt, q. v. ingenious suggestion of a derivation from Icel. ljóri, explained as 'a louvre or opening in the roof of ancient halls for the smoke to escape by and also for admitting light,' is, I think, to be rejected; it does not agree with the M.E. spelling, and the explanation is a forced one, written to suit the supposed etymology of louver. The etymology of the Icel. Ijóri shews that the true old sense was not a hole for permitting smoke to escape, but for the admission of light, which further accounts for the fact mentioned in the Icel. Dict., that men were accustomed to watch, sitting by the ljóri, i.e. by the window, not up a lantern-tower. That is, the word ljóri is from ljós, light, by the common change of s into r; and lijós (-liuhsa) is from the Teut. base LUHS, to shine, an extension of LUH, to shine; see Light (1) and Lucid. β. Still more clearly, the F. origin of louver is shewn by the prov. E. luffer-boards, a name given to the sloping boards of a belfry-tower window (looking like a Venetian blind) which have openings to admit (not of the escape of smoke or the entrance of light, but) of the escape of the sound of the bells; see Webster. This term shows that the word luffer merely meant opening, and its form is close enough to that of O.F. lowert, This term shows that the word luffer merely meant whilst it is far removed from ljóri.

LOVAGE, an umbelliferous plant. (F., -L.) In Levins, ed. 1570, and in Cotgrave. From O. F. levesche (mod. F. livèche), 'common lovage, Lombardy lovage,' Cot.; spelt liuvesche in the 13th cent. (Littré); also luvesche, as in Wright's Vocab. i. 139, col. 2, whence the E. form. Cf. Ital. levistico, lovage. - Lat. ligusticum, lovage, a plant indigenous to Liguria; whence its name. — Lat. Ligusticus, belonging to Liguria. — Lat. Liguria (prob. formerly Ligusia), a country of Cisalpine Gaul, of which the principal town was Genua, the modern Genoa. Similarly, we have Etruscan from Etruria [Etrusia?].

TOVE, affection, fondness, attachment. (E.) M. E. loue (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 1137, 1161, 1167, 1170. — A. S. lufu, love; Grein, ii. 196. + G. liebe, O. H. G. liupa, liupi, love. + Russ. liobov', love. + Skt. lobha, covetousness. B. Closely allied to lief, dear; from Teut. base LUB = Skt. base LUBH, to covet, desire. See Der. love, verb, M. E. louen (= loven), older forms louien, luvien, A. S. lufgan, lufian, Grein, ii. 195; also lov-able, lov-er (Chaucer, C. T. 1349), lov-ing, lov-ing-ly, lov-ing-ness, loving-hindness; also love-ly, M. E. luvelich, Ancren Riwle, p. 428, l. 25, love-liness; also love-less, love-bird, love-knot, love-lock, love-lorn.

LOW (1), inferior, deep, mean, humble. (Scand.) M. E. low, pl. lowe; Chaucer, C. T. 17310; older spellings louh, Ancren Riwle, p. 140, l. 2, lah, Ormulum, 15246, loogh (in the comp. biloogh = below), Allit. Poems, B. 116. [Not found in A. S.] = Icel. lágr, low; Swed. låg; Dan. lav. + Du. laag. β . The Teut. form is LÅGA, low (Fick, iii. 262); the orig. sense is 'lying flat,' used of the aspect of a country, as when we distinguish lowlands from highlands. Teut. base LAG, to lie; see Lie (1). Der. low-ness, P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 513; low-ly, Chaucer, C. T. 99, low-li-ness; low-er, verb = to make or become more low, formed from the comparative of the adj. (cf. better), Shak. Ant. i. 2. 129; low-church, low-land, lowlander, low-spirited.

LOW (2), to bellow as a cow or ox. (E.) M. E. loowen, lowen, Wyclif, Job, vi. 5; Jer. li. 52. - A. S. hlówan, to bellow, resound; Grein, ii. 88. + Du. loeijen, to low. + M. H. G. luejen, O. H. G. hlójan, to cause to perish; ci. Goth. tanagars, to make of none enect, 1 con.

i. 17. See Loose, Loosen, Lose. Der. lous-y, lous-i-ness.

LOUT, a clown, awkward fellow. (E.) The lit. sense is 'stooping' or 'slouching.' In Levins; and in K. John, ii. 509, iii. 1. 220.

Sidney has: 'this lowtisk clown;' Arcadia, b. i. (R.) Obviously latrare, to bark; answering to √RA, to bark, whence Skt. ra,

LOW (3), a hill. (E.) In place-names; thus Lud-low = people's hill. — A. S. hlaw, a hill; also spelt hlaw, Grein, ii. 81. It also means a mound, a grave. + Goth. hlaw, a grave, tomb; allied to Goth. hlains, a hill. Further related to Lat. cliuus, a hill; clinare, to lean; and E. lean, verb. See Lean (1); the Teut. base being HLI, to lean.

LOW (4), flame. (Scand.) In Burns, The Weary Pund o' Tow, 1. 10. M. E. loshe, Ormulum, 16185.—Icel. log, a flame; allied to Lat. lux; see Lucid.

LOWER (1), to let down, abase, sink. (E.) See Low (1). LOWER (2), to frown, look sour. (E.?) M. E. louren, Chaucer, C. T. 6848; P. Plowman, B. v. 132; spelt luren, K. Horn, ed. Lumby, l. 270. Of uncertain origin. a. The usual etymology is to connect it with O. Du. loeren, which Hexham explains by 'to leere; also, to frowne with the fore-head;' similarly, we find Low German luren identified with E. lower in the Bremen Wörterbuch, iii. 101. So also mod. Du. loeren, to peep, peer, leer (which is, I believe, quite a different word from Du. loeren, to lurk; see note on Leer). β. But these words (at least when used in the sense of E. lower) are probably from the Teut. form HLIURA, the cheek, face, given by Fick, iii. 88. It seems easiest, therefore, to deduce M. E. luren directly from M. E. lure, an occasional form of the word which is better known as M. E. lere, the cheek. We have at least one instance of it. 'Hire lure lumes liht' = her face shines bright; Specimens of Lyric Poetry, p. 52; (a quotation already noticed, s. v. Loom (2)). Lastly, lure is allied to A. S. hleór. γ . In this view, lower is merely a variant of leer; which is, in fact, the usual opinion (see Webster, Wedgwood, E. Müller); the only difference being that I regard both leer and lower as English words, instead of looking on them as having been borrowed from Dutch. orig. sense was merely to look, to glance; afterwards used in a sinister sense. See Leer. Der. lower-ing or lower-ing, Matt. xvi. 3. LOYAL, faithful, true. (F., -L.) Common in Shak. Rich. II, i. 148, 181; &c. - F. loyal, 'loyall;' Cot. - Lat. legalis, legal. Doublets, leal, legal, q.v. Der. loyal-ly, loyal-ty, loyal-ist.

LOZENGE, a rhombus; a small cake of flavoured sugar, &c., orig. of a diamond shape. (F.) Formerly spelt losenge; and esp. used as an heraldic term, to denote a shield of a diamond shape; see Romaunt of the Rose, l. 893. The word losinges in Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 227, is prob. the same word. - O.F. losenge, lozenge, 'a losenge, a lozenge, a little square cake of preserved herbs, flowers, &c.;' Cot. Mod. F. losange. Of uncertain origin; see Littré, Diez, and Scheler. β. The Spanish form is lozanje, a lozenge or figure in the shape of a diamond or rhombus; and the most likely connection is with Span. losa, a flag-stone, marble-slab, a square stone used for paving; whence losar, to pave. So also we find O. F. lauze, Port. lousa, a flat stone, a slate for covering roofs. γ. Perhaps these words can be referred back to Lat. pl. laudes, praises, as suggested by Diez, who observes the use of Span. lauda in the sense of a tomb-stone with an epitaph;' Meadows. This connects it with O. F. losange, losenge, praise, flattery (Burguy), formed from O. F. los, loz, praise (Cot.) = Low Lat. laudes, lauds, pl. of Lat. laus, praise; see Laud. In this case the word meant epitaph or encomium, then grave-stone, square slab, and finally a flat square cake. Cf. E. hatchment for achievement.

LUBBER, a clumsy fellow, dolt. (C.) Another form is looby. M. E. lobre, lobur, P. Plowman, A. prol. 52; B. prol. 55; where some MSS. have loby. Of Celtic origin; cf. W. llob, a dolt, blockhead; llabi, a stripling, looby. \beta. The orig. sense is perhaps flabby, feeble, inefficient, from the notion of hanging loosely down, being slack. Cf. W. lleipr, flabby, feeble, llibin, flaccid, drooping, llipa, flaccid, limp; all from the Aryan base LAB, to hang loosely down; see Lap (1). We find similar forms in Du. lobbes, a booby; Swed. dial. lubber, a thick, clumsy, lazy man (Rietz). It is probable, however, that the author of P. Plowman borrowed the word from the Welsh directly. Shak. has lob, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 16, which is exactly the W. word; also to lob down = to droop, Hen. V, iv. 2. 47. Der. lubber-ly, Merry Wives, v. 5. 195. And see lump.

LUBRICATE, to make smooth or slippery. (L.) Used by Ray,

On the Creation, pt. ii. (R.) Kersey, cd. 1715, has lubricitate, to make slippery. The adj. lubrick occurs in Cotgrave to translate F. make slippery. The adj. lubrick occurs in Cotgrave to Manager lubrique; and the sb. lubricity, for F. lubricité.—Lat. lubricatus, pp. of lubricare, to make slippery.—Lat. lubricus, slippery (whence F lubricare). Root uncertain. Der. lubrication, lubricator; also F. lubrique). Root uncertain. lubricity = F. lubricité, as above.

LUCE, a fish, prob. the pike. (F., -L.) 'Luce, fysche, Lucius;' Prompt. Parv.; and see Chaucer, C.T. 352. -O. F. lus, 'a pike;' Cot. - Lat. lucius, a fish, perhaps the pike. It is probable that luce in Shak. Merry Wives, i. 1. 16, means a louse; see note in Schmidt.

to bark, cited by Fick, iii. 259. See Roar. Der. lowing, 1 Sam. Mother Hubbard's Tale, 1. 1259. [There is no O. F. lucide in Cot.; xv. 14. shining. — Lat. lucere, to shine. — Lat. luc., stem of lux, light. — ARUK, to shine; whence also Skt. ruck, to shine, ruck, light, Gk. Aeunos, white, &c. Der. lucid-ly, lucid-ness, lucid-i-ty. Also Luci-fer, Chaucer, C. T. 14005, from Lat. luci-fer (bringer of light, morning-star), from Lat. luci-, crude form of lux, and fer-re, to bring. Also lucent, Ben Jonson, Epigram 76, l. 8, from Lat. lucent-, stem of pres. pt. of lucere, to shine. Also lucubration, q.v. From the same root we have lu-nar, lu-min-ary, e-lu-cid-ate, il-lu-min-ate, pel-lu-cid, lu-stration, il-lu-s-trate, lustre (1), lynx. And see Light (1).

LUCK, fortune, chance, good hap. (O. Low G.) Lurke [prob. a misprint for lukke], or wynnynge, luk, Lucrum; Prompt. Parv. p. 316. [It would seem as if the writer wrongly identifies the word with Lat. lucrum.] Not found in A.S.; but we find O. Fries. luk, luck, good fortune; Du. luk, geluk, good fortune, happiness. + Swed. lycka. + Dan. lykke. + G. glück, contr. from M. H. G. gelück.

B. The orig. sense is favour or enticement; the above words being derived from a Teut. verb LUK, to entice, allure, appearing in Du. lokken, Swed. locka, Dan. lokke, G. locken, M. H. G. lücken, O. H. G. lucchen, to entice, allure, decoy; also in the Shetland word luck, to entice, to entreat (Edmondston). Der. luck-y, Much Ado, v. 3. 32; luck-i-ly, luck-i-ness, luck-less, luck-less-ly, -ness. LUCRE, gain, profit. (F., = L.) M. E. lucre, Chaucer, C. T. 16870. – F. lucre. – Lat. lucrum, gain. Allied to Irish luach, value, price, wages, hire; G. lohn, a reward; Gk. Aela, booty; Russ. lov', catching of prey, louis, to capture. All from \(\sqrt{LU}, \) to win, capture as booty; Fick, i. 755. Der. lucr-at-ive, from F. lucratif, 'lucrative,' Cot. = Lat. lucrations, from lucratus, pp. of lucrari, to gain, which from lucrum, sb.; also lucrative-ly, -ness.

LUCUBRATION, a production composed in retirement. (L.) 'Lucubration, a studying or working by candle light;' Phillips' Dict. ed. 1706. Coined, in imitation of F. words in -tion, from Lat. lucubratio, a working by lamp-light, night-work, lucubration. - Lat. lucubratus, pp. of lucubrare, to bring in lamps, to work by lamp-light. - Lat. lucubrum * (not given in White), prob. a faint light; clearly -Lat. lucubrum * (not given in vvinte), production formed from luc-, stem of lux, light. See Lucid, Light (1).

LUDICROUS, laughable, ridiculous. (L.) schoolnen; Spectator, no. 191, l. I. Formed (like arduous, &c.) immediately from Lat. ludicrus, done in sport; by change of -us to -ous. - Lat. ludi- = ludo-, crude form of ludus, sport. - Lat. ludere, to play. Root unknown. Der. ludicrous-ly, -ness; also (from ludere) e-lude, de-lude, inter-lude, pre-lude; and (from pp. lusus), al-lus-ion, col-lus-ion, il-lus-ion.

TUFF, LOOF, to turn a ship towards the wind. (E.) The pp. loofed is in Shak. Ant. iii. 10. 18. 'To loof, usually pron. to luff;' Phillips' Dict. ed. 1706. Shak. prob. took the word from North's Plutarch, since we find 'he was driven also to loof off to have more room' in the description of the battle of Actium; see Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 212, note 1. The verb answers to Du. loeven, to luff, to keep close to the wind. B. But the verb is due to an older sb., found in Mid. E. more than once. This is the M. E. lof, a 'loof,' the name of a certain contrivance on board ship, of which the use is not quite certain. We find it in Layamon, ll. 7859, 9744; the pl. being loues (= loves), 20949, 30922; see Sir F. Madden's remarks in vol. iii. p. 476 of his edition. See also Richard Cuer de Lion, l. 71; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 106; Ancren Riwle, p. 104, l. I (though this passage is of doubtful meaning). The word seems to have had different senses at different times; thus the mod. Du. loef is 'weather-gage,' like mod. E. luff; but Kilian explains the O. Du. loef by scalmus, i.e. a thole-pin. In Falconer's Marine Dict. we find loof explained as 'the after-part of a ship's bow;' whilst in Layamon and other passages in M.E. we find (as Sir F. Madden says) that it is 'applied to some part of a ship, the agency of which was used to alter its course.' Sir F. Madden quotes from the Supplement to Ducange, s. v. dracena, which Lat. word is used as equivalent to E. loof, and explained by gubernaculum. The reader should consult Sir F. Madden's note. The loof was certainly, as Mr. Wedgwood remarks, 'a timber of considerable size, by which the course of the ship was directed.' It was not, however, what we now call a rudder. C. In my opinion, the passages in which the word occurs go to prove that it was orig, a kind of paddle, which in large ships became a large piece of timber, perhaps thrust over the after-part of a ship's bow (to use Falconer's expression) to assist the rudder in keeping the ship's head right.

D. In any case, we may safely infer that the orig, sense was 'paddle;' and the word is really a bound to be a ship's provided the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the standard of the word in the word in the standard of the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the word in the w an English one, though we may have also re-borrowed the word, in the 16th century, from the cognate Du. loef. Cf. also Dan. lw, luff, weather-gage; lwe, to luff; Swed.lof, weather-gage; but these may have been borrowed from Dutch. We find, however, the cognate LUCID, bright, shining, clear. (L.) 'Lucid firmament;' Spenser, & Bavarian laffen, the blade of an oar, flat part of a rudder (Schmeller), iii. 266. These words are further to be connected with Icel. 16ft, the flat hand, Goth. 16fa, the flat hand, palm of the hand, Russ. 1apa, a paw; the Lowland Scotch form being loof, the very same form as that with which we started. See Glove. we may conclude that the flat or palm of the hand was the original loof which, thrust over the side of the primitive canoe, helped to direct its course when a rude sail had been set up; this became a paddle, and, at a later time, a more elaborate piece of mechanism for keeping the ship's head straight; which, being constantly associated with the idea of the wind's direction, came at last to mean 'weathergage, esp. as in the Du. loef houden, to keep the luff, de loef afwinnen, to gain the luff, te loef, windward; &c. A similar idea is seen in Lat. palma, (1) the palm of the hand, (2) the blade of an oar. The We must not connect Du. loef, luff, verb is from the older sb.

with Du. lucht, air; nor with our own word loft. Der. a-loof, q. v. LUG, to pull, haul, drag. (Scand.) 'To lugge, trahere, vellere;' Levins. The old sense was 'to pull by the hair.' In Gower, iii. 148, 149, we have: 'And by the chin and by the cheke She luggeth him right as she list,' i. e. she pulls him by his beard and whiskers as she pleases. So also: 'to-lugged of manye' = pulled by the hair by many people; P. Plowman, B. ii. 216. - Swed. lugga, to pull by the hair; from Swed. lngg, the fore-lock, which is prob. merely a corrupter form of Swed. lock, a lock of hair; see Lock (2). + Corrupter form of Sweel. lock, a lock of nair; see Llock (2). 4Norweg. lugga, to pull by the hair; from lugg, the hair of the head.
β. The older k (for g) appears in O. Low G. luken, to pull, esp. to pull by the hair; Brem. Wörterbuch, iii. 97, and in prov. E. louk, to weed, pull up weeds (see loukers = weeders, in Halliwell); cf. Icel.
lok, a weed; A.S. lyccan, to pull. 'Ccorl of his æcere lyeb yfel weed monig' = a peasant lugs many an evil weed out of his field: Ælfred's
tr. of Boethius, mct. xii. 28. This word becomes in Danish luge, to weed by the weed Park hely to furting g for h between two rows to weed, by the usual Dan. habit of putting g for k between two vowels. Thus Swed. lugga is from Swed. lugg, which again is from the base LUK, to pull; cf. Skt. ruj, to break, from ARUG, to break. Y. The Lowland Sc. lug, the car, orig, the lobe of the ear, is the same word as Swed. lugg, the fore-lock; it appears to be a later use of it. Der. lugg-age (with F. suffix -age), Temp. iv. 231. And see Lugsail. The alleged A. S. geluggian, due to Somner, is unauthorised, and perhaps a fiction.

LUGSAIL, a sort of square sail. (Hybrid; Scand. and E.) *Lugsail, a square sail hoisted occasionally on a yard which hangs nearly at right angles with the mast; Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. [He does not mention lugger, which appears to be a later word; the Dan. lugger, Du. logger, a lugger, may be borrowed from E.] Apparently from the verb to lug, it being so easily hoisted by a mere pull at the rope which supports the yard. Der. lugg-er, a ship rigged with lug-sails.

LUGUBRIOUS, mournful. (L.) Spelt lugubrous and lugubrious in Kersey, ed. 1715; but lugubrous only in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Imitated from Lat. lugubris, mournful. - Lat. lugere, to mourn. Gk. λυγρόε, sad, λοιγόε, destruction. — γ RUG, to break, bend; whence also Skt. ruj, to break, bend.

Der. lugubrious-ly, -ness.

LUKEWARM, partially warm, not hot. (E.) Luke means tepid, and can correctly be used alone, as by Sam. Weller, in Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. 33: 'let me have nine penn'orth o' brandy and water luke.' It is sufficient to trace this word alone. M. E. leuk, leuke, luke, warm, tepid. 'Als a leuke bath, nouther hate M. E. tenk, tenke, tuke, wirm, teput. Als a tenke bath, notitier have ne calde; '= as a tepid bath, neither hot nor cold; Pricke of Conscience, 1, 7481 (Harl, MS.). 'Tha blod com for of luke' = the blood came forth warm; Layamon, 27557. β. The word is a mere extension of the older word lew, with the same sense. 'Thou art lew, nether cold nether hoot;' Wyclif, Rev. iii. 16, where one MS. has lewk. This adj. is closely allied to A. S. hleo, hleow, a shelter, a place that is protected from cold wind, &c., still preserved in mod. E. lee; see Lee. Cf. Icel. hlúka, a thaw; hlúna, to thaw; hlær, hlýr, warm, mild; hlýja, hlúa, to shelter.

Y. The addition of k may have been suggested by A.S. wlæc, tepid; see Sweet's A.S. Reader. It is usual, indeed, to derive luke from A.S. wlæc immediately, but it is difficult to explain so extraordinary a change; it is more reasonable to take into account both words, viz. hleo and wlæc, the former being the more important. It is curious that, whilst Du. has the extended form leukwarm, G. has the shorter form lauwarm, O. H. G. láo. old sense of A. S. wlac seems to have been 'weak;' cf. Goth. thlakwus, flaccid, tender, Mk. xiii. 28; and perhaps Lat. flaccidus. luke-warm-ly, luke-warm-ness.

LULL, to sing to rest, quiet. (Scand.) M. E. lullen, Chaucer, C. T. 8439, 9697. Not found much earlier.—Swed. lulla, to hum, to lull; Dan. lulle, to lull. + O. Du. lullen, to sing in a humming voice, sing to sleep; Oudemans. β. Purely an imitative word, from the repetition of lu lu, which is a drowsier form of the more allied to Icel. löpp (gen. lappar), the paw of an animal; see Fick, $\dip to babble (lit. to say la la); so also Gk. λαλεῖν, to speak. Der. lull, sb.; lull-a-by; and see loll, loll-ard.

LUMBAGO, pain in the loins. (L.) In Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706. - Lat. lumbago (a rare word), pain in the loins. - Lat. lumb-us, the loin. See Lumbar.

IUMBAR, belonging to the loins. (L.) 'Lumbar or Lumbary, belonging to the loins;' Phillips, ed. 1706.—Lat. lumbaris, adj., only found in the neut. lumbare, used as sb. to signify 'apron;' Jerem. xiii. 1 (Vulgate).— Lat. lumbus, the loin. LUMBER (1), cumbersome or useless furniture. (F., -G.) See Trench, Select Glossary, where we find: 'The lumber-room orig. the Lombard-room, or room where the Lombard banker and broker stowed away his pledges. . . As these would naturally often accumulate here till they became out of date and unserviceable, the steps are easy to be traced by which the word came to possess its present meaning. [I see no point in Mr. Wedgwood's objections to this etymology, which is clear enough.] 'To put one's clothes to lumber, pignori dare;' Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671. 'Lombardeer, an usurer or broaker, so called from the Lombards . . . hence our word lumbar, which signifies refuse household stuff. Lombard is also used for a bank for usury or pawns; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. This shews that the word lombard had so completely passed into the name of a place or room, that the word Lombardeer was actually coined out of this sense of it, merely to express the original sense of the word Lombard itself! Even in Shak., we find Mrs. Quickly pronouncing Lombard as Lumbert, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 31. Minsheu, ed. 1627, gives Lumbar, Lombar, or Lombard, a bancke for vsury or pawnes. He also gives: 'Lumber, old baggage of houshold stuffe, so called of the noise it maketh when it is remoued, lumber, lumber, &c.;' and if any reader preser this fancy, he may do so; see Lumber (2). B. The Lombards were early known as lenders of money on pawn; see P. Plowman, C. vii. 241, B. v. 242, and the note. — F. Lombard, 'a Lombard;' Cot. (It also formerly meant a pawn-broker's shop; Hamilton.) — G. Langbart, Long-beard; a name given to the men of this tribe (Littre). See Long and Beard. Der. lumber-room.

LUMBER (2), to make a great noise, as a heavy rolling object. (Scand.) 'The lumbering of the wheels;' Cowper, John Gilpin, st. 6 from end. 'I lumber, I make a noise above ones head, Ie fais bruit. You lumbred so above my head I could not sleep for you; Palsgrave. 'They lumber forth the lawe;' Skelton, Colin Clout, 1, 95. A frequentative verb of Scand. origin; preserved in Swed. dial. lomra, to resound, frequent of ljumma, or ljumma, to resound, thunder; from ljumm, a great noise; Rietz. [Similarly lumber (with excrescent b) stands for lumm-er, where -er is the frequentative suffix.] β. The Swed. ljumm is cognate with Icel. hljómr, a sound, tune, voice; but differs from A.S. hlyn, a loud noise (Grein), in the suffix and quantity. The Goth, hliuma means 'hearing;' Mk. vii. 35. Y. Swed. ljumm, Icel. hljómr, Goth. hliuma, are from a Teut. base HLEU-MA ljumm, Icel. hljómr, Goth. hliuma, are from a Teut. base HLEU-MA or HLIU-MA (Fick, iii. 89); from the Teut. verb HLU, to hear — KRU, to hear. From the same Teut. verb is the Teut. adj. HLÜDA, A. S. hlúd, E. loud; see Loud.

LUMINARY, a bright light. (F.,-L.) 'O radiant Luminary;' Skelton, Prayer to the Father of Heaven, l. 1.-O. F. luminarie (Littré); later luminaire, 'a light, candle, lampe;' Cot. - Lat. luminare, a luminary, neut. of luminaris, light-giving. - Lat. lumin-, stem. of lumen (=luc-men), light. Cf. Lat. lucere, to shine; see Lucid. And see Luminous. And see Luminous.

LUMP, a small shapeless mass, clot. (Scand.) M. E. lompe, lumpe; 'a lompe of cheese' = a lump of cheese; P. Plowman, C. x.

150. Of Scand. origin; cf. Swed. dial. lump, a piece hewn off a log (Rietz); Norweg. lump, a block, knop, stump (Aasen). B. Allied words are Du. lomp (O. Du. lompe), a rag, tatter, lump; Du. lomp, clumsy, duil, awkward; Norweg. lopputt, lumpy (Aasen); Icel. loppinn, with hands benumbed with cold; as well as Swed. dial. lubber, a thick, awkward, slow fellow, lubba, to be slow (Rietz). y. Thus it is easily seen that lump is a nasalised form of lup (weak-Thus it is a by-form a Scand base LUP, to be slow or heavy; see Lubber.

LUNCH, a lump, large piece of bread, &c. (Scand.) 'Lunches, slices, cuts of meat or bread;' Whitby Glossary. Minsheu (ed. 1627) mentions lunch, as being equivalent to 'gobbet, or peece.' The word presents no real difficulty, being a mere variant of lump; just as bunch, hunch, are variants of bump and hump; see those words. And see Lump. Der. lunch-son, q. v.

LUNCHEON, LUNCH, a slight meal between breakfast and dinner. (Scand.) Lunch, in the modern sense, is a mere abbreviation of luncheon, though we shall trace the latter back to lunch in the sense mentioned in the article above. Cotgrave translates O. F. caribot by 'a lunchion, or big piece of bread, &c.;' also O. F. horion by 'a dust, cuff, rap, knock, thump, also, a luncheon, or big piece.' We may suspect the spellings lunch-ion, lunch-eon, to be merely literary English for lunch-in. 'A huge lunshin of bread, i. e. a large piece;' Thoresby's (Yorkshire) Letter to Ray, 1703 (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 17, p. 103). And this lunchin is probably nothing but lunching, with the obscured just a communication. with the g obscured, just as curmudgeon (q.v.) is nothing but corn-At any rate, luncheon, lunchion, or lunchin, is nothing but an old provincial word, and a mere extension of lunch, a lump, without, at first, any change of meaning. It was easily extended to mean a slight meal, just as we now say 'to take a snack,' i.e. a snatch of Many and silly are the conjectures that have been made concerning this word; Wedgwood has it rightly, as above. LUNG, one of the organs of breathing. (E.) Gen. in the pl. lungs. M. E. lunge (sing.), Gower, C. A. iii. 100; lunges (pl.), id. iii. 99. Also longes, pl., Chaucer, C. T. 2754. — A. S. lunge, neut. sing.; lungan, pl., of which lungen is a weakened form. 'Pulmo, lungen;' Wright's Gloss., i. 45, col. 1, l. 12.+Du. long, s. pl., lungs, linkt. I led lungs neuts sing. lights. + Icel. lunga, neut. sing; usually in pl. lungu. + Dan. lunge; pl. lunger. + Swed. lunga, +G. lunge, pl. B. Allied to A. S. lungre, quickly (orig. lightly), Grein, ii. 196; also to E. long, which has been shewn to be related to Gk. ἐλαχύε, Skt. laghu, light; see Long (1). Thus the lungs are named from their lightness; indeed, they are also called lights. Finally, lungs, light, levity are all from the same root. Fick, iii. 265. LUNGE, a thrust, in fencing. (F., -L.) In Todd's Johnson; formerly longe, used by Smollet (Johnson). The E. a longe is a In Todd's Johnson; mistaken substitute for F. allonge (formerly also alonge), 'a lengthening,' Cot. So named from the extension of the body in delivering the thrust. - F. allonger (formerly alonger), to lengthen; cf. Ital. allongare, allungare, to lengthen (Florio). Compounded of F. à (Lat. ad) and longare *, only in comp. e-longare, to lengthen; see Elongate.

LUPINE, a kind of pulse. (F., -L.) The pl. is both lupines and lupins in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxii. c. 25. — F. lupin, 'the pulse lupines;' Cot. — Lat. lupinum, a lupine, kind of pulse; neut. of lupinus, wolfish, though the reason of the name is not apparent; perhaps 'because it eagerly penetrates the soil' (Webster). — Lat. lupus, a wolf; cognate with Gk. Aunos, a wolf.

B. Both Lat. lupus (for lukus) and Gk. Aunos have lost initial w (u or f), which is preserved in Skt. viika, Russ. volk, Lithuan. wilkas, and E. wolf; see Wolf. Curtius, i. 197.

LURCH (1), to lurk, dodge, steal, pilfer. (Scand.) Merely a variant of lurk, due to a weakened pronunciation; see Lurk. senses are: (1) to lie in wait, lurk, Merry Wives, ii. 2. 26; (2) to pilfer, steal, rob, plunder, Cor. ii. 2. 105. Der. lurch-er, one that lies upon the lurch, or upon the catch, also a kind of hunting-dog.

Phillips, ed. 1706.

LURCH (2), the name of a game. (F., -L.?) The phr. to leave to lurch is in the lurch' was derived from its use in an old game; to lurch is still used in playing cribbage. 'But rather leave him in the lurch;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 1151. The game is mentioned in Cotgrave. = F. lourche, 'the game called Lurche, or, a Lurch in Goth. lustus. + G. lust.

Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 1151. The game is mentioned in Cotgrave. = F. lourche, 'the game called Lurche, or, a Lurch in Goth. lustus. + G. lust.

Also lunch, q.v. gives: 'Ourche, the game at tables called lurch.' 3. This suggests LUNAR, belonging to the moon. (L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. that lourche stands for lourche, the initial l being merely the def. article. A lurch is a term esp, used when one person gains every point before another makes one; hence a plausible derivation may be obtained by supposing that ourche meant the 'pool' in which stakes were put. The loser's stakes remained in the lurch, or he was left in the lurch, when he did not gain a single piece from the pool, which all went to others.

y. If this be so, the sense of ourche is easily obtained; it meant the 'pool,' i. e. the vase or par into which the stakes were cast. Roquefort gives O. F. ourcel, a little vase, also spelt orcel, shewing that O. F. orce, ource, or ourche meant a vase; cf. Ital. orcio, a jar. The etymology is then obvious, viz. from Lat. urceus, a pitcher, vase. But this is a guess.

LURCH (3), to devour; obsolete. (L.) Bacon says that proximity to great cities 'lurcheth all provisions, and maketh every thing deare; Essay xlv, Of Building. That is, it absorbs them, lit. gulps them down. 'To lurch, deuour, or eate greedily, Ingurgito; Baret, Alvearie. - Late Lat. lurchare, lurcare, to devour greedily. Thought to be connected with lura, the mouth of a bag (White). haps Lurch (3) is really Lurch (1), to filch; the Lat. verb being falsely mixed up with it.

LURCH (4), a sudden roll sideways. (Scand.?) Not in Todd's Johnson. 'A lee lurch, a sudden roll to the leeward, as when a heavy sea strikes the ship on the weather side;' Webster. A sea term. Of obscure origin; but prob. nothing but lurch (1) or lurk in the sense of to stoop or duck like one who skulks or tries to avoid notice. See Lurch (1), Lurk.

LURE, a bait, enticement, decoy. (F., -G.) M.E. lure, Chaucer, C. T. 17021. The pp. lured, enticed, occurs in P. Plowman, B. v. 439; cf. Chaucer, C. T. 5997. A term of the chase; and therefore of F. origin. — O. F. loerre, loirre (see Littré), later leurre, 'a faulconer's lure;' Cot. — M. H. G. luoder (G. luder), a bait, decoy, lure. β. A derivation from M. H. G. and G. laden, to invite, is not impossible; since that verb makes lud in the past tense. See Lade, Load. Der. lure, vb.

LURK, to lie in wait, skulk, lie hid. (Scand.) M. E. lurken, lorken, Chaucer, C. T. 16126; P. Plowman, B. ii. 216. Of Scand. origin. By the usual corruption of s to r, lurken stands for an older lusken; still preserved in Swed. dial. luska, to lurk, to sneak about in order to listen, to play the eaves-dropper; Dan. luske, to sneak, skulk about; cf. G. lauschen, to listen, lurk, lie in wait; O.Du. luschen, to lurk (Oudemans). By the common interchange of sk with st, we see that Dan. luske is merely another form of A. S. hlystan, to listen; see Listen. y. That M. E. lurken has lost initial h, and stands for hlurken, and that r is a later substitution for s, further appears from the shortened forms in Swed. lura, Dan. lure, to lurk, outwit, G. lauern, Icel. hlera, hlöra, to stand eaves-dropping, to listen, Du. loeren, to peep, peer, lurk, cheat, gull, senses which appear under the form lurch; see Lurch (1). So also Du. op den loer liggen, to lie in ambush, corresponds to the sense seen in lurcher, also given under Lurch (1). 5. Thus the Teut. base is HLU, to hear; answering to KRU, to hear. See Loud, Listen. Doublet, lurch (1); perhaps lurch (4); and perhaps even lurch (3). LURY, the same as Lory, q. v.

LUSCIOUS, delicious, very sweet. (E.; with F. suffix.) spelt lushious, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 54; and in Skinner. Wedgwood cites from Palsgrave: 'Fresh or lussyouse, as meate is that is not well seasoned or hath an unpleasant swetnesse in it, fade.' The word cannot be traced further back, but it evidently arose (I think) from attaching the suffix -ous to the M. E. lusty, pleasant, delicious. The phonetic change from lust-i-ous to lussious and lush-i-ous is a most easy corruption; in fact, the word could not have lasted long with a pure pronunciation, as it requires care to say it. [Similarly, the M. II. G lussam stands for an older lust-sam (Wackernagel); fashion is a doublet of faction, and t is lost after s in listen, hasten, waistcoat, Christmas, &c.] B. Observe the peculiar use of M. E. lusty; thus Chaucer speaks of 'a lusty plain,' 'lusty wether' [weather], 'the lusty seson,' &c.; C. T. 7935, 10366, 10703. See Lust. γ. Shakespeare γ. Shakespeare has lush (short for lush-ious) in the sense of luxuriant in growth, where Chaucer would certainly have said lusty; the curious result being that Shak. uses both words together. 'How lush and lusty the grass looks; Temp. ii. 1. 52. The equivalence of the words could not be better exemplified. Der. luscious-ness.

from the verb fraliusan, to lose utterly, as also G. verlust, destruc- in a gloss; Lye, Bosworth. + Du. loog. + G. lauge, O. H.G. longa. tion, from verlieren (= verliesen). This suggests a possible derivation from the verb to lose; see Lose.

Y. The sense gives no difficulty; the Teut. base LUS meant 'to set free' or release; thus the orig. sense of lust was release, relaxation, perfect freedom to act loosely or at pleasure, or to do as one lists; see List (4).

8. The base LUS is an extension of LU, to release, cut loose; seen in Lat. luere, Gk. λύειν, to release, Skt. lú, to cut, cut away. See LOOSE. ¶ This seems to me better than to connect lust with Skt. lask, to desire, for which see Lascivious; the vowel is against it. However, such is the view taken by Curtius, i. 450. Der. lust, verb, K. Lear, iv. 6. 166, the older form being list = A. S. lystan; lust-y, M. E. lust-y, Chaucer, C. T. 80; lust-i-ly, lust-i-ness; lust-ful, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 80; lust-ful-ness, O. LUSTRATION, a purification by sacrifice, a sacrifice. (L.)
The doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 11. sect. 12. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -tion, from Lat. lustratio, an expiation, sacrifice. - Lat. lustrare, to purify. - Lat. lustrum, an expiatory sacrifice. See

LUSTRE (1), splendour, brightness. (F., -L.) 'Lustre of the dyamonte;' Sir T. Morc, Works, p. 73e. Spelt luster in Minsheu, ed. 1627. - F. lustre, 'a luster, or gloss;' Cot. - Low Lat. lustrum, a window; lit. a place for admitting light; and hence, the light itself; connected with Lat. lustrare, to enlighten, illumine. β . This verb lustrare appears to be quite distinct from lustrare, to purify; for which see Lustre (2). It is prob. formed from a lost adjective lustrus *, shining, an abbreviation of luc-strus; in any case, it is to be connected with lucere, to shine; see Lucid. Der. lustrous, All's Well, ii. 1. 41; lustrous-ly; lustre-less; also lutestring, q.v. LUSTRE (2), LUSTRUM, a period of five years. (L.) Spelt lustrum in Minsheu, ed. 1627; which is the Lat. form. At a later period it was changed to lustre, rather as being a more familiar form than because it was the F. spelling; the F. form lustre is given in Cotgrave. - Lat. lustrum, an expiatory offering, a lustration; also a period of five years, because every five years a lustrum was performed. B. The orig. sense is 'a washing' or purification; connected with Lat. lauare, to wash, luere, to cleanse, purify; see Lave.

Der. lustr-al, adj.; lustr-at-ion, q. v.

LUTE (1), a stringed instrument of music. (F., — Arab.) M. E. lute, Chaucer, C. T. 12400. It is not easy to say how the word came to us; but prob. it was through the French. The forms are: O. F. luz, leus (Roquefort), lut (Cot.), mod. F. luth; Prov. laut, Span. laud, Port. alaude, Ital. liuto, leuto; also O. Du. luyte (Kilian), Du. luit, 1 an. lut, G. laute. B. The Port. form alaude clearly shews the Arab. origin of the word, the prefix al-being the Arab. def. article, Dan. lut. G. laute. which in other languages appears merely as an initial l. The sb. is Arab. 'úd (with initial ain), wood, timber, the trunk or branch of a tree, a staff, stick, wood of aloes, lute, or harp; Rich. Dict. p. 1035, col. 1. So called from its glossiness. — Ital. lustrare, to shine. — Lat. lustrare, to shine; see Lustre (1).

'luxury;' Cot. = Lat. luxuria, luxury. An extended form from Lat. luxus, pomp, excess, luxury. B. Prob. connected with pollucere, to offer in sacrifice, serve up a dish, entertain; and from the same root as licere, to be lawful; see License. Der. luxuri-ous, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4, l. 498; luxuri-ous-ly, -ness; luxuri-ate, from Lat. luxuriatus, pp. of luxuriare, to indulge in luxury; luxuri-ant, Milton, P. L. iv. 260, from Lat. luxuri-ant-, stem of pres. pt. of luxuriare; luxuri-ant-ly, luxuri-ance, luxuri-anc-y. -LY, a common adj. and adv. ending. (E.) As an adj. ending, in man-ly, &c., the A.S. form is -lie. As an adv. ending, the A.S. form is -lice. The suffix -lic is the same word as A. S. lic, like; see Like. LYE, a mixture of ashes and water, water impregnated with alka-β. Further allied to Icel. laug, a bath; from a Teut. base LAU, to wash, akin to Lat. lauare, to wash; see Lave. Fick, iii. 260. LYMPH, a colourless fluid in animals. (L.) A shortened form of lympha, the older term. 'Lympha, a clear humour;' Kersey, ed. 1715. - Lat. lympha, water, lymph; also, a water-nymph. spelling with y is due to a supposed derivation from the Gk. νύμφη, a nymph, which is probably false. The word is rather to be connected with Lat. limpidus, clear; see Limpid. Der. lymph-at-ic, from Lat. lymphaticus.

LYNCH, to punish summarily, by mob-law. (E.) Said to derive its name from John Lynch, a farmer, who exercised it upon the fugitive slaves and criminals dwelling in the "dismal swamp, N. Carolina. . . . This mode of administering justice began about the end of the 17th century; 'Haydn, Dict. of Dates. The name Lynck is from A.S. hline, a ridge of land; see Link (1). Der. lynch-law.

LYNX, a keen-sighted quadruped. (L., – Gk.) M. E. lynx; Ayenbite of Inwyt, ed. LYRE, a stringed musical instrument. (F., - L., - Gk.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 17; he also has lyrick, P. R. iv. 277. - F. lyre, to lyre field or heavy.' Cot. - Let large. Cl. Man.

'a lyra [sic], or harp;' Cot. = Lat. lyra. = Gk. Abpa, a lyre, lute. Der. lyre-bird; lyr-ic, spelt liricke in Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetry, cd. Arber, p. 45, last line; lyr-ic-al, lyr-ic-al-ly, lyr-ate.

Μ.

MACADAMISE, to pave a road with small, broken stones. (Hybrid; Gael. and Heb.; with F. suffix.) 'Macadamising, a system of road-making devised by Mr. John Macadam, and published by him in an essay, in 1819, &c.; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Macadam = son of Adam; from Gael. mac, son; and Heb. ádúm, a man, from the root údam, to be red.

MACARONI, MACCARONI, a paste made of wheat flour. (Ital., -L.?) 'He doth learn to make strange sauces, to eat anchovies, maccaroni, bovoli, fagioli, and caviare; Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, A. ii (Mercury). 'Macaroni, gobbets or lumps of boyled paste,' &c.; Minsheu, ed. 1627. - O. Ital. maccaroni, 'a kinde of paste meate boiled in broth, and drest with butter, cheese, and spice; Florio. The mod. Ital. spelling is maccheroni, properly the plural of .maccherone, used in the sense of a 'macarone' biscuit. B. Of somewhat doubtful origin; but prob. to be connected with Gk. μακαρία, a word used by Hesychius to denote βρῶμα ἐκ ζωμοῦ καὶ ἀλφίτων, a mess of broth and pearl-barley, a kind of porridge. This word is derived by Curtius (i. 405) from Gk. μάσσειν, to knead, of which the base is make; cf. Gk. masa, dough, Russ. muka, flour, y. Similarly the Ital. macaroni is prob. from O. Ital. maccare, 'to bruise, to batter, to pester;' Florio. And, again, the Ital. maccare is from a Lat. base mac, to knead, preserved in the deriv. macerare, to macerate, reduce to pulp. See Macerate.

8. Thus the orig. sense seems to have been 'pulp;' hence anything of a pulpy or pasty nature. Der. Macaron-ic, from F. macaronique, 'a macaronick, a confused heap or huddle of many severall things' (Cot.), so named from macaroni, which was orig. a mixed mess, as described by Florio above. The name macaroni, according to Haydn, Dict. of Dates, was given to a poem by Theophilo Folengo (otherwise Merlinus Coccaius) in 1500; macaronic poetry is a kind of jumble, often written in a mixture of languages. And see macaroon.

MACAROON, a kind of cake or biscuit. (F., - Ital., - L.?) Formerly macaron, as in Cotgrave. - F. macaron; pl. macarons, macarons, little fritter-like buns, or thick losenges, compounded of sugar, almonds, rose-water, and musk, pounded together and baked with a gentel fire; also [the same as] the Ital. macaroni; Cot.— Ital. macarone, a macaroon. See further under Macaroni.

The sense of the word has somewhat altered.

MACAW, a kind of parrot. (Caribbean?) Said to be the native name in the Antilles, i. e. the Caribbean Islands (Webster).

MACE (1), a kind of club. (F.,-L.) In early use. M. E. mace, King Alisaunder, 1901. - O. F. mace, mache (Burguy), mod. F. masse, a mace. - Lat. matea *, a beetle, only preserved in the dimin. mateola, a beetle, mallet; Pliny, 17. 18. 29. Prob. connected with Skt. math, to churn, crush, hurt, kill. Der. mace-bearer.

LYE, a mixture of ashes and water, water impregnated with alkaline salt imbibed from wood-ashes. (E.) 'Ley for waschynge, lye, leye, Lixivium;' Prompt. Parv. p. 294.—A. S. ledh, 'lie, lee' [lye], the spice called mace;' Cot. [Much more probably from this F.]

It is most likely that the F. macis was confused with O. F. macer, of which Cot. says that it 'is not mace, as many imagine, but a reddish, aromaticall, and astringent rind of a certain Indian root.' O. F. macer is the word concerning which we read in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xii. c. 8, that 'the macir is likewise brought out of India; a reddish bark or rind it is of a great root, and beareth the name of the tree itselfe.' In all likelihood, the mace and the macir are kindred words, named from some common quality, as, possibly, from their fragrance. – Lat. macer, i.e. 'macir;' Pliny. – Gk. μάπερ; doubtless a borrowed word from the East. Prob. from a Skt. source; cf. Skt. makar-anda, the nectar of a flower, a kind of jasmine; makura, mukura, a bud, a tree (the Mimusops elengi), Arabian jasmine.

MACERATE, to soften by steeping, to soak. (L.) In Spenser, Virgil's Gnat, 1. 94. - Lat. maceratus, pp. of macerare, to steep; a frequentative from a base mac-.+Russ. mochite, to steep. + Gk. μάσσειν (base μακ-), to knead, wipe; Curtius, i. 405. + Skt. mack, to pound (very rare; see Fick, i. 707). - ✓ MAK, to pound, knead; whence also Russ. muka, meal. Der. macerat-ion. From the same root, mass (1), q. v.; perhaps macaroni, meagre, e-maciated.

MACHINE, a contrivance, instrument. (F., - L., - Gk.) In Shak. Hamlet, ii. 2. 124. Rare in earlier times, but we find the spelling machune in Layamon, l. 15478. - F. machine. - Lat. machina. -Gk. μηχανή, a device, machine; cf. μηχος, means, contrivance. β. From the base μηχ, answering to an Aryan ✓ MAGH, and Teut. MAG, to have power; whence also the E. verb may; Curtius. i. 416. The E. make is also an allied word. See May (1), Make. 416. The E. make is also an allied word, See may (1), MACKEREL, the name of a fish. (F., -L.) M. E. makerel, Havelok, 758. - O. F. makerel, in Neckam's Treatise de Utensilibus; Wright's Vocab. i. 98, l. 1. (Mod. F. maquereau.) B. It is usual to derive O. F. makerel from Lat. macula, a stain; 'from the dark blotches with which the fish is marked' (Wedgwood). It is rather from the original Lat. word (macus or maca) of which macula is the extant diminutive form, and of which we find a trace in Span. maca, a stain, a bruise on fruit. γ . That this is the right etymology of the word is clear from another sense of O. F. maquereau; Cotgrave gives: 'Maquereaux, red scorches or spots on the legs of such as use to sit neer the fire.' [The name of the brill arose in a similar way; see Brill.]

\[\gamma\]. The right etymology of Lat. macula is perhaps that given by Fick, i. 707; viz. from \(\sqrt{MAK}\), to pound, whence also \(\text{E}\). macerate; see Macerate. This is sustained by Ital. ammaccare, to crush, bruise, Span. machar, to pound, and other words mentioned by Diez (s. v. macco). The senses 'pound, bruise, beat black and blue, stain,' are thus arranged in what is probably their ¶ The suggestion in Mahn's Webster, that the F. maquereau, a mackerel, is the same word as O.F. maquereau, a pandar (Cotgrave), from 'a popular tradition in France that the mackerel, in spring, follows the female shads, which are called vierges or maids, and leads them to their mates, is one which I make bold to reject. It is clear that the story arose out of the coincidence of the name, and that the name was not derived from the story. The etymology of O. F. maquereau, a pandar, is from the Teut. source preserved in Du. makelaar, a broker, pandar, from Du. makelen, to procure, bring about, frequentative form of maken, to make.

MACKINTOSH, a waterproof overcoat. (Gael.) From the name of the inventor.

MACROCOSM, the whole universe. (Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt macrocosmus in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Coined from Gk. μακρό-, crude form of μακρόε, long, great; and κόσμοε, the world. See Microcosm.

MACULATE, to defile. (L.) Used as a pp. in The Two Noble Kinsmen, ed. Skeat, v. 1. 134. — Lat. maculatus, pp. of maculare, to spot. — Lat. macula, a spot. — MAK to pound, bruise, hence, to mark with a bruise. See further under Mackerel. Der. maculat-ion. Shak. Troil. iv. 4. 66; im-maculate, q. v. And see mail (1).

MAD, insane, foolish. (E.) The vowel was formerly long. M. E. mad, spelt madd in Li Beau Disconus, l. 2001, in Ritson's Met. Romances, vol. ii.; made in The Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 2091. Stratmann also cites 'I waxe mod' (MS. mot) from Specimens of Lyric Poetry, ed. Wright, p. 31, where it rimes with blod = blood. Cf. medschipe = madness; Ancren Riwle, p. 148, l. 1. = A. S. ge-mæd, ge-maad, in a gloss (Lye); cf. A. S. múd-mód, madness, Grein, ii. 202. + O. Sax. ge-méd, foolish. + O. H. G. ka-meit, gi-meit, vain. + Icel. ## Hot. Sax. ge-mea, 1001st. + O. R. G. Ka-meit, gi-meit, vair. + Ich.

meiddr, pp. of meiða, to maim, hurt. + Goth. ga-maids, bruised, tribe (Herod. i. 101), hence, an enchanter, wizard, juggler. Properly, natt. 101, hence, an enchanter, wizard, juggler. Properly, one of the priests or wise men in Persia who interpreted dreams, &c. appears to be 'damaged,' or 'seriously hurt.' Root uncertain.

MADAM, my lady, a lady. (F., = L.) In early use. M. E. madame, King Alisaunder, 269. — F. madame = ma dame, my lady. — Lat. mea domina, my lady. See Dame. Doublet, madonna.

MADDER, the name of a plant. (E.) M. E. madir, mader (with one d); Prompt. Parv. – A. S. mæderu, mædere, in Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 337; cf. feld-mædere, field-mædder, Wright's Vocab, i. 68, col. 2. + Icel. mædra. + Du. mæed. Cf. Skt. mædhura, sweet, tender; whence fem. mædhura, the name of several plants (Benfey).

MADEMOISELLE, miss; lit. my damsel. (F., -L.) Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus, speaks slightingly of grooms and madamoisellaes' (R.) - F. mademoiselle, spelt madamoiselle in Cotgrave. - F. ma, my; and demoiselle, formerly damoiselle, a damsel. See Madame and Damsel.

MADONNA', my lady, Our Lady. (Ital., -L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 47. - Ital. madonna. - Ital. ma, my; and donna, lady. -Lat. mea, my; and domina, lady, dame. See Dame. madame MADREPORE, the common coral. (F., - Ital., - L. and Gk.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. - F. madrépore, madrepore. - Ital. madrepora, explained in Meadows as 'a petrified plant.' somewhat uncertain origin; but prob. the first part of the word is Ital. madre, mother, used in various compounds, as madre-selva (lit. mother-wood), honeysuckle, madre-bosco (lit. mother-bush), woodbine (Florio), madre perla, mother of pearl (Florio); from Lat. matrem, acc. of mater, mother; see Mother.

γ. The part pora appears to be from the Gk. πῶροι, a light, friable stone, also a stalactite. Hence madre-pore = mother-stone, a similar formation to madre perla (lit. mother-pearl). ¶ If this be right, it has nothing to do with F. madré, spotted, nor with pore. But it has certainly been understood as connected with the word pore, as shewn by the numerous similar scientific terms, such as catenipora, tubipora, dentipora, gemmipora, &c.; see the articles in Engl. Cycl. on Madrephylliæa and Madreporæa. It does not follow that the supposed connection with pore was originally right; it only shews that this sense was substituted for that of the Gk. πῶροε.

MADRIGAL, a pastoral song. (Ital., - L., - Gk.) 'Melodious birds sing madrigals;' Marlowe, Passionate Shepherd; cited in Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 1. 18, 23. — Ital. madrigale, pl. madrigali, madrigals, a kind of short songs or ditties in Italie;' Florio. It stands for mandrigale, and means 'a shepherd's song;' cf. mardriale, mandriano, 'a heardesman, a grasier, a drover; [also] as madrigale; Florio. – Ital. mandra, 'a herde, drove, flock, folde; 'Florio. – Lat. mandra, a stall, stable, stye. - Gk. μάνδρα, an inclosure, fold, stable. + Skt. mandurá, a stable for horses; prob. from mand, to sleep. The suffix -gale = Lat. -calis.

MAGAZINE, a storehouse, store, store of news, pamphlet. (F., - Ital., - Arab.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 816. - O. F. magazin, 'a magazin,' Cot.; mod. F. magasin. - Ital. magazzino, a storchouse. [Cf. Span. magacen, also almagacen, where al is the Arab. article.] - Arab. makhzan (pl. makhazin), a storehouse, granary, cellar; Rich. Dict. p. 1366. Cf. also khizanat, a magazine, treasure-house; from khazn, a laying up in store; id. pp. 600, 610.

MAGGOT, a grub, worm. (W.) M. E. magot, magat (with one g), given as a variant of 'make, mathe, wyrm in the fleshe;' Prompt. Parv. p. 321. Spelt maked in Wright's Vocab. i. 255, col. 1, to translate Lat. tarinus [misprint for tarmus] or simax [= Lat. cimex.] -W. macai, maceiad, a maggot; cf. magiaid, worms, grubs. The latter form is clearly connected with magiad, breeding, rearing, magad, a brood; from magu, to breed, cognate with Bret. maga, Corn. maga, to feed, nourish. Thus a maggot is 'a thing bred.' β. Perhaps W. magu is connected with Lat. magnus, Gk. μέγαs, great, from the notion of 'growth;' see May (1). maggot is quite distinct from M. E. make, cited above; the latter is more commonly written mawk, as in Wright's Vocab i. 190, col. 1; and is still in use in prov. E. Mawk is a contraction from maček, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 326; from Icel. mačkr, a maggot; see Mawkish. Cf. Dan. maddik, madike, a maggot. Icel. mad-kr, Dan. mad-ike, are merely diminutives of the word which appears in E. as moth; see Moth. (Fick, iii. 224.) Der. maggot-y.

MAGI, priests of the Persians. (L., -Gk., -Pers.) In P. Plowman, C. xxii. 85. Borrowed from Lat. magi, Matt. ii. 1 (Vulgate). -Gk. μάγοι, Matt. ii. 1; pl. of μάγος, a Magian, one of a Median great. — MAGH, to have power. See May (1). MAGNANIMOUS, high-minded, noble. (L.) In Shak. All's Well, iii. 6. 70. Formed (by changing -us to -ous, as in ardu-ous, contemporane-ous, &c.) from Lat. magnanimus, great-souled. - Lat. magn-, stem of magnus, great; and animus, the mind. See Magnanimity. Der. magnanimous-ly.

MAGNATE, a great man, noble. (F., -L.) A late word; not in Todd's Johnson. - F. magnat. - Lat. magnatem, acc. of magnas, a prince. - Lat. magn-, stem of magnus, great. β. Lat. magnus is cognate with Gk. μέγαs, great, Skt. mahant, great, and E. much; see Much. ¶ Magnate is a Hungarian and Polish use of the Lat. word; the F. magnat is, more strictly, due to the pl. magnats = Lat. magnates. For derivatives from Lat. magnus, see Magnitude.

MAGNESIA, the oxide of magnesium. (Late Lat., - Gk.) Modern. Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Coined from some supposed resemblance to the mineral called by a similar name in Gk., from Lat. Magnesia, fem. of Magnesius, of or belonging to the country called Magnesia. (The name magnesia, for a mineral, occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 16923.) - Gk. Maγνήσιοs, belonging to Magnesia, in Thessaly; whence λίθος Μαγνήτης or λίθος Μαγνήσιος, lit. Magnesian stone, applied to (1) the magnet, (2) a metal that looked like silver. Der. magnesi-um. See Magnet.

MAGNET, the loadstone, a bar having magnetic properties. (F., - L., - Gk.) M. E. magnete, Prompt. Parv. p. 325. - O. F. magnete*, a variation of manete, a word found in a F. MS. of the 13th cent.; see Littré, s. v. magnétique. - Lat. magnetem, acc. of magnes, put for magnes lapis = Magnesian stone, the loadstone. - Gk. Μάγνης (stem Μάγνητ-), Magnesian; also Μαγνήτης, whence λίθος Μαγνήτης, the Magnesian stone, magnet. See Magnesia.

Spenser has the Lat. form magnes, F. Q. ii. 12. 4. Der. magnet-ic, magnet-ic-al, ma netic-al-ly, magnet-ism, magnet-ise.

MAGNIFICENT, doing great things, pompous, grand. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. 1. 193. - Lat. magnificent., stem of magnificens, doing great things. - Lat. magni-, for magno-, crude form of magnus, great; and -fic-, put for fac-, base of facere, to do; with suffix -ent of a pres. part. See Magnify. Der magnificently; magnificence = F. magnificence, 'magnificence,' Cot. So also magnifical, A. V.

in Chron. xxii. 5, from Lat. magnificus, grand.

MAGNIFY, to enlarge, praise highly. (F., -L.) M. E. magnifien, Wyclif, Matt. xxiii. 5. - F. magnifier, 'to magnifie;' Cot. - Lat. magnificare, to make large. - Lat. magni- magno-, crude form of magnisticate, to make target. — Latt. magni- = magno-, crude form of magnis, great; and -fic-, put for fac-, base of facere, to make, do. See Magnate and Fact.

MAGNILOQUENCE, elevated or pompous language. (L.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Coined, by analogy with F. words in -ence (= Lat. -entia), from Lat. magniloquentia, elevated language. - Lat. magni- = magno-, crude form of magnus. great; and loquentia, discourse, from loquent-, stem of pres. part. of loqui, to speak. See Magnate and Loquacious. Der. magniloquent, a coined word.

MAGNITUDE, greatness, size. (L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627.

[There is no F. magnitude.] - Lat. magnitudo, greatness. - Lat. magni-=magno-, crude form of magnus, great; with suffix -tudo, expressive of quality. See Magnate. The derivatives from Lat. magnus are numerous, viz. magn-animity, magn-animous, magnate, magni-ficent, magni-fy, magni-loquence, magni-tude. From the of plants named in honour of Pierre Magnol, who was professor of medicine and prefect of the botanic garden of Montpellier [in France]. He was born in 1638, and died in 1715; Engl. Cycl. See his Botanicum Monspeliense, 1686.

MAGPIE, the name of a bird. (Hybrid; F.,-L.,-Gk.; and F. -L.) 1. Called magot-pie in Macbeth, iii. 4. 125. We also find prov. E. maggoty-pie; and madge, meaning (1) an owl, (2) a magpie. We also find The prefixes Mag, Magot, Maggoty (like Madge) are various forms of the name Margaret; cf. Robin as applied to the red-breast, Jenny to the wren, Philip to the sparrow. Mag may be taken to be short for Magot = F. Margot, which is (1) a familiar form of F. Marguerite, and (2) a name for the magpie. – F. Margot, put for Marguerite. –

Lat. margarita, a pearl. – Gk. μαργαρίτηs, a pearl, prob. a word of Eastern origin; cf. Pers. murwárid, a pearl; Rich. Dict. p. 1396. 2. The syllable pie = F. pie, from Lat. pica, a magpie; see MAHOGANY, the name of a tree and a wood. (W. Indian.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.; 'said to have been brought to England by Raleigh, in 1595; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Mahogany is 'the native S. American name' (Webster). It comes from Cam-peachy, Honduras, Cuba, &c.

MAHOMETAN; see Mohammedan.

MAID, MAIDEN, a girl, virgin. (E.) 1. Mayde occurs in Rob. of Glouc. p. 13, l. 14. It is not common in early M. E., and is, practically, merely a corruption of maiden, by the loss of final n, rather than a form derived from A. S. mægo or mægeo, a maiden (Grein, ii. 216).

2. The usual early M. E. word is maiden or meiden, Ancren Riwle, pp. 64, 166. – A. S. mægden, a maiden (Grein, ii. 216); also mæden, Mark, iv. 28, later text maigden.

3. We also find M. E. may in the same sense; Chaucer, C. T. 5271.—A.S. mag, a female relation, a maid; Grein, ii. 215.

Both A.S. mæg-den and mæg-eð are extensions from the older word mæg, also spelt mage, Grein, ii. 216. Moreover, mag-den = mage-ed-en = mageo-en is the dimin. form of mageo; see March, A. S. Gram. art. 228. v. Mageo is cognate with Goth. magaths, a virgin, maid, where the suffix -ths answers to Aryan suffix -ta. A.S. mag or mage is the fem. of A. S. mag, a son, kinsman (Grein, ii. 214), a very common word, and cognate with Goth. magus, a boy, child, Luke, ii. 43; also with Icel. mögr, a boy, youth, son. 8. The orig. sense of magus is 'a growing lad,' one increasing in strength; from the Teut. base MAG, to have power, whence also might, main. See May (1). Der. maiden-hood = A.S. magdenhad, Grein, ii. 216; also spelt maiden-head = M.E. meidenhed or meidenhede, Gower, C. A. ii. 230, 1. 8, which is a mere variant of maiden-hood; maiden-ly, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 217, Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 1. 865; maiden-Ni-ness; maiden-hair; also maid-shild, I.evit. xii. 5.

MAIL (1), steel network forming body-armour. (F., -L.) 'For though thy husband armed be in maille; 'Chaucer, C. T. 9098; the pl. mayles is in the Anturs of Arthur, st. xxx. - O. F. maile, 'maile, or a link of maile, whereof coats of maile be made; .. any little ring of metall; .. also, a mash [mesh] of a net; 'Cot. - Lat. macula, a spot, speck, hole, mesh of a net, net. See Maculate.

macuta, a spot, speck, note, mesh of a net, net. See Macutato.

MAIL (2), a bag for carrying letters. (F., - O. H. G.) M. E. male, a bag, wallet; Chaucer, C. T. 3117, 12854. - O.F. male (mod. F. malle), 'a male, or great budget;' Cot. - O. H. G. malaka, M. H. G. malke, a leathern wallet. + Gael. and Irish mala, a bag, sack. Cf. Gk. μολγόs, a hide, skin. Der. mail-bag, mail-coach, mail-cart.

MAIM, a bruise, injury, crippling hurt. (F., -C.?) Also spelt makin it am books: Blaunt's homelasisen de for. M. F. main.

mahim in Law-books; Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. M.E. maim, pl. maimes, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 135, l. 27; the pp. y-maymed is in the preceding line. The verb occurs also in Chaucer, C. T. 6314.— O. F. mehaing, 'a maime, or ... abatement of strength ... by hurts received; 'Cot. Whence the verb mehaigner, 'to maime;' id. Cf. Ital. magagna, a defect, blemish; whence magagnare, to spoil, vitiate. β. Of uncertain origin; perhaps Celtic; from Bret. machaü, mutilation; whence machaña, to maim, mutilate. This etym. would be quite satisfactory if we were sure that the Bret. word is not adapted from the F. Yet machan looks as if it might be connected with Bret. macha, to press, oppress, trample on, and mach, crowd, press, oppression. We can hardly connect it with Lat. mancus, maimed. The word remains unsolved. Der. maim, verb.

MAIN (1), sb., strength, might. (E.) To be distinguished from main (2), though both are from the same Aryan root. M. E. main, dat. maine, Gower, C. A. iii. 4, l. 20; also mein, as in 'with al his mein, Floriz and Blauncheflor, ed. Lumby, I. 17.—A. S. mægen, strength; Grein, ii. 217.+ Icel. megin, strength.— Teut. base MAG, to have power—Aryan MAGH; see May (1).

MAIN (2), adj., chief, principal. (F.,—L.) In Shak, Rich. III,

v. 3. 200. Prob. not in use much earlier, though maine saile (=main-\text{$\phi$}\) unskilful way. Compare also the following: 'Gardes vos, dames, tot accrtes Qu'au mangier soies molt apertes' = take care, ladies, for a 3. 209. Prob. not in use interest characteristic, though mane safe (= maine, sail) occurs in the Bible of 1551, Acts, xxvii. 40. − O. F. maine, magne, great, chief (Burguy). − Lat. magnus, great. − √ MAGH, to have power. See May (1). ¶ In some cases, main = Icel. magin, strength, also chief. Thus main sea = Icel. maginsjór. But the root is the same. Der. main-ly; also main-deck, -mast, -sail, -spring, -stay, -top, -yard; main-land.

MAINTAIN, to keep in a fixed state, keep up, support. (F.,-L.) M. E. maintenen, mayntenen, K. Alisaunder, l. 1592. - F. maintenir, 'to maintain;' Cot. - Lat. manu tenere, to hold in the hand; or more likely, in late Latin, to hold by the hand, to support or aid another, as shewn by the use of M. E. mainteinen, to aid and abet, P. Plowman, B. iii. 90, and note. - Lat. manu, abl. case of manus, the hand; and tenere, to hold. See Manual and Tenable. Der. maintain-able, maintain-er; mainten-ance, M. E. meintenaunce, spelt mentenaunce in Shoreham's Poems, p. 100, l. 19, from O. F. maintenance, 'maintenance;' Cot.

MAIZE, Indian corn or wheat. (Span., - W. Indian.) 'Indian maiz; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 49; and in Essay 33. Also in Dampier's Voyages, an. 1681 (R.) - Span. maiz, maize. - W. Indian mahiz, mahis, in the language of the island of Hayti (S. Domingo); Mahn (in Webster).

MAJESTY, grandeur, dignity. (F., - L.) M. E. magestee, Chaucer, C. T. 4320. - O. F. majestet, majeste, later majesté, 'majesty;' Cot. - Lat. maiestatem, acc. of maiestas, dignity, honour. - Lat. māies-, put for mag-ias-, with suffix -tas significant of state or condition. Here mag-ias = mag-yans- is from the base mag- of accompanity as addition of a companity as suffix the addition of a companity suffix the suffix the addition of a companity suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffix the suffi mag-nus, great, with the addition of a comparative suffix; see Schleicher, Compendium, § 232. The sense of maiestas is the 'condition of being greater, hence, dignity. See Major, Magnitude.

Der. majest-ic, a coined word, Temp. iv. 118; majest-ic-al, L. L. v.

2. 102; majest-ic-al-ly, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 479.

MAJOR, greater; the title of an officer in the army. (L.)

Chiefly used (as an adj.) as a term in logic, as in 'this major or first proposition;' Fryth, Works, p. 147, col. 1. 'The major part;' Cor. ii. 1. 64. — Lat. major, greater; comparative of magnus, great; see Magnitude. See Schleicher, Compendium, § 232. Der. major-ship, major-general; major-domo, imitated from Span. mayordomo, a house-steward (see Domestic); also major-i-ty, 1 Hen. IV, iii. 2, 100, from F. majorité, 'majority', Cot. Doublet, mayor.

MAKE, to fashion, frame, cause, produce. (E.) M. E. maken, makien; pt. t. makede, made, pp. maked, mad, mad; Chaucer, C. T. 9, 33, 396. - A. S. macian, pt. t. macode, pp. macod; see Sweet, A. S. Reader; also ge-macian (Grein). + C. machen, O. H. G. machón, to β. From the Teut. base MAK, another form of MAG, to have power; see May (1). Der. make, sb., Gower, C. A. ii. 204, 1. 10 (see Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, sect. xx. l. 24); mak-er, P. Plowman, B. x. 240; make-peace, Rich. II, i. 1. 160; make-shift, make-weight; and see match (1).

MALACHITE, a hard green stone. (Gk.) * Malachites, Molochites, a kind of precious stone of a dark green colour, like the herb mallows; Phillips, ed. 1706. Formed, with suffix -ites (= Gk. -1778) from Gk. μαλάχ-η, a mallow. See Mallow.

MALADMINISTRATION, bad administration. (F., -L.) Spelt maleadministration in Swist, Sentiments of a Church of Eng. Man, s. 2 (R.) - F. male, sem. of mal (= Lat. malus), bad; and F. administration. See Malice and Administer.

¶ So also maladjustment, mal-adroit, mal-apert, mal-conformation, mal-content, &cc.; these have the same F. adj. as a prefix.

MALADY, disease, illness. (F., -L.) M. F. maladie, maladye, Chaucer, C. T. 421, 1375. Also earlier, in O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 31, l. 13. – F. maladie, 'malady;' Cot. – F. malade, sick, ill; oldest spelling malabde (Littré). Cf. Prov. malaptes, malautes, malaudes, sick, ill; Bartsch, Chrestomathie. – Lat. male habitus, out of condition; see White, s. v. habitus. - Lat. male, adv., badly, ill, from malus, bad; and habitus, held, kept, kept in a certain condition, pp. of habere, to have. See Malice and Habit. The usual derivation is that given by Diez, who imagined F. malade to answer to male aptus; there appears to be no authority for the phrase, which (like ineptus) would mean 'foolish' rather than 'ill.' See Mr. Nicol's letter in The Academy, April 26, 1879. We find male habens, sick, in the Vulgate, Matt. iv. 24, Luke, vii. 2, &c.

MALAPERT, saucy. impudent, ill-behaved. (F., -L.) The true sense is 'ill-skilled,' 'ill-bred.' In The Court of Love, 737 (about a.b. 1500). O. F. mal apert. — O. F. mal = Lat. male, adv. badly, ill; and apert (also ill-spelt appert), 'apparant (sie), open, evident, plain, manifest; also expert, ready, dexter, prompt, active, nimble; fcat, handsome in that he does;' Cot. β. The O. F. apert, open, acquired the sense of 'skilful' or 'well-behaved;' see Littré, s. v.

certainty, that ye be very well-bred at meal-time; Bartsch, Chrestomathie, col. 279, l. 5. Y. Hence the O. F. apert is simply derived from Lat. apertus, open, pp. of aperire, to open; see Aperient. Der. malapert-ly, malapert-ness.

MALARIA, miasma, noxious exhalation. (Ital., -L.) Modern. Not in Todd's Johnson. - Ital. mal' aria, for mala aria, bad air. Mala is fem. of malo, bad, from Lat. malus, bad; see Malice. Aria is noticed under Debonair.

MALCONTENT, MALECONTENT, discontented. (F., -L.) In Shak. 3 Hen. VI, iv. 1. 10, 60, -O. F. malcontent, 'malecontent:' Cot. -F. mal, adv., from Lat. male, badly; and F. content. See Malice and Content.

MALE, masculine. (F., -L.) M. E. male. 'Male and female;' Wyclif, Matt. xix. 4. Cf. Chaucer, C. T. 5704. - O. F. masle (later male), 'a male,' Cot. (who gives both spellings); mod. F. male; earliest spelling mascle (Burguy). - Lat. masculus, male; formed with suffixes -cu- and -l- from mas-, stem of mas, a male creature, man (gen. mar-is = mas-is).

B. The Lat. mas stands for man-s, a man, cognate with E. man and Vedic Skt. manus, a man. See Man. Der. mascul-ine, mallard. \(\begin{aligned} \text{Nowise connected with female.} \end{aligned} \) MALEDICTION, a curse, execration. (F.,-L.) In Shak. K. Lear, i. 2. 160. Spelt malediccion in the Bible of 1551, Gal. iii. 10.-F. malediction, 'a malediction;' Cot.-Lat. maledictionem, acc. of maledictio, a curse. - Lat. maledictus, pp. of maledicere, to speak evil against. - Lat. male, adv., badly; and dicere, to speak. See Malice and Diction. Doublet, malison.

MALEFACTOR, an evil-doer. (L.) 'Heretik or any malefactour; Sir T. More, Works, p. 941 h.—Lat. malefactor, an evil-doer.

— Lat. male, adv., badly; and factor, a doer, from facere, to do. See Malice and Fact. Der. So also malefaction, Hamlet, ii. 2. 621, from factionem, acc. of factio, a doing.

MALEVOLENT, ill-disposed to others, envious. (L.) Lit. wishing ill.' In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, i. 1. 97. - Lat. maleuolent-, stem of maleuolens, wishing evil. - Lat. male, adv., badly, ill; and uolens, pres. pt. of uelle, to wish. See Malice and Voluntary. Der. malevolent-ly, malevolence (made to pair with benevolence, but the Lat. maleuolentia is a real word, though there is no F. malevolence).

MALFORMATION, an ill formation. (F.,-L.) Coined from mal and formation; see Maladministration.

MALICE, ill will, spite. (F., -L.) M.E. malice, Rob. of Glouc, p. 570, l. 18. - F. malice. - Lat. malitia, badness, ill will. - Lat. malifor malo-, crude form of malus, bad; with suffix -ti-a. orig. sense of Lat. malus was dirty, or black; cf. Gk. μέλαε, black, Skt. mala, dirty, malina, dirty, black, sinful, bad. Cf. also Irish maile, evil, W. mall, softness, evil; Corn. malan, the devil; and see Mole (1). γ. All from a root MAL, to soil, dirty; a secondary formation from ✓MAR, to grind, grind to dust or powder. [Hence W. mall also means 'softness,' and is allied to Lat. mollis, soft, from the same root.] See Mar. Der. malici-ous, M. E. malicious, K. Alisaunder, 3323, 5045, from F. malicioux, malicious-ly, -ness.

MALIGN, unfavourable, malicious. (F., -L.) 'The spirit

malign; Milton, P. L. iii. 553; cf. iv. 503, &c. [Curiously enough, malin; Mittoli, I. I. II. 555, C. IV. 555, S. L. L. L. S. L. L. L. L. More, the derived verb malign, to curse, is found earlier, in Sir T. More, Works, p. 37 b.] — O. F. maling, fem. maligne, 'malignant;' Cot. (Mod. F. malin.)—Lat. malignus, ill-disposed, wicked; put for maligen-us, ill-born; like benignus for beni-gen-us. - Lat. mali- malo-, crude form of malus, bad; and gen-, base of gignere, to produce. See Malice and Generate. Der. malign, verb (as above), due to Lat. malignare, to act spitefully; malign-ly, malign-er; also malignant, Temp. i. 2. 257, from Lat. malignant-, stem of pres. pt. of malignare, to act spitefully; malign-ant-ly; malign-anc-y, Tw. Nt. ii. 1. 4; malign-i-ty, M. E. malignitee, Chaucer, Persones Tale, De Invidia (Six-text, I. 513), from F. malignité = Lat. malignitatem, acc. of malignitas, malignity.

MALINGER, to feign sickness. (F., -L.) Modern. Not in Todd's Johnson. Coined from F. malingre, adj. diseased, sickly, or 'sore, scabby, ugly, loathsome; 'Cot. -F. mal, badly; and O. F. haingre, heingre, thin, emaciated (Burguy). - Lat. male, adv. badly, from malus, bad; and agrum, acc. of ager, ill, sick (whence O. F. haingre with introduction and initial the See Malice.

haingre with intercalated n and initial h). See Malice.

MALISON, a curse. (F., - L.) In early use. M.E. malison, spelt malisun in Havelok, 426. - O. F. malison, malicons, malecon, doublet on maldeceon; see maldeceon, malichons in Roquesort. A doublet of malediction, just as benison is of benediction; see Malediction and Benison.

MALL (1), a large wooden hammer or beetle. (F., -L.) Prob. acquired the sense of 'skilful' or 'well-behaved;' see Littré, s.v. obsolete. It occurs in the Spectator, no. 195, near the beginning; apertement, where he cites from Joinville: 'Mal apertement se partirent les Turs de Damiete' = the Turks departed from Damietta in a very Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 253, l. 12; melle, Hampole, Pricke of Con-

-Lat. malleum, acc. of malleus, a hammer. [The vowel a in the E. word is perhaps due to a knowledge of the Lat. form.]

B. The Lat. malleus is prob. to be derived from the MAL = MAR, to crush, grind, pound; of Icol mail to the MAL = MAR, to crush, grind, pound; cf. Icel. myölnir, i.e. the crusher, the name given to Thor's hammer; see Max Müller, Lect. on Language, Series ii. lect. 7, note 34. And cf. Russ. molot', a hammer, molote, to grind. Der. mall (2), q. v.; mall-e-able, q. v., mall-et, q. v. MALL (2), the name of a public walk. (F., =L.) Preserved in the name of the street called Pall Mall, and in The Mall in St. James S. Parl. In Preserved Parls and the part of the street called Pall Mall, and in The Mall in St. James S. Parls. In Parls of the Street Called Pall Mall, and in The Mall in the Mall.

Park. In Pope, Rape of the Lock, v. 133. 'To walk in the Mall;' Parsons, Wapping Old Stairs, l. 9. Named from O. F. pale-maille, 'a game wherein a round box bowle is with a mallet struck through a high arch of iron,' &c. [i.e. the game imitated in mod croquet]; Cot. A representation of the game is given in Knight's Old England, vol. ii. fig. 2152. — O. Ital. palamaglio, 'a stick with a mallet at one end to play at a wooden ball with; also, the name of such a game;' Florio. Better spelt pallamaglio, as in Mcadows' Dict. Lit. 'a ball-mallet' or 'ball-mall.' — Ital. palla, a ball; and maglio (= F. mail), a mace, mall, hammer.

\[\beta \]. A hybrid word; from O. H. G. pallá, pallo (M. H. G. balle, G. ball), a ball, cognate with E. Ball, q. v.; and Lat. malleum, acc. of malleus, a hammer; see Mall (1). ¶ See my note to P. Plowman, C. xix. 34.

MALLARD, a wild drake. (F., -L.) M. E. malard. 'Malarde, or mallard or anas; 'Prompt. Parv. - O. F. malard, later malart, 'a mallard, or wild drake; 'Cot. Formed with suffix -ard (of G. origin) from O. F. male (mod. F. mâle), male; see Male.

(-Goth. hardus, G. hart, hard) was much used in forming masculine proper names, to give the idea of force or strength; hence it was readily added to O. F. male, producing a word mal-ard, in which the notion of 'male' is practically reduplicated. See Introd. to Brachet, Etym. Dict. § 196.

MALLEABLE, that can be beaten out by the hammer. (F., -L.) In Shak. Per. iv. 6. 152; and even in Chaucer, C. T. 16598. — O. F. malleable, 'mallable, hammerable, pliant to the hammer;' Cot. Formed with suffix -able from obs. Lat. malleare*, to hammer, of which the pp. malleatus occurs. - Lat. malleus, a hammer; see Mall (1). Der. malleabili-ty, malleable-ness (see Locke, On Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 6. s. 6, c. 10. s. 17); malleat-ed, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from Lat. pp. malleat-us; malleat-ion.

MALLET, a small mall, a wooden hammer. (F., -L.) 'Bear-ynge great malettes of iron and stele;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 422 (R.) M. E. maillet, Romance of Partenay, 4698. - F. maillet, 'a mallet or hammer;' Cot. Dimin. of F. mail; see Mall (1).

MALLOW, the name of a plant. (L.) M. E. malwe; Prompt. Parv. – A.S. malwe, mealewe; Wright's Vocab. i. 31, col. 2; 67, col. 2. Prob. not a Teut. word, but merely borrowed from Lat. malua, a mallow. + Gk. μαλάχη (=mal-ua-ka), a mallow. β. Named from its supposed emollient properties; cf. Gk. μαλάσσειν (=μαλακ-yειν), to make soft, μαλακόε, soft, mild. - MAL, to grind down, later form of MAR, to grind. See Mar. Der. marsh-mallow, A.S. mersc-mealewe, Wright's Voc. i. 67, col. 1. Also malv-ac-e-ous = Lat.

MALMSEY, a strong sweet wine. (F., -Gk.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 233. Spelt malmesay in Tyndall, Works, p. 229, col. 2. Also called malvesie. Chaucer, C. T. 13000. - O. F. malvoisie, 'malmesie;' Cot. From Malvasia, now called Napoli di Malvasia (see Black's Atlas), the name of a town on the E. coast of Lacedæmonia in the Morea. We may therefore call it a Gk. word. Cf. Span. malvasia, Ital. malvagia, malmsey.

MALT, grain steeped in water, and dried in a kiln, for brewing. (E.) M. E. malt, Chaucer, C. T. 3989. — A.S. mealt, in comp. mealt-hús, a malt-house, Wright's Vocab. i. 58, col. 2. — A.S. mealt, pt. t. of meltan, strong verb, to melt; hence, to steep, soften. + Du. mout. + Icel. malt, whence the weak verb melta, to malt (not the same as E. melt). + Dan. and Swed. malt. + G. malz, malt; cf. M. H. G. malz, soft, weak. Cf. Skt. mridu, soft, mild. See Melt, Mild. Der. malt, vb., M. E. malten, Prompt. Parv.; malt-horse, Com. Errors, iii. 1. 32; malt-house; malt-worm, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 83; also malt-ster, M. E. malte-stere, Prompt. Parv. The suffix -ster was once looked upon as a fem. termination, as in brew-ster, baxter for bake-ster, web-ster, spin-ster; and the baking, brewing, weaving, and spinning were once all alike in the hands of females. See Spinster.

MALTREAT, to treat ill. (F., = L.) 'Yorick indeed was never better served in his life; but it was a little hard to maltreat him after; 'Sterne, Tristram Shandy, vol. ii. c. 17, not far from the end. - F. maltraiter, to treat ill. Cf. Ital. maltraitere, to treat ill. - Lat. male, adv., ill, badly; and tracture, to treat, handle. See Malice and Treat. dealing; Cot. Der. maltreat-ment = O. F. maltraictement, 'hard science, 6572. - O. F. (and F.) mail, 'a mall, mallet, or beetle;' Cot. The MALVERSATION, fraudulent behaviour. (F., -L.) 'Malversation, ill conversation, misdemeanour, misuse; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. – F. malversation, 'misdemeanor;' Cot. Regularly formed (with suffix -a-tion) from F. malverser; Cot. gives 'malverser en son office, to behave himself ill in his office.' - Lat. male, adv., badly; and uersari (pp. uersatus), to dwell, be engaged in, from uersare, frequentative form of uertere, to turn, See Malice and Verse.

MAMALUKE, MAMELUKE, an Egyptian light horse-soldier. (F.,—Arab.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 279 f. Also in Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, 1, 476; see Spec. of Eng. ed. Skcat, p. 143, and the note. - F. Mamaluc, 'a Mameluke, or light-horseman;' Cot. Cf. Span. Mameluco, Ital. Mammalucco. They were a corps of slaves. - Arab. mamlúk, a purchased slave or captive; lit. 'possessed.' - Arab. root malaka, he possessed; Rich. Dict.

MAMMA, an infantine term for mother. (E.) Seldom found in books, except of late years; it occurs in Prior's poems, entitled 'Venus Mistaken,' and 'The Dove.' In Skinner and Cotgrave it is spelt mam; Cot. gives: 'Mammam, the voice of infants, mam.' Skelton has mammy, Garl. of Laurel, 1. 974. The spelling mamma is doubtless pedantic, and due to the Lat. mamma; it should rather be mama, as it is merely a repetition of ma, an infantine syllable. It may also be considered as an E. word; most other languages have something like it. Cf. O. F. mammam, cited above, mod. F. mamman; Span. mama, Ital. mamma, Du. mama, G. mama, mamme, memme, all infantine words for mother; also W. mam, mother, Lat. mamma, mother, &c. ¶ We have no evidence against the borrowing of the word from French; still it was, most likely, not so borrowed.

MAMMALIA, the class of animals that suckle their young. (L.) Modern and scientific; not in Johnson. Formed from Lat. mammalis, belonging to the breasts. - Lat. mamma, the breast. B. There is a doubt whether the word is the same as Lat. mamma, mother; if it be, we may consider it as of infantine origin; see above. γ. Otherwise, we may connect it with Gk. μαζός, μαστός, the breast, from \checkmark MAD, to be wet, trickle; cf. Skt. mad, orig. to be wet, Lat. madere, to be wet, &c. Der. mammalian; we also use mammal as a convenient short term for 'one of the mammalia.'

MAMMON, riches, the god of riches. (L., -Gk., -Syriac.) In A. V. Matt. vi. 24; Luke, xvi. 9. – Lat. mammona, Matt. vi. 24 (Vulgate). – Gk. μαμωναε; ibid. – Syr. mamóná; a word which often occurs in the Chaldee Targums of Onkelos, and later writers, and in the Syriac version, and which signifies 'riches;' Dict. of the Bible. Cf. Heb. matmon, a hidden treasure; from tuman, to hide.

MAMMOTH, an extinct species of elephant. (Russ., - Tatar.) 'An entire mammoth, flesh and bones, was discovered in Siberia, in 1799; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. - Russ. mamant, a mammoth. - Siberian mammont. 'From Tartar mamma, the earth, because the Tungooses and Yakoots believed that this animal worked its way in the earth like a mole; Webster. ¶ 'The inhabitants of [Siberia] have a traditionary fable to account for the constant occurrence [of remains of elephants). They hold that the bones and the tusks which they incessantly find in their agricultural operations, are produced by a large subterraneous animal, living in the manner of the mole, and unable to bear the light. They have named this animal mammont or mammooth—according to some authorities, from the word mamma which signifies "earth" in Tartar idioms, or, according to others, from the Arabic behemoth or mehemoth, an epithet which the Arabs apply to an elephant when he is very large. The fossil tusks which the Siberians find are called by them mammontovakost, the horns of the mammont; The Menageries, vol. ii. 363, in the Lib. of Entertaining Knowledge. We cannot credit Siberian peasants with a knowledge of Arabic!

MAN, a human being. (E.) M. E. man, Chaucer, C. T. 1. 43.— A. S. mann, also mon; Grein, ii. 105. + Du. man. + Icel. mabr (for mannr); also man. + Swed. man. + Dan. mand (with excrescent d). + Goth. manna. + G. mann; [the G. mensch = männisch, i. e. mannish, human]. + Lat. mās (for mans), a male. + Skt. manu, Vedic form manus, a man.

β. The sense is 'thinking animal;' from MAN, to think; cf. Skt. man, to think; and see Mind. Der. man-child, Gen. xvii. 10; man-ful, Lydgate, Complaint of the Black Knight, st. 60; man-ful-ly, Two Gent. iv. 1. 28; man-ful-ness; man-hod, Chaucer, C. T. 758; man-of-war, Luke, xxiii. 11; man-kind, q. v.; man-ly, M. E. manlich, P. Plowman, B. v. 260, from A. S. manlic, man-like, see Grein, ii. 211; man-li-ness; man-slaughter, M. E. manslagter, Cursor Mundi, 25772; man-slay-er. M. E. mansleer, Trevisa, iii. 41, 1. 8, Wyclif, John, viii. 44. Also man, vb., Rich. II, ii. 3. 54. Also man-like, Antony, i. 4. 5; man-ly, adv., Macb. iv. 3. 235; mannish, As You Like It, i. 3. 123, Chaucer, C. T. 5202; man-queller, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 58, Wyclif, Mark, vi. 27; man-ik-in, q. v. From the same root are male, masculine, mallard, mandarin, mind, &c.

MANACLE, a fetter, handcuff. (F., -L.) Better spelt manicle, as in Cotgrave. M. E. manyele, Wyclif. Ps. cxlix. 8, earlier text; where the later text has manacle. — O. F. manicle, pl. manicles, 'manicles, hand-fetters, or gyves;' Cot. — Lat. manicula, dimin. of manica, a long sleeve, glove, gauntlet, manacle, handcuff. — Lat. manus, the hand; see Manual. Der. manacle, Temp. i. 2. 461.

MANAGE, government of a horse, control, administration. (F., -Ital., -L.) Orig. a sb., but now superseded by management. Wanting the manage of unruly jades; 'Rich. II, iii. 3. 179. -O. F. manege, 'the manage, or managing of a horse;' Cot. Mod. F. manege.—Ital. maneggio, 'a busines, a managing, a handling, . . . an exercise; 'Florio. Particularly used of managing horses; the mod. Ital. maneggio means 'a riding-school.' The lit. sense is 'a handling, the word being formed upon Ital. mano, the hand. - Lat. manum, acc. of manus, the hand; see Manual. Der. manage, vb., to handle, Rich. II, iii. 2. 118; manage-er, L. L. L. i. 2. 188; manageable, manage-able-ness; manage-ment (a coined word), used by Bp. Hall in a Fast Sermon, April 5, 1628 (R.) Doublet, manege, from mod. F. manege. We Not to be confused with M. E. menage, a household, K. Alisaunder, 2087, from O. F. mesnage (Cot.), mod. F. menage; this O. F. mesnage stands for maison-age, extended from F. maison, a mansion; see Mansion. (Scheler.)

word occurs in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 404. - Span. manati, a sea-cow; also written manato. A West Indian word; 'from the name of the animal in the language of Hayti;' Webster.

The Malay name is dugong, q. v.

MANDARIN, a Chinese governor of a province. (Port., — Malay, — Skt.) Not a Chinese, but a Malay word; brought to us by the Portuguese. In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 395. -Port. mandarim, a mandarin. - Malay, mantri, 'a counsellor, minister of state; ferdana mantri, the first minister, vizir; Marsden, Malay Dict., p. 334. – Skt. mantrin, a counsellor; mahú-mantrin, the prime minister. – Skt. mantra, a holy text, charm, prayer, advice, counsel. Formed, with suffix -tra, from Skt. man, to think, mind, know; cf. Skt. man-tu, a man, man-tri, an adviser. — MAN, to think. See Man, Mind. 2. Otherwise, it may have been brought from India; Mind. directly from Skt. mandala, a district, a province, the older sense being circle; cf. Skt. mand, to dress, to divide.

MANDATE, a command, order, charge. (F., -L.) In Hamlet, iii. 4. 204. - O. F. mandat, 'a mandate, or mandamus, for the preferment of one to a benefice; 'Cot. - Lat. mandatum, a charge, order, commission. — Lat. mandatus, pp. of mandare, to commit to one's charge, enjoin, command.

B. Lit. 'to put into one's hand,' from man-, stem of manus, the hand, and dare, to give. [So also manceps] =a taker by the hand; from man- and capere, to take.] See Manual and Date (1). Der. mandat-or-y. Doublet, maundy, in the term Maundy Thursday, q. v. From Lat. mandare are also counter-mand, com-mand, de-mand, re-mand, com-mend, re-com-mend.

MANDIBLE, a jaw. (L.) 'Mandibula, the mandible, or jaw;' Phillips, ed. 1706. - Lat. mandibula, a jaw. - Lat. mandere, to chew, eat. Root uncertain. Der. mandibul-ar, adj., from Lat. mandibula. MANDRAKE, a narcotic plant. (L., -Gk.) In Gen. xxx. 14, where the Bible of 1551 has pl. mandragoras. M. E. mandragores, Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 19, l. 613. A. S. mandragora, Cockayne's Leechdoms, i. 244. Mandrake (also spelt mandrage in Minsheu) is a mere corruption of mandragora, the form used by Shak. in Oth. iii. 3. 330. Cf. O. F. mandragore, Ital. mandragora, Span. mandragora. - Lat. mandragoras. - Gk. μανδραγύραs, the name of the plant; of uncertain origin.

MANDREL, the revolving shank in which turners fix their work in a lathe. (F., – Gk.?) 'Manderil, a kind of wooden pulley, that is part of a turner's leath;' Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. Corrupted from F. mandrin, a punch, a mandrel (Hamilton). β. Marked by Littré as of unknown origin; but prob. derived (through a Low Lat. mandra) from Gk. μάνδρα, an enclosed space, sheepfold, also used to mean 'the bed in which the stone of a ring is set,' which is very nearly the English sense. See Madrigal.

MANE, long hair on the neck of a horse, &c. (Scand.) M.E. mane, King Alisaunder, 1957. — Icel. mön (gen. manar, pl. manar), a mane; Swed. and Dan. man. + Du. maan (Sewel); O. Du. mane (Hexham). + G. männe, O. H. G. mana. Cf. W. myngen, a horse's mane; plainly derived from mum, the neck. So also Irish muince, a collar (W. mynei, the hame of a horse-collar), is from Irish muin, the neck. Hence E. mane is plainly connected with Skt. manya, the tendon forming the nape of the neck. We are further reminded of Lat. monile. a necklace.

MANEGE, the control of horses; see Manage.

MANGANESE, the name of a metal. (F., - Ital., - Gk.?) The metal was discovered in 1774 (Littré). But the term is much older, otherwise used. 'Manganese, so called from its likeness in colour and weight to the magnes or loadstone, is the most universal material used in making glass; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—O. F. manganese, a certain minerall which, being melted with glasse, amends the colour thereof;' Cot. - Ital. manganese, 'a stuffe or stone to make glasses with; also a kind of mineral stone; Florio.

B. Of uncertain origin; perhaps Blount's suggestion is correct; see Magnesia.

MANGE, the scab or itch in dogs, &c. (F., -L.) Minsheu, ed. 1627, gives 'the mange' as sb., and mangie as adj. It is clear that the adj. mangy is the earlier word, out of which the sb. was the adj. mangy is the earlier word, out of which the sb. was developed. The adj. was in common use, whereas the sb. is scarce; Rich. quotes a use of it from Rochester (died 1680). Ci. 'a mangy dog,' Timon, iv. 3, 371; 'In wretched beggary And mangy misery,' Skelton, How the Douty Duke of Albany, &c., ll. 137, 138. The adj. mangy is an adaptation of F. mangé, 'eaten, fed on,' Cot.; pp. of manger, to eat. [The F. sb. for 'mange' is mangeson.] See further wales Manager. further under Manger. Der. mangi-ness.

MANGER, an eating-trough for cattle. (F., -L.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 1139 h. - F. mangeoire, 'a manger;' Cot. - F. manger, to eat. - Lat. manducare, to eat. - Lat. manducus, a glutton.

Lat. mandere, to chew. See Mandible.

MANGLE (1), to render maimed, tear, mutilate. (L.; with E. suffix.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 538 f. A weakened form of mankelen, frequentative form of M. E. manken, to maim. 'Mankyd or maymyd, Mutilatus. Mankkyn or maymyn, Mutilo. Mankyne, or maymynge, Mutilacio; 'Prompt. Parv.; and see Way's note. - A. S. mancian*, to mutilate, only found in the comp. be-mancian, which is very rare. 'Gif þú gesihst earmas þíne bemancude, gód getacna's = if thou seest [in a dream] thine arms cut off, it betokens good; Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 214. Not a true A.S. word, but obviously formed from Lat. mancus, maimed. Mancus is allied to Icel. minnka, to lessen, diminish; and signifies 'lessened' or 'weakened;' see further under Minish. Der. mangl-er.

MANGLE (2), a roller for smoothing linen; vb., to smooth linen. (Du., -Low Lat., -Gk.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Borrowed from Dutch. - Du. mangelen, to roll with a rolling-pin; linnen mangelen, to roll linen on a rolling-pin; mangelstok, a rolling-pin (Sewel); een mangelstok, a smoothing role, or a battle-dore (Hexham). The corresponding O. Ital. word is mangano, a kind of presse to presse buckrom; Florio. Both Du. and Ital. words are modifications of Low Lat. manganum, manganus, mangona, a very common word as the name of a military engine for throwing stones; see Mangonel. The mangle, being worked with an axis and winch, was named from its resemblance to the old warengine; sometimes it was reduced to an axis or cylinder worked by hand. The Ital. mangano also means 'a mangonel.' = Gk. μάγγανον, a machine for defending fortifications; also, the axis of a pulley.

Allied to unyavn. a machine; see Machine. Thus mangle, mangonel, are merely various machines; cf. the etym. of calender (for pressing cloth) from cylinder.

MANGO, the fruit of an E. Indian tree. (Malay.) In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 350. — Malay manggá, 'the mangofruit, of which the varieties are numerous; 'Marsden's Dict., p. 347.

MANGONEL, a war-engine for throwing stones. (F., - Low Lat., - Gk.) M.E. mangonel, in a MS. of the time of Edw. II; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 69. - O. F. mangonel, later mangonneau, an old-fashioned sling or engine, &c.; Cot. - Low Lat. mangonellus, dimin. of mangona, manganum, a war-engine. - Gk. μάγγανον; see Mangle (2).

MANIA, madness, frenzy. (L., -Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. [M. E. manie, Chaucer, C. T. 1376, is from F. manie, madnesse; Cot.] - Lat. mania. - Gk. μανία, madness, frenzy. β. The orig.

Cot. | = Lat. mania. = Gk. μανία, madness, frenzy. β. The orig. sense is 'mental excitement;' cf. μένος, mind, spirit, force; from MAN, to think. See Mind. Der. mania-c, spelt maniack in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from F. maniaque, 'mad,' Cot.; as if from a Lat. maniacus*. Hence maniac-al.

MANIFEST, evident, apparent. (F., = L.) M. E. manifest, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 10, l. 2558. = F. manifeste, 'manifest;' Cot. = Lat. manifestus, evident.

β. The lit. sense is 'struck by the hand,' hence, palpable. = Lat. manif. for manuer, crude form of manues, the hand of and feeting a feed-two stendillus pro, of obs. verb manus, the hand; and -festus, = -fed-tus, -fend-tus, pp. of obs. verb fendere *, to strike, occurring in the compp. de-fendere, of-fendere; cf. in-festus, in-fensus, hostile. — DHAN, to strike; see Defend. And see Manual. Der. manifest-ly, manifest-ness; manifest, vb., manifest-at-ion; also manifesto, q. v.

MANIFESTO, a written declaration. (Ital., -L.) 'Manifesto or evidence;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 17. § 5. - Ital. manifesto, sb., a manifesto. - Ital. manifesto, adj., manifest. - Lat.

manifestus; see Manifest.

MANIFOLD, various. (E.) M. E. manifold, manyfold, Gower, also E. linger, to tarry, is connected with E. long, to yearn after; to C. A. i. 344, last line. — A. S. manigfeald, manifold; Grein, ii. 210. —
A. S. manig, many; and -feald, suffix (E. -fold), connected with fealdan, to fold. See Many and Fold.

MANIKIN, MANAKIN, a little man, dwarf. (Du.) In Tw.

Nt. iii. 2. 57. [Not an E. word.] — O. Du. manneken, a little man (Hexham); mod. Du. mannetje, by alteration of the suffix. Formed, with double dimin, suffix ethen from Du. man e. man. See Man.

with double dimin. suffix -ek-en, from Du. man, a man. See Man.

Cf. G. männchen, from man.

MANIPLE, a handful; small band of soldiers, a kind of priest's scarf. (L.) 'Our small divided maniples,' i. e. bands of men; Milton, Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 48, l. 6. Englished from Lat. manipulus, a handful; hence, a wisp of straw, &c. used as an ensign; and hence, a company of soldiers under the same standard, a band of men. - Lat. mani-, for manu-, crude form of manus, the hand; and -pulus, lit. filling, from the PAL, later form of PAR, to fill; cf. Lat. plenus, full, and A. S. full. See Manual and Full. Der. manipul-ate, q. v. MANIPULATE, to handle. (L.) A modern word; not in Johnson; the sb. manipulation (but not the verb) was added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. The verb was prob. suggested by the sb. manipulation. Even the sb. is quite a coined word, there being nothing nearer to it than the Lat. manipulatim, by troops, an adv. formed from manipulus, a troop. The word manipulate should mean to fill the hands rather than merely to use them. Altogether, the word has little to recommend it on etymological grounds. Der. manipulat-ion. -ive, -or.

MANKIND, the race of men. (E.) M. E. mankinde, Gower, C. A. ii. 83, 1. 23. The final d is excrescent, the older form being mankin, Ormulum, 799. - A. S. mancynn, mankind; Grein, ii. 207. -A. S. man, a man; and cynn, kind, race; see Man and Kin.

MANNA, the food supplied to the Israelites in the wilderness of Arabia. (L., -Gk., -Heb.) In A. V. Exod. xvi. 15; Numb. xi. 7; Deut. viii. 3; &c. - Lat. manna, Deut. viii. 3 (Vulgate); but in Exod. xvi. 15 the Vulgate has manhu, and in Numb. xi. 7 it has man. -Gk. μάννα. -Heb. mán, manna. β. Two explanations are given: (1) from Heb. mán hu, what is this? from the enquiry which the Hebrews made when they first saw it on the ground, where man is the neuter interrogative pronoun; see Exod. xvi. 15. And (2) that the sense of min is 'it is a gift' (cf. Arab. mann, beneficence, grace, favour, also manna, Rich. Dict. p. 1495); from the Arab. root minan, he divided or distributed.

MANNER, way, fashion, habit, sort, kind, style. (F.,-L.) early use. M. E. manere, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 51, l. 30. O.F. maniere, 'manner;' Cot. Mod. F. maniere; properly 'habit.' O. F. manier, adj. habitual, accustomed to (Burguy); allied to O.F. manier, 'to handle, hand, manage, wield;' Cot.—O.F. main=Lat. manum, acc. of manus, the hand; see Manual. Der. manner-ly, in Skelton, who wrote a poem called Manerly Margery Mylk and Ale; manner-li-ness; un-manner-ly, Hamlet, iii. 2. 304; manner-ism. The phrase to be taken in the manner (a law phrase) is a corruption of to be taken with the mainour; the Lat. phrase is cum manuopere captus. See Wedgwood, s. v. mainour, which is the same word as manœuvre, q. v.

MANŒUVRE, dexterous management, stratagem. (F.,-L.) Introduced into E. in the 18th cent. Added to Johnson's Dict. by Todd, who cites it from Burke, but without a satisfactory reference. -F. manœuvre, a manœuvre, properly a work of the hand. - Low Lat. manuopera (more commonly manopera), a working with the hand. Cf. Span. maniobra, handiwork; maniobrar, to work with the hands, manœuvre; Ital. manoura, the working of a ship; manourare, to steer a ship. - Lat. manu operari, to work with the hand. - Lat. manu, abl. of manus, the hand; and operari, to work, from opera, work. See Manual and Operate. Der. manœuvre, vb., manœuvrer. Doublet, manure.

MANOR, a place of residence for a nobleman in former times; estate belonging to a lord. (F., -L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 2. 19. M. E. manere, P. Plowman, B. v. 595 .- O. F. manoir, 'a mansion, mannor, or mannor-house, Cot.; formerly also spelt mansion, (Burguy). Properly a place to dwell in; from O. F. manoir, maneir, to dwell (Burguy). — Lat. manere, to dwell, remain; see Mansion. Der. manor-house, L. L. L. i. 1. 208; manor-seat; manor-i-al.

MANSE, a clergyman's house, in Scotland. (L.) 'Manse, a habitation, a farm;' Blount's Law Lexicon, ed. 1691. An old law term. - Low Lat. mansa, a farm. - Lat. mansa, fem. of mansus, pp. of manere, to dwell; see Mansion.

MANSION, a large house, dwelling-place. (F.,-L.) M.E. mansion, Chaucer, C.T. 1976. - O.F. mansion, a dwelling-place; Burguy. - Lat. mansionem, acc. of mansio, an abiding, place of abode. —Lat. mansus, pp. of manere, to dwell. + Gk. μενειν, to stay, remain; allied to μόνιμος, staying, steadfast, and to μέμονα, I wish, yearn. - ✓ MAN, to think, wish; cf. Skt. man, to think, wish. [So] mange. + Swed. mange. + Icel. margr (with a singular change from

MANY.

In old fire-places, the mantel slopes forward like a hood, to catch the smoke; the word is a mere doublet of Mantle, q.v. ¶ The difference in spelling between mantel and mantle is an absurdity.

Der. mantel-piece, -shelf.

MANTLE, a cloak, covering. (F., -L.) Better spelt mantel, as it is the same word as that above. In early use. M. E. mantel, Layamon, 14755, 15724. [Cf. A. S. mentel, a mantle, Ps. cviii. 28.]

O. F. mantel (Burguy), later manteau, 'a cloke, also the mantle-tree of a chimney;' Cot. — Lat. mantellum, a napkin; also, a means of covering, a cloak (in a figurative sense); cf. Lat. mantele, mantile, a napkin, towel. A more primitive form appears in the Low Lat. mantum, a short cloak, used by Isidore of Seville, whence Ital. and Span. manto, F. mante, a mantle. Root unknown; the orig. sense seems to be 'covering.' Der. mantle, vb., to cloak, cover, Temp. v. 67; also mantle, vb., to gather a scum on the surface, Merch. Ven. i. I. 89; mantel-et (with dimin. suffix), 'a short purple mantle, ... in fortification, a moveable pent-house,' Phillips, ed. 1706, from F. mantelet, 'a little mantle, a movable pent-house,' &c., Cotgrave.

MANTITA a ladd,' govern (Ital).

MANTUA, a lady's gown. (Ital.) Seldom used except in the comp. mantua-maker, a lady's dressmaker. 'Mantoe or Mantua gown, a loose upper garment, now generally worn by women, instead of a straight body'd gown; Phillips, ed. 1706. 'By th' yellow mantos of the bride'; Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1. l. 700. Manto is from Ital. (or Span.) manto, a mantle; but Mantua gown must refer to Mantua in Italy, though this connection seems to have arisen from mere confusion. As to Ital. manto, see Mantle.

MANUAL, done by the hand, suitable for the hand. (F., -L.) We recognise it as a F. word from its use after its sb., in such phrases as 'sign manual,' or 'seal manual;' the spelling has been conformed to the Lat. vowel in the final syllable. Shak. has seal manual, Venus, 1. 516. Formerly spelt manuel, as in Cotgrave. - F. manuel, 'manuel, handy, of the hand; 'Cot.-Lat. manualis, manual.-Lat. manu-, crude form of manus, the hand. β. The sense of manus is 'the former' or 'maker;' formed (with suffix -na) from \checkmark MA, to measure, whence also Skt. má, to measure, a verb which when used with the prep. nis, out, also means to build, cause. create, compose; cf. also Skt. mána, sb., measuring, measure. See Mete. Der. manual, sb., a hand-book; manual-ly. From Lat. manus we also have manacle, man-age, mani-fest, mani-ple, mani-pul-ate, mann-er, man-œuvre, man-ure; manu-facture, manu-mit, manu-script, a-manu-ensis; also main-tain, e-man-cip-ate, quadru-man-ous, &c.

MANUFACTURE, a making by hand. (F.,-L.)

Life of Henry VII, ed. Lumby, p. 58, l. 19, p. 196, l. 4. Also spelt manifacture, as in Cotgrave. - F. manufacture (also manifacture in Cot.), 'manifacture, workemanship;' Cot. Coined from Latin. -Lat. manu, by the hand, abl. of manus; and factura, a making, from facere, to make. See Manual and Fact. Der. manufacture, vb., manufactur-al, manufactur-er, manufact-or-y.

MANUMIT, to release a slave. (L.) 'Manumitted and set at liberty; Stow, Edw. III, an. 1530. The pp. manumissed occurs in North's Plutarch, p. 85 (R.), or p. 103, ed. 1631. - Lat. manumittere (pp. manumissus), to set at liberty a slave, lit. 'to release from one's power,' or 'send away from one's hand.'-Lat. manu, abl. of manus, the hand; and mittere, to send. See Manual and Missile. Der. manumission, from F. manumission, 'a manumission or dismissing (Cot.), from Lat. manumissionem, acc. of manumissio, a dismissal, formed from the pp. manunuissus.

MANURE, to enrich with a fertilising substance. (F.,-L.) The old sense was simply 'to work at with the hand.' 'Arable land, which could not be manured [tilled] without people and families, was turned into pasture; Bacon, Henry VII, ed. Lumby, p. 70, l. 26. 'Manured with industry;' Oth. i. 3. 328. See Trench, Select Glossary. Manure is a contracted form of manæuvre; see Manœuvre and Inure.

and Inure. Der. manure, sb., manurer, manuring.

MANUSCRIPT, written by the hand. (L.) Properly an adj., but also used as a sb. 'A manuscript;' Minsheu, ed. 1627.-Low Lat. manuscriptum, a manuscript; Lat. manu scriptum, written by the hand.—Lat. manu, abl. of manus, the hand; and scriptum, neut. of scriptus, pp. of scribers, to write. See Manual and Scribe.

MANY, not few, numerous. (E.) M. E. mani, many, moni, frequently followed by a, as 'many a man;' Chaucer, C. T. 229, 3905.

n to r). + Goth. manags. + G. manch, M. H. G. mance, O. H. G. & Chrest. Provençal, col. 233, l. 32.

6. The O. F. marrir is derived.

8. All from a Teut. base MANAGA, many; Fick, iii. | from O. H. G. marrjan, to hinder, cognate with E. mar; see Mar. manac. β. All from a Teut. base MANAGA, many; Fick, iii. 228. Further allied to Irish minic, Gael. minig, W. mynych, frequent, Russ. mnogie, pl. many; and prob. to Skt. mankshu, much, exceedingly, and maksha, multitude.

y. Thus the base appears to be mans. mnogre, pr. many, and problem of mansau, much, exceedingly, and maksha, multitude.

Y. Thus the base appears to be MANK, a nasalised form of MAK or MAG, to have power, whence also Lat. magnus, great, and E. much. See Much. Icel. neut. margt = prov. E. mort, as 'a mort of people.'

MAP, a representation of the earth, or of a part of it. (F., -L.) The oldest maps were maps of the world, and were called mappe mounde, as in Gower, C. A. iii. 102. This is a F. form of the Lat. name mappa mundi, which occurs in Trevisa, i. 27, and in the corresponding passage of Higden's Polychronicon. 3. The original sense of Lat. mappa was a napkin; hence, a painted cloth.

According to Quinctilian, it is a Punic word. See Napkin.

MAPLE, the name of a tree. (E.) M. E. maple, mapul; Chaucer, C. T. 2925. A. S. mapulder, the maple-tree; 'Acer, mapulder,' Wright's Vocab. i. 33; we also find majolder, a maple, Majulder-tree was maple-tree; 'I have been supported for the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major than the major th stede, now Maplestead (in Essex), in Thorpe's Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, pp. 146, 403; and Leo cites mæpelhyrst (=maple-hurst, maple-grove) from Kemble's A.S. Charters. [The suffix der is a mere corruption of treow, a tree; thus an apple-tree is called apeltre in Wright's Vocab. i. 79, col. 2, but apulder in i. 32, col. 2. Hence the A.S. name is mapul.] β. The sense of mapul is unknown; it bears a certain resemblance to Lat. macula, a spot. It is not unlikely that the tree was named from the spots on the wood, as we find G. maser, a spot, speckle, whence maserholz, speckled wood, maple. The more usual G. name is macholder, a maple-tree, a word which has not yet been explained. See Mazer.

MAB, to injure, spoil, damage. (E.) M. F. merren, less commonly marren, P. Ploughman's Crede, 1. 66; Will. of l'alerne, 664. A. S. merran *, in comp. ámerran, ámyrran, used in various senses, such as to dissipate, waste, lose, hinder, obstruct; see Matt. x. 42, Luke, xv. 14; Elfric's Hom. ii. 372, l. 3; Grein, i. 28, 29. Cf. also A. S. mirran, to impede, Exod. v. 4; gemearr, an impediment, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past Care, cd. Sweet, p. 401, ll. 17, 20, +O. Du. merren, to stay, retard (Hexham); Du. marren, to tarry. + O. H. G. marrjan, to hinder, disturb, vex; whence mod. F. marri, vexed, sad. B. Said to be further related to Goth. marzjan, to offend, cause to stumble, which is possible; but the next step, whereby Goth. marzjan is linked to Skt. mrish, to endure patiently (Benfey, p. 724), is very forced. I prefer to leave out the Goth, word, and to proceed as follows.

y. The A.S. merran, O.11. G. marrjan, is obviously a causal verb; I connect it (with Leo) with the A.S. adj. mearn, tender (Grein), O. H. G. maro, tender; thus assigning to mar the origsense of 'weaken.' or 'make tender,' whence the senses of dissipate, 8. This seems to be the more probable, because lose, spoil. the true orig. sense of A.S. mearu (cf. Lat. mollis) was a softness produced by grinding down, rubbing away, bruising, crushing, pounding, &c. - / MAR, to grind, bruise, pound, crush; on which fertile root see Max Müller's Lectures, vol. ii. lect. 7. ¶ I think this view is supported by the Icel. merja, to bruise, crush, pound. This verb, whilst retaining the orig, sense of the root, answers in form to the causal A. S. merran, O. H. G. marrjan. Note also Gk. μαραίνειν, to weaken, waste, wear out, which, on the one hand, is certainly from the \(MAR\), and, on the other, is very nearly parallel in sense with A. S. amerran. Even the Goth. marzjan, if related to Skt. mrish, is due (I suppose) to the same root; see Mild. Der. The derivatives from the root MAR are numerous; such as mal-ice, mal-ign, mil-d, moul-d, mall-ow, mill, meal, mall, mall-et, mall-eable, marc-escent, mil-d, mel-t, mal-t, &c. Doublet, moor (2).

MARANATHA, our Lord cometh. (Syriac.) In 1 Cor. xvi. 22. 'It is a Græcised form of the Aramaic words muran athu, our Lord Dict. of the Bible.

MARAUD, to wander in quest of plunder. (F.) 'Marauding, ranging about as soldiers in quest of plunder, forage, &c.; 'Bailey's Dict. v. ii. ed. 1731.—F. marauder, 'to beg, to play the rogue;' Cot.—F. maraud, 'a rogue, begger, vagabond, varlet, rascall;' Cot. β. The etymology is much disputed; see Scheler, also Mahn's Etym. Forschungen. The Port. maroto, a rogue, is borrowed from the Forschungen. French. Y. If we take the form of the word as it is, perhaps the simplest (and most probable) solution is to suppose that -and is the usual F. suffix (= Low Lat. -aldus, from O. H. G. -wald) expressing merely the agent; while the verb is O. F. marir, also marrir, of which, according to Burguy, one sense was to stray, wander, lose one's way.

At this rate, the sense is exactly 'vagabond.'

8. The verb also 8. The verb also appears in Span. marrar, to deviate from truth, to err, and in Prov. marrir, to lose one's way. 'Si cum hom non pot pervenir lai unt vai ses via, atressi non pot anar ses charitat, mas marrir' = as a man

Der. marand er.

MARAVEDI, a small coin, less than a farthing. (Span .. - Arab.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. - Span. maravedi, the smallest Span. coin. Called in Port. both marabitino and maravedim. The name is an old one, the coin being so called because first struck during the dynasty of the Almoravides at Cordova, A.D. 1094-1144 (Haydn, Dict. of Dates, s.v. Spain). Maravedi is derived from the Arab. name of this dynasty.—Arab. Murábitin, the name of an Arab. dynasty; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1382.

MARBLE, a sort of stone. (F.,-L.) Gen. called marbreston = marble-stone) in M.E.; afterwards shortened to marbre, and thence changed to marbel or marble. Spelt marbreston, Layamon, 1317 (later text); marbelston, P. Plowman, A. x. 101; marbei, Chaucer, C. T. 1895.—O. F. marbre, 'marble;' Cot.—Lat. marmorem, acc. of marmor, marble, considered as a masc. sb.; but it is commonly neuter. A reduplicated form. + Gk. μάρμαρος, a glistening white stone, from μαρμαίρειν, to sparkle, glitter; cf. μαρμάρεις, sparkling, μαΐρα, the dog-star, lit. 'sparkler.' β. Formed, by reduplication, from \sqrt{MAR} , to shine, sparkle, whence Skt. marichi, a ray of light, Gk. μαίρα, the dog-star. Der. marbl-y; also marble-hearted, K. Lear, i. 4. 281, &c.

MARCESCENT, withering. (L.) Botanical. In Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731.—Lat. marcescent., stem of pres. pt. of marcescere, inceptive form of marcere, to wither, lit. to grow faint. β. Marcere is formed as if from an adj. marcus*, faint (cf. Ck. μαλακό, soft, weak), from the base MARK, an extension of MAR. to grind, crush, pound. See Max Müller, Lect. on Language, vol. ii. lect. 7; and see Mar. MARCH (1), a border, frontier. (E.) Usually in the pl. marches, as in Hen. V, i. 2. 140. M. E. marche, sing., P. Plowman, B. xv. 438. - A. S. mearc, a mark, fixed point, boundary; Grein, ii. 237. See Mark (1), of which march is a doublet.

MARCH (2), to walk with regular steps, as a soldier. (F., - L.? or G.?) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 10. 33.—F. marcher, 'to march, goe, pace;'
Cot.

B. Of disputed origin; a good suggestion is Scheler's, who sees in it the notion of regular beating (cf. E. 'to be on the beat,' 'to beat time'), and connects it with Lat. marcus, a hammer, whence a verb marcare*, to beat, could easily have arisen in Low Latin, and would well express the regular tramp of a marching host. Lat. marcus, like malleus, is from / MAR, to pound; see Mallet. Y. Otherwise, from F. marche, a frontier, from O. H. G. marcha, cognate with A. S. mearc; see Mark (1). Cotgrave has: 'Marche, . . a march, frontire, . . . a march, marching of soldiers.' Diez cites an O. F. phr. aller de marche en marche, to go from land to land, to make expeditions. Der. march, sb., K. John, ii. 60.

MARCH (3), the name of the third month. (L.) M.E. March, Chaucer, C. T. 10361. Not from O. F. and F. mars, but corrupted from Low Lat. Marcius, the name of the month in Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 10. - Lat. Martius, the month of Mars, lit. belonging to Mars. - Lat. Marti-, crude form of Mars, the god of war. β. Etym. doubtful; but perhaps from MAR, to shine; see Marble. If so, Mars means 'bright' or 'glorious,' applicable to the god of war, and to the early spring.

Y. Or from MAR, to crush.

MARCHIONESS, the fem. of Marquis, q. v.

MARE, the female of the horse. (E.) M. E. mere, Chaucer, C.T. 543. - A.S. mere; we find 'cqua, mere' in Wright's Gloss. i. 23, col. 1. This is the fem. form of A.S. mearh, a horse, Grein, ii. 238; also spelt mearg, mear. + Icel. merr, a mare, mer-hross, mer-hryssi, a mare-horse, used as fem. of marr, a steed. + Dan. mar, a mare. + Swed. marr, a mare. + Du. merrie, a mare. + G. mahre, O. H. G. meriha, a mare; fem. of O. H. G. marah, a battle-horse. β . The A. S. mearh, Icel. marr, O. H. G. marah, a battle-horse, steed, are cognate with (if not borrowed from) Irish and Gael. marc, W. and Corn. march, a horse, a stallion. Root uncertain. Der. mar-shal, q.v. The mare in night-mare (q. v.) is a different word.

MARGIN, an edge, border. (L.) M. E. margin; spelt margyne, P. Plowman, B. vii. 18. Trevisa (i. 41) translates Lat. margines by margyns. - Lat. margin-, stem of margo, a brink, margin. border; cognate with E. Mark, q.v. Der. margin-al, margin-al-ly, margin al-ed. Doublets, margent, with excrescent t, Tyndal, Works, p. 32; marge, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 8. 61, from F. marge.

MARGRAVE, a marquis, a lord of the marches. (Du.) maregrane, as thei call him, of Bruges; 'tr. of Sir T. More's Utopia, 1551, ed. Arber, p. 28. - Du. markgraaf, a margrave. - Du. mark, a mark, also a march, border, border, land; and graaf, a count, earl. +.
G. markgraf, similarly compounded.

B. For the first element, see March (1). The second element is Du. graaf, G. graf, M. H. G., grave, O. H. G. krave, grave, grave, a lord chief grave, a dministrator of justice, count. Not a G. word, but taken from Low Lat. cannot arrive thither where he goes without a road, so he cannot trator of justice, count. Not a G. word, but taken from Low Lat. proceed without charity, but (will be sure to) lose his way; Bartsch, grafio, a judge, prefect, count, graphio, an exactor of taxes (so used in A.D. 1061); Ducange. Evidently formed from Gk. γράφειν, to write, Ψ propose a law, prescribe, ordain; see Grave. Der. margrav-ine, from Du. markgravin, where in is a fem. suffix. Doublet, marquis.

MARIGOLD, the name of a plant. (Hybrid; Heb and E.)

Spelt marygould in Levins; maryguld in G. Douglas, Palace of Honour, Prol. st. 5. In Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 105. It bears a yellow flower, whence also the Du. name goud-bloom (gold-bloom), a marigold. Compounded of Mary and Gold. Chaucer has gold for marigold; C. T. 1931 (whence W. gold, a marigold). The Gaelic name is lus-mairi, Mary's leek or plant. Flowers named from the Virgin Mary are numerous; hence our lady's-slipper, lady's tresses, &c. The name Mary (from F. Marie, Lat. Maria, Gk, Mapia) is Hebrew, The name Mary (from F. Marie, Lat. Maria, Gk. Mapla) is Hebrew, and is the same as Heb. Miryam or Miriam.

MARINE, belonging to the sea. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. [The sb. mariner is in much earlier use, spelt marinere, Chaucer, C. T. 13367.] - F. marin, 'marine, of the sea;' Cot. - Lat. marinus, adj., of the sea. - Lat. mare, the sea; cognate with E. mere, a pool; see Mere (1). Der. mariner, which first occurs in Floriz and Blancheflur, ed. Lumby, l. 71, from F. marinier, 'a mariner;' Cot. MARISH, a marsh. (F., -O. Low G.) In Ezek. xlvii. 11. This form of the word answers rather to O. F. maresqs, a marsh (Burguy, Roquefort), marez, marets in Cotgrave, Low Lat. mariscus, than to M. E. mareis, Chaucer, C. T. 6552, F. marais, with the same sense. [The latter forms, like Ital. marese, a marsh, answer better to a Low Lat. marensis *, a form not found.] Marish = Low Lat. mariscus, is a word wholly Teutonic, from Low G. marsch (Bremen Worterbuch), cognate with E. Marsh, q. v.

The F. marais is preserved in the name Beaumaris, in Anglesey. Doublet, marsh.

MARITAL, belonging to a husband. (F.,-L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - F. marital, 'belonging to a mariage, esp. on the husband's side:' Cot. - Lat. maritali, adj., formed from maritus, a husband; see Marry.

MARITIME, pertaining to the sea. (F., -L.) In Shak. Ant. i. 4. 51. - F. maritime, 'maritime;' Cot. - Lat. maritimus, adj., formed with suffix -timus from mari-, crude form of mare, the sea, cognate with E. Mere (1), q. v.

MARJORAM, an aromatic plant. (F., -L., -Gk.) The first r is often omitted in various languages. M. E. majoran, Gower, C. A. iii. 133. - F. majolaine, 'margerome,' Cot.; of which an older form must have been marjoraine, though it is not recorded. Cf. Ital. ma-B. All corjorana, Span. mayorana, Port. maiorana, marjoram. ruptions from Low Lat. majoraca, marjoram, Ducange; which again is a much disfigured form of Lat. a-maracus, marjoram, with loss of initial a. - Gk. άμάρακος, marjoram. (Probably of Oriental origin.)

MARK (1), a stroke, outline, bound, trace, line, sign. (E.) M. E. merke, Chaucer, C. T. 6201. - A.S. mearc. a mark, bound, end; also a border, confine (Grein, ii. 327); see March (1). + Du. merk. + Icel. mark. + Swed. märke. + Dan. mærke. + M. H. G. marc, a mark, token; M. H. G. marke. O. H. G. marcha, a march, boundary, border; (hence F. marque). + Goth. marka, a border-country, coast, Matt. viii. 34. + Lat. margo, a border, margin (whence F. and E. marge, E. margin). β. Prob. further related to Lithuan. margas, particoloured, esp. striped; and perhaps to Skt. marga, a trace, esp. used of the trace of a hunted animal, from the verb mrij, to rub lightly, wipe, stroke, cleanse. — MARG, to rub lightly, an extension of MAR, to rub, pound, bruise, crush, grind. See Mar. ¶ The order of ideas appears to be to rub, rub lightly, leave a trace; hence a trace, line, mark, boundary. Cf. E. to stroke with the sb. a stroke. Der. mark, vb., from A.S. mearcian (Grein); mark-er, mark-ing-ink; marks-man, Dryden's Meleager (from Ovid, b. viii), l. 188, earlier form markman, Romeo, i. 1. 212. Also mark (2).

MARK* (2), the name of a coin. (E.) The Old E. mark was valued at 13s. 4d. M. E. mark, Chaucer, C. T. 12324.—A. S. marc, pl. marcan; 'i. mare goldes' = I mark of gold, Diplomatarium and Theorem 2 and Theorem 2 and the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the continuous of the c Saxon., ed. Thorpe, p. 379. + G. mark, a certain weight of silver, viz. 8 oz.; also a coin. + Icel. mörk.

B. Merely a particular use of the word above, as denoting (1) a fixed weight, and (2) a fixed value. Cf. the use of token to denote a coin.

MARKET, a place of merchandise. (F., -L.) In early use. M.E. market, Old. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 16, l. 491. -O. F. market *, not recorded, also spelt markiet, marchet (Burguy), mod. F. marché. Cf. Prov. mercatz (Bartsch), Ital. mercato, Span. mercado, a market. - Lat. mercatus, traffic, trade, also a market (whence also G. markt, Du. markt, Icel. markaor, &c.). - Lat. mercatus, pp. of mercari, to trade. Closely connected with Lat. merx (crude form merci-), merchandise.

3. It is supposed that the base mer-c- is merci-), merchandise. extended from mer- as seen in mer-ere, to obtain, get, gain; so that merx is 'gain' or profit, hence traffic as a means of getting gain. "Corsen takes mere simply as "the earning one;" Curtius, i. 413. See further under Merit. Der. market-able, Temp. v. 266; marketcross, -town. And see merchant.

MARL, a rich earth. (F.,-L.) M. E. marle, marl, Trevisa, ii. 15; see Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 236, il. 25, 27. Dissyllabic in marle-pit, Chaucer, C. T. 3460.—O. F. marle, merle, malle, now spelt marne; see Littré, s. v. marne. Cot. has the derivative marliere, 'a marle-pit.'-Low Lat. margila, marl; dimin. of Low Lat. marga, marl (a common word); Ducange. It occurs in Pliny, xvii. 6. 4, § 42, who considers it to be a word of Gaulish origin. Probably, like mould, from \(MAR\), to rub, grind. See Mould. The Irish and Gael. marla, W. marl, must be borrowed from E; the G., Du., Dan., and Swed. mergel are from the Low Lat. margila. Der. marl-y, marl-pit.

MARLINE, a small cord used for binding large ropes, to protect them. (Du.) 'Some the galled ropes with dauby marling bind;' them. (Du.) Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 148. - Du. marling, marlijn, a marline; also called marlreep (corruption of marreep). So called from its use in binding ropes. - Du. marren, to tie (O. Du. marren, maren, 'to bynde, or to tye knots, 'Hexham); and lijn (corruptly ling), a line. Similarly mar-reep, from reep, a rope. The Du. maren is used by us in the expression 'to moor a ship.' See Moor (2) and Line. Der. marline-spike.

MARMALADE, a jam or conserve, gen. made of oranges, but formerly of quinces. (F., -Port., -L., -Gk.) 'Marmalet, Marmelade, a kind of confection made of quinces, or other fruit;' Phillips. Spelt marmalat, marmalet in Levins; marmelad in Tyndall, Works, p. 229, col. 2. O. F. mermelade, 'marmelade;' Cot. Mod. F. marmelade; orig. made of quinces, Formed with suffix -ada (like that of a fem. pp.) from marmel-o, a quince; thus the sense is 'made of quince.'—Lat. melimelum, lit. a honey-apple, sometimes applied to the quince, as shewn by the allied word mēloměli, the syrup of preserved quinces. - Gk. μελίμηλον, a sweet apple, an apple grafted on a quince; cf. μηλόμελι, honey flavoured with quince.—Gk. μέλι-, honey, cognate with Lat. mel, honey; and μῆλου, an apple. See Mellifluous and Melon.

Formerly applied to a different animal, as the word is older than Columbus. M. E. marmosette, marmozette. 'Apes, marmozettes, babewynes [baboons], and many other dyverse bestes; ' Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell (1866), p. 210; see Wright's note to Temp. ii. 2.—F. marmouset (O. F. marmoset), 'the cock of a cistern or fountaine, made like a woman's dug; any antick image, from whose teats water trilleth; any puppet, or antick; any such foolish or odd representation; also, the minion, favorite, or flatterer of a prince; Cot. It is hence perfectly clear that the word was applied to some kind of ape because of its grotesque antics.

B. The origin of O. F. marmoset (Cotgrave) looks uncertain; but Scheler's statement that the Low Lat. vicus marmoretorum occurs as a translation of F. rue des Marmousets (a statement repeated by Littré with the additional information that the said street is in Paris) is decisive. The sense of marmoretum is 'made in marble;' applied, as shewn by Cotgrave, to spouts of cisterns and drinking-fountains, the grotesqueness of them being an accident. - Lat. marmor, marble; see Marble. B. At the same time, it is perfectly clear that one reason for the transference of this particular word to a kind of ape was due to simple confusion with the wholly unrelated F. word marmot (not to be confused with E. marmot, which is again a different word). Cotgrave has: 'Marmot, a marmoset, or little monky;' also: 'Marmotle, a she marmoset, or she monky.' The etym. of this F. marmot is uncertain; the most likely explanation is Scheler's; he takes it to be a dimin. with suffix -ot from O. F. merme, little, tiny, lit. very small. This O. F. merme is a curious corruption of Lat. minimus (like O. F. arme from Lat. animus); see Minim. This gives to F. marmot the sense of 'dear little creature,' and accounts for the mod. use in the senses of 'puppet' and 'little child' (Hamilton); cf. Ital. marmotta, 'a marmoset, a babie for a childe to play withall, a pugge;' Florio.

MARMOT, a mountain-rat, a rodent animal. (Ital., -L.) Introduced into Eng. from Ital., not from F. Ray speaks of 'the Marmotto or mus Alpinus, a creature as big [as] or bigger than a rabbet; On the Creation, pt. ii (R.) 'Marmotto, a mountain-rat;' Kersey, ed. 1715.—Ital. marmotto, a marmot; Meadows, Eng.-Ital. division. Cf. O.F. marmotaine, marmotan, 'the Alpine mouse, or mountain-rat;' β. Another O. F. form of the name was marmontain (Littré); Diez cites the Romansch names (canton Grisons) as montanella and murmont; the O. H. G. name was murmenti, murmunto, muremunto, now corrupted to murmelthier (where thier = deer or animal). y. The comparison of these names, variously corrupted, at once leads us, without any doubt, to the right solution; viz. that the word is a debased Latin one, founded on mur-, stem of mus, a mouse, and mont- or montan-, stem of mons, a mountain, or of montanus, belonging to a mountain. The sense is certainly 'mountain-mouse.'

Mountain and Mouse. And see Marmoset.

MAROON(1), brownish-crimson. (F., -Ital.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Lit. 'chesnut-coloured.' - F. marron, 'the great maroni, 'a kind of greater chestnuts then any we haue.' Of unknown origin. Cf. late Gk. μάραον, the fruit of the cornel-tree, in Eustathius (12th cent.).

MAROON (2), to put ashore on a desolate island. (F., - Span., -L., - Gk.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. It occurs in Scott, The Pirate, c. xli. And see Maroons in Haydn, Dict. of Dates. - F. marron, adj., an epithet applied to a fugitive slave; nègre marron, a fugitive slave who takes to the woods and mountains (Littré); hence the E. verb to maroon = to cause to live in a wild country, like a fugitive slave. See Scheler, who points out that the F. word is a clipt form of Span. cimarron, wild, unruly, lit. living in the mountain-tops. - Span. cima, a mountain-summit. Cf. Ital. and Port. cima, F. cime, a mountain-top. B. According to Diez, the O. Span. cima also meant a twig, sprout; from Lat. cyma, a young sprout of a cabbage.—Gk. κυμα, anything swollen, a wave, young sprout.—

KU, to swell; see Colewort.

¶ Mr. Wedgwood says that KU, to swell; see Colewort. ¶ Mr. Wedgwood says that the fugitive negroes are mentioned under the name of symarons in Hawkins' Voyage, § 68, where they are said to be settled near Panama.' He also cites the following: 'I was in the Spanish service, some twenty years ago in the interior of Cuba, and negro cimarrón or briefly cimarrón, was then an every-day phrase for fugitive or outlawed negroes hidden in the woods and mountains;' Notes and Queries, Jan. 27, 1866. I may add that the pronunciation of c (before i) as s, is Portuguese rather than Spanish.

MARQUE, LETTERS OF, letters authorising reprisals. (F., -G.) The old sense of a letter of marque was a letter signed by a king or prince authorising his subjects to make reprisals on another country, when they could not otherwise get redress. It is now only used in naval affairs, to shew that a ship is not a pirate or a corsair. 'Law of Marque, or [corruptly] Mart; this word is used 27 Edw. III, stat. 2. c. 17, and grows from the German word march [which, however, is the English form of the word], i. e. limes, a bound or limit. And the reason of this appellation is because they that are driven to this law of reprizal, take the goods of that people (of whom they have received wrong and can get no ordinary justice) when they catch them within their own territories or precincts;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Marque . . . signifies in the ancient statutes of our land as much as reprisals; as A. 4 Hen. V, c. 7, Marques and Reprisals are used as synonima; and letters of marque are found in the same signification in the same chapter; id. See also Ducange, s. v. Marcha. In one instance, cited by Wedgwood and Littre, the O. F. marquer seems to mean 'to pillage,' the lit. sense being 'to catch within one's borders.' Littré also shews that the spelling marche was used in the same sense as marque, in this connection; it would hence appear that marque is lit. a border, and hence a catching within one's borders, perhaps also a border-raid, foray. - O. F. marque, properly a boundary; explained by Cot. as 'a distresse, arrest, or seisure of body or goods. He also gives: Droict de Marque, power to arrest the body, and seize the goods of another; granted by the king, and in old time given by the parliament, against a stranger or forreiner.' - M. H. G. marke, O.H.G. marcha, a march, boundary, border. See March (1) The corrupt form letters of mart occurs in and Mark (1). and Mark (1). MARQUEE, a large field-tent. (F., = G.) Modem; not in Todd's Johnson. This is one of the words in which a final s has been cut off, from a false idea that marquees is a plural form; so also we have sherry for sherris, pea for pease, and 'Chinee' for Chinese, &c. Marquees is nothing but an E. spelling of F. marquise, an officer's β. Littre says that marquise, a tent, a tent, large tent, marquee. little elegant construction, was no doubt so named from marquise, a marchioness, or lady of rank who was to be protected from the inclemency of the weather. That is, it is short for 'tent of the The F. marquise is the fem. of marquis, a marquis; marchioness.'

MARQUETRY, inlaid work. (F., -M. H. G.) In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 146. -F. marqueterie, inlaied work of sundry colours; Cot. - F. marqueter, 'to inlay, to diversifie, flourish, or work all over with small pieces of sundry colours, also, to spot;' id. Lit. 'to mark slightly, or with spots;' iterative form of marquer, to mark. - F. marque, a mark. - M. H. G. mark, G. marke, a mark, MARSH, a morass, swamp, fen. (E.) M. E. mersche, Wyclif, Gen. xli. 18 (earlier text). - A. S. mersc, a marsh; Grein, ii. 234. [The change from sc to sk is usual and regular.] Mersc is a contraction of mer-isc, orig. an adj. signifying full of meres or pools (= mere-ish); formed with suffix -isc (-ish) from A.S. mere, a mere, pool, lake; see More. + Low G. marsch, Bremen Wörterbuch, iii. 133; whence Low Lat. mariscus, and E. marish. Der. marsh-y, marsh-i-ness. Doublet, marisk.

MARSHAL, a master of the horse; variously applied as a title of honour. (F., = O.H. G.) The orig. sense is 'horse-servant,' a farrier or groom; it rose to be a title of honour, like constable, q.v. M. E. mareschal, Rob. of Glouc. p. 491, l. 10; marschal, P. Plowman, B. iii. 200. – O. F. mareschal (mod. F. maréchal), 'a marshall of a kingdom or of a camp (an honourable place), also, a blacksmith, farrier; Cot. - O. H. G. marschall (M. H. G. shale, a servant, whence G. schalk, a knave, a rogue (by a change of sense exactly parallel to that of E. knave). β. The latter element is cognate with A.S. sceale, a servant, man (Grein), Du. schalk, a knave, Icel. skálkr, a servant, knave, rogue, Swed. skalk, a rogue; the oldest form and sense being preserved in Der. marshal, vb., Macb. i. 1. 42, the sense being 'to act as marshal,' it being orig. a part of his duty to arrange for tournaments and to direct ceremonies; marshall-er, marshal-ship. shal occurs also in sene-schal, q. v.

MARSUPIAL, belonging to a certain order of animals. (L., Gk.) Modern. Applied to such animals as have a pouch in which to carry their young. - Lat. marsupium, a pouch. - Gk. μαρσύπιον, μαρσίπιον, a little pouch; dimin. of μάρσυπος, μάρσιπος,, a bag, pouch (Xenophon, Anab. 4. 3. 11).

MART, a contracted form of Market, q.v. In Hamlet, i. 1. 74. MARTELLO TOWER, a circular fort on the S. coast of England. (Ital. - L.) 'The English borrowed the name of the tower from Corsica in 1794; Webster. - Ital. martello, a hammer; a name given to 'towers erected on the coasts of Sicily and Sardinia against the pirates in the time of Charles V' (A.D. 1519-1556); Webster. -Low Lat. martellus, a hammer; dimin. from a form martus *, which is equivalent to Lat. marcus, a hammer. - & MAR, to crush, pound; see Mallet. ¶ I cannot verify the above statements; another theory, that the fort taken in 1794 by the English was situate in . Mortella bay, Corsica, is given in the Eng. Cyclopedia. The Ital. mortella means a myrtle.

MARTEN, a kind of weasel. (F., - Low Lat., - Teut.) a. Marten is a contraction of the older form martern, in Harrison's Description of England, b. ii, c. 19, ed. Furnivall, p. 310. the final n in martern is excrescent, as in bitter-n; see Mätzner, Gramm. i. 177. The older term is marter or martre; it is spelt martre in Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 112, l. 18. F. martre (also marte), 'a martin,' Cot.; spelt martre in the 11th cent. (Littré). Cf. Ital. martora, Span. marta. - Low Lat. marturis*, of which Ducange gives the pl. martures, as being a common word; marder, a marten; Du. marter, a marten. + A. S. mearo, a marten, & MASCULINE, male. (F., -L.) M. E. masculyn, Chaucer, tr. of Orosius, i. 1; see Sweet's A. S. Reader. + Icel. moro'r (gen. mardar).

+ Swed. mard. + Dan. maar (for maard). Root unknown.

¶ 1. The masculinus, lengthened from masculus, male; see Male.

Der. supposed Lat. martes, a marten, is due to a doubtful reading in Martial, 10. 37. 18, and cannot be relied on. It is curious that the A. S. name was lost, and replaced by the F. one. 2. We may also note, that Cot. gives an O. F. martin as another name for the marten; but the E. word does not seem to have been taken from it.

MARTIAL, warlike, brave. (F., -L.) In Shak. Hen. V, iv. 8. 46. -F. martial, 'martiall;' Cot. - Lat. Martialis, dedicated to Mars. - Lat. Marti-, crude form of Mars, the god of war; see March (3). Der. martial-ly; also martial-ist (obsolete), Two Noble Kinsmen, i.

MARTIN, a bird of the swallow kind. (F.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627, the name of the bird is given as martin, marten, martinet, and martelet. Of these forms, marten is corrupt; and martinet, martelet are dimin. forms, for which see Martlet. - F. martin, (1) a proper name, Martin, (2) the same name applied to various birds and animals (Scheler); thus martin-pecheur is a king-fisher (Hamilton), and oiseau de S. Martin is 'the ring-taile or hen-harm,' Cot. Martin was once a proverbially common name for an ass, as shewn in Cot., s. v. asne. 3. The name is, in fact, a nick-name, like robin, jenny-wren. MARTINET, a strict disciplinarian. (F.) 'So called from an officer of that name, whom Voltaire describes as the regulator of the French infantry under Louis XIV' (A. D. 1643-1715); Todd's Johnson. The name is a dimin. of the name Martin; see Martin.

MARTINGALE, MARTINGAL, a strap fastened to a horses's girth to hold his head down; in ships, a short spar under the bowsprit. The ship's martingale is named from its resemblance, in situation, to the horse's. The word, spelt martingal, is given in Johnson only with respect to the horse. Minsheu, ed. 1627, speaks of 'a martingale for a horse's taile;' the word also occurs in Cot-grave. - F. martingale, 'a martingale for a horse;' Cot. He also gives: 'a la martingale, absurdly, foolishly, untowardly, ... in the homeliest manner.' β . See the account in Littré, who shews that the term arose from an oddly made kind of breeches, called chausses à la martingale, a phrase used by Rabelais. Cf. Span. martingal, an old kind of breeches; Ital. martingala, an old kind of hose. explanation of Ménage is accepted by Littré and Scheler. He says the breeches were named after the Martigaux (pl. of Martigal), who were the inhabitants of a place called Martigues in Provence who were the linabitants of a place called Marignes in Provence (S. of France). For the intrusive n, cf. messenger, passenger, &c. MARTINMAS, MARTLEMAS, the feast of St. Martin; Nov. 11. (Hybrid; F. and L.) The corruption to Marilemas (2 Hen. IV, ii. 2. 110) is due to the easy change of n to l; see Lilac. M. E. Martinmesse, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 230, l. 1. Compounded of the F. proper name Martin; and M. E. messe = A. S. mæsse, from Lat. missa, a mass. See Martin and MARTLET, a kind of bird, a martin. (F.) In Levins; and in Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. 9. 28. A corruption of the older name martnet or martinet by the same change of n to l as is seen in Martle-mas for Martinmas. 'Martnet, martenet, byrd;' Prompt. Parv. p. 327. - F. martinet, 'a martlet or martin;' Cot. Dimin. of F. martin, a martin; with suffix -et. See Martin.

S. mariyr, Ælfred, tr. of Beda, lib. i. c. 7, l. 5. -Lat. martyr. - Gk. μάρτυρ, μάρτυς, a witness; lit. one who remembers, records, or declares. Cf. Skt. smri, to remember, desire, record, declare. — $\sqrt{}$ SMAR, to remember; whence also E. memory, Gk. μέριμνα, care, &c.; Fick, i. 254. Der. martyr-dom, A. MARVEL, a wonder. (F., - L.) M. E. mervaile; King Alisaunder, l. 218. - F. merveille, 'a marvell;' Cot. Cf. Span. maravilla, Ital. maraviglia, Port. maravilha. - Lat. mirabilia, neut. pl., wonderful things; according to the common confusion in Low Lat. between the fem. sing. and neut. pl.; from the adj. mirabilis, wonderful. -Lat. mirari, to wonder at. — Lat. mirus, wonderful; formed with suffix -rus from the base mi-, later form of smi-. Cf. Gk. μειδậν, to smile, Skt. smi, to smile; Skt. smera, smiling; vi-smita, astonished, surprised; smápaya, to cause to be surprised. - \SMI, to smile, surprise; whence also E. Smile, q. v. masculine-ly, masculine-ness.

MASH, to beat into a mixed mass. (E. or Scand.) The old sense was 'to mix.' 'To masche, miscere;' Levins, 35. 10. 'Maschyn, yn brewynge, misceo; Maschynge, mixtura, mixtio;' Prompt. Parv. To mash is, in particular, to steep malt; the tub into which the refuse grains are put is called the mash-tub, whence pigs are fed. A mash for horses is a mixture of malt and bran. Cf. Lowland Scotch mask-fat, a vat for brewing; masking-fat, a mashingvat; masking-pat, a tea-pot, lit. a pot for steeping or infusing tea (see Burns, When Guildford good our pilot stood, st. 1). See Halliwell and Jamieson. Perhaps E.; cf. A. S. mex-fat, a mashingvat, cited by Lye without authority; also max-wyrte, wort, new beer, Cockayne's Leechdoms, ii. 87, 97, 107. Here max stands for mase, as usual, whence Sc. mask, E. mash; the sense of mase was probably a mixture, esp. brewers' grains. + Swed. dial. mask, brewers' grains (Rietz), Swed. mäsk, grains; whence Swed. müske, to mash. + Dan. mask, a mash; whence mask-kar, a mashing-tub, also mæske, to mash, to fatten pigs (with grains). + North Friesic mask, grains, draff (Outzen). +G. meisch, a mash (of distillers and brewers); whence meischfass, a mash-vat, meischen, to mash, mix. β. Thus the verb to mash is due to the sb. mash, meaning 'a mixture;' it is probable that the sb. is due to the verb to mix; see Mix. We may further compare Irish masgaim, I infuse, mash malt, measgaim, I mix, mingle, stir, move; also Gael. masg, to mix, infuse, steep, measg, to mix, stir. Also Lithuan. maiszyi, to stir things in a pot, from miszti, to mix (Nesselmann). ¶ Unconnected with O. F. mascher, F. mâcher, which is merely Lat. masticare, to chew. Der. mess (2), q.v. MASK, MASQUE, a disguise for the face; a masked entertainment. (F., - Span., - Arab.) It is usual to write mask in the sense of visor, and masque in the sense of masquerade; there is no reason for this distinction. Perhaps we may call mask the E., and masque the F. spelling. No doubt it is, and long has been, gen. supposed that the entertainment takes its name from the visor, according to the F. usage; but it is remarkable that the sense of entertainment is the true one, the use of the visor at such an entertainment being (from an etymological point of view) an accident. The sense of entertainment is the usual one in old authors. 'A jolly company In maner of a maske;' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 5. 'The whiles the maskers marched forth in trim array;' id. iii. 12. 6. Some haue I sene ere this, ful boldlye come daunce in a maske, whose dauncing became theym so well, that yf theyr vysours had beene of [off] theyr faces, shame woulde not have suffred theym to set forth a foote; Sir T. More, Works, p. 1039 g. 'Cause them to be deprehended and taken and their maskers taken of [off] and theyr hipocrisie to be dyscouered; id. p. 758 b. Note here the use of maskers in the sense of masks; it is not a mistake, but correct according to the Span. spelling, as will appear. — F. masque, 'a mask, a visor;' Cot. β. This F. masque is an incorrect and clipped form (for masquere), due to a verb masquer, to mask, which is really a mistake for masquerer; but the apparently reduplicated ending was of course neglected, so that we find in Cot. the supposed pp. 'masque', masked.' Yet the fuller form comes out in O. F. masquarizé, 'masked,' Cot.; as well as in masquerie, masquerade, mascarade, 'a mask or mummery.'

Y. The last form, mascarade, γ. The last form, mascarade, is plainly borrowed from Span. mascarada, a masquerade, assembly of maskers, from mascara, a masker, masquerader, also a mask. Cf. Ital. mascherata, a masquerade; mascherare, to mask, maschera, a mask; so that Sir T. More's use of masker = mask, is fully accounted for. The true sense of Span. mascara was, however, orig. a masker or masquerader. - Arab. maskharat, 'a buffoon, a fool, jester, droll wag, a man in masquerade; a pleasantry, anything ridiculous or mirthful, sport; Pers. maskharah kardan, to ridicule or deride, to play the buffoon; 'Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1416. - Arab. root sakhira, he ridiculed; id. p. 815. ¶ Other etymologies are worthless; as M. Devic remarks, in the Supplement to Littre, it is needless to give all the details in full by which this etymology can be proved. It is sufficient to refer to Mahn's Etymologische Forschungen, and to Engelmann and Dozy, Glossaire des Mots Espagnols tirés de l'Arabe. Der. mask-er; also masquer-ade, explained above; whence masquerad-er.

MASON, a worker in stone. (F., -Low Lat., -G.?) In early use. M. E. mason, King Alisaunder, l. 2370; spelt mascun, Floriz and Blauncheflor, l. 326. - O. F. maçon, masson (F. maçon), 'a mason; Cot. - Low Lat. macionem, acc. of macio, a mason; we find also the forms machio, macho, maco, and even marcio, mactio, matio, mattio, as well as macerio.

β. The last form macerio is plainly 'wall-maker,' from Lat. maceria, an inclosure, a wall, which is allied to Gk. μακελον, an inclosure. But whether this will account for all the other forms is doubtful. form; marcio is probably wrong, and mactio may be a misreading of mattio. If we take matio or mattio as the standard form, we may perhaps suppose machio, macho, macio, maco to be corruptions of it; the difficulty of distinguishing between e and e in MSS. is often very great.

8. Mattio may be referred to M. H. G. mezzo, a mason, great. whence mod. G. stein-metz, a stone-mason; and this is prob. closely related to M. H. G. meizen, O. H. G. meizan, to hew, to cut, whence G. meissel, a chisel. Cf. Icel. meita, to hew, cut, meitill, a chisel; Goth. maitan (strong verb), to hew, cut; all from Teut. base MIT, to hew, cut; Fick, iii. 239. Der. mason-ie; also mason-ry, Rom. of the Rose, 1. 302, from F. maçonnerie, from the verb maçonner, to do mason's work.

MASQUE, MASQUERADE; see Mask.

MASS (1), a lump of matter, quantity, size. (F., = L., = Gk.) M. E. masse, Prompt. Parv. = F. masse, 'a masse, lump;' Cot. - Lat. massa, a mass. (Prob. not a true Lat. word, but taken from Gk.) -Gk. μάζα, a barley-cake, closely allied to μάγμα, any kneaded mass. - Gk. μάσσειν (for μάκ-yειν), to knead. - √ MAK, to grind, to knead; whence also Lat. macerare; see Macerate. Der. mass, vb.; mass-ive, from F. massif, 'massive,' Cot.; mass-ive-ly, mass-ive-ness; also mass-y (an older adj., with E. suffix y = A.S.-ig), Spenser, F.Q. iii. 11. 47; mass-i-ness.

MASS (2), the celebration of the Eucharist. (L.) M. E. messe, masse, P. Plowman, B. v. 418, C. viii. 27; Chaucer has masse-peny, C. T. 7331. Spelt messe in Havelok, 188. [Perhaps not from F. messe, but directly from Lat.] = A. S. masse, (1) the mass, (2) a church-festival, Grein, ii. 226; Ælfred, tr. of Beda, b. iii. c. 22, ed. Whelock, p. 319. = Low Lat. missa, (1) dismissal, (2) the mass; see Ducange. B. The name is usually accounted for by supposing that the allusion is to the words ite, missa est (go, the congregation is dismissed), which were used at the conclusion of the service. 'Come I to ite, missa est, I holde me yserued'=If I come in time to hear the last words of the service, it suffices for me; P. Plowman, B. v. 419. Wedgwood suggests that it meant rather the dismissal of the catechumens who were not allowed to remain during the celebration of the eucharist; for which he cites the following passage from Papias: 'Missa tempore sacrificii est quando catecumeni foras mittuntur, clamante leuita [the deacon], Si quis catecumenus remansit, exeat foras; et inde missa, quia sacramentis altaris interesse non possunt, quia nondum regenerati sunt. Y. It matters little; for we may be sure that missa is, in any case, derived from Lat. missa, possunt, quia nondum regenerati sunt.' fem. of missus, pp. of mittere, to send, send away; see Missile. The change of vowel from Lat, i to A. S. a is remarkable, but we find just the same change in Icel. messa, Swed. messa, Dan. messe; and still more clearly in G. messe from O. H. G. messa and The Du. mis alone retains the Lat. vowel. (All these words missa. are, of course, borrowed from Latin.) Der. Candle-mas, Christ-mas, Hallow-mas, Lam-mas, Martin-mas, Michael-mas.

MASSACRE, indiscriminate slaughter, carnage. (F., -O. Low G.) Pronounced massacre in Spenser, F. Q. iii. 11. 29; he also has massacre, id. iii. 3. 35.—F. massacre, 'a massacre;' Cot. Also massacrer, 'to massacre;' id. Wedgwood cites a passage from Monstrelet in which the verb is spelt maschacler (= massacler). β. The double ending of the verb in -rer or -ler answers to the frequentative suffix -eren or -elen so common in Low G. and Du. as a verbal ending; cf. Du. brokkelen, to break small, from brokken, to break, klepperen, to clatter, from kleppen, to clap; &c. This suggests, for the origin of the F. massacrer, a similar extension from Low G. matsken, to cut, to hew (Bremen Wörterb. iii. 137), Du. matsen, to maul, to kill. We might thus readily suppose F. massacrer (if put for mascaler) to be a corruption of a Low G. form matskelen*, the exact equivalent of which actually occurs in G. metzeln (for metzelen), to massacre. Y. Of these forms, the G. metzeln is an extension of metzen, to cut, to kill (Flügel); cf. G. metzelei, a massacre, butchery, slaughter. Metzen is perhaps related to M. H. G. meizen, O.H.G. meizan, to cut, hew. Similarly, we find Icel. mjatla, to cut small, slice, from meita, to cut. And we may compare Du. matsen, 8. Similarly, we find Icel. mjatla, to Low G. matsken, with Goth. maitan, to cut. . The O. H. G. meizan, Icel. meita, Goth. maitan, are all from the Teut. base MIT, to cut; see Mason. The F. word is one of much difficulty; the above solution is open to objection.

MAST (1), a pole to sustain the sails of a ship. (E.) M. E. mast, Chaucer, C. T. 3264.—A. S. mæst, the stem of a tree, bough, mast of a ship; Grein, i. 226 (whence Icel. mastr was prob. borrowed).— Du. mast. + Swed. and Dan. mast. + G. mast.

β. It is probable that st is a suffix, as in bla-st, in A.S. blo-st-ma (a blossom), and in other words. Accordingly, Fick (iii. 237) suggests that A.S. mest may stand for mah-sta, from the base mah- (= Lat. and Gk. magh-) which appears in Lat. mā-lus (for magh-lus), a mast, and in Gk.

y. The difficulty is to tell the true Low Lat. & sense has reference to the might or strength of the pole thus employed, whether as a mast or as a lever; from MAGH, to have power; see May (1). Der. mast-less, dis-mast, MAST (2), the fruit of beech and forest trees. (E.) The orig. sense is 'edible fruit,' with reference to the feeding of swine. M. E. mast. 'They eten mast;' Chaucer, Ætas Prima, I. 7. — A. S. mæst; 'brim hund swina mæst' = mast for three hundred swine; Thorpe, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, p. 70. + G. mast, (1) mast, (2) stall-feeding, fattening; whence müsten, to fatten.

B. Doubtless allied feeding, fattening; whence masten, to fatten. B. Doubtles to E. Meat, q. v. Perhaps mast = mat-st; like best for bet-st.

MASTER, a superior, lord, teacher. (F.,-L.) In early use. M. E. maister, meister, spelt meister, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 41, l. 29. - O. F. maistre, meistre; mod. F. maître, a master. - Lat. magistrum, acc. of magister, a master. B. Lat. mag-is-ter = mag-yans-tara, a double comparative form, formed with the Aryan compar. suffixes -yans and -tara, for which see Schleicher, Compand. §§ 232, 233. [Min.is-ter, q. v., is a precisely similar formation.] γ. The base mang- is the same as in mag-nus, great, Gk. μέγ-as, great; so that the sense is 'great-er-er' = much more great. → MAG, to have power; see May (1). Der. master, verb; master-ly, master-ship, master-y, q.v.; also master-builder, -hand, -key, -less, -piece, -work, &c.

MASTERY, lordship, dominion. (F., -L.) In early use. M.E. maistrie, meistrie; spelt meistrie in Ancren Riwle, p. 140. - O. F. maistrie, meistrie, mastery (Burguy). - O. F. maistre, a master; see Master.

MASTIC, MASTICH, a kind of gum resin. (F., -L., -Gk.) The tree yielding it is also called mastic, but should rather be called the mastic-tree, spelt mastick-tree in the Bible, Story of Susanna, v. 54. Another name for the tree is lentisk. 'The lentiskes also have their rosin, which they call mastick; 'Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xiv. c. 20. M. E. mastyk, Prompt. Parv. — F. mastic, 'mastick, a sweet gum;' Cot. — Lat. mastiche. — Gk. μαστίχη, the gum of the tree σχίνοι, called in Lat. lentiscus. B. So called because it was used for chewing in the East; from the base μαστ-, seen in μάσταξ, the mouth, μαστάζειν, to chew. - Gk. μασάσμαι, I chew. Perhaps allied to Gk. μαδαρόs, melting away; and to Lat. mandere, to chew. Der.

MASTICATE, to chew. (L., - Gk.) The E. verb was suggested by the previous use of the sb. mastication, which alone appears in Minsheu, ed. 1627, and in Cotgrave, who uses it to translate the F. mastication. - Lat. masticatus, pp. of masticare, to chew; a late word, marked by White as 'post-classical.' \(\beta \). Quite an unoriginal word, and formed, like most verbs in -are, from a sb. The orig, sense is evidently 'to chew mastic,' from Lat. mastice, mastiche, mastic, a word borrowed from Gk. μαστίχη, mastic; see Mastic.

¶ The true Lat. word for 'chew' is mandere. The explanation under Mastic, that mastic is so named from being chewed, only applies to Greek; in Latin, the verb is derived from the sb. Der. masticat-ion. from F. mastication, as above; masticat-or-y.

MASTIFF, a large dog. (F., -Low Lat., -L.) M. E. mestif. 'Als grehound or mastif' (riming with hastif), Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 189, l. 8. 'Mastyf, or mestyf, hownde;' Prompt. Parv. - O. F. mestif, adj., 'mongrell; un chien mestif, a mongrell, understood by the French especially of a dog thats bred between a mastive or great cur and a greyhound; 'Cot. This is the adj. corresponding to the O. F. sb. mastin (mod. F. matin), 'a mastive, or bandog, a great country cur; 'Cot. Cf. Ital. mastino, Port. mastim, Span. mastin, a mastiff.

B. The Low Lat. form would be, accordingly, mastinus*, prob. standing for masnatinus*, the adj. corresponding to Low Lat. masnata, a household, also written masnada or maisnada; for the account of which see Menial. Thus the sense is 'house-dog,' just as that of bandog (=band-dog) is a dog that is tied See Scheler and Diez.

MASTODON, the name of an extinct elephant. (Gk.) Modern; so called from the conical or nipple-like projections on its molar teeth. Coined from Gk. μαστ-, stem of μαστόs, the female breast (connected with μαδάειν, Lat. madere, to be moist); and όδον-, short for όδοντ-, stem of όδούs, a tooth, cognate with E. Tooth,

q. v.

MAT, a texture of sedge, rushes, or other material, to be laid on a floor, &c. (L.) M. E. matte. 'Matte, or natte, Matta, storium;' Prompt. Parv.—A. S. metta; 'Storia, vel psiata, meatta;' Wright's Vocab. i. 41. [Lat. storea or storia means 'a mat.' Observe the variant M. E. natte given in the Prompt. Parv.] - Lat. matta, a mat; cf. Low Lat. natta, a mat (Ducange). B. From the form matta were borrowed E. mat, Du. mat, G. matte, Swed. matta, Dan. maatte, Ital. matta, Span. mata; whilst the form natta is preserved in F. natte. Precisely a similar interchange of m and n occurs in F. nappe from which appears in Lat. mā-lus (for magh-lus), a mast, and in Gk. Lat. mappa; see Map. γ. Root uncertain; the curious shifting μοχ-λοε (for magh-lus), a pole, stake, bar, lever. If so, the orig. of m and n suggests that (as in the case of map) the word may have been a Punic word; indeed, it would not be very surprising if the quelled, subdued, Cot. Also of M.E. mate, confounded, Ancren Riwle, words mappa and matta were one and the same. Der. mat, verb;

matt-ed, matt-ing.

MATADOR, the slayer of the bull in bull-fights. (Span., -L.) In Dryden, Span. Friar, A. i. sc. 2. Spelt matadore, Pope, Rape of the Lock, iii. 33, 47.—Span. matador, lit. 'the slayer;' formed with suffix -dor (= Lat. acc. -torem) from matar, to kill. - Lat. mactare, (1) to honour, (2) to honour by sacrifice, to sacrifice, (3) to kill. - Lat. mactus, honoured; from the base makh or magh, which appears in Skt. mah, to honour, to adore, orig. to have power.

MATCH (1), one of the same make, an equal, a contest, game,

Spelt macche = mate, commarriage. (E.) M. E. macche, mache. Spelt macche = mate, companion; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 47. 'This was a mache vnmete' = this was an unfit contest; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 4070; whence the pp. machede = matched, id. 1533, 2904. The orig, sense was 'companion' in the state of the contest in the state of the contest in the state of the contest in the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the state of the sta panion' or 'mate,' hence an equal, giving the verb to match = to consider equal; the senses of 'contest, game, marriage,' &c., are really due to the verb. - A. S. mæcca, generally ge-mæcca, a companion, comrade, spouse; Grein, i. 426. [The prefix ge-, often and easily dropped, makes no difference.] The change of sound from final -cca to -cche, and later to -cch, is perfectly regular. B. The form gemæcca or mæcca is one of secondary formation, due to a causal suffix -ya; thus mac-ya* passes into mæcca (with double c, and vowel-change), and would mean one who is made a companion,' the orig. word thus operated on being maca, a companion, the word now spelt mate. See further under Mate. Der. match, verb, see Der. match, verb, see exx. above, and see P. Plowman, B. ix. 173; also match-less, matchless-ly, match-less-ness.

MATCH (2), a prepared rope for firing a cannon, a 'lucifer.' (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. macche; 'the macche brenneth' = the match burns (used of a smouldering torch); P. Plowman, B. xvii. 231. -O. F. mesche, meiche, 'the wicke or snuffe of a candle; the match of a lamp; also, match for a harquebuse, &c.; 'Cot. Mod. F. mèche. -Low Lat. myxa*, not found, but justified by the orig. Gk. form; we find Low Lat. myxus, the wick of a candle (Ducange); and Martial (14, 41, 2) uses the acc. pl. myxos, as if from nom. myxus, i.e. the nozzle of a lamp, the part through which the wick protrudes. Gk. $\mu\nu fa$, the nozzle of a lamp; the more orig. senses being (1) mucus, discharge from the nose, (2) a nostril. See further under Der. match-lock, i. e. a lock of a gun holding a match, and hence the gun itself; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.

MATE (1), a companion, comrade, equal. (E.) Spelt mate in Prompt. Parv., p. 329; Rob. of Glouc. p. 536, l. 1. But it has been well suggested that the word is a corruption of the older M. E. make, with the same sense. The same change from k to t occurs in M. E. bakke, now spelt bat; see Bat (2); also in O. Fries. matia, to make. 'In bat and mate a t supplies the place of an orig. k,' &c., Morris, Eng. Accidence, p. 25. The M. E. make is of common occurrence; see P. Plowman, B. iii. 118, Chaucer, C.T. 9954, Havelok, 1150, &c. -A. S. gemaca (or maca), a mate; 'twegen gemaca' = two mates, i. e. a pair, Gen. vi. 19. [The prefix ge-, easily and often dropped, makes no difference.] + Icel. maki, a mate, used of birds, &c. + Swed. make, a fellow, mate, match; cf. maka, a spouse, wife. + Dan. mage, a mate, fellow, equal. + O. Sax. gi-mako, a mate; whence O. Du. muet, 'a mate' (Hexham), with change from k to t as in E.; mod. Du. maat. β. All closely related to the adj. which appears as Icel. makr, suitable, M.H.G. gemach, O.H.G. kamah, belonging to, suitable, like, peaceful (whence G. gemach, gently); and further related to A. S. macian = mod. E. make. a mate is 'one of like make,' anything that is 'suitably made' for another; this force comes out still more clearly in the closely related sb. match, which is a secondary formation from A.S. gemaca. See Match (1), Make. γ. Mate, as used by sailors, is from O. Du. maet. Der. mate, vb., All's Well, i. 1. 102; mate-less.

MATE (2), to check-mate, confound. (F., - Pers., - Arab.) Used by Shak. in the sense 'to confound;' as in 'My mind she has mated, and amazed my sight;' Macb. v. 1.86. It is the same word as is used in chess, the true form being check-mate, which is often used as a verb.

B. Properly, check mate is an exclamation, meaning 'the king is dead;' this occurs in Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 658.— O. F. eschec et mat, 'check-mate;' Cot. Here the introduction of the conj. et is unnecessary and unmeaning, and due to ignorance of the sense. – Pers. sháh mát, the king is dead. – Pers. sháh, king; and mát, he is dead, Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 518.

γ. Sháh is a Pers. word; but mát is not, being of Arab. origin. - Arab. root máta, he died; Rich. Dict. p. 1283; whence is derived the Turk and Pers.

mát, 'astonished, amazed, confounded, perplexed, conquered, subjected, ... receiving check-mate,' id.; also Pers. mát kardan, 'to give check-mate, to confound;' id. Cf. Heb. múth, to die.

MATTER (1), the material part of a thing, substance. (F., - L.) have here the obvious original of O.F. mat, 'deaded, mated, amated,
M. E. maters (with one t), Chaucer, C. T. 6492. Earlier form

p. 382, Will. of Palerne, 2441, &c.; a word merely borrowed from O. F. Also of Ital. matto, mad; explained by Florio as 'fond, foolish; also a mate at chess; a word often heedlessly connected with E. mad, with which it has nothing to do. See also Check, Chess.

MATERIAL, substantial, essential. (F., -L.) 'Hys materiall body; Tyndall, Works, p. 460, col. 2. -O. F. materiel, 'materiall;' Cot. - Lat. materialis, material. - Lat. materia (also materies), matter; see Matter. Der. material-ly, material-ness, material-i-ty, materialise, material-ism, material-ist, material-ist-ic, material-ist-ic-al.

MATERNAL, belonging to a mother. (F., -L.) Spelt maternall in Minsheu and Cotgrave. - F. maternal, 'maternall;' Cot. - Low Lat. maternalis, extended from Lat. maternus, motherly. This adj. is formed with suffix -nus (= Aryan suffix -na, Schleicher, Compend. § 222) from Lat. mater, cognate with E. mother; see Mother. Der. maternal-ly; also matern-i-ty, from F. maternité, 'maternity (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. maternitatem.

MATHEMATIC, pertaining to the science of number. (F., L., -Gk.) Gower speaks of 'the science . . . mathematique;' C. A. iii. 87. -O. F. mathematique, 'mathematical;' Cot. - Lat. mathematicus. - Gk. μαθηματικόs, disposed to learn, belonging to the sciences, esp. to mathematics. — Gk. μαθήματ-, stem of μάθημα, that which is learnt, a lesson, learning, science. — Gk. μαθή-, appearing in μαθήσομαι, I shall learn, fut. of μανθάνειν, to learn; one of the very numerous derivatives from \sqrt{MA} or MAN, to think; cf. μάντιε, a seer, μένοε, mind, Skt. man, to think. See Mind, Man. Der.

MATRICIDE, the murderer of one's mother. (F., -L.) 1. The above is the correct sense, but rare; see Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674.—
F. matricide, adj., 'mother-killing;' Cot.—Lat. matricida, a murderer of a mother.—Lat. matri-, crude form of mater, a mother (see Mother); and -cida, killing, formed from cædere (pt. t. ce-cidi), to kill (see Cassura). 2. Sir T. Browne has the word in the sense murder of one's mother; Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 17. § 5. In this kill (see Cæsura). case, it is coined directly from Lat. matricidium, a killing of a mother. - Lat. matri-, as before; and -cidium, a killing, from cadere, ¶ Fratricide, parricide, are equally ambiguous. as before. Der. matricid-al.

MATRICULATE, to admit to membership, esp. in a college, to register. (L.) Used as a pp., with the sense of 'enrolled,' in Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 1. 1281. - Late Lat. matriculatus, pp. of matriculare, to enrol, a coined word. - Lat. matricula, a register; a dimin. of matrix, (1) a breeding animal, (2) a womb, matrix, (3) a public register, roll, list, lit. a parent-stock. MATTINS, the same as Matins, q. v.

MATTOCK, a kind of pickaxe. (C.) M. E. mattok. 'Hoc bidens, a mattok;' Wright's Vocab. i. 234; and see Prompt. Parv.

—A.S. mattue, Orosius, b. iv. c. 8. § 2. β. Of Celtic origin. —W. matog, a mattock, hoe; cf. Gael. madag, a mattock, pickaxe, Russ. motuika, Lithuan. matikkas, a mattock.

MATTRESS, a quilt to lie upon. (F., - Arab.) 'A mattress, culcitra; 'Levins. - O. F. materas, 'a matteresse, or quilt to lie on; Cot. Mod. F. matelas (by change of r to l); cf. Span. and Port. al-madraque, a quilted cushion, mattress (where al is the Arab. def. article). - Arab. matrah, 'a place, station, post, situation, foundation, a place where anything is thrown; mutrah, thrown away, rejected; Rich. Dict. p. 1440. This Arab. word came to mean anything hastily thrown down, hence, something to lie upon, a bed (Devic) just as the Lat. stratum, lit. 'anything spread,' came to mean a bed. The Arab. matrah is derived from the Arab. root taraha, he threw prostrate; Rich. Dict. p. 967.

MATURE, ripe, completed. (L.) 'Maturity is a mean between two extremities, . . . they be maturely done;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 22 (R.) - Lat. maturus, mature, ripe, arrived at full growth. β . It seems to be related to a lost noun signifying 'period,' cognate with Lithuan. metas, a period, a year (Nesselmann); and with Lithuan. matóti, to measure (id.) If so, the root is \sqrt{MA} , to measure; see Mete. The sense is then 'measured,' or 'completed; hence fully ripe. Der. mature-ly; matur-i-ty, from F. maturité, 'maturity' (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. maturitatem; mature-ness; matur-at-ion, from O. F. maturation, 'a maturation, ripening' (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. maturationem, due to maturatus, pp. of maturare, to ripen; matur-at-ive, from O. F. maturatif, 'maturative, ripening' (Cot.), a coined word; matur-esc-ent, from the stem of the pres. pt. of maturescere, inceptive form of maturare.

Closely related words are matin, matutinal.

MATUTINAL, pertaining to the morning, early. (L.) Matutinal is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; matutine in Kersey, ed. 1715.— Lat. matutinalis, belonging to the morning; formed with suffix -alis from matutin-us, belonging to the morning; see further under MAUDLIN, sickly sentimental. (F., -L., -Gk., - Heb.) orig. sense was 'shedding tears of penitence,' like Mary Magdalene, who was taken as the type of sorrowing penitence. Hence the expression 'their maudlin eyes' in Dryden's Prol. to Southerne's play of The Loyal Brother, l. 21 (A.D. 1682). Corrupted from M. E. Maudelein, or Magdelaine, Chaucer, C. T. 412; P. Plowman, B. xv. 289. - O. F. Magdaleine. - Lat. Magdalene. - Gk. Μαγδαληνή, i. e. belonging to Magdala; Luke, viii. 2. Here 'Magdala' answers to Heb. migdál, a tower; Smith's Dict. of the Bible. spelling Maudlin (for Magdalen) in All's Well, v. 3. 68. ¶ Observe the spelling Maudlin (for Magdalen) in All's Well, v. 3, 68.

MAUGRE, in spite of. (F., -L.) Obsolete, except in imitating archaic writing. In Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. 1. 163; Titus, iv. 2. 110; K. Lear, v. 3, 131. In P. Plowman, B. ii. 204, it means 'in spite of;' but in B. vi. 242, it is (rightly) a sb., signifying 'ill will.' - O. F. malgre, maugre, maulgre; Cot. has 'maulgré eux, mauger their teeth, in spite of their hearts, against their wils.' The lit. sense of malgre is 'ill will' or 'displeasure.' Compounded of mal, from Lat. malus. had, ill: and O. F. are, gret from Lat. gratum a pleasant malus, bad, ill; and O. F. gre, gret, from Lat. gratum, a pleasant thing. See Malioe and Agree.

MAUL, to beat grievously, to bruise greatly, disfigure. (F., -L.)
Formerly mall. 'Then they malled the horses legges, that their mightie coursers lefte praunsynge; Bible, 1551, Judges, v. 22.

M. E. mallen, to strike with a mall or mace, Joseph of Arimathie, ed. Skeat, l. 508. Merely formed from M. E. malle, a mall, mace; see Mall (1).

Then they matted the horsest legges, v. 22. xxv. 18.

draw, paint), is der. from G. mahl. M. H. G. and O. H. G. mal, mol, a mark, spot, cognate with E. mole in the sense of 'mark;' see y. G. stock is cognate with E. stock, stake; see Stock.

MAUNDY THURSDAY, the day preceding Good Friday. (F., - L.; and E.) Thursday is the E. name of the fifth day of the week; see Thursday. Maundy is M. E. maundes, maunde, a command, used with especial reference to the text 'Mandatum novum,' his own command, i. e. washed his disciples feet; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 140. 'Lord, where wolte thou kepe thi maunde?' Coventry Mysteries, ed. Halliwell, p. 259. The 'new commandment' really is 'that ye love one another;' but in olden times it was, singularly enough, appropriated to the particular form of devotion to others exemplified by Christ when washing his disciples feet, as told in earlier verses of the same chapter. 'The Thursday before Easter is called Maundy Thursday, dies mandati, a name derived from the ancient custom of washing the feet of the poor on this day, and singing at the same time the anthem-Mandatum novum, &c.; John, xiii. 34... The notion was, that the washing of the feet was a fulfilling of this command, and it is so called in the rubric, conveniunt clerici ad faciendum mandatum. This rite, called mandatum or lavipedium, is of great antiquity, both in the Eastern and Western church; '&c.; great antiquity, both in the Eastern and Western church; '&c.; Humphrey on the Common Prayer, p. 179. See my long note on P. Plowman, B. xvi. 140, and Maundy Thursday in the Index to the Parker Society's publications. Maundy, for mandatum, occurs in Grindal's Works, p. 51; Hutchinson, pp. 221, 259, 346; Tyndale, i. 259, iii. 256 (Parker Soc.).

B. From O. F. mande, that which is commanded. Cot. has 'mande', commanded, . . . directed, appointed.'

Lat. mandatum, a command, lit. that which is commanded, neut, for mandatum and mandatum to command. of mandatus, pp. of mandare, to command. See Mandate, of which maundy is, in fact, the doublet. ¶ Spelman's trumpery guess, that the word is derived from maund, a basket, is one of the fables which are so greedily swallowed by the credulous.

MAUSOLEUM, a magnificent tomb. (L., - Gk.) 'This mausoleum was the renowned tombe or sepulchre of Mausolus, a petie king of Carie;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxvi. c. 5. — Lat. mausoleum, a splendid tomb, orig. the tomb of Mausolus. — Gk. Μαυσωλοΐον, the tomb of Mausolus. — Gk. Μαύσωλοῦ, the name of a king of Caria, to whom a most splendid monument was erected by his queen Artemisia.

MAUVE, the name of a colour. (F., -L.) Modern. So named from its likeness to the tint of the flowers of a mallow. - F. mauve, a mallow. - Lat. malua, a mallow; see Mallow.

MAVIS, the song-thrush. (F., -C.) M. E. mavis, Rom. of the Rose, 619. - F. mauvis, 'a mavis, a throstle;' Cot. Cf. Span. malvis, a thrush. Supposed to be derived from Bret. milvid, also milfid, a mavis; called milchouid (with guttural ch) in the neighbourhood of Vannes. Cf. Corn. melhues, O. Corn. melhuet, a lark (Williams).

MAW, the stomach, esp. in the lower animals. (E.) M. E. mawe (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 4906. – A. S. maga, the stomach; Wright's Vocab. i. 45, col. 1. + Du. maag. + Icel. magi. + Swed. mage. + Dan. mave. + G. magen, O. H. G. mago.

β. Apparently named from the notion of power, growth, or strength; from MAGH, to have power; see May (1). ¶ The change from maga to mawe, maw, is quite regular; cf. A. S. haga, M. E. kawe, E. haw. Der. maw-worm, i. e. stomach-worm, parasite, Beaum. and MAWKISH, squeamish. (Scand.; with E. suffix.) 'Mawkish, sick at stomach, squeamish.' Phillips, ed. 1706. The older sense is 'loathsome,' or, more literally, 'maggoty.' Formed with suffix -ish from M. E. mauk, mawk, a maggot. 'Hec cimex, Anglice's 'North States.' 'North States.' Mauk is a corruption, or rather, an easy contraction of the older form madek, a maggot, which occurs (in another MS.) as a variant of meade, a maggot; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 251, l. 19; cf. note on p. 326. - Icel. madkr, a maggot. + Dan. maddik, a maggot; whence the Norweg. makk (Aasen) = E. mawk.

$ This is a dimin. form with suffix -k (or -ik) from the a maggot; see Moth.

y. The comparison of G. made, a maggot; see Moth.

y. The comparison of G. made (O. H. G. mado) with O. H. G. madari, a mower, reaper, suggests that the originance of A. S. mada was 'mower,' or 'reaper,' i. e. devourer; cf. the A. MAXIII.AR, MAXIII.ARY, belonging to the jaw-bone.

Racon has 'mastillary' MAULSTICK, a stick used by painters to steady the hand.

(G.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. One of the few G. words imported into bones; 'Nat. Hist. § 747. — Lat. maxillaris, belonging to the jaw-bone; dimin. of māla, the cheek-bone.

English. — G. malerstock, a maulstick, lit. 'painter's stick.' — G. bone. — Lat. maxilla, the jaw-bone; dimin. of māla, the cheek-bone. (which stands for mac-sa-la). - Lat. mac-, base of macerare, to spot, mark of a blow; whence also E. Measles, q. v. macerate, chew; see Macerate.

MAXIM, a proverb, general principle. (F., -L.) Lit. 'a saying of the greatest importance.' In Shak. Troil, i. 2. 318. - F. maxime, 'a maxime, principle; 'Cot. - Lat. maxima, greatest (put for maxima sententiarum, the chief of opinions); fem. of maximus, greatest, superl. of magnus, great. - WMAGH, to have power; see Max (1).

MAXIMUM, the greatest value or quantity. (L.) A mathematical term. — Lat. maximum, neut. of maximus, greatest; see

MAY (1), I am able, I am free to act, I am allowed to. (E.) There is no infinitive in use; if there were, it would rather take the form mow than may. May is the present tense (once, the past tense of a strong verb); might is the past tense (really a secondary past tense or pluperfect). M. E. infin. mown (for mowen), Prompt. Parv. p. 346; pres. t. sing. I may. Chaucer, C. T. 4651; pt. t. I mighte, id. 322, 634.—A. S. mugan, infin., to be able; pres. t. ic mæg, I may or can; pt. t. ic mihte, I might. +O. All from a Teut. base MAG, to have power. Further allied to Russ. moche, to be able; cf. moche, sh., power, might; Lat. magnus, great mactus, honoured; Gk. μηχανή, means; Skt. mah, to honour. All from / MAGH, to have power, be great, further, help; see Fick, i. 388. Der. The derivatives from this root are very numerous. Some of the chief are main, sb., main, adj., magnate, magnitude, magistrate, maid, major, mayor, make, machine, master, matador, manim, mechanics, megatherium, &c. Also dis-may, q v. Also might, mickle, much, more, most; perhaps many; perhaps maw and May (2).

MAY (2), the fifth month. (F., -I.) M. E. Mai, May; Chaucer,
C. T. 1502, 1512. — O. F. May, Mai, 'the month of May;' Cot. — Lat. Maius, May; so named as being the month of 'growth.' It was dedicated to Maia, i. e. 'the increaser' or 'the honoured.' Allied to maior, greater, magnus, great, mactare, to honour, &c. - MACH, to have power; see May (1). Der. May-day, -flower, -fly, -pole, -queen.

MAYOR, the chief magistrate of a town. (F. - L.) M. E. maire,

P. Plowman, B. iii. 87. There were mayors of London much earlier. -F. maire, a mayor. - Lat. maiorem (shortened to mai'rem), acc. of maior, greater; hence, a superior. See Major. It is most remarkable that we have adopted the Span. spelling mayor, which came in in Elizabeth's time. Spelt major in Shak. Rich. III, iii. 1. 17 (first folio). The word maire was first used temp. Hen. III; Liber Albus, p. 13. Der. mayor-ess, a coined word, formed by adding the F. fem. suffix -esse (= Lat. -issa, Gk. -issa); Ben Jonson speaks of 'the lady may'ress' in An Elegy, Underwoods, lx. l. 70. Also mayor-al-ty, Lord Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 209, l. 24; a coined word, as if from a Lat. acc. maioralitatem*. Also mayor-ship, mayor-dom, in Cotgrave, s. v. mairie.

MAZE, a labyrinth, confusion, perplexity. (Scand.) M. E. mase, P. Plowman, B. i. 6. [We also find M. E. masen, to confuse, puzzle; Chaucer, C. T. 4946.] Of Scand. origin; cf. Norweg. masa-st (where the final -st =-sk = sik, oneself), a verb of reflexive form, to fall into a slumber, to lose one's senses and begin to dream; masa, to be continually busy at a thing, to have a troublesome piece of work to do, also, to prate, chatter (Aasen). Icel. masa, to chatter, prattle; Swed. dial. masa, (1) to warm, (2) to bask before the fire or in the sun, ... (4) to be slow, lazy, work slowly and lazily; mas, adj., slow, lazy (Rietz).

Allied to comp. after-math, an the prov. E. math, a mowing, used only in the comp. after-math, an after-mowing, a second crop. - A. S. mawan, to mow; see Mow (1). Cf. G. mahd, a mowing; M. H. G. mút, a mowing, a crop, a mead; M. H. G. mate, matte, a meadow; Swiss matt, a meadow, in the wellknown names Zermatt, Andermatt; all from O. H. G. majan, to 2. The fuller form meadow is due to mow, cognate with E. mow. an A. S. form madu, of which the stem is madw-; the change from final -we to later -ow is the usual one, as in sparrow, arrow, &c. 'Mid láswe and mid médwe = with leasow and with meadow; A.S. Chron., an. 777, MS. L. (see Thorpe's edit. p. 92, note 1); where mædwe is the dat. case. Der. meadow-y.

MEAGRE, lean, thin, poor, scanty. (F., - L.) M. E. megre, P. Plowman, B. v. 128; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1198. (Not in earlier use; and not from the supposed A. S. mæger, an unauthorised form in Lyc.) - F. maigre, thin. - Lat. macrum, acc. of macer, thin, lean; whence also Icel. magr. Dan., Swed., and G. mager, thin, lean, were borrowed at an early period (which will also account for A. S. mæger, if it be a true word); see Fick, iii. 228.

B. The Lat. macer is prob. cognate with Gk. μικρόε, small; see Microcosm.

Der. meagre-ly, -ness. From the same source, e-mac-i-ate.

MEAL (1), ground grain. (E.) M. E. mele, Chaucer, C. T. 3993,

- A. S. melu, melo, gen. melewes, Matt. xiii. 33. + Du. meel. + Icel.

β. All from the Teut, base MAL, to grind, appearing in Icel. mala, Goth. malan, O. H. G. malan, to grind, which are cognate with W. malu, Lat. molere, to grind. — MAR, to grind; see Mill, Mar. Der. meal-y, meal-i-ness, meal-y-mouth-ed.

MEAL (2), a repast, share or time of food. (E.) M. E. mele, Chaucer, C. T. 4886. — A. S. mæl (1), a time, portion of time, stated time, Grein, ii. 221. Hence the orig. sense was 'time for food;' cf. mod. E. 'regular meals.' It has reference to the common meal at a stated time, not to the hastily snatched repast of a wayfaring man. + Du. maal, (1) time, (2) a meal. + Icel. mál, (1) a measure, (2) time, nick of time, (3) a meal. + Dan. maal, measure, dimension; maaltid, a meal (lit. meal-time). + Swed. mål, measure, due size, meal. + Goth. mel, time, scason. + G. mahl, a meal: mal, a time. β. All from the Teut. base MAI.A, a measured or stated time. -✓ MA, to measure; cf. Skt. má, to measure; see Mete. (Fick, iii. Der. meal-time, meal-tide.

MEAN (1), to have in the mind, intend, signify. (E.) M. E. menen, Chaucer, C.T. 2065. — A. S. ménon, to intend; Grein, ii. 222. + Du. meenen, to think, believe, fancy, mean. + Dan. mene, to mean, think. + Swed. mena, to mean, think. + G. meinen, O. H. G. meinjan, to think upon, mean, signify.

B. These are all causal or secondary verbs, as shown by the O. H. G. form, and derived from the sb. which appears as M. H. G. meine, O. H. G. meina, thought, intent, signification. A still more orig. form appears in Icel. minni, O. H. G. minni, remembrance, memory, mind, which are closely related to E. Mind, q. v. — \(\sqrt{MAN}, \text{ to think.} \) Der. mean-ing, M. E. mening, Chaucer, C. T. 10465 (cognate with G. meinung); mean-ing-less. See moan. Der. mean-ing, MEAN (2), common, vile, base, sordid. (E.) M. E. mene; 'je mene and be riche; P. Plowman, B. prol. 18. - A. S. mane, wicked, Grein, ii. 222, closely related to A. S. mán, iniquity, id. 207. (Perhaps further related to A.S. gemeine, common, general; but this is by no means so certain as might at first appear.) + Du. gemeen, the orig, sense of the word being 'a spot,' a knot in wood, &c. Cf. Icel. mösurr, 'a maple-tree, spot-wood;' mösur-bolli, a mazer-bowl; mösur-te', a maple-tree.

B. The word is merely extended meen, Swed. men, hurt, injury. + M. H. G. mein, a last-from the form which appears in M.H.G. mase, O.H.G. másá, a hood; cf. G. meineid, perjury. And cf. Goth. gamains, common, Tit. i. 4; unclean, Mk. vii. 2. β. Root uncertain; but I think the word may perhaps be referred to MI, to diminish, hence, to injure; see Minish. γ. It might then be best to refer A. S. geméne, common, general, and Du. gemen (at any rate in the senses of 'common' and 'vulgar') to the same root as Lithuan. mainas, barter, mainyti, to barter. 8. The oft-suggested connection between A. S. geméne and Lat. communis is very doubtful; I would rather reject it. Der. mean-ly, L. L. L. v. 2. 328; mean-ness (not in early use).

MEAN (3), coming between, intermediate, moderate. (F., -I..) M. E. mene. 'And a mene [i. e. an intermediate one, a mediator] bitwene pe kyng and pe comune' [commons]; P. Plowman, B. i. 158. 'In pe mene while;' Will. of Palerne, 1148.—O. F. meien (Burguy), mod. F. moyen, mean, intermediate. — Lat. medianus, extended form from medius, middle; see Mediate. Der. mean, sb., Rom. of the Rose. 6529; mean-s, M. E. menes, Chaucer, C. T. 11195.

MEANDER, a winding course. (L., -Gk.) 'Through forthrights and meanders; Temp. iii. 3. 3. — Lat. Mæander. — Gk. Maíavôpos, the name of a river, remarkable for its circuitous course;

Pliny, b. v. c. 29. Der. meander, vb., meander-ing.

MEASLES, a contagious fever accompanied by small red spots on the skin. (Du.) The remarks in Trench, Select Glossary, are founded on a misconception. The word is quite distinct from M. E. mesel, a leper, which will be explained below. 'The maysilles, variolæ,' Levins, 125. 15. 'Rougeolle, the meazles;' Cot. In Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 78, the sense is 'measles,' not 'leprosy,' as explained in Schmidt. The use of the term was quite definite. 'The maisils, a disease with many reddish spottes or speckles in the face and bodie, much like freckles in colour; Bret. M. E. maseles, to translate O.F. rugeroles (14th cent.), in Wright's Voc. i. 161, l. 23. Borrowed from Dutch. - Du. maselen. 'De maselen, ofte [or] masel-sieckte, the measels, or sick of the measels. De masel-sucht, the measell-sicknesse; Hexham. The same word as O. Du. masselen. Masselen ofte masseren, black spots or blemishes of burning upon one's body or leggs; Hexham. He also gives: 'Maesche, masche, ma maschel being a dimin, of an older form mase or masche. Of these older forms, Hexham actually gives the latter, whilst the former is cognate with (and vouched for by) the M. H. G. mise, O. H. G. s beginte with (and voicine to by the M. I. C. mass, o. I. C. másá, a spot, the mark of a wound; whence G. maser [= masel], a spot, speckle, and masern, pl. measles. Cf. O. H. G. masala, a bloody tumour on the knuckles.

'a spot,' is the source whence is derived the E. Mazer, q. v. ¶ It thus appears that measle means 'a little spot.' It is therefore wholly unconnected with M. E. mesel, which invariably means 'a (see Stratmann); whence meselvie, i.e. leprosy. Both mesel and meselrie occur in Chaucer, Pers. Tale, De Ira. with the simple vowel e (instead of ai or ea) makes all the difference. This word is borrowed from O. F. mesel, which is from Lat. misellus, wretched, unfortunate, dimin. of miser, wretched; see Miser. The confusion between the words is probably quite modern; when, e.g., Cotgrave explains O. F. mesel, meseau, by 'a meselled, scurvy, leaperous, lazarous person,' he clearly uses meselled as equivalent to leprous; whilst he reserves the spelling meazles to translate rougeolle. Dor. measl-ed, measl-y.

MEASURE, extent, proportion, degree, moderation, metre. (F., -L.) M. E. mesure, P. Plowman, B. i. 35; Ancren Riwle, p. 372, l. 1; O. Eng. Homilies, 2nd Ser. p. 55, l. 8. - O. F. mesure. - Lat. mensura, measure. - Lat. mensura, fem. of mersurus, fut. part. of metiri, to measure. - ✓MA, to measure; see Mete. Der. measure, vb., M. E. mesuren, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 2, l. 1782; measur-able, M. E. mesurable, P. Plowman, B. i. 19; measur-abl-y,

MEAT, food, flesh of animals used as food. (E.) M. E. mete, Chaucer, C. T. 1615. — A. S. mete, John, iv. 32, 34. + Du. met, flesh for sausages. + Icel. matr, food. + Dan. mad, victuals, food. + Swed. mat, victuals. + Goth. mats, food (whence matjan, to use as food, eat). + O. H. G. maz, food.

MECHANIC, pertaining to machines. (F., -L., -Gk.) First used as a sb., with the sense 'mechanic art.' M. E. mechanike. 'Whos arte is cleped mechanike' = whose art is called mechanic. Gower, C. A. iii. 142. -O. F. mechanique, mecanique, 'mechanicall;' Cot. - Lat. mechanica, mechanic; also used as sb., the science of mechanics. -Gk. μηχανική, sb., the science of mechanics; fem. of adj. μηχανικόε, relating to machines. -Gk. μηχανή, a machine; see Machine. Der. mechanic-al (see Trench, Select Glossary); mechanic-al-ly; mechanic-s, mechanic-an; also mechanist, mechanism.

MEDAL, a piece of metal in the form of a coin. (F., -Ital., -

Low Lat.,—L.) Shak, has medal to signify 'a piece of metal stamped with a figure;' Wint. Ta. i. 2. 307.—O.F. medaille, 'a medall, an ancient and flat jewel,' &c.; Cot. (Mod. F. médaille).—Ital. medaglia, a medal, coin; equiv. to O. F. meaille, whence mod. F. maille, a small coin.—Low Lat. medalia, a small coin; 'obolus, quod est medalia,' in a Lat. glossary cited by Brachet; we also find Low Lat. medalla, a small coin; Ducange. These are corrupted forms due to Lat. metallum, metal. See Metal. Der. medal-ist or medall-ist; medall-i-on, in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674, from O. F. medaillon (F. médaillon), 'a little medall,' Cot., which is from the Ital. medaglione, formed from medaglia.

MEDDLE, to mix or interfere with. (F.,-L) To meddle with is to mix with. The M.E. verb medlen simply means 'to mix.' 'Medled togideres' = mixed together, P. Plowman, B. ix. 3. Also frequently spelt mellen; thus, for 'imedled togidres,' another reading is ymelled, in Trevisa, iii. 469, l. 4. – O. F. mesler, medler, meller, to mix, interfere or meddle with (Burguy). Cotgrave has: 'mesler to mingle, mix, ..., jumble; se mesler de, to meddle, intermeddle, deal with, have a hand in.' Mod. F. mêler. Cf. Span. mezclar, Port. mesclar, Ital. mischiare [put for misclare, by usual change of cl to chi], to mix, — Low Lat. misculare, to mix; cf. Lat. miscellus, mixed. — Lat. miscere, to mix; for which see Mix. B. The orig. O. F. form was mesler, of which medler was a curious corruption, and meller a simplification. An intrusive d occurs, similarly, in medlar, q.v. Der. meddl-er, meddle-some (with E. suffix), meddl-ing. Also MEDIATE, middle, acting by or as a means. (L.) Rare as an adj., and not very common in the adv. form mediate-ly. 'Either immediatly or mediatly;' Fryth's Works, p. 18.—Lat. mediatus, pp. of mediare, to be in the middle.—Lat. medius, middle; cognate with A. S. midda, middle; see Mid. Der. mediate, verb (tare in old books); Rich. quotes: 'employed to mediate A present marriage, to be had between Him and the sister of the young French queen;' Daniel, Civil Wars, b. viii. Also mediat-ion, q. v., mediat-or, q. v. Also im-mediate. Also medial, from Lat. medi-alis.

MEDIATION, intercession, entreaty for another. (F.,-L.) M. E. mediation, mediacioun, Chaucer, C. T. 4654.—O. F. mediation, 'mediation;' Cot. Formed as if from a Lat. acc. mediationem*, from a nom. mediatio*.—Lat. mediatus, pp. of mediare, to be in the middle, be between; see Mediate.

MEDIATOR, an intercessor. (F., -L.) Now conformed to the Lat. spelling. M. E. mediatour, Wyclif, I Tim. ii. 5.-O. F. mediateur. - Lat. mediatorem, acc. of mediator, one who comes between, a mediator.-Lat. mediator, pp. of mediate; see Mediate. Der. mediator-i-al, mediator-i-al-ly.

MEDIC, a kind of clover. (L., -Gk.) Botanical. Lit. 'Median.' Phillips, ed. 1706, has both medick and the Lat. form medica. -Gk. Μηδική, put for Μηδική πόα, Median grass; fem. of Μηδικό, Median. From Media, the name of a country in Asia; Pliny, b. xviii. c. 16.

MEDICAL, relating to the art of healing diseases. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Low Lat. medicalis, medical. — Lat. medicus, a physician. — Lat. mederi, to heal. See Medicine. Der. medical-ly.

MEDICATE, to impregnate with anything medicinal. (L.) Rich. quotes 'his medicated posie at his nose' from Bp. Hall, A Sermon of Thanksgiving.—Lat. medicatus, pp. of medicari, to heal.—Lat. medicaus, a physician. See Medicine. Der. medicat-ed, medicat-ion, medicat-ive. Also medica-ble, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from Lat. medicabilis; medicament, from O.F. medicament, 'a medicament, salve' (Cot.), which from Lat. medicamentum.

MEDICINE, something given as a remedy for disease. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. medicine, in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 187, l. 4 from bottom. -O. F. medecine (put for medicine). - Lat. medicina, medicine. - Lat. medicina, a physician. - Lat. mederi, to heal. Closely allied to Gk. base μαθ-, in μανθάνειν, to learn; with reference to the science of healing. Fick (i. 714) compares also Zend madh, to treat medically, madha, medical science. From a base MADH, to learn, heal; which from ΜΑΑ, shorter form of MAN, to think. See Meditate, Man. Der. medicine, vb., Oth. iii. 3. 332; medicin-al, Wint. Ta. ii. 3. 37; medicin-al-ly; medicin-able, Much Ado, ii. 2. 5. And see medical, medicate.

ii. 2. 5. And see medical, medicate.

MEDITERRANEAN, inland. (L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 234; and in Cotgrave, who translates O. F. Mediterranée by the mediterranean or mid-earth sea.' - Lat. mediterrane-us, situate in the middle of the land; with suffix an (= F. -an, Lat. -anus). - Lat. medi-, for medio-, crude form of medius, middle; and terra, land; with suffix -an-e-. See Mid and Terrace. ¶ Chiefly applied to the Mediterranean Sea, which appeared to the ancients as nearly in the middle of the old world; but the word was sometimes used more generally; see Trench, Select Glossary.

MEDIUM, the middle place, means, or instrument. (L.) In Dryden, Art of Poetry, c. iv. 1. 888 – Lat. medium, the midst, a means; neut. of medius, middle; see Mid.

MEDLAR, a small tree with a fruit somewhat like an apple or pear. (F., -L., -Gk.) Properly, medlar is the name of the tree; the fruit should be called a medle, but the word is obsolete; the medlar is so called because it bears medles. M. E. medler, a medlar-tree; Rom. of the Rose, 1375. Also called medle-tre, Sir Beves of Hamptoun, ed. Turnbull, 52 (Stratmann).—O. F. meslier, 'a medlar-tree; Cot.—O. F. mesle, 'a medlar (a Picard word);' Cot.—Lat. mespilum, a medlar; cf. mespilus, a medlar-tree; Pliny, b. xv. c. 20.—Cl. vicard word (Cl. vicard word); Gk. μέσπιλον, a medlar. The introduction of d before l in this word is curious; but the same phenomenon occurs also in meddle and medley; it appears to be due to the O. F. s.

MEDLEY, a confused mass, confusion, mixture. (F., -L.) M.E. medle, medlee. 'Medle, mixtura;' Prompt. Parv. p. 331. Also spelt melle (dissyllabic), which occurs in Barbour's Bruce in the sense of 'mixture,' b. v. l. 404, and over and over again in the sense of 'fray,' contest, exactly corresponding to the mod. F. mêlee, which is in fact the same word. See Trench, Select Glossary. Chaucer has medlee in the sense of 'mixed in colour,' as in: 'He rood but house in a medlee cote,' Prol. to C. T. 330. — O. F. medle, mesle, melle (fem. forms medlee, me:lee, mellee), pp. of medler, mesler, or meller (mod. F. mêler), to mix. See further under Meddle. ¶ The verb to meddle is sometimes contracted to mell, All's Well, iv. 3. 257; and see Nares. The M. E. melle, easily shortened to mell, is obviously the original of the slang word mill, a contest; for the change of vowel from e to i, see Mill.

MEDULLAR, MEDULLARY, belonging to the marrow. (L.) Medullar is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Kersey, ed. 1715, has both forms.—Lat. medullaris, belonging to the marrow.—Lat. medulla, the marrow. β. The orig. sense was prob. 'inmost;' from Lat. med-ius, middle; see Mid.

MEED, reward, wages, hire, reward of merit. (E.) M. E. mede, P. Plowman, B. ii. 20, 27, 34, 36, 39, &c.—A. S. méd, Matt. vi. 1; older form meord (with r for older s), John, iv. 36, Rushworth MS. + G. miethe, hire; M. H. G. miete, O. H. G. mieta. + Goth. mizdo, reward. + Russ. mzda, remuneration. + Gk. μισθύε, pay. β. Origin doubtful; an ingenious suggestion is that cited in Vaniček, that the orig. form was mad-dha, that which is set or put by measure; from MAD, an extension of \(\sqrt{MA} \), to measure, and \(\sqrt{DHA} \), to put, Observe that meed stands for mizd.

MEEK, mild, gentle. (Scand.) M. E. meke, Chaucer, C. T. 69; Havelok, 945; spelt meoc, Ormulum, 667.—Icel. mjúkr, soft, agile, meek, mild. + Swed. mjuk, soft, pliable, supple. + Dan. myg, pliant, soft. + Du. muik, soft. + Goth. muks * only in comp. muka-mode, gentleness. Perhaps allied to Lith. minksztas, soft, minkyti, to knead; from MAK, to knead; see Mass (1). Der. meek-ly, meek-ness.

MEERSCHAUM, a substance used for making tobacco-pipes. (G.) Modern. - G. meerschaum, lit. sea-foam. - G. meer, sea, cognate with E. Mere; and schaum, foam, cognate with E. Scum.

MEET (1), fitting, according to measure, suitable. (E.) M. E. mete, Chaucer, C. T. 2293. We also find M. E. mete with the sense of moderate, small, scanty; P. Plowman's Crede, 1, 428. This is a closely related word, from the notion of fitting tightly. - A. S. gemet, meet, fit, Grein, i. 429. (The prefix ge-, readily dropped, makes no difference.) Cf. A.S. mate, small, scanty, lit. tight-fitting; whence unmate, immense immeasurable; Grein, ii. 227, 624. - A. S. metan, to mete; see Meto. Cf. G. mässig, moderate, frugal; from messen, to measure. Der. meet-ly, meet-ness.

MEET (a), to encounter, find, assemble. (E.) M. E. meten, Chaucer, C. T. 1526. – A. S. métan, to find, meet; Grein, ii. 234. (Formed with the usual vowel-change from δ to $\dot{\epsilon}$, that is, long \ddot{o} .) A.S. mót, gemót, a meeting; see Moot. + O. Sax. mótian (the exact

β. A frequentative verb, from the base medicatus, pp. of meditari, to ponder.

β. A frequentative verb, from the base medicatus, pp. of meditari, to meet; from mot, a meeting. + Swed. müta, to meet; from mot, preserver, to heal, Gk. μανθάνειν, to learn; from the base MADH, due to MA (also MAN), to think.

See Medicine. Man. Der meditation from O. F. meditation. ontmoeten, to meet; from gemoet, a meeting. + Icel. mæta, mæta, to meet; from mot, a meeting. + Swed. möta, to meet; from mot, preserved only in the prep. mot, against, towards. + Dan. möde, to meet; cf. mod, against. + Goth. gamotjan, to meet. Der. meeting, A. S. gemeting, Grein, i. 429; meet-ing-house.

MEGALOSAURUS, a fossil animal. (Gk.) Lit. 'great lizard.'

-Gk. μεγάλο-, crude form extended from μέγα-, base of μέγαs, great, cognate with E. Much, q. v.; and σαῦρος, a lizard. MEGATHERIUM, a fossil quadruped. (Gk.) wild beast.'-Gk. μέγα-, base of μέγαs, great, cognate with E. Much, q. v.; and therium, put for Gk. θηρίον, dimin. of θήρ, a wild beast, cognate with Lat. fera, a wild beast; see Deer.

MEGRIM, a pain affecting one side of the head. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. migrim, migrein, migrene. 'Mygreyne, migrym, mygrene, sekenesse, Emigranea;' Prompt. Parv. Here migrim is a corruption. by change of n to m, of the older form migrene. - F. migraine, 'the megrim, head-ach;' Cot. - Low Lat. hemigranea, megrim, Ducange; cf. emigranea in Prompt. Parv., just cited.—Lat. hemicranium, a pain on one side of the face.—Gk. ἡμικράνιον, half the skull.—Gk. ἡμι., half (see Hemi-); and *paviov, the cranium, skull (see Cranium).

MELANCHOLY, depression or dejection of spirits, sadness. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) Supposed to be caused by an excess of black bile; whence the name. M. E. melancolie, Gower, C. A. i. 39; cf. 'engendred of humours melancholike,' Chaucer, C. T. 1377.-O. F. melancholie, 'melancholy, black choler;' Cot. – Lat. melancholia. – Gk. μελαγχολία, melancholy. – Gk. μελάγχολοε, jaundiced, filled with black bile. – Gk. μέλαν-, stem of μέλαε, black, dark, gloomy (allied black bile.—Gk. μέλαν-, stem of μέλας black, dark, gloomy (allied to Skt. mala, dirty, malina, black); and χολή, bile, cognate with E. Gall, q. v. Der. melanchol-ic, O. F. melancholique, 'melancholick' (Cot.), from Lat. melancholicus.

MELILIOT, the name of a plant. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Levins and Cotgrave.—O. F. melilot, 'melilot;' Cot.—Lat. melilotos.—Gk. μελίλοντος, μελίλοντος, μελίλοντος, ακιλο of clover; so called from the honey and control of the company of the control of the company of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the control of the contained. - Gk. μέλι, honey; and λωτός, lotus, clover. See Mellifluous and Lotus.

MELIORATE, to make better, improve. (L.) Bacon has meliorate and melioration, Nat. Hist. §§ 2,32, 4,33 (R.) = Lat. melioratus, pp. of meliorare, to make better (White). = Lat. melior, better. β. Cognate with Gk. μᾶλλον, rather, compar. of μάλα, adv., very much, exceedingly. Root unknown. Der. meliorat-ion, a-meliorate.
 MELLIFLUOUS, flowing sweetly, sweet. (L.) In Milton,

P. L. v. 429; P. R. iv. 277. And in Shak. Tw. Nt. ii. 3. 54.-Lat. mellifluus, flowing like honey (by change of -us to -ous, as in numerous other instances). - Lat. melli-, crude form of mel, honey; and suffix -fluus, flowing, formed from fluere, to flow. B. Lat. mel is cognate with Gk. μέλι, Goth. milith, honey; the root is uncertain. For Lat. fluere, see Fluent. Der. So also melli-fluent, from melli-(as above) and fluent-, stem of pres. pt. of fluere. So also melli-ferous, i.e. honey-bearing, from Lat. ferre, to bear. And see marmalade.

MELLOW, fully ripe. (E.) 'Melwe, melowe, or rype, Maturus;'
Prompt. Parv. The true sense is 'soft' or 'pulpy,' like very ripe fruit. By the frequent substitution of l for r, it stands for (or is a mere variant of) A.S. mearu, soft, tender, Grein, ii. 239. Closely allied words are Marrow, Moal (1), which see. + Du. muru, soft, tender; cf. mollig, soft, malsch, soft, tender. + M.H.G. mar, O.H.G. maro, soft, tender. Cf. also Lat. mollis, soft, Gk. μαλακόε, soft; Goth. gamalwiths, contrite (Luke, iv. 18), from gemalwian, to grind down, extension of malan, to grind.

β. All from the common γ MAR, MAL, to grind, crush, pound; see Mar, Melt, Mild. Der. mellow-ness

MELODRAMA, MELODRAME, a theatrical performance, with songs. (F., -Gk.) Given in Todd's Johnson only in the form melodrame, noted by Todd as a modern word lately borrowed from French. It is now always written melodrama. - F. melodrame, properly, acting with songs. A coined word. – Gk. μέλο-, crude form of μέλοε, a song (see Melody); and δράμα, an action, drama (see Drama). Der. melodramat-ic, melodramat-ist, from the stem δράματ.

MELODY, an air or tune, music. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. melodie, melodye, Chaucer, C. T. 9; Legend of St. Christopher, l. 18. - O. F. melodie. - Lat. melodia. - Gk. μελφδία, a singing. - Gk. μελφδόε, adj., singing, musical. = Gk. μελ-, for μέλο-, crude form of μέλοε, a song, music; and ψδή, a song, ode (see Ode). Perhaps μέλοε is allied to music; and φόη, a song, ode (see Ode). Perhaps μέλος is allied to μαλακός; see Mellow. Der. melodi-ous, -ly, -ness.

MELON, a kind of fruit. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'Of melons;' see Sir T. Elyot, Castell of Helth, b. ii. c. 7. - O. F. melon, 'a melon;' Cot. - Lat. melonem, acc. of melo, an apple-shaped melon. - Gk. μήλον, (1) an apple, (2) fruit of various kinds. Cf. Lat. mālum, an apple (possibly borrowed from Gk.) Der. mar-mal-ade, q.v.

MELT, to make liquid, dissolve. (E.) M. E. melen; pt. t. mal, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1017; pp. molten, P. Plowman, Plying. Allied to mentiri, to lie. B. xiii. 82. - A.S. meltan, pt. t. mealt, Grein, ii. 230. β. It seems best to connect this word with Skt. mridu (base mard-), soft, and the O. Slavonic mladu, soft (cited by Max Müller, Lect. on Language, 8th edit., ii, 363). — MARD, to rub down, crush, overcome; an extended form of MAR, to grind, pound. Cf. Marrow, Mellow, from the same root.

The connection with smelt is by no means so sure as might at first appear. The words may be independent of each other. independent of each other. Der. melt-ing, melt-ing-ly. Also malt,

M. E. membre, Rob. of Glouc. p. 511, l. 12. - F. membre, a member.
- Lat. membrum, a member. Cf. Skt. marman, a member, a joint. Root uncertain. Der. member-ship, with E. suffix. Also membr-ane, q.v. MEMBRANE, a thin skin or film. (F., -L.) 'The skin is a membrane of all the rest the most large and thick; 'P. Fletcher, Purple Island, c. 2, note 13 (R.) - F. membrane, 'a membrane;' Cot. - Lat. membrana, a skin covering a member of the body, a membrane. - Lat. membr-um, a member; see Member. Der. membranous, membran-ac-e-ous.

MEMENTO, a memorial or token whereby to remember another. (L.) A Lat. word, adopted into E., but it is not easy to say at what date. The phrase memento mori (remember you must die) is in Shak. I Hen. IV, iii. 3. 35; but this is used in a different connection. That memento would do well for you too, sirrah; Dryden, Kind Keeper, A. iv. sc. 1. We find 'for memento sake' as early as in P. Plowman, B. v. 476, where there is a special allusion to the text 'Remember me,' Luke, xxiii. 42. — Lat. memento (see Luke, xxiii. 42, Vulgate); imperative of memini, I remember; see Mention. Mind.

MEMOIR, a record, short biographical sketch, collection of recollections. (F., -L.) Commonly in the pl. memoirs, spelt memoires in Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706. - O. F. memoires, 'notes of [read or] writings for remembrance... records;' Cot. Pl. of memoire, memory. - Lat. memoria, memory; also, a historical account, record, memoir. See Memory.

MEMORY, remembrance, recollection. (F., -L.) M. E. memorie, Chaucer, C. T. 10118; King Alisaunder, 4700. -O. F. memoire, memory (of which an older form was probably memorie). - Lat. memoria, memory, — Lat. memor, mindful. β. The Lat. memor appears to be a reduplicated form (like me-min-i, I remember); cf. Gk. μέρ-μερος, anxious, μερ-μηρίζειν, to be anxious, to ponder earnestly (with which the notion of memory is closely associated); the simpler form in Gk. appears in μέριμνα, care, thought.

γ. Thus the base appears as MAR, a later form of SMAR, to remember, as seen in Skt. smri, to remember; whence also E. Martyr, q. v. See Benfey, Skt. Dict., p. 1091. Der. memori-al, Gower, C. A. ii. 19, from O. F. memorial, 'a memoriall' (Cot.), from Lat. memorialis; memori-al-ist, memori-al-ise. Also memor-able, Hen. V, ii. 4. 53, from O. F. memorable, 'memorable' (Cot.) = Lat. memora-bilis, from memorare, which from memor. Hence memor-abl-y. Also memorandum, pl. memorandums, 1 Hen. IV, iii. 3. 179, from Lat. memorandum, neut. of fut. pass. part. of memorare, to record. Also com-memor-ate, im-memor-ial, remem-ber. Doublet, memoir.

MENACE, a threat. (F., -L.) M.E. menace, manace; spelt manas, King Alisaunder, l. 843. 'Now cometh manace, that is an open folie; for he that ofte manaceth,' &c.; Chaucer, Pers. Tale, De Ira, near end. - O. F. menace, menache, manache (Burguy), menace (Cot.), a threat. - Lat. minacia, a threat, of which the pl. minacia is used by Plautus. - Lat. minaci-, crude form of minax, full of threats; also, projecting. - Lat. minæ, pl., things projecting, hence (from the idea of threatening to fall) threats, menaces. - Lat. minere, to jut out, project. Der. menace, verb, as above; menac-ing, menac-ing-ly. From the same source, com-min-at-ion, de-mean; also e-min-ent, pro-

MENAGERIE, a place for keeping wild animals. (F., -Low Lat., -L.) 'The menagerie in the tower;' Burke, On a Regicide Peace, let. 1 (R.) - F. ménagerie, 'properly a place where the animals of a household are kept, then by extension a place in which are kept rare and foreign animals; 'Brachet. (So also Scheler.) -F. ménager, to keep house. — F. ménage, a household, housekeeping; O. F. ménage, 'houshold stuffe, businesse, or people, a houshold, family, or meyney;' Cot. See further under Menial, Mansion.

MEND, to remove a fault, repair. (F., — L.) M. E. menden, Will.

of Palerne, 647. The sb. mendyng is in King Alisaunder, 5206. Mend is a mere corruption of amend, by the loss of the initial vowel.

See Amend. Der. mend-er, mend-ing.

MENDACITY, falsehood, lying. (L.) 'The mendacity of Greece;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 6. § 9. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -ty, from Lat. acc. mendacitatem, from nom. mendacitas, falsehood. — Lat. mendaci-, crude form of mendax, false, World of Words, ed. 1706. The adj. mephitick is in Blount's Gloss.

β. The orig. meaning of Lat. mentiri was 'to think out, invent, devise;' cf. commentum, a device, a falsehood, comminisci, to devise. y. Hence the base man-t- is plainly an extension from the common / MAN, to think. See Mention, Mentor, Man. Der. mendaci-ous, formed with suffix -ous from the crude form mendaci- above; mendaci-ous-ly, -ness.

MENDICANT, a beggar. (L.) Properly an adj., as 'the mendicant (or begging) friars.' The word came in with these friars, and must have been well known, as a Latin word at least, in the 14th century. Chaucer has the F form mendiant, C. T. 7488. But it does not appear very early as an E. word; it occurs in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. mendicant-, stem. of pres. part. of mendicare, to beg. - Lat. mendicus, beggarly, poor; of uncertain origin. Der. mendicanc-y. Also mendic-it-y, M.E. mendicite, Rom. of the Rose, 6427, 6436, from O. F. mendicité, 'mendicity,' Cot.

Properly an adj., but also used as sb. 'His servauntes minyall;' Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, 592. M. E. meineal, meyneal. 'Grete 3e wel her meyneal chirche,' i. e. the church of their household, Wyclif, Rom. xvi. 5. This adj. is formed, by help of the common suffix -al (= F. -al, Lat. -alis) from the M. E. sb. meine, meinee, maine, mainee, a household, now obsolete, but once in common use; see Rob. of Glouc., pp. 167, 202; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 15; Will. of Palerne, 184, 416; Havelok, 827; Wyclif, Matt. x. 25, Luke, ii. 4; Chaucer, C. T. 7627, 7738, 14348, 17177.

B. Note that this word is entirely unconnected with E. many, with which Richardson confuses it. In Spenser, prob. owing to such confusion, the word is badly spelt many or manie, F. Q. v. 11. 3. - O. F. maisnee, maisnie, meisnee, meisnie (Burguy); cf. Mesnie, a meyny, family; Cot. The same word as Ital. masnada, a family, troop, company of men. - Low Lat. mansionata *, for which Ducange gives the forms mansada, maisnada, a family, household; whence the derivative mansionaticum, expenses of a household, as explained in Brachet, s. v. ménage. v. Formed, with fem. part. suffix -ata, from mansion-, stem of Lat. mansio, a dwelling. See Mansion.

MENIVER, MINEVER, MINIVER, a kind of fur. (F.,-L.) M. E. meniver (with u for v); spelt menyuere, P. Plowman, B. xx. 137. — O. F. menu ver; 'menu ver, ou verk, the furre minever, also, the beast that bears it;' Cot. Also spelt menu vair, minever, the furre of ermine mixed or spotted with the furre of the 'minever, the turre of ermine mixed of sponda want the land weesell called gris;' Cot. — O. F. menu, 'little, small,' Cot.; and vair, 'a rich fur of ermines powdered thick with blue hairs;' Cot.

The F. menu is from Lat. minutus, small; see Minute. The F. β. The F. menu is from Lat. minutus, small; see Minute. vair is from Lat. uarius, variegated, spotted; see Vair, Various.

Thus the sense is 'little spotted' fur or animal.

MENSES, the monthly discharge from the womb. (L.) A Lat. medical phrase. In Phillips, ed. 1706. - Lat. menses, with the same sense; pl. of mensis, a month; from the same root as E. Month, q.v. Der menstruous, q.v.

MENSTRUOUS, having or belonging to menses. (L.) In Isaiah, xxx. 22 (A. V.) - Lat. menstruus, monthly. - Lat. mensis, a month. See Month. Der. menstru-ate, from menstruare. Also menstruum, a solvent, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 1. § 11; so called, says Richardson, 'because its action was, as we are told, assisted by a moderate fire during a month;' or, says Wedgwood, 'from the notion that chemical solvents could only be duly prepared in dependence on the changes of the moon.'

MENSURATION, measuring, measurement. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -tion, from Lat. mensurationem, acc. of mensuratio, a measuring. - Lat. mensuratus, pp. of mensurare, to measure. - Lat. mensura, measure; see

Measure

-MENT, a common suffix. (F., - L.) F. -ment, from Lat. -mentum, crude form -men-to-, an extension of -men- = Aryan -man-; see Schleicher, Compend. § 219.

MENTAL, pertaining to the mind. (F.,-L) In Shak. Timon, i. 1. 31. - F. mental, 'mentall;' Cot. - Low Lat. mentals, mental. - Lat. ment-, stem of mens, the mind; see Mind. mental-ly.

MENTION, a notice, remark, hint. (F., -L.) M. E. mentioun, Chaucer, C. T. 895. - F. mention, 'mention.' - Lat. mentionem, acc. of mentio, a mention. Closely related to mens (crude form menti-), the mind, and to me-min-i, I remember. See Mind. Der. mention, vb., Wint. Tale, iv. 1. 22; mention-able.

MENTOR, an adviser, monitor. (Gk.) Not in Todd's Johnson. Simply adopted from the story in Homer, where Athene takes the form of Mentor with a view to give advice to Ulysscs. See Pope's MERCANTILE, commercial. (F.,-L.) 'That I may use the mercantil term; Howell, Familiar Letters, vol. i. let. 29; A. D. 1621.

-F. mercantil, 'merchantly,' Cot. - Low Lat. mercantilis, mercantile. -Lat. mercant-, stem of pres. part. of mercari, to trade. See Merchant.

MERCENARY, hired for money, greedy of gain. (F.,-L.) M. E. mercenarie, Chaucer, C. T. 516. - F. mercenaire, 'mercenary;' Cot. - Lat. mercenarius, older form mercennarius, a hireling; put for merced-narius. - Lat. merced-, stem of merces, a reward. Mercy.
